4. SAME—ABANDONMENT.

The failure of the owner of an easement, bound to keep it in repair, to do so for an unreasonable length of time, is an abandonment of the easement; an abandonment being presumed on the owner doing or permitting an act to be done which is inconsistent with the future enjoyment of the right.

5. SAME.

Owners of property owned an easement consisting of a right in a bridge. The bridge, on the flooring being removed, was useless, except for foot passengers. The bridge was built mainly of iron and steel, and was, with the exception of the flooring, well preserved. The owners continued to use the bridge and insisted on their right to repair. Held, that they had not abandoned their right in the bridge; but they must repair it within a reasonable time, or the owner of the structure might remove it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockbridge County.

Suit by J. L. Oney and another against the West Buena Vista Land Company and others. From a decree dismissing the bill, complainants appeal. Reversed.

Hugh A. White, for appellants. E. M. Pendleton, for appellees.

CARDWELL, J. During what is now commonly spoken of as the "boom" period, the West Buena Vista Land Company, the owner of a tract of several hundred acres of land lying just across North river from, and west of, Buena Vista, a town then rapidly growing in population, and which afterwards became a city, desiring to enhance the value of its property and make sale of its land in town lots for building purposes, etc., laid the same off into lots, blocks, streets, alleys, parks, and other public places, and on the 23d day of September, 1890, placed a map or plat of said land, so divided, upon record in the clerk's office of the county court of Rockbridge county, according to law. The idea of the West Buena Vista Land Company seems to have been to make its lands across the river from Buena Vista practically a part of that town, and to that end determined to build a bridge across the river connecting the prospective town of West Buena Vista with Buena Vista, and this bridge across North river was shown on the map or plat, made and recorded as stated. The streets of West Buena Vista were to be connected continuously with the streets of Buena Vista by this bridge, and Lexington and Moore streets, appearing on the map of West Buena Vista, and which converge together at the west end of the bridge, form, with the bridge, a continuation of Twentieth street in Buena Vista at the east end of the bridge.

After recording the map showing the streets and bridge, the West Buena Vista Land Company proceeded to make sale of its lots, villa sites, etc., and among the sales it made was a mill, residence, and outbuildings, known as "Moore's Mill," appearing on said map, to J. L. Oney and his associates, on March 20, 1891, at the price of $6,000, a "boom" price according to the evidence in this record, and about twice as much as the property would have brought, but for the map of West Buena Vista showing the bridge across North river.

This bridge, contemplated and contracted for in 1890, was well under way in construction when Oney and his associates bought the mill property, which was connected by open and convenient streets and alleys with the bridge and within a few yards of its west end, and was subsequently completed, extending not only across the river, but also over the railroad tracks of the furnace company, the Chesapeake & Ohio, and the Norfolk & Western Railway Companies, and terminated in Sycamore (Twentieth) street, in Buena Vista, with the consent of these several companies; but the completion of the bridge was in accordance with the representations of the company in effecting sales of its lands.

By the bridge "Moore's Mill" was brought within one-half mile of the business center of Buena Vista, while without it the distance was about two miles around by the county road and bridge below. It is admitted that this bridge was built as a passway "for the owners of the West Buena Vista Company," and after its completion the public was permitted to use it, and it was used for both horse and foot passengers by those desiring to use it; and for a long time, while the county bridge below was down, it was the only thoroughfare into Buena Vista from the western portion of the county; but there has never been any other acceptance of it as a highway by the county of Rockbridge or the city of Buena Vista.

After many years of service to the public, but especially to the persons who had bought land of the West Buena Vista Company, and the owners of "Moore's Mill" in particular, the bridge became in need of repairs and unsafe, the flooring thereon having decayed and by reason of a complaint from the railroad companies the flooring over the railroads was removed, so as to avoid any danger to their traffic. This being the condition of the bridge, in order to continue it as a footway, the owners of "Moore's Mill" and others took up a subscription among the public and raised a fund with which a stairway was built from the ground up to the floor of the bridge at the point from which the flooring had been removed back to the end of the bridge over the railroad tracks, whereby the bridge was made a passageway for pedestrians over North river, and has been used as such since. In May, 1904, while the bridge was being used in the way just stated, particularly by the residents on the West Buena Vista side of the river, the West Buena Vista Company, having disposed of all of its other property, made sale of this bridge with the view of dividing the proceeds of sale among the stockholders of the company, and the purchaser thereof began to tear it down, whereupon J. L. Oney and Ella B. Agner, who had become the sole owners of "Moore's Mill," filed their bill in this cause and obtained a temporary injunction restraining the West Buena Vista Company and all others from removing the said bridge or interfering with its use by the public.

In their bill the complainants set out the origin of the bridge, its use, etc., as hereinbefore stated, and charge that they and others similarly situated bought their property in West Buena Vista in good faith on the existence of the bridge as a most valuable easement to their property; that the removal of it would inflict a serious and irreparable injury to the complainants, by reason of the fact that they would then be without access to

Buena Vista, save around by the old county bridge, a distance of two miles; that the West Buena Vista Company is insolvent; and that complainants desire to repair and keep in repair the said bridge as an indispensable and valuable easement to their property, etc.

By its answer the West Buena Vista Company admits that the map or plat exhibited with the bill was made and recorded in accordance with what is known as the "Plat Act" (Acts 1887-88, pp. 553, 554, c. 486 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1280, § 2510a]), that the bridge was used by every one who desired to use it, and that it was offered to the county and city as a public bridge; does not deny that complainants bought with reference to the bridge and would not have paid more than one-half as much for their property without the bridge, or bought it at all. While the answer denies that the company sold with reference to the map, the deeds it made to Oney and his associates for "Moore's Mill" show that it was referred to, and the proof is uncontradicted that the bridge was urged as the inducement to the purchasers of the company's property.

Upon the hearing of the cause on the bill and answer and the proofs submitted on behalf of the respective parties, the circuit court dissolved the temporary injunction theretofore awarded the complainants and dismissed their bill, whereupon they obtained this appeal.

While there was, unmistakably, an offer of appellee to dedicate the bridge in question to both the county of Rockbridge and the city of Buena Vista as a part of a public highway, it is not claimed—at least, it is not shown—that it was in any manner accepted by either; but it is equally as certain from the facts proved that it was not only the purpose of appellees to dedicate the bridge to the public use, but that the bridge was urged as an inducement to appellants and others to purchase the company's lands, and that it was one of the most important, if not the principal, inducement to them to buy. It is true that neither the bridge nor any part of it was conveyed in the deed to appellants, or to any other purchasers of the company's lands; but the map showing the bridge was not only recorded as provided in the plat act, supra, but was referred to in the deeds made to appellants and others. Therefore the law implies a grant of the bridge as an easement to the property conveyed.

But the rule is that the grantor or dedicatory of an easement is generally under no obligation to make repairs, and that this duty rests upon those who use the easement, and if they fail to keep it in proper condition for the uses for which it was granted or dedicated they must suffer the resulting inconvenience. This rule is changed only where there is a special agreement or prescriptive right to the contrary. 14 Cyc. 1209; 2 Min. Inst. 19; 2 Tucker's Com. 7; 9 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 80.

There is nothing in this record to take the case out of the control of the general rule, so that, while appellants and others similarly situated acquired by their purchase of lands from appellee a right in this bridge as an easement incident to their property, the burden rests upon them to keep it in proper condition for the uses for which it was constructed; and a failure to do this for an unreasonable length of time would amount to an abandonment of the easement, as an abandonment will be presumed where the owner of the right does, or permits to be done, any act inconsistent with the future enjoyment of the right. 10 A. & E. Ency. L. 435; Buntin v. Danville, 93 Va. 205, 24 S. E. 830; Norfolk v. Nottingham, 96 Va. 34, 30 S. E. 444; Scott v. Moore, 98 Va. 668, 37 S. E. 342, 81 Am. St. Rep. 749. Nonuser of an easement, however, unaccompanied by proof of an intention to abandon it, is not sufficient. The evidence must be clear that there was the intention to abandon. See the authorities just cited.

While the evidence shows that the bridge, since the flooring was taken up over the railroad tracks, is absolutely useless except for foot passengers, it also shows that the structure, built mainly of iron and steel, is, with the exception of the flooring, well preserved, and the materials therein perfectly sound. Therefore, it cannot be said that it has become entirely useless, as appellee contends, as an easement to the property of appellants. Nor can it be said, under the circumstances, that it has been abandoned by the appellants. On the contrary, appellants have been all along and are now using the bridge, and insist upon their right to repair and restore it to a condition that will render it safe and useful for the purposes for which it was built and used for many years after its construction. It would, we think, be manifestly unjust to permit appellee, after having used this bridge as an inducement to appellants and others to buy its property, and permitted its use as stated, to remove it and thereby deprive these purchasers of a valuable and indispensable easement to their property.

But we are further of opinion that, to entitle appellants to a continuing right or interest in this bridge as an easement, they should be required to restore it, within a reasonable time, to such condition as will render it safe and useful for the purposes for which it was constructed, and that, if this is not done, they should be regarded as having abandoned the easement, in which event appellee will be entitled to make such disposition of the materials in the structure as it may see fit. 13 Cyc. 490; Bolling v. Petersburg, 3 Sand. 573; Harrison v. Parker, 6 East, 563.

Therefore the decree appealed from will be reversed, the temporary injunction awarded in the cause reinstated, and the cause remanded to the circuit court with directions to put appellants upon the terms that, unless they repair, or cause to be repaired, the said bridge, putting it in a good and safe condition for the uses for which it was constructed and formerly used, within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the said court in its decree, the injunction will stand dissolved, and their bill dismissed.

(104 Va. 572)

METROPOLITAN LIFE INS. CO. v. HALL.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE—PAROL—VARYING TERMS OF POLICY.

Where an insurance policy provided that the premiums should be due and payable quarterly on the 16th of the month, evidence that it was agreed, at the time the policy was issued, between insured and insurer's agent, that the premium should not be due until after the 20th of the month, was inadmissible to vary the terms of the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 1818.]

2. INSURANCE—PREMIUMS—PAYMENT—EXTENSION OF TIME—AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

Where a policy of insurance provided that no premiums in arrears could be received, except by agreement in writing signed by certain officers of the society, an agent employed or authorized to collect an overdue premium had no authority to bind the insurer to grant an extension of time to pay such premium.

3. SAME—ESTOPPEL.

A policy provided that general agents had no authority to extend the time for the payment of premiums, but a rule of the company authorized acceptance of overdue premiums between the due date and that when the premium receipt must be returned for cancellation, unless paid, provided the superintendent can certify that the former insured is in good health. An agent authorized to accept an overdue premium went to the house of insured to collect the same, and without authority agreed to accept the premium on the succeeding day, requesting the insurer's assistant superintendent to collect the same, which he agreed, but failed, to do, and on such day insured was sick from the illness of which she died. Held, that such facts did not estop the insurer from enforcing a forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of premium.

4. EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—CONCLUSIONS.

In an action on a policy, questions as to whether insured would have paid the premium on the day it was demanded in case she had been told that the policy would otherwise be forfeited, and whether it was not the duty of the agent of the insurer to collect the premiums at insured's residence after the time for payment had been extended, were incompetent, as calling for conclusions.

Error to Circuit Court, Alleghany County.

Action by Annie T. Hall against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. E. Allen and O. B. Harvey, for plaintiff in error. Geo. A. Revercomb, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. This is an action on a life insurance policy, which provides, among other things, that if any premium or installment thereof be not paid when due the policy shall be void; that all premiums are payable at the home office, in the city of New York, but at the pleasure of the company suitable persons may be authorized to receive such premiums at other places, but only on the terminated in Sycamore (Twentieth) street, in Buena Vista, with the consent of these several companies; but the completion of the bridge was in accordance with the representations of the company in effecting sales of its lands.

By the bridge "Moore's Mill" was brought within one-half mile of the business center of Buena Vista, while without it the distance was about two miles around by the county road and bridge below. It is admitted that this bridge was built as a passway "for the owners of the West Buena Vista Company," and after its completion the public was permitted to use it, and it was used for both horse and foot passengers by those desiring to use it; and for a long time, while the county bridge below was down, it was the only thoroughfare into Buena Vista from the western portion of the county; but there has never been any other acceptance of it as a highway by the county of Rockbridge or the city of Buena Vista.

After many years of service to the public, but especially to the persons who had bought land of the West Buena Vista Company, and the owners of "Moore's Mill" in particular, the bridge became in need of repairs and unsafe, the flooring thereon having decayed and by reason of a complaint from the railroad companies the flooring over the railroads was removed, so as to avoid any danger to their traffic. This being the condition of the bridge, in order to continue it as a footway, the owners of "Moore's Mill" and others took up a subscription among the public and raised a fund with which a stairway was built from the ground up to the floor of the bridge at the point from which the flooring had been removed back to the end of the bridge over the railroad tracks, whereby the bridge was made a passageway for pedestrians over North river, and has been used as such since. In May, 1904, while the bridge was being used in the way just stated, particularly by the residents on the West Buena Vista side of the river, the West Buena Vista Company, having disposed of all of its other property, made sale of this bridge with the view of dividing the proceeds of sale among the stockholders of the company, and the purchaser thereof began to tear it down, whereupon J. L. Oney and Ella B. Agner, who had become the sole owners of "Moore's Mill," filed their bill in this cause and obtained a temporary injunction restraining the West Buena Vista Company and all others from removing the said bridge or interfering with its use by the public.

In their bill the complainants set out the origin of the bridge, its use, etc., as hereinbefore stated, and charge that they and others similarly situated bought their property in West Buena Vista in good faith on the existence of the bridge as a most valuable easement to their property; that the removal of it would inflict a serious and irreparable injury to the complainants, by reason of the fact that they would then be without access to

Buena Vista, save around by the old county bridge, a distance of two miles; that the West Buena Vista Company is insolvent; and that complainants desire to repair and keep in repair the said bridge as an indispensable and valuable easement to their property, etc.

By its answer the West Buena Vista Company admits that the map or plat exhibited with the bill was made and recorded in accordance with what is known as the "Plat Act" (Acts 1887-88, pp. 553, 554, c. 486 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1280, § 2510a]), that the bridge was used by every one who desired to use it, and that it was offered to the county and city as a public bridge; does not deny that complainants bought with reference to the bridge and would not have paid more than one-half as much for their property without the bridge, or bought it at all. While the answer denies that the company sold with reference to the map, the deeds it made to Oney and his associates for "Moore's Mill" show that it was referred to, and the proof is uncontradicted that the bridge was urged as the inducement to the purchasers of the company's property.

Upon the hearing of the cause on the bill and answer and the proofs submitted on behalf of the respective parties, the circuit court dissolved the temporary injunction theretofore awarded the complainants and dismissed their bill, whereupon they obtained this appeal.

While there was, unmistakably, an offer of appellee to dedicate the bridge in question to both the county of Rockbridge and the city of Buena Vista as a part of a public highway, it is not claimed—at least, it is not shown—that it was in any manner accepted by either; but it is equally as certain from the facts proved that it was not only the purpose of appellee to dedicate the bridge to the public use, but that the bridge was urged as an inducement to appellants and others to purchase the company's lands, and that it was one of the most important, if not the principal, inducement to them to buy. It is true that neither the bridge nor any part of it was conveyed in the deed to appellants, or to any other purchasers of the company's lands; but the map showing the bridge was not only recorded as provided in the plat act, supra, but was referred to in the deeds made to appellants and others. Therefore the law implies a grant of the bridge as an easement to the property conveyed.

But the rule is that the grantor or dedicatory of an easement is generally under no obligation to make repairs, and that this duty rests upon those who use the easement, and if they fail to keep it in proper condition for the uses for which it was granted or dedicated they must suffer the resulting inconvenience. This rule is changed only where there is a special agreement or prescriptive right to the contrary. 14 Cyc. 1209; 2 Min. Inst. 19; 2 Tucker's Com. 7; 9 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 80.

There is nothing in this record to take the case out of the control of the general rule, so that, while appellants and others similarly situated acquired by their purchase of lands from appellee a right in this bridge as an easement incident to their property, the burden rests upon them to keep it in proper condition for the uses for which it was constructed; and a failure to do this for an unreasonable length of time would amount to an abandonment of the easement, as an abandonment will be presumed where the owner of the right does, or permits to be done, any act inconsistent with the future enjoyment of the right. 10 A. & E. Ency. L. 435; Buntin v. Danville, 98 Va. 205, 24 S. E. 830; Norfolk v. Nottingham, 96 Va. 34, 30 S. E. 444; Scott v. Moore, 98 Va. 668, 37 S. E. 342, 81 Am. St. Rep. 749. Nonuser of an easement, however, unaccompanied by proof of an intention to abandon it, is not sufficient. The evidence must be clear that there was the intention to abandon. See the authorities just cited.

While the evidence shows that the bridge, since the flooring was taken up over the railroad tracks, is absolutely useless except for foot passengers, it also shows that the structure, built mainly of iron and steel, is, with the exception of the flooring, well preserved, and the materials therein perfectly sound. Therefore, it cannot be said that it has become entirely useless, as appellee contends, as an easement to the property of appellants. Nor can it be said, under the circumstances, that it has been abandoned by the appellants. On the contrary, appellants have been all along and are now using the bridge, and insist upon their right to repair and restore it to a condition that will render it safe and useful for the purposes for which it was built and used for many years after its construction. It would, we think, be manifestly unjust to permit appellee, after having used this bridge as an inducement to appellants and others to buy its property, and permitted its use as stated, to remove it and thereby deprive these purchasers of a valuable and indispensable easement to their property.

But we are further of opinion that, to entitle appellants to a continuing right or interest in this bridge as an easement, they should be required to restore it, within a reasonable time, to such condition as will render it safe and useful for the purposes for which it was constructed, and that, if this is not done, they should be regarded as having abandoned the easement, in which event appellee will be entitled to make such disposition of the materials in the structure as it may see fit. 13 Cyc. 490; Bolling v. Petersburg, 3 Sand. 573; Harrison v. Parker, 6 East, 563.

Therefore the decree appealed from being reversed, the temporary injunction awarded in the cause reinstated, and the cause remanded to the circuit court with directions to put appellants upon the terms that, unless they repair, or cause to be repaired, the said bridge, putting it in a good and safe condition for the uses for which it was constructed and formerly used, within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the said court in its decree, the injunction will stand dissolved, and their bill dismissed.

(104 Va. 572)

METROPOLITAN LIFE INS. CO. v. HALL.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE—PAROL—VARYING TERMS OF POLICY.

Where an insurance policy provided that the premiums should be due and payable quarterly on the 16th of the month, evidence that it was agreed, at the time the policy was issued, between insured and insurer's agent, that the premium should not be due until after the 20th of the month, was inadmissible to vary the terms of the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 1818.]

2. INSURANCE—PREMIUMS—PAYMENT—EXTENSION OF TIME—AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

Where a policy of insurance provided that no premiums in arrears could be received, except by agreement in writing signed by certain officers of the society, an agent employed or authorized to collect an overdue premium had no authority to bind the insurer to grant an extension of time to pay such premium.

3. SAME—ESTOPPEL.

A policy provided that general agents had no authority to extend the time for the payment of premiums, but a rule of the company authorized acceptance of overdue premiums between the due date and that when the premium receipt must be returned for cancellation, unless paid, provided the superintendent can certify that the former insured is in good health. An agent authorized to accept an overdue premium went to the house of insured to collect the same, and without authority agreed to accept the premium on the succeeding day, requesting the insurer's assistant superintendent to collect the same, which he agreed, but failed, to do, and on such day insured was sick from the illness of which she died. Held, that such facts did not estop the insurer from enforcing a forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of premium.

4. EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—CONCLUSIONS.

In an action on a policy, questions as to whether insured would have paid the premium on the day it was demanded in case she had been told that the policy would otherwise be forfeited, and whether it was not the duty of the agent of the insurer to collect the premiums at insured's residence after the time for payment had been extended, were incompetent, as calling for conclusions.

Error to Circuit Court, Alleghany County.

Action by Annie T. Hall against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. E. Allen and O. B. Harvey, for plaintiff in error. Geo. A. Revercomb, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. This is an action on a life insurance policy, which provides, among other things, that if any premium or installment thereof be not paid when due the policy shall be void; that all premiums are payable at the home office, in the city of New York, but at the pleasure of the company suitable persons may be authorized to receive such premiums at other places, but only on the production of the company's receipt, signed by the president or secretary, and countersigned by the person receiving the premium; and that the contract between the parties is completely set forth in the policy and the application therefor, taken together, and none of its terms can be varied or modified, nor any forfeiture waived or premiums in arrears received, except by agreement in writing signed by either the president, vice president, secretary, or assistant secretary, whose authority for this purpose will not be delegated, and no other person has or will be given authority.

The premiums on the policy were payable quarterly, on the 16th day of April, July, October, and January of each year. The second premium, which was due July 16, 1902, was not paid. On the 21st of that month, Gilmore, the agent of the insurance company, who solicited the insurance, delivered the policy, and collected the first premium, went to the home of the insured, who was living with her mother, the beneficiary in the policy in certain contingencies, to collect the second premium. The mother informed him that she had the money with which to pay the premium, but as her rent was due that day she would prefer not paying the premium until the next day, if that would be agreeable. Gilmore assented to this arrangement, but told her that he was going to leave the town (Covington, Va.) the next morning, to be absent for several days, and that Mr. Hill, the assistant superintendent, would call and get the premium. Gilmore testified that he reported to Hill the arrangement he had made with Mrs. Hall; that Hill made no objection to it, and agreed to collect the premium the next day. This statement Hill denied. He did not collect the premium, but, on the contrary, about the 25th of that month returned the official receipt, which Gilmore had when he went to collect the premium, to the superintendent of the company at Lynchburg, and the policy was canceled on the books of the company.

On the evening of the day upon which Gilmore returned to Covington, which was the 3d or 4th of August, Mrs. Hall sent the amount of the premium to him, and he gave his receipt as agent therefor. The next morning he took the money to the office of Mr. Hill, but the officials there declined to receive it, stating that the insured was then sick of the disease (typhoid fever) of which she died on the 6th of that month.

The company refused to pay the policy upon the ground that the insured had forfeited all her rights under it by her failure to pay the second premium as provided by the policy. The beneficiary, on the other hand, insisted that there had been no forfeiture, or, if there had been, the company had waived it, or was estopped from setting it up as a defense.

One of the grounds upon which it is claimed that there was no forfeiture is that it was understood and agreed between the insured and Gilmore, the agent, that the premiums, although made payable by the policy on the 16th of the month, were not in fact payable until after the 20th of the month, and that it was also understood and agreed that the premiums were payable at the house of the insured. Mrs. Hall and Gilmore, the agent, both testified that such was the agreement; but they further testified, or, rather, Mrs. Hall did, and Gilmore's evidence is not to the contrary, that the agreement was made at the time the policy was issued.

This understanding or agreement was in conflict with the express terms of the policy, and could not be proved, under the well-settled rule that contemporaneous parol evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written contract. Towner v. Lucas' Ex'r, 13 Grat. 705; Catt v. Oliver, 98 Va. 580, 36 S. E. 980.

Richards, in his work on Insurance (section 77), says: "But it is very important to notice that an oral assent or promise made to the insured at or before the execution of the contract, to the effect that he may in the future violate the terms of the policy, is not binding, and cannot be shown by parol, because the oral promise becomes merged in the contract. Thus an antecedent promise by an agent that a premium note need not be paid when due cannot be shown by parol."

Another ground relied on to show that there was no forfeiture was that it was the custom of the company in Covington for its agents to go to the homes of the insured to collect the premiums, and not to go until after the 20th of the month, because that was pay day at the paper mill, in which many of the insured worked, and they were unable to pay until after that time, although the premiums, by the terms of the policy, were due and payable at an earlier day.

It appears that the insurance company issued at Covington two kinds of policies; one known as the "Industrial," and the other as the "ordinary." By the express terms of the Industrial, a different policy from the one sued on, which was the ordinary policy, the agents of the company were required to go to the homes of the insured and collect the premiums. The evidence further showed, perhaps, that as to the Industrial policies the custom of the company was not to enforce strictly the rule as to the payment of the premiums the day they became due; but the evidence wholly fails to establish any such custom as to the payment of premiums on policies like that in suit.

It thus appears that the policy had lapsed for the nonpayment of the second premium when it became due and payable, and that there can be no recovery thereon unless the insurance company has waived the forfeiture, or is estopped by its conduct from setting it up as a defense.

If it be conceded that Gilmore, who had possession of the official receipt of the company, and was sent by Hill, the assistant superintendent, to the home of the insured to collect the premium after the policy had lapsed, could have received the premium, so as to bind the company, without evidence that the insured was in good health, it does not follow that he had authority to extend the time for its payment, and bind the company afterwards to accept the premium when tendered, if the insured was sick or dead when the tender was made.

An agent employed or authorized to collect a claim does not thereby have authority to bind his principal to grant an extension of time, at least for the payment of an overdue premium. Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155; Critchett v. American Ins. Co., 53 Iowa, 404, 5 N. W. 543, 36 Am. Rep. 230; Richards on Ins. p. 497.

"As to waivers taking place after issue of policy," says Parsons, in his edition of May on Insurance, quoted by this court with approval in Va. Fire & M. Ins. Co. v. Richmond Mica Co., 102 Va. at page 439, 46 S. E. at page 466, 102 Am. St. Rep. 848, "it is very proper to require the assured to look at his policy and conform to it, and the limitation of the agent's authority should be effective, unless the insurance company, by a course of business or otherwise, has waived the limitation on the agent's power of waiver."

And in Conway v. Phoenix, etc., Co. (N. Y.) 35 N. E. 420, it was held that where a life insurance policy provides that no agent "can alter, modify, or waive any of the terms or conditions of this policy," and any subsequent premium be not paid when due and a separate receipt signed by the president or secretary of the company in each case given therefor, then the policy shall cease, the general agents of the company, without its consent, cannot extend the time for paying premiums. It was further held in that case that where such agents, under a custom in their office of which the company has knowledge, are at liberty not to make any new agreement as to time for payment of premiums, but to accept payment after they are due and thus waive the right to declare a forfeiture, provided that at that time the conditions have not been changed by an alteration in the health of the insured, and they extend the time of payment of a premium by the insured, the risk is on him that pending the delay granted by the agents he may change in health or die and his insurance be lost; and in case of his death before payment the policy is forfeited.

By the terms of the policy sued on the general agents had no authority to make any agreement for the extension of time for the payment of a premium; but under a rule of the company it was provided that "between the date on which a premium falls due and the date when a premium receipt must be returned for cancellation overdue premiums may be accepted by the superintendent, provided he can certify that the former insured is in good health."

If Hill, the assistant superintendent, had gone to the home of the insured on the 22d day of July, as Gilmore testified he had agreed to do, and had found that the insured was sick, as she was on that day, so that he could not make the certificate of good health required by the rule, he would have had no authority to receive the premium, under the principles enunciated in Conway v. Phoenix, etc., Co., supra, which we think are correct. The insured had not lived up to her contract, and if she wished further time for paying the premium than is permitted by her policy, the risk incident to such delay ought to be hers, and not the insurance company's. While the contract was in force, as is said in the case last cited, and up to the time when the insured had the right to renew it by payment of the premium in advance, the risk in the matter was on the company; but upon failure to pay, after notice, upon the due date of the premium, the risk was on the insured that, pending the delay permitted by the agents, she might change in health, if not die, and her insurance be forfeited.

From what has been said it follows that, in our opinion, the trial court erred in permitting the plaintiff to introduce evidence to establish a contemporaneous parol agreement or understanding as to the time and place of paying the premiums different from that stated in the policy of insurance, and also erred in giving instruction No. 1, asked for by the plaintiff and objected to by the defendant.

The action of the court in overruling the plaintiff in error's objection to the following questions and answers is assigned as error, viz.:

"Mr. Gilmore, if you had told Miss Hall that the policy would not be good if you did that [referring to the agreement for an extension of time], wouldn't she have paid you that day, or would she?

"Ans. Yes, sir, I suppose she would.

"Now, was it not the duty of the agent of this company to have gone to Miss Hall, or Mrs. Hall, in order to collect this premium, after you had extended the time after the 21st of July?

"Ans. I suppose it was. She was under the impression that the agent would come and collect it, and they had always done so."

The plaintiff insists that the bills of exceptions as to the rulings of the court in question are not sufficient to enable this court to pass upon them.

Without passing upon the sufficiency of the bills of exceptions, as the case will have to go back for a new trial upon other grounds, and these questions may again be asked, it is proper to say that, if objected to by the defendant on the new trial, the objection should be sustained, as the witness is not asked to state facts, but to give his opinion upon matters upon which opinion evidence is not admissible.

The judgment of the circuit court must be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial, to be had not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

(104 Va. 539)

CHESTNUT v. CHESTNUT.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES — DESIGNATION OF AMOUNT — OMISSION — RIGHT TO INSERT.

The amount stated in the margin of a note, whether expressed in words or figures, cannot supply the omission to insert the amount in the body of the note, where a blank has been left; but a bona fide holder is entitled to fill up the blank with the amount stated in the margin and then enforce it at law, unless the blank was left unfilled by mistake, in which case equity may correct it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 7, Cent. Dig. Bills and Notes, § 89.]

2. SAME.

In the absence of evidence that the blank in a note with reference to the amount thereof was the result of a mistake, the presumption is that the payee, who is the holder, may fill up the blank with the amount agreed on; and this right continues, unless his exercise thereof has been unreasonably delayed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 7, Cent. Dig. Bills and Notes, § 89.]

3. SAME — ACTIONS — DECLARATION — EVIDENCE.

Where the declaration in an action on a note alleged that a specified sum was due thereon, together with interest, a note with a blank for the amount due thereon was inadmissible.

4. SAME — DENIAL OF EXECUTION — AFFIDAVIT — NECESSITY.

A defendant in an action on a note cannot prove that he did not execute the note, unless he files with his pleading, as required by the express provisions of Code 1904, § 8279, an affidavit denying his signature.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 7, Cent. Dig. Bills and Notes, § 1543.]

5. SAME — GROUNDS OF DEFENSE — SUFFICIENCY.

The statement of grounds of defense in an action on a note, that defendant did not execute the note and that she did not owe the sum claimed or any part thereof, was insufficient; for it gave plaintiff no more notice of the defense than the plea of non assumpsit.

6. PLEADING — STATEMENT OF GROUNDS OF DEFENSE — INSUFFICIENCY — FILING SUFFICIENT STATEMENT.

Where a defendant's statement of his grounds of defense is insufficient, the court, on plaintiff objecting thereto, should, as authorized by Code 1904, § 3249, require the filing of a sufficient statement; and, on the failure of defendant to do so, his evidence of the matters not sufficiently described should be excluded.

Error to Circuit Court, Highland County.

Action by John A. Chestnut against Nancy J. Chestnut. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

The declaration was for a single item stated and interest, which plaintiff alleged to be due him on a promissory note. The statement of grounds of defense was that defendant did not execute any such paper, and that she did not owe the sum of money claimed in the declaration, or any part thereof, and all other facts which could be proven under the plea of non assumpsit.

Braxton & McCoy and C. P. Jones & Son, for plaintiff in error. J. M. Perry and J. K. Hackman, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. Several errors are assigned in the petition for the writ of error, but the principal one is to the action of the court in permitting the plaintiff to offer in evidence a paper of which the following is a copy:

"$1,800. Eighteen hundred dollars.

"Monterey, Va., June 6, 1892.

"Three months after date.....promise to pay to the order of J. A. Chestnut.....dollars negotiable and payable at the Highland County Bank, Monterey, Va.

"Homestead and all other exemptions waived by the maker and each endorser.

"Value received.

"No..... Due.....

"Nancy J. Chestnut."

The objection made to its admissibility is that it is not, as alleged, a promissory note, and in its present form does not evidence a promise to pay or create any liability on the defendant.

The propriety of the court's ruling depends upon the question whether or not the figures and words in the margin of a note fix the amount for which the note was intended to be given, where no amount has been inserted in the blank left for it in the body of the note. Upon this question the decisions of the courts are not in accord, though the weight of authority and the better reason seem to be in favor of the view that the sum named in the margin is generally the limit of the amount with which a bona fide holder may fill up the blank, but until so filled the instrument is incomplete and no recovery can be had upon it. See Daniel on Neg. Instr. §§ 86, 86a, 143; 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 130, and cases cited; 7 Cyc. 593, 594, and cases cited; Garrard v. Lewis, 10 Queen's Bench Div. 30; Norwich Bk. v. Hyde, 13 Conn. 281; Patton v. Shanklin, 14 B. Mon. 13; Hollen v. Davis, 59 Iowa, 444, 13 N. W. 413, 44 Am. Rep. 688; Edwards v. Ramsey (Minn.) 14 N. W. 272; Schryver v. Hawkes, 22 Ohio St. 308, 315.

The reason for this rule of construction is that one of the essential requisites of a bill or note is that the amount for which it is made must be clearly expressed in the instrument, and as the marginal figures are not generally regarded as a part of it, but are intended as a convenient index and as an aid to remove ambiguity or doubt in the instrument itself, they cannot supply the omission to insert the amount in the body of the instrument where a blank has been left for that purpose. The blank in such an instrument is presumably intended to be filled with something, and until that something has been added the instrument is not complete. It is not invalid simply because it is incomplete. It creates certain rights and obligations, and when properly filled up by a bona fide holder may be enforced at law, or, if left blank by mistake, in equity. See Garrard v. Lewis, supra; Norwich Bk. v. Hyde, supra; Frank v. Lilenfield, 33 Grat. 377, 383-387; Orrick v. Colston, 7 Grat. 180.

The fact that the amount in the margin of the note in this case is expressed in words as well as figures cannot, as it seems to us, affect the question. The refusal of the courts to hold that the amount of a note or bill cannot be supplied from the margin, where there is a blank left for the amount in the body of the instrument, is not because the amount in the margin is expressed in figures, but because it is in the margin, and not in the body of the instrument.

In the case of Norwich Bank v. Hyde, supra, which is a leading case on the subject, the question involved was substantially the same as in this case, both as to the defect in the note and the manner in which the objection to it was raised. The note in that case was as follows:

"$200 Norwich Ct., Feb. 6th, 1837.

"Sixty days after date, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of Amos D. Allen.....dollars at the Quinebaug Bank. Oliver Allen."

"It is a well-settled principle," said the court in that case, "that no precise form of words is necessary to constitute a note or bill of exchange; yet all the authorities agree that the sum must be specified, so that it may be definitely known what sum was intended. Indeed, it seems to be the first principle that the sum to be paid must be clearly and intelligibly expressed. Obit. on Bills, part 1, c. 3, § 11; Beawes, L. M. § 193. Does this note, then, clearly and intelligibly import a promise to pay $200? or does it appear to be an imperfect instrument?"

"The question upon this declaration is not whether this may not properly be made a valid instrument, but whether in its present shape it is precisely what it would have been, had it been filled up in the usual manner. If we so hold, what becomes of the rule, above stated, that the sum must be clearly and intelligibly stated in the body of the instrument? Would not its appearance tend to impede its currency and clog its circulation? It certainly would be a very loose mode of doing business in cases which seem to require great accuracy, and one to which we cannot assent unless we find it settled by authority."

Upon a review of the authorities the court reached the conclusion that the aid which the margin is to give in construing a note or bill is to remove an ambiguity in the body of the note, or to clear up a doubt, not to supply a blank.

How the margin will assist in removing a doubt as to the meaning of the body of the instrument is illustrated in Elliot's Case, Leech's C. L. 183. In that case the body of the note was for "fifty"; in the margin, "£50." The court supplied the word "pounds" from the margin.

In other cases, where there was no sum in the margin to aid, the courts have supplied an omitted word, where it was clear from other parts of the instrument what the omitted word was. This is illustrated by the decision of this court in Harman v. Howe, 27 Grat. 676, where the sum to be paid was stated as "seven hundred and seventy-six in lawful money of Virginia." The court supplied the word "dollars," because it was clear, as was said by Judge Moncure in delivering the opinion of the court, from the context of the bond sued on, what the omitted word was.

It does not follow, however, because the blank for the amount of a bill or note has not been filled up, that a bona fide holder shall lose the debt which such instrument was intended to evidence, or be deprived of his security. If the blank was left unfilled by mistake, a court of equity may correct the mistake. Generally, any bona fide holder of a bill or note signed in blank has authority to fill the blank with any sum, not exceeding the limitation in the margin, which the transaction between him and the person from whom he received it will warrant. Norwich Bk. v. Hyde, supra; Garrard v. Lewis, supra; 7 Cyc. 593, 594; 4 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 130, 131; Frank v. Lilenfield, 33 Grat. 377, 383.

In Frank v. Lilenfield, 33 Grat. 377, 383, this court held that where a party to a negotiable note intrusts it to the custody of another with blanks not filled up, whether it be for the purpose of accommodating the person to whom it was intrusted or to be used for his own benefit, such negotiable instrument carries on its own face an implied authority to fill up the blanks and perfect the instrument.

In the absence of evidence that the blank in the paper sued on in this case was the result of a mistake, the presumption is that the payee, who is still the holder thereof, had the right to fill up the blank with any amount agreed upon between him and the maker, and that right still exists, unless its exercise, in the opinion of the jury upon all the facts and circumstances of the case, has been unreasonably delayed. The plaintiff would therefore seem to have in his hands, as was said in Norwich Bank v. Hyde, supra, the materials to make his note and declaration correspond, although, in the present state of the note, he might as well attempt to prove his case "by introducing the bare name of the maker upon one side of a paper and that of the defendant on the other. And yet, in that case, upon well-settled principles, a bona fide holder might fill up such a paper so as to shape it to the case; the rule being that where a man gives his name in blank it is a letter of credit for an indefinite amount. Russel v. Langstaffe, Doug. 514; Mitchell v. Culver, 7 Cow. 336." Frank v. Lillenfield, supra.

Thus we see that the objection to the note when offered in evidence ought to have been sustained, since it did not correspond with the note declared on. But we further see that it may be in the power of the plaintiff to make it such as he has described it to be in his declaration, so as to render it admissible in evidence.

Another assignment of error is to the action of the court in refusing to permit the defendant to testify that the note sued on was signed in blank, the purpose for which it was signed, the amount to be inserted in the blank, that she did not execute any note to the plaintiff for $1,800, and that she was not indebted to him at the date of the note.

The bill of exceptions does not show upon what ground the evidence was objected to by the plaintiff or held inadmissible by the court. The plaintiff's contention here is that the defendant had no right to prove that she did not execute the note, because no affidavit was filed with her plea of non assumpsit denying that she had made the note, in order to put that question in issue as required by section 3279 of the Code of 1904, and that the other evidence rejected was not admissible because the matters sought to be established by it were not so plainly described in the statement of her grounds of defense as to give the plaintiff notice of their character, as required by section 3249 of the Code of 1904.

In the absence of the affidavit provided for by section 3279 of the Code of 1904, the court was clearly right in refusing to permit the defendant to prove that she did not make the note declared on. Neither was the defendant's statement of her other grounds of defense sufficient. It gave the plaintiff no more notice of her defense than the plea of non assumpsit. But the court, when that statement was objected to by the plaintiff, ought to have required a further and sufficient statement to be filed, and, if such statement was not furnished, to have excluded evidence of any matter not described in the grounds of defense so plainly as to give the plaintiff notice of its character. But, instead of requiring such statement, the court overruled the plaintiff's motion, thereby impliedly holding that the statement objected to was sufficient.

The proper practice as to filing bills of particulars and statements of grounds of defense was discussed, Judge Riely delivering the opinion of the court, in the case of Columbia Accident Association v. Rockey, 93 Va. 678, 683, 25 S. E. 1000. By following the practice pointed out in that case in the next trial, the error complained of will be avoided.

Other errors are assigned; but, as they are not likely to occur upon the next trial, it is unnecessary to consider them.

The judgment must be reversed, because of the erroneous admission in evidence of the note sued on in its then incomplete condition, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(104 Va. 486)

NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INS.
CO. v. EDMUNDSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. INSURANCE—FIRE POLICY—PROOFS OF LOSS —TIME FOR FURNISHING.

Where a fire policy provides for furnishing of proofs of loss within 60 days, but it is not provided that there should be a forfeiture in case of failure to so furnish them, it is sufficient if they are furnished within a reasonable time.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action on a fire policy, the evidence was conflicting as to whether insured was told by the agents of the insurer at the time the insurance was taken that an inventory exhibited by insured was sufficient, and defendant requested an instruction that if it was understood between the parties that the inventory offered was not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the policy, and that insured promised to make a new inventory and on such understanding the policy was written, plaintiff could not recover. Held, that it was proper to modify the instruction by stating that such was the case, unless insured was told by insurer's agent at the time the insurance was taken that the inventory was sufficient.

3. SAME—IRON-SAFE CLAUSE—SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE.

A substantial compliance by an insured in a fire policy with the iron-safe clause is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Insurance, § 853.]

4. SAME—PROOFS OF LOSS—WAIVER—EVIDENCE.

Where the general agent of a fire insurance company was presented with proofs of loss, and did not point out any defects in it, but indicated a purpose to contest the policy for failure to comply with the iron-safe clause, it was sufficient to warrant a finding that there was a waiver or a substantial compliance with the requirements as to proofs of loss.

5. SAME—IRON-SAFE CLAUSE—COMPLIANCE WITH CLAUSE—EVIDENCE.

Insured, who was a village undertaker, presented to the insurer an inventory, which was accepted as sufficient on the writing of the policy, and thereafter in an ordinary manilla book, which contained the inventory, he entered all sales made by him and kept the same in an iron safe and produced it after the fire. He had made no purchases. He also kept a ledger, in which he made entries of certain business transactions, but which was kept in a desk and lost. It did not appear that such book contained any entry of transactions essential to an understanding of insured's business. Held, that the facts warranted a finding that there had been a substantial compliance with the iron-safe clause.

Error to Circuit Court, Frederick County.

Action by David E. Edmundson against the North British & Mercantile Insurance Company. Judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Sipe & Harris, for plaintiff in error. Barton & Boyd and Harry R. Kern, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. This action was instituted by defendant in error to recover the amount alleged to be due upon a fire insurance policy issued by the plaintiff in error covering such losses as might be sustained by the insured in consequence of the destruction by fire of his stock of merchandise at Middletown, Va., embracing coffins, trimmings, instruments, and other goods and merchandise used in an undertaking establishment.

The policy was underwritten August 21, 1902, for $700, on the insured's stock of merchandise to the value of $650, and on office furniture and fixtures, including an iron safe, all in the same building, to the value of $50. The value of the property burned was $1,045.50; the fire occurring January 18, 1903. In an inventory made by the insured July 21, 1902, one month before the issuance of the policy, the property of the insured was of the aggregate value of $1,410.75; but in the inventory there was a hearse and a set of furniture not covered by the policy.

A few days after the fire, in response to an informal notice of the fire to the agent of plaintiff in error at Winchester, Va., the said agent and the adjuster of plaintiff in error visited Middletown for the purpose of ascertaining the character and circumstances of the loss, taking at the time the paper known as a nonwaiver agreement, with the view to avoiding any waiver of the rights of the parties growing out of such examinations as might seem necessary preliminary to an adjustment of the loss. A call was made by the adjuster upon the defendant in error for invoices for the original stock of goods, which he tried to get, but could not, and, while there were some negotiations following, plaintiff in error took no steps to pay the loss, and this suit was instituted.

The defense made is on the ground that the terms of the policy were not complied with, especially the provision known as the iron-safe clause, requiring books which should "clearly and plainly present a complete record of business transacted, including purchases and sales made for cash and credit, from date of inventory," and that these books should be securely kept in an iron safe, or in some place not exposed to fire.

This defense was made under the general issue, and by a number of special pleas, on which the jury found against the plaintiff in error the amount claimed by defendant in error of $700, with interest thereon from December 10, 1903; and to the judgment on the verdict this writ of error was awarded.

Of the assignments of error made in the petition for the writ of error, only the third, fourth, and fifth are relied on here.

The third is to the granting of the eight instructions offered by defendant in error, which are as follows:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that the law only requires from an insured person a substantial, and not necessarily a literal, compliance with the requirements of his policy, and if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff in this case substantially complied with the requirements of the policy sued on, then they must find for the plaintiff the amount of his loss as proved by the testimony, not exceeding the sum of $700, with interest from 60 days after the proof of loss; the said sum to be three-fourths the cash value of the stock, not exceeding $650, and three-fourths cash value of office furniture and fixtures and iron safe, not exceeding $50.

"(2) If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant company waived any of the requirements or conditions of the policy sued on, then they are instructed that such waiver is equivalent to the performance by the plaintiff of such conditions as they believe were so waived.

"(3) If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff offered to the defendant a proper proof of loss within a reasonable time, under all the circumstances of the case, after the fire and not later than 60 days prior to the end of 12 months from the date of the fire, then they are instructed that such offer was in full time, even though it was made more than 60 days after the date of the fire.

"(4) The court instructs the jury that a substantial compliance with the requirements of the policy is all that is required in a proof of loss, and if the jury believe that the plaintiff in a reasonable time, and more than 60 days prior to the end of 12 months after the fire, offered to the defendant such proof of loss and that the defendant refused to accept the same, but failed to point out any alleged defects in the said proof of loss, then the defendant is to be taken to have waived the defects not so pointed out, and the right to require any further proof of loss.

"(5) If the jury believe from the evidence that an inventory substantially in accordance with the requirements of the policy was made out by the plaintiff within 12 months prior to the date of the policy, then they are instructed that the plaintiff was under no obligation to make any other inventory, or keep any set of books of business transactions or any bills or invoices of any purchases or sales (if any were made), except such business, purchases, or sales as were made since the date of the inventory; and if they believe that the plaintiff did keep such a record of sales or purchases, and did produce it and the original inventory after the fire, then they are instructed that this is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the policy in this respect.

"(6) The court instructs the jury that, even though the inventory, produced in evidence as taken within 12 months prior to the date of the policy, contained also items which were not insured, that this does not affect the validity and sufficiency of such an inventory.

"(7) The court instructs the jury that no evidence is admissible to change or alter the undertakings and promises of the parties to the contract of insurance, and that the walvers relied on instead of performance can only have reference to some fact existing at the time of the alleged waiver. No provision of the 'iron-safe' clause can be considered waived in this case other than if the jury believe that the insured was told by the agents that the inventory exhibited to them at the time of the issuance of the policy was sufficient, no other inventory would be required of him, although said inventory did not comply with the requirements of said clause. To this extent, and to this extent only, is any evidence admissible to show a waiver of any provision in said clause. Proofs of loss required by this policy may be waived by words, acts, or conduct that reasonably induced insured to believe a strict compliance with the policy was not required.

"(8) The court instructs the jury that, even though the plaintiff may have promised to produce any bills, invoices, other than those referred to in instruction No. 5, and failed so to produce them, such a promise is not binding upon the plaintiff at all, especially if they believe he was unable to procure them and so notified the defendant company."

During the negotiations for the insurance, defendant in error showed the agents of plaintiff in error, who called at his place of business and solicited the insurance, the inventory he had made one month before, which, as defendant in error contends, was examined by these agents and not objected to, and with the property in sight and with full knowledge of what it was they agreed to and did issue the policy thereon for $700. The only articles sold by defendant in error after the inventory of July 21, 1902, were one coffin, $7.50, and one casket, $22.50, and no additional purchases were made. The book, in which the two sales were listed, was kept in the iron safe, and was the same book which contained the inventory of the stock, etc., insured; and this book, which had been produced to the agents of plaintiff in error after the fire, was before the jury. As to whether the inventory was or was not regarded as sufficient when the policy was issued, there was evidence contradictory of that offered by defendant in error, but that was a question of fact for the determination of the jury.

It is insisted that an affirmative warranty on the part of the insured may be satisfied by a very much less literal performance than a promissory warranty, and therefore the first instruction was calculated to mislead the jury to apply a loose or liberal construction to all the obligations of the policy, including those which should be strictly performed; in other words, that while a substantial compliance with an affirmative warranty may be deemed sufficient, a strict performance of a promissory warranty—i. e., a literal compliance with the iron-safe clause—cannot be dispensed with.

It seems to be conceded as settled law that a substantial compliance with the requirements of the policy, other than the iron-safe clause, is all that can be reasonably exacted.

This is unquestionably the settled law as to the proof of loss. Georgia H. Ins. Co. v. Goode, 95 Va. 751, 30 S. E. 866, and authorities cited.

A substantial compliance with the provisions of the policy as to proof of loss being all that is required of the insured, and whether or not there has been such compliance being a question for the jury, especially where the policy does not provide forfeiture as a penalty for failure to strictly comply, the court in this case did not err in instructing the jury that if "the plaintiff offered to the defendant a proper proof of loss, within a reasonable time, under all the circumstances of the case, after the fire, and not later than 60 days prior to the end of 12 months from the date of the fire, then they are instructed that such offer was in full time, even though it was made more than 60 days after the date of the fire." The provision of the policy is, not that a failure to furnish proof of loss for "60 days after the fire" shall operate as a forfeiture, but that "no suit or action on this policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustained in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements, nor unless commenced within 12 months next after the fire."

Where "no forfeiture is provided for in case of failure to furnish proofs, forfeitures being stipulated in case of breach of other requirements, or furnishing the proofs in the specified time is not expressly made a condition precedent to recovery, the great majority of recent decisions hold that the effect of failure to furnish them is merely to postpone the time of payment to the specified time after they are furnished." 13 A. & E. Ency. L. 323, and authorities cited.

The real defense relied on by plaintiff in error is that the terms of the iron-safe clause, requiring books to be kept clearly and plainly showing a complete record of the business transacted by defendant in error, had not been complied with.

In Prudential Fire Ins. Co. v. Alley, 51 S. E. 812, recently decided by this court, where the iron-safe clause in the policy was identically the same as in the policy sued on here, it was held that a substantial compliance with that clause was all that could be reasonably required. In that case the insured, to sustain his contention that he had complied with the iron-safe clause, introduced in evidence, over the insurance company's objection, an inventory he had taken a short while before the removal of his business from Gate City, Scott county, to Appalachia, in Wise county, at which last-named place the policy of insurance on his stock of goods was issued; two books, one to show the purchases and the other the sales made by the insured while doing business at Appalachia; and certain witnesses to explain the manner of keeping the books. The book of purchases was objected to because it did not give the items or articles claimed to have been purchased, nor show that they were such articles as were covered by the policy. The objection to the book of sales was that it furnished no data from which the insurance company could tell what had been sold, at what profit, or for what price, but merely purported to give the cash taken in each day; and it was further objected that the books introduced did not "clearly and plainly present a complete record of the business transacted, including all purchases, sales, and shipments for cash and credit from the date of the inventory," as provided by the policy.

In that case, as in this, the evidence was conflicting as to whether or not the agent issuing the policy gave the insured to understand and believe that the inventory produced by him was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the policy; and upon the question whether or not the books introduced were a substantial compliance with the requirements of the policy the opinion reviews the most recent authorities on the subject, including the decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States, and holds that the provisions of the iron-safe clause, under all the facts and circumstances of the case, were substantially complied with by the insured. The facts and circumstances referred to in the opinion in that case were in many respects more favorable to the contention of insurer with reference to the inventory produced and the books kept by the insured than they are in the case under consideration.

It is true that in this case the only book kept was a "yellow book on inferior manilla paper," but the policy did not inhibit the list of sales made by the insured being kept in such a book, and there were no purchases made by him between the issuance of the policy and the fire to be entered and kept. As we have observed, the only sales made by the insured were entered on this book, and it was in this book that the inventory made before the policy was issued appeared and which was exhibited to the agents who issued the policy. This book was kept in the iron safe, and was produced to plaintiff in error's agent after the fire, who examined it as to the inventory, and only claims that his attention was not called to the entry of the two sales. The entry of the two sales was as plainly written in the book as was the inventory, and the agent who examined it after the fire, if he did not see the entry, made no inquiry as to sales, and it is not shown that the insured made any other sales.

The fourth assignment of error relates to the action of the court in modifying instructions Nos. 2 and 3, and in refusing instructions Nos. 5 and 6, offered by plaintiff in error.

Instruction No. 2 is as follows: "The jury are instructed that under the terms of the policy of insurance on which this action is founded it was the duty of the assured to take a complete itemized inventory of the stock on hand at least once in each calendar year, and unless such inventory had been taken within 12 calendar months prior to the date of the policy sued on in this action it was the duty of the assured to take such inventory within 30 days after the issuance of said policy; and if the jury believe from the evidence that the list of the property contained in the yellow blank book submitted in evidence was shown to the agents of the defendant company at, or a short time before, the writing of the said policy, and it was then understood between the parties not to be a sufficient compliance with the provisions of said policy in respect to the inventory therein required, and that a promise was then made by the assured to make a new inventory covering the stock embraced in the policy, and that after such promise and understanding said policy was written, the plaintiff cannot recover in this action, unless they shall find that such new inventory was afterwards made by the plaintiff in accordance with the provisions of said policy."

The change made by the court in the instruction was to add to its purport and meaning the qualification, "unless the insured was told by the agents of the insurer at the time the insurance was taken that the inventory exhibited to them was sufficient." The effect of this modification was to tell the jury that if plaintiff in error (the insurer) regarded the inventory taken July 21, 1902, as a sufficiently "complete itemized inventory of the stock," and on the strength of it issued the policy, then the jury was to also so regard it. As the evidence on that point was conflicting, it was entirely proper to modify the instruction as was done; otherwise, it would have been incomplete and calculated to confuse and mislead the jury.

While the refusal to give plaintiff in error's instruction No. 6 is complained of in the assignment of error under consideration, the objection is not urged in the argument. This instruction told the jury that, if they found from the evidence that defendant in error failed to make proof of loss within 60 days after the fire, such failure barred his right of recovery in this action, and they should find for plaintiff in error; in other words, that unless there had been a literal compliance with the requirement of the policy that proof of loss should be furnished by the insured within 60 days after the fire he could not recover on the policy. For the reasons already stated the instruction was rightly refused.

As stated in the petition for this writ of error, the modification of plaintiff in error's instruction No. 3 and the refusal of its instruction No. 5 approach so closely to the crucial question in the case that they may be discussed in connection with the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

The only compliance with the iron-safe clause in the policy, with reference to keeping "a set of books," etc., was the memorandum in the small "yellow blank book on inferior manilla paper," in these words:

"Sept. 30th, 1902.

"Sept. 30. By one coffin, Waters, $7.50.

"Nov. 14. By one casket, Rennels, $22.00."

This book, as has been remarked, was kept in the iron safe and produced after the fire, and while defendant in error had another book, spoken of as a ledger, in which he made entries of certain business transactions with customers, and which was kept in his desk and lost in the fire, it is not pretended, so far as this record discloses, that he made a single purchase as an addition to his stock of coffins, etc., covered by the policy, or made any sales not entered in the "yellow blank book." Yet plaintiff in error sought to have the jury instructed that as a matter of law defendant in error had not complied with the iron-safe clause, and therefore could not recover in this action.

Nor is it shown, or attempted to be shown, by any evidence in the cause, that the loss of the ledger, which was burned, operated injuriously to the plaintiff in error. It contained no entry of transactions essential to an understanding of what had been the business transactions by defendant in error as an undertaker.

Three questions were submitted to the jury: The first was as to whether or not the inventory taken by defendant in error July 21, 1902, was regarded by the agents of plaintiff in error as sufficient, and they gave the defendant in error to so understand; second, whether there had been a substantial compliance with the requirement of the policy as to proof of loss; and, third, whether or not the memorandum of sales made by defendant in error in the "yellow blank book," between the date of the policy and the fire, was a substantial compliance with the iron-safe clause.

With reference to the first question, while the agents of plaintiff in error who solicited the insurance and issued the policy testified that the inventory, when submitted to them, was not recognized and admitted to be a sufficient compliance with the terms of the policy with respect to the inventory therein required, the defendant in error testified to the contrary, and the jury chose to believe him, which is conclusive of that question; the case being heard here as upon a demurrer to evidence.

As to the second question, while the notice to plaintiff in error as to the loss, which was total, was informal, its agents appeared on the ground to ascertain the facts as to the fire, etc., and negotiations followed with reference to the payment of the loss, the plaintiff in error taking no steps towards the payment thereof; and when Kern, the attorney for defendant in error, presented to the general agent of plaintiff in error a formal proof of the loss in October, 1903, the latter did not point out any defects in the proof offered, but clearly indicated a purpose to contest the right of defendant in error to recover on his policy by reason of his failure to comply with the iron-safe clause as to the books he was required to keep. Under these circumstances, the jury was warranted in finding, either that there had been a waiver as to proof of loss, or that there had been a substantial compliance with the requirement of the policy in that respect.

The question whether or not there had been a substantial compliance with the iron-safe clause with reference to the books required by the policy to be kept was submitted fairly to the jury on the instructions given, which told the jury what was the legal effect of the failure to keep such books, and then left it to the jury to say whether or not such books were kept in point of fact. What was required was "a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases, sales, and shipments, both for cash and credit, from date of inventory * * * and during the continuance of the policy." It was not required that the record of sales should show at what price sold, whether for cash or on time; nor was it required that the book or books show whether the sales were for cash, or on credit, but only that there should be a complete record of the business transacted, etc., and, whether a sale was for cash or on credit, it was to be entered as a sale. Nor did the policy inhibit the list of sales being kept in a "yellow book of inferior manilla paper." There had been no purchases, and only two coffins sold, and these sales were listed in the same book with the inventory made before the policy was issued, exhibited to the agents who agreed to issue the policy. That this book was kept in the iron safe and exhibited after the fire is not denied. Let us suppose that there had been neither a sale nor a purchase by the insured between the issuance of the policy and the fire; could the insurer have avoided the payment of the loss on the ground that the iron-safe clause had been violated? Certainly not.

The opinion in Prudential F. Ins. Co. v. Alley, supra, quotes from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in L. & L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Kearney, 180 U. S. 132, 21 Sup. Ct. 326, 45 L. Ed. 460, as follows: "Turning, now, to the words of the policies in suit, what is the better and more reasonable interpretation of those provisions, so far as they relate to the issues in this case? The covenant and agreement to keep a set of books showing a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases and sales, both for cash and credit, together with the last inventory of said business, should not be interpreted to mean such books as would be kept by an expert bookkeeper or accountant in a large business house in a great city. That provision is satisfied if the books kept were such as would fairly show to a man of ordinary intelligence 'all purchases and sales, both for cash and credit.'

In Prudential F. Ins. Co. v. Alley, supra, referring to the books kept by the insured, the opinion says: "While the book of purchases does not give an itemized statement of all goods purchased after the inventory was taken, it does show the amount of each bill of goods purchased, when, and from whom. Neither does the book of sales give an itemized statement of the goods sold, but it does give, with a few exceptions which are satisfactorily explained, the amount of each day's sales. It clearly appears that no goods were sold or authorized to be sold by the insured upon credit, and that such goods as were sold without being paid for by the purchaser were treated as cash sales on the book of sales and accounted for as cash by the clerk who sold them." There it was held that the provisions of the iron-safe clause, under all the circumstances of the case, were substantially complied with. In other words, while the books under consideration were not kept as books would be kept by "an expert bookkeeper or accountant in a large business house in a great city," such bookkeeping was not to be expected of a storekeeper in a little mining town, and, if the insurer expected it, it ought to have said so in plain language; that where a record of the sales and purchases in a business is so kept as of itself to show the business transacted, or where with explanation as to the entries it shows the business transacted, such a record is a substantial compliance with the iron-safe clause of an insurance policy.

The reasoning upon which the conclusion is reached is obvious. The object of the iron-safe clause is to protect the insurer against fraud by requiring that in case of the destruction of the property the insured will furnish a set of books which will present clearly and plainly a complete record of the business he has transacted while the policy was in force, and, if the compliance with the requirement be sufficient to protect the insurer against fraud, it is all that can be reasonably required; otherwise, a just liability on the insurer might in many cases be avoided by the defense that the requirement had not been literally complied with, although it was not stipulated what system of bookkeeping was to be employed by the insured, and no harm whatever had come to the insurer by reason of the iron-safe clause not having been literally complied with.

The courts, in construing policies of insurance, do not look for grounds of forfeiture, but rather incline to shut their eyes to them. L. F. Ins. Co. v. West, 76 Va. 575, 44 Am. Rep. 177.

As said by this court in Ga. H. Ins. Co. v. Bartlett, 91 Va. 305, 21 S. E. 476, 50 Am. St. Rep. 832: "These insurance policies abound with innumerable stipulations, forfeitures, and provisions, hard to understand and difficult of performance, and it is a well-settled rule that they must be strictly construed against the insurer, and liberally in favor of the insured."

We do not appreciate the force of the contention that "the doors of fraud are thrown wide open" and the "moral hazard" greatly increased, because the insured in this case, a village undertaker, kept the list of his two sales from his stock of goods insured in a "yellow blank book," which he kept in his safe and produced after the fire, instead of keeping another and different "set of books," in which the two sales were listed, when the latter course would have presented no more "clearly and plainly a complete record of the business transacted" than the book he kept and produced.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

(104 Va. 599)

TERRY et al. v. McCLUNG et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. HIGHWAYS — ESTABLISHMENT — JURISDICTION — REPEAL OF STATUTE — EFFECT ON PENDING PROCEEDINGS.

Under Act Feb. 3, 1888 (Acts 1887-88, p. 68, c. 58), depriving the county court of Highland county of all jurisdiction in road cases and conferring the same on the board of supervisors, and which contains no saving clause providing for the transfer of pending cases to such board, where no final order establishing a road as applied for, and from which an appeal would lie, was made, and while the matter was in fieri and undetermined, said act was passed, the proceedings lapsed with the repeal of the statute under which they were instituted.

2. SAME—WHAT CONSTITUTES ROAD—WIDTH —STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Va. Code 1904, p. 2061, § 3878, relating to offenses concerning highways, etc., provides: "In this chapter the word 'road' shall be construed to mean any turnpike, state road, or county road." Section 944a (2), p. 440, Va. Code 1904, authorizing the board of supervisors of any county to appoint viewers to examine and report on the expediency of establishing any new road, etc., provides that every road shall be 30 feet wide and that the grade of no road hereafter located shall exceed four degrees at any one point, unless the said board order a different width or grade. Held, that the authority conferred by the latter section to order a different width in establishing new roads is for the purpose of enabling the tribunal charged with that duty to meet the exigencies of exceptional cases, and must be exercised subject to the implied limitation that the character of the way as a "road" shall be maintained, and hence the county court had no jurisdiction to establish a bridle way "for horseback travel."

3. SAME—OBSTRUCTION OF ROAD BY LAND-OWNERS—INJUNCTION.

Where the county authorities had never recognized a proposed route, along which the county court, acting without jurisdiction, had directed the opening of a road "for horseback travel," as a public road, nor made any appropriation for its location, construction, or maintenance, and the proceedings, so far as the public were concerned, had to all intents and purposes been abandoned years before the institution of a suit to enjoin the owners of the lands over which the path passed from obstructing the same, no legal ground for the relief prayed existed.

4. SAME—USER—REVOCABLE LICENSE.

The mere user of a road by the public, for however long a time, will not constitute it a public road, as a mere permission to the public by the owner of land to pass over a road thereon is, without more, to be regarded as a mere license, revocable at pleasure.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 25, Cent. Dig. Highways, §§ 1, 6, 10.]

5. DEDICATION—HIGHWAY—ACCEPTANCE BY COUNTY COURT—NECESSITY FOR.

A road dedicated to the public must be accepted by the county court on its records before it can be a public road.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Dedication, §§ 69, 70.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Highland County.

Bill by L. M. McClung and another against A. J. Terry and others. From a decree perpetuating a preliminary injunction restraining them from obstructing an alleged road, respondents appeal. Reversed.

A. C. Braxton and C. P. Jones & Son, for appellants. J. & R. Bumgardner, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. This appeal is from a decree perpetuating a preliminary injunction upon a bill filed by the appellees to enjoin the appellants from obstructing an alleged public road in Highland county, leading from Big Valley, across Jack Mountain, to Bullpasture Valley. The appellee McClung, who is the moving spirit in the litigation, owns two farms located nearly opposite to each other in these valleys, upon one of which he resides, while the other is used chiefly for grazing purposes. There is no road crossing Jack Mountain between the Staunton & Parkersburg pike on the north and Muddy Run Pass on the south, a distance of more than 20 miles; but between those thoroughfares the mountain is traversed by three bridlevays, or driftways, which, by tacit permission of the proprietors of the lands over which they pass, have been used by the people of the neighborhood and others for many years as passways, and occasionally for driving cattle and sheep across the mountain from one valley to the other.

This was the condition of affairs in the year 1863, when proceedings were instituted in the county court to establish a public road along one of these ways between the points indicated. The proceedings cover the period from August, 1863, to November, 1866, and are evidenced by eight orders of the county court. They were to the last degree irregular, and failed to comply with the requirements of the statute in many essential particulars; but since we are of opinion that none of the orders of the county court establishes a "road," within the meaning of the statute, it is unnecessary to notice in detail mere irregularities of procedure.

The county court undertook to deal with the route in sections, and the only order which can be fairly said to establish any part of it directs the opening of the two middle divisions "for horseback travel in such manner as to preserve the location." But there has never been a final order, establishing the road as applied for, from which an appeal would lie (R. F. & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 99 Va. 282, 38 S. E. 195), and while the matter was in fieri and undetermined the act of February 3, 1888, was passed, which deprived the county court of Highland county of all jurisdiction in road cases, and conferred that jurisdiction upon the board of supervisors (Acts 1887-88, p. 68, c. 58). The act contains no saving clause providing for the transfer of pending cases to the board of supervisors, and therefore, upon familiar principles, these proceedings lapsed with the repeal of the statute by whose authority they were instituted, and were never afterwards renewed before the board of supervisors. Dulin's Case, 91 Va. 718, 20 S. E. 821; Yeaton v. U. S., 5 Cranch, 283, 3 L. Ed. 101; Insurance Co. v. Richie, 5 Wall. 544, 18 L. Ed. 540; Assessor v. Osborne, 9 Wall. 575, 19 L. Ed. 748; Railroad Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 401, 25 L. Ed. 231; South Carolina v. Gaillard, 101 U. S. 433, 25 L. Ed. 937; Todd v. Landry, 12 Am. Dec. 479, note pages 480, 481; Hunt v. Jennings, 33 Am. Dec. 466; Sedgwick on Constr. Stat. (2d Ed.) p. 108, note A, and pages 111, 112.

It also appears that the only provision made to remunerate any landowner for property proposed to be taken for public use is found in the last order of the county court, which certifies to the board of supervisors $100 as just compensation to one of the proprietors for a change in the location of the proposed road on his premises; but even that allowance the board of supervisors declined to make until the road should be completed the entire distance at least five feet wide and not to exceed five degrees in grade at any point—conditions which were never complied with, and the order, by its terms, stood revoked.

The word "road," in its generic sense, means all kinds of ways, whether they be carlageways, driftways, bridlevays, or footways; but in the narrower statutory use of the term in this state it signifies a turnpike, state road, or county road, and contemplates a suitable way in width and grade for the convenient passage of vehicles. Va. Code 1904, p. 2061, § 3878.

As early as October, 1748 (22 Geo. II), an act was passed by the General Assembly, to take effect June 10, 1751, prescribing 30 feet as the standard width for public roads, and that requirement has been adhered to in the general statutes of the state down to the present time. 3 Hen. St. pp. 392-394, c. 39; 6 Hen. St. pp. 64, 65, c. 28; Va. Code 1904, p. 440, § 944a (2).

The authority conferred by the last-mentioned section to order a different width in establishing new roads is for the purpose of enabling the tribunal charged with that duty to meet the exigencies of exceptional cases. It has never, however, been construed as warranting the establishment of a way of inferior dignity to a "road," and must be exercised subject to the implied limitation that the character of the way as a "road" shall be maintained. Consequently, in the absence of special statutory authority, the action of the county court in thus attempting to establish a bridleway "for horseback travel" was plainly in excess of its jurisdiction and void.

Accordingly it has been held by the Supreme Court of Missouri, in Hughes v. Mermod, 25 S. W. 891, in construing a statute of that state which declares that a public road should be "not less than thirty nor more than sixty feet wide, to be determined by the county court, according to the utility and necessity of such road," that the county court had no jurisdiction to establish a road outside the discretionary limits fixed by statute.

The county authorities have never recognized the proposed route as a public road, nor made any appropriation for its location, construction, or maintenance; and the proceedings, so far as the public are concerned, had to all intents and purposes been finally abandoned years before the institution of this suit in 1900. It cannot be that this abortive attempt on the part of the appellees to convert a bridleway into a public road furnishes any legal ground for the injunctive relief accorded to them by the decree appealed from.

The remaining contentions of appellees, namely, that there has been a dedication of the road to the public, or else that they have acquired a private right of way along its route, are also unsustainable. The law on the subject is well settled that "the mere user of a road by the public, for however long a time, will not constitute a public road; that a mere permission to the public by the owner of land to pass over a road upon it is, without more, to be regarded as a license, and revocable at the pleasure of the owner; that a road dedicated to the public must be accepted by the county court upon its records before it can be a public road." Com. v. Kelly, 8 Grat. 682, and note Va. Rep. Anno.; Harris' Case, 20 Grat. 833; Talbott v. R. & D. R. Co., 31 Grat. 688; Gaines v. Merryman, 95 Va. 660, 29 S. E. 738.

With respect to what is requisite to constitute a private easement, it has been held "that the use and enjoyment of what is claimed must have been adverse, under a claim of right, exclusive, uninterrupted, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the estate in, over, or out of which the easement prescribed for is claimed." Washburn on Easements and Servitudes (4th Ed.) p. 150; Gaines v. Merryman, supra;

Reid v. Garnett, 101 Va. 47, 43 S. E. 182.

The matters of estoppel relied on in this connection, such as the payment of money by McClung for work done upon certain sections of the route, and the like, do not apply to all the proprietors, and the record falls to disclose that the appellees have been thereby induced to injuriously alter their position in any particular with regard to the controversy. Without prolonging this opinion, therefore, to enter upon a specific discussion of the evidence, it is only necessary to observe that it falls far short of establishing any of the foregoing assertions.

It follows from what has been said that the decree appealed from is erroneous, and must be reversed; and this court will enter such decree as the circuit court ought to have entered.

(104 Va. 611)

BRYAN v. AUGUSTA PERPETUAL BUILDING & LOAN CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION—DEFECTS IN TITLE.

Defects in a person's title to land are cured by lapse of time, where he has been in the uninterrupted, honest, and adverse possession of the land under color of title for over 25 years.

2. BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION—USURY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A subscriber for 27 shares of stock of a building association, of the par value of $100 each, borrowed of the association $2,700, secured by the stock and a deed of trust. The subscriber agreed to pay, until the stock was paid up, interest in quarterly installments of $40.50 each and quarterly dues of $225 each. Held, that the contract was not usurious, under Acts 1893-94, p. 560, c. 516 [Va. Code 1904, p. 614, § 1180aa], authorizing building associations to fix the bonus at which they will dispose of the money in their treasury and lend to any member to the value of any shares held by him less the bonus.

Appeal from Corporation Court of Staunton.

Suit by E. M. Pendleton, trustee of R. H. Seamen and others, against the Augusta Perpetual Building & Loan Company and others. From decrees subjecting the lands of L. S. Bryan to sale to satisfy liens he appeals. Affirmed.

L. S. Bryan subscribed for 27 shares of the stock of the Augusta Perpetual Building & Loan Company, of the par value of $100, and at the same time borrowed from the company $2,700, and agreed to pay to it, in the manner prescribed by its charter, constitution, and by-laws, until such time as the shares of stock should be paid, interest in quarterly installments of $40.50 each and "monthly dues" on said shares of $225 each. The words "monthly dues" were a mistake, and "quarterly dues" were meant.

G. D. Letcher and Curry & Glenn, for appellant. Kerr & Kerr, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. This suit was instituted by creditors of the appellant, whose debts are secured by a deed of trust on the land in controversy, to enjoin a sale of the property under a prior deed of trust for the benefit of the appellee, on the grounds that the title thereto is under a cloud, which it is insisted ought to be removed before sale, and that the debt of the appellee is usurious.

The cause was thrice referred to a commissioner in chancery, whose findings were adverse to both contentions; and from decrees confirming those reports, and subjecting the land to sale to satisfy liens, this appeal was allowed.

It appears that the alleged clouds upon appellant's title are imaginary, rather than real. But, even if the supposed defects had existed originally, they have long since been cured by lapse of time; appellant having been in the uninterrupted, honest, and adverse possession of the land, under color of title, from the year 1877 to the present time.

With regard to the second contention: On May 22, 1894, Bryan subscribed for 27 shares of the capital stock of the appellee company, of the par value of $100 each, and at the same time borrowed of the company $2,700, partly on the credit of the stock and with the deed of trust in question as additional security.

In the state of law prior to March 1, 1894, the exactions demanded by the contract would doubtless have rendered the transaction usurious. Crabtree v. Old Dom. Bldg. & L. Ass'n, 95 Va. 670, 29 S. E. 741, 64 Am. St. Rep. 818. But on that day an act, entitled "An act to define the power and limitations of building and loan associations," was passed by the Legislature, legalizing such contracts, and this loan comes within its provisions. Acts 1893-94, p. 560, c. 516 [Va. Code, 1904, p. 614, § 1180aa].

In Smoot v. Peoples Perpetual Bldg. & L. Ass'n, 95 Va. 686, 29 S. E. 746, 41 L. R. A. 589, it was held that "it is within the power of the Legislature to designate what transactions shall be subject to, and what shall be exempt from, the influence of the laws against usury. It may take away the defense of usury, or it may remove a disability to contract which it had previously imposed; and, though a court cannot by charter create a corporation with power to make contracts contrary to the usury laws, the Legislature may. In the case in judgment, the legislative enactment has rendered valid contracts which were previously usurious, and this is a valid exercise of power."

There were other assignments of error, but they were either expressly abandoned, or not pressed in argument, and, being without merit, do not require further notice.

The decrees are plainly right, and must be affirmed.

(104 Va. 854)

HAYNES v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. BRIBERY—EXECUTIVE OFFICERS—POLICEMEN.

A police officer of a city is "an executive officer," within Code, § 3744, providing that, if any person give or offer any gift or gratuity to any executive officer with intent to influence his act, decision, or judgment on any matter or question which is or may be then pending or may be brought before him in his official capacity, shall, on conviction, be punished, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 8, Cent. Dig. Bribery, § 3.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

Where, at the time accused was prosecuted for bribing a police officer, a charge was pending against her for abducting G., a girl under 14 years of age, it was error to permit the state to prove by G. in the bribery case that she had been given whisky to drink and had had intercourse with a man at the house of accused the previous night.

3. SAME—PREJUDICE.

Where accused may have been prejudiced by evidence erroneously admitted, it is sufficient to require a reversal of the judgment, though it be doubtful whether accused was in fact prejudiced.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 3094.]

Error to Hustings Court of Richmond.

Della Haynes was convicted of bribery, and she brings error. Reversed.

Wise & Watkins, for plaintiff in error.
The Attorney General, for the Commonwealth.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff in error was convicted in the hustings court of the city of Richmond of the statutory crime of bribery. While under arrest for keeping and maintaining a disorderly house, resorted to for immoral purposes, she offered John H. Tyler, a police officer of the city of Richmond, $25 if he would agree to drop and dismiss the proceeding against her.

The indictment was found under section 3744, Code 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 2007], which is, so far as material, as follows:

"If any person give, offer or promise * * * any gift or gratuity to any executive, legislative, or judicial officer, * * * with intent to influence his act, vote, opinion, decision, or judgment, on any matter, question, cause or proceeding which is or may be then pending, or may by law come or be brought before him in his official capacity, he shall upon conviction be confined in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than ten years."

It is contended on behalf of the accused that a police officer is not such an officer as was contemplated by section 3744 of the Code; that he is not an "executive," but a purely ministerial, officer.

A policeman is a state officer (Burch v. Hardwicke, 30 Grat. 24, 32 Am. Rep. 640); and we are of opinion that the statute was designed to embrace such an officer within its terms. In the triple classification employed by section 3744, the term "executive officer" is not limited in its application to the chief magistrate of the commonwealth, but embraces as well inferior executive officers, whose duties are for the most part ministerial.

In Throop on Public Officers, § 23, the author, quoting from Judge Cooley, says: "The duties imposed upon the officer are supposed to be capable of classification under one of these heads, the legislative, executive, or judicial, and to pertain accordingly to one of the three departments of government designated by those names. But the classification cannot be very exact, and there are numerous officers who cannot be classified at all under these heads. The reason will be apparent if we name one class as an illustration. Taxing officers perform duties which in strictness are neither executive nor judicial, though in some particulars they must execute the orders of superiors, and others they judge for themselves what is to be done; but sometimes, also, their duties partake of the legislative. All such officers are usually called administrative, while inferior executive officers are designated ministerial."

In the light of this authority, a ministerial officer is an executive officer, and is included within the class embraced by that term, though he may be regarded as an inferior executive officer. A policeman is not, however, a purely ministerial officer. His general duties are defined by clause 1, § 1017a, p. 1018, Va. Code 1904, as follows: "The officers and privates constituting the police force of the cities and towns of the commonwealth of Virginia shall be, and they are hereby, invested with all the power and authority which now belong to the office of constable at common law in taking cognizance of, and enforcing, the criminal laws of the commonwealth, and the ordinances and regulations of the city or town, respectively, for which they are appointed or elected, and it shall be the duty of each and every one of such policemen to use his best endeavors to prevent the commission within the said city or town of offences against the laws of said commonwealth and against the ordinances and regulations of said city or town; to observe and enforce all such laws, ordinances and regulations; to detect and arrest offenders against the same; to preserve the good order of said city or town, and to secure the inhabitants thereof from violence and the property therein from injury."

Some of the duties here prescribed are ministerial, but many of them are in a high degree executive. It is the chief duty of a policeman to execute the laws of the commonwealth, both for the punishment and prevention of crime; indeed, his most important powers and duties are executive. But, if his functions be regarded as chiefly ministerial, he comes within the reason, letter, and meaning of the statute, which makes it a felony to offer a bribe to any executive officer of the commonwealth to influence his act; for, as already said, public officers whose duties are ministerial are included under the head of "executive officers." It cannot be supposed that the Legislature intended that the crime denounced by section 3744 of the Code, could be committed with impunity by those executive officers whose duties may be defined as being chiefly or entirely ministerial. Such a construction would exclude from the operation of the statute a large number of the public officers of the commonwealth.

Bills of exception Nos. 1 and 2 are to the action of the court in permitting certain questions to be asked the witness, Alma Goddin, and answered by her, against the protest of the prisoner.

Alma Goddin was 14 years old, and was one of two small girls who were found in the house of ill fame kept by the accused. This witness was asked and answered the following questions:

"State whether or not you went upstairs with a man.

"Ans. Yes, sir; she made me go up there.

"You say they gave you something to drink.

"Ans. Yes, sir; after I got up there.

"Tell whether the man had intercourse with you, or something to do with you, on Thursday night.

"Ans. Yes, sir."

The indictment in this case was for the crime of bribery, and at the time of trial there was pending against the accused another proceeding, charging her with having abducted Alma Goddin.

It is a well-settled rule of law that the evidence must be confined to the matter in issue. The facts laid before the jury must consist exclusively of the transactions which form the subject of the indictment; for it is these alone that the prisoner can be expected to have come prepared to answer. Trogdon v. Commonwealth, 31 Grat. 862; Moore v. City of Richmond, 85 Va. 538, 8 S. E. 387.

Evidence of collateral facts is generally inadmissible, because it tends to draw away the minds of the jury from the point in issue, and to excite prejudice and mislead them. There are exceptions to this rule, as in cases where the intent or guilty knowledge of the party accused is a material ingredient in the issue of the case. In such cases collateral facts—that is, other acts and declarations of a similar character—tending to establish such intent or guilty knowledge are admissible, provided they are not too remotely connected with the offense charged. Trogdon's Case, supra; Bottomley v. U. S., 1 Story, 135, Fed. Cas. No. 1,688.

The collateral fact that Alma Goddin had been given whisky to drink and had had intercourse with a man at the house of the prisoner the previous night had no connection with the alleged attempt to bribe the officer.

These are not acts of a similar nature or character, and they do not tend to prove that a bribe was offered with intent to influence the officer. The intent to influence the act of the officer had been shown by clear proof of the offer of $25 if he would release the accused and drop the case, and the introduction of the evidence here objected to could only have had the effect of prejudicing the minds of the jury, and causing them to heighten the punishment for the crime of bribery with which the plaintiff in error stood charged.

If the accused may have been prejudiced by the evidence, even though it be doubtful whether in fact she was so or not, it is sufficient for reversing the judgment. Trogdon's Case, supra.

For these reasons the judgment of the hustings court must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

CARDWELL, J., concurs in result.

(104 Va. 547)

JOHNSTON'S ADM'R v. MOORE LIME CO.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

MASTER AND SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Evidence in an action for the death of an employé, in consequence of the explosion of the throttle valve of a steam engine operated by the employé, examined, and held, that the questions of the employer's negligence and the employé's contributory negligence were for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 1001, 1069.]

Error to Circuit Court, Botetourt County.

Action by J. Webster Johnston's administrator against the Moore Lime Company. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Benj. Haden and W. R. Allen, for plaintiff in error. James L. Shelton, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. This is the sequel to the case of Moore Lime Company v. Johnston's Administrator, 103 Va. 84, 48 S. E. 557. We refer to that opinion for a discussion of the evidence as it then appeared in the record. For reasons there set forth the case was, upon the petition of the Moore Lime Company, reversed and remanded for a new trial. Upon the new trial there was a demurrer to the evidence, a verdict of the jury in favor of Johnston's administrator, and a judgment upon the demurrer in favor of the Moore Lime Company; and the proceedings culminating in the latter judgment are before us for review.

Counsel for plaintiff in error fully concedes the correctness of the former judgment of this court, and the conclusive force of the reasoning upon which it was based, but insists that the record now before us entitles his client to a recovery.

After a careful review of the evidence, we are of opinion that it presents a case which should have been submitted to the jury, both upon the question of the negligence of the defendant in error and upon the allegation of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff in error's intestate.

There is evidence which tends to prove that upon the morning of the accident the young man whose death is the subject of this suit had gotten up steam in his boiler, that there was the proper gauge of water in the boiler, that the steam had not been turned on upon the machinery, and that the machinery and no part of it had been put in motion; that having gotten up the steam and while waiting for the signal to turn it on, he had "cracked the valve"—that is to say, he had opened it slightly so that the water which had accumulated in it from the preceding Saturday might gradually escape; that it was necessary to do this, and that it was done in the accustomed manner. It appears that the accumulation of water was the necessary result of the condensation of the steam which was in the pipes on the preceding Saturday, and that the cold weather then prevailing had frozen the water which had thus formed in the throttle valve, by reason of which it cracked, became unsafe, and burst. It appears that the engine had at one time been provided with a "drip cock" or "by-pass," which had been removed and the hole from which it was taken filled with an iron plug; that with this drip cock in position the water from the pipe would have been drained off, no ice would have formed, and the valve would not have been injured by the formation of ice. It further appears that it would not have been safe to have "cracked the valve" and left it in that position, as there was danger of starting the machinery. There is evidence to the effect that the engine in use by the Moore Lime Company prior to December, 1901, was equipped with a drip cock; that about that date another engine was put in, to which a drip cock was also attached until about two weeks before the accident; that during the two weeks intervening between the removal of the drip cock and the plugging of the hole the weather was not so cold as it afterwards became; and that it turned cold on the 15th or 16th of March, and was very cold Sunday evening and Sunday night.

Upon these facts, considered as upon a demurrer to evidence, we are of opinion that the verdict should not have been disturbed. The jury was doubtless of opinion that the machinery had been rendered unsafe by the removal of the drip cock, and that in removing it the Moore Lime Company had failed in its duty to exercise that reasonable care to provide reasonably safe instrumentalities which the law imposes; and they were further of opinion that the change which rendered the throttle valve unsafe did not constitute a danger so open and obvious as to convict the employé who used it of contributory negligence, and of contributory negligence in any other aspect of the case there is no evidence whatever.

It is proper to observe that the evidence upon the last trial of this case varies in several material respects from that which was given on the first trial, which was found insufficient to maintain the verdict. Especially is this true with respect to the drip cock. The proof upon the first trial was that "there was no 'drip cock' to the throttle valve originally, and no provision made for its use, and the engine had been safely operated for years without that appliance. Indeed, the 'drip cock' was first attached to the valve by Hammitt (who was employed by the defendant for one month as a machinist) in December, 1901, by drilling a hole through the globe valve and inserting the 'drip cock.' A short time before the accident happened, Fairburn, the successor of Hammitt, discovering that the 'drip cock' was out of order, removed it, and closed the hole with an iron screw plug, thus restoring the valve to its original condition." Moore Lime Co. v. Johnston, supra. The evidence now before us tends to show that prior to December, 1901, the engine then in use had a drip cock, and had never been operated without it; that the engine which was brought to the mill in December, 1901, was a secondhand engine from Richmond; that it came "tapped" for a drip cock, and that in the fixtures that came with the engine there was a drip cock for the purpose of being placed there; that this latter engine, thus equipped, with a drip cock to the throttle valve, was so used until about a fortnight before the accident, at which time it was taken out and the hole filled with an iron plug. There was evidence upon the former trial which strongly tended to show "that the proximate and efficient cause of the accident was the reckless conduct of plaintiff's intestate in suddenly starting the engine, which, according to the collective opinion of the witnesses, could not with safety be set in motion in less time than from two minutes to eight minutes" (Moore Lime Co. v. Johnston, supra); while upon this point the proof now before us is that the steam had not been turned on, but the valve had merely been cracked.

We are of opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and this court will enter judgment upon the verdict for plaintiff in error.

(104 Va. 350)

JERNIGAN v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 7, 1905.)

FISH — CRIMINAL TRESPASS — RIGHT OF APPEAL.

Code 1904, p. 1045, § 2071, declares any one who fishes in the waters on another's land guilty of a trespass, and provides that on conviction he shall be fined. Section 2073, p. 1046, provides that the offender shall be carried before a justice, who shall try the case, and that, if judgment be rendered against the offender, it shall be for the forfeitures and costs, and if he does not satisfy the judgment the justice shall commit him to jail for one month, unless satisfaction be made. Section 2070b, cl. 8, p. 1044, provides that all penalties imposed or collected under the provisions of the chapter of which the above sections are a part shall be paid to the commonwealth. Section 3879, p. 2061, declares offenses which are not felonies to be misdemeanors. Held, that sections 2071 and 2073 create a criminal offense of the misdemeanor class and prescribe a criminal proceeding for their violation, and consequently an appeal from a judgment of conviction lies to the circuit court under Code 1904, pp. 2152, 2154, §§ 4108, 4107, providing for appeals to the circuit court from judgments of conviction in criminal cases before justices, although the fine imposed is less than $10, so that no appeal would lie to the circuit court under section 2947, p. 1562, providing for appeals in civil cases.

Error to Circuit Court, Princess Anne County.

J. W. Jernigan was convicted before a justice of committing a willful trespass, and appealed to the circuit court, where his appeal was dismissed, and he brings error. Reversed.

J. M. Keeling and N. T. Green, for appellant. The Attorney General, Wm. A. Anderson, and W. W. Old, for the Commonwealth.

BUCHANAN, J. The plaintiff in error was arrested upon a warrant issued by a justice of the peace for committing a willful trespass by going upon and fishing in waters on lands owned by one Bradford, in violation of section 2071, p. 1045, of the Code of 1904.

Upon a hearing of the case he was found guilty and fined $5 and the costs. From this judgment he appealed to the circuit court. Upon motion of the attorney for the commonwealth, that court dismissed the appeal, upon the ground that it did not have jurisdiction of the case. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

By section 2071, p. 1045, of the Code of 1904, it is provided, among other things, that if any one, without the consent of the owner or tenant, fish in the waters on another's land lying east of the Blue Ridge, he shall be guilty of a trespass, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $5 nor more than $50, and in addition thereto shall be liable for damages.

By section 2073, p. 1046, it is provided that every person violating either of the two preceding sections may be arrested and held to await judgment; that the offender shall be carried before a justice in the county in which the offense was committed, who shall proceed to try the case and give judgment thereon. If judgment be rendered against the offender, it shall be for the forfeitures, pecuniary and otherwise, and the costs and expenses incurred; and if the offender does not satisfy the judgment in full, the justice shall commit him to jail for one month, unless satisfaction be sooner made.

By clause 8, § 2070b, p. 1044, in the same chapter of the Code, it is provided that all fines and penalties imposed or collected under the provisions of that chapter (95) shall be paid to the commonwealth.

It is conceded by the accused that if the proceeding against him was a civil proceeding the circuit court had no jurisdiction of his appeal, as the judgment against him did not exceed $10. Section 2947, p. 1562, Va. Code, 1904. But his contention is that the proceeding against him was a criminal proceeding, and that under the provisions of sections 4106, 4107, pp. 2152, 2154, of the Code of 1904, he has the right of appeal.

Whether a proceeding is civil or criminal is sometimes difficult to determine. At common law the mere going upon another's land was a civil injury, but not a crime (Henderson's Case, 8 Grat. 708, 710, 56 Am. Dec. 160); and if the offense with which the accused was charged and convicted is criminal it is because it is made so by statute.

Mr. Bishop, in discussing the difference between public and private wrongs, says that: "Whenever, therefore, the public deems an act of private wrong as of a nature requiring the public protection for the individual, it makes the act punishable at its own suit, or, in other words, makes it a crime." 1 Bish. New Crim. Law, § 233.

Judge Cooley, in his work on Torts, quoting with approval from Austin's Jurisprudence, says: "An offense which is pursued at the discretion of the injured party or his representative is a civil injury. An offense which is pursued by the sovereign or the subordinate of the sovereign is a crime." Cooley on Torts (2d Ed.) p. 96.

It is said in 12 Cyc. 131, that the real distinction between a tort and a crime lies in the method in which it is pursued.

In a note to the case of Reg. v. Page, 3 Post. & F. 29, it is stated that "the distinction" between a civil and a criminal proceeding "taken in the most ancient and approved authorities is not whether the crown is a party (for so it is in mandamus and quo warranto), but whether the real end or object of the proceeding is punishment or reparation." See, generally, as to what is a criminal proceeding, Cooley on Torts (2d Ed.) 94-96; 1 Bish. New Cr. Law, 230 et seq.; State v. Pate, 44 N. C. 244, 245; State v. McConnell (N. H.) 46 Atl. 458, 460; U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 36 L. Ed. 591.

It would seem clear from the authorities cited that the proceeding under consideration lacks the essential elements of a civil proceeding. The act with which the accused was charged was forbidden by statute, and a fine imposed for its violation; the warrant against him, under which he was arrested, tried, and convicted, was a proceeding by the commonwealth; the penalty imposed was for her benefit; and for a failure to satisfy the judgment rendered against him the justice was not only authorized, but required, to commit him to jail for one month, unless the judgment was sooner paid. While the warrant was issued upon the complaint and information on oath of the tenant of the land trespassed upon, it was in no sense a proceeding for his benefit, or for the benefit of the owner of the land, and was not intended in any way to make reparation for the private injury done by the accused in going upon the land, but was intended to punish him for violating the statute forbidding the act.

We are of opinion that the proceeding was not a civil, but a criminal, proceeding under a public statute; and as all offenses in this state which are not felonies are misdemeanors [Va. Code 1904, p. 2061, § 3879], the offense for which the accused was prosecuted, found guilty, and fined was a misdemeanor, and he had the right to appeal to the circuit court under the provisions of sections 4106, 4107, pp. 2152, 2154, of the Code.

The judgment of the circuit court dismissing the appeal must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded to be proceeded in according to law.

(104 Va. 860)

CREMEANS v. COMMONWEALTH.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — RIGHT OF ACCUSED TO CONFRONT WITNESSES — CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION.

Under Const. Va. art. 1, § 8, p. ccx, securing to one accused of crime the right to call for evidence in his favor, it is error to force the accused into trial in the absence of his witnesses, on the theory that they will be summoned and examined if they arrive before verdict, and, if not, that their testimony may be made the basis of a motion for a new trial.

2. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, it appeared, both by the return on the process and the uncontroverted testimony of the deputy sheriff of one county and of the sheriff of another county, that no such persons as certain witnesses, the absence of whom was the sole ground relied on by defendant in his motion for a continuance, lived in either county or could be found there, the error in overruling the motion, the court stating that it would award process for the witnesses and permit them to testify, provided they arrived before the trial was concluded, and that otherwise their evidence would be taken and considered on a motion to set aside the verdict, was not cause for reversal.

3. SAME.

The rule that though the ruling of the trial court may have been erroneous on some proposition submitted to it, yet if from the whole record it appears that the party complaining was not and could not be prejudicially affected by such ruling, it affords no ground for reversal, is of general application, except when a mandatory requirement of the law is involved, in which case the principle of strictissimi juris obtains.

*Rehearing denied.

Cardwell, J., dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Giles County.

Morris Cremeans was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. W. Williams and A. H. Woodyard, for plaintiff in error.

WHITTLE, J. This writ of error is to a judgment of conviction of the plaintiff in error, Morris Cremeans, of murder in the first degree.

It appears that on the night of April 24, 1906, Cremeans shot George Kid, while the latter was in bed at his home in Giles county, inflicting upon him a mortal wound of which he died a few days thereafter. Cremeans was pursued by the officers of the law, arrested the day following the shooting in Bluefield, W. Va., and brought back into Virginia without a requisition. Having waived a preliminary examination, he was lodged in jail to await indictment and trial.

On May 8, 1906, he was indicted by a special grand jury summoned for that purpose; and, being without counsel, the court assigned two members of the bar to defend him. Thereupon the prisoner moved the court to continue the case until the first day of the next term, on the ground of the absence of material witnesses, and testified in support of his motion that four men were eyewitnesses to the homicide, two of whom were unknown to him, but that the other two, whom he named, were residents of Buchanan county. In further support of the motion, counsel for the prisoner represented to the court that, though they had not had the opportunity of talking with those witnesses, they believed from information derived from the accused that their evidence was not only material, but indispensable, to his defense.

The motion was resisted by the attorney for the commonwealth, who introduced the widow and daughter of the deceased, both of whom testified that they were in the room when the fatal shot was fired, "and that the door of the house was closed, and that there were no such witnesses on the outside as claimed by the defendant, or, if there were, they did not know it." Whereupon the court overruled the motion for a continuance, and also the motion of the prisoner to set the case for trial at a later day of the term, and he was forthwith put upon trial. The court in that connection observed that it would award process for the witnesses and permit them to testify, provided they arrived before the trial was concluded; otherwise, their evidence would be taken and considered upon a motion to set aside the verdict.

This ruling of the court was made the ground of exception, and constitutes the assignment of error relied on here to reverse the judgment.

There is no rule of practice better settled in this state than "that a motion for a continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the court under all the circumstances of the case, and that, although an appellate court will supervise the action of an inferior court on such a motion, it will not reverse a judgment on that ground, unless such action was plainly erroneous. Where the circumstances satisfy the court that the real purpose in moving for a continuance is to delay or evade a trial, and not to prepare for it, then, though the witnesses have been summoned and the party has sworn to their materiality and that he cannot safely go to trial without them, the continuance should be refused." This doctrine is laid down in Hewitt's Case, 17 Grat. 627, and the principal case has been followed and cited as authority for the proposition enunciated in numerous decisions of this court. The cases on the subject will be found collected in a note to 17 Grat. (Va. Rep. Anno.) 441.

While we approve the wisdom of the above-mentioned rule, and are in entire sympathy with its object, which is to prevent unnecessary delay and promote the prompt and effective administration of the criminal law, still the wide discretion vested in trial courts in that respect must be exercised with due regard to the provisions of the Bill of Rights, which secure to one accused of crime a fair and impartial trial, and to that end safeguard his right "to call for evidence in his favor." Const. Va. art. 1, § 8, p. cxx.

In deference to that fundamental requirement, we cannot sanction a practice which, in "a capital or criminal prosecution," forces the accused into trial in the absence of his witnesses, upon the theory that they will be summoned and examined if they should arrive before verdict, and, if not, that their testimony may be made the basis of a motion for a new trial. Such practice, we conceive, violates both the letter and spirit of the Constitution. In a case of the gravity of the one in question, involving the life of a citizen, we are of opinion that, under the circumstances narrated touching the motion for a continuance, the circuit court ought to have postponed the trial for a reasonable time to afford the prisoner opportunity to prepare for his defense. And we have no hesitation in saying that but for subsequent developments in the case, which in our opinion justify the conclusion that there were no such witnesses in existence as those relied on by the prisoner, we should feel constrained to reverse the judgment and award the prisoner a new trial.

It appears, however, both by the return upon the process and the testimony of the deputy sheriff of Buchanan county and the sheriff of Dickenson county, that no such persons lived in either county, or could be found there; and as the sole ground assigned for delay was the absence of these alleged witnesses, the prisoner could not have been prejudiced by the ruling of the court in the particulars mentioned. Therefore such ruling does not constitute reversible error; for it is the settled rule of this court that though the ruling of the trial court may have been erroneous upon some proposition submitted to it, yet if it is apparent from the whole record that the party complaining was not and could not have been prejudicially affected by such ruling, it affords no ground for reversing the judgment. Colvin v. Menefee, 11 Grat. (Va. Rep. Anno.) 87, and note; Kincheloe v. Tracewells, 11 Grat. 587; Farmers', etc., Ass'n. v. Kinsey, 101 Va. 236, 244, 43 S. E. 338.

While it is true that the authorities cited were civil cases, the principle announced is of general application, except when the court is dealing with a mandatory requirement of the law, in which case the principle of strictissimi juris obtains. The testimony of the deputy sheriff of Buchanan county and the sheriff of Dickenson county was not controverted, and it would be a vain thing for this court to reverse the judgment and remand the case for a new trial on account of the absence of imaginary witnesses.

On the merits, the record presents a case of unwonted atrocity. The prisoner, who had invaded the home of the deceased in the nighttime for an immoral purpose and made indecent proposals to his married daughter, and was ordered off, for that cause alone shot his defenseless victim, while in his bed with his wife and in the presence of his family.

The other assignments of error were not pressed, and, being without merit, do not demand further notice.

It only remains to say that the judgment must be affirmed.

KEITH, P. (concurring in judgment). The law applicable to continuances, as declared in Hewitt's Case, 17 Grat. 627, is set forth in the opinion of the court. The rule and the exceptions are both clearly stated.

The rule is that the affidavit of the prisoner as to the materiality of an absent witness will entitle the accused to a continuance or to time to procure his attendance. The exception is that it will not so entitle him if it appears to the court that the object of the accused is to postpone the trial and not to make preparation for a trial.

This is the issue addressed to the court on the motion for a continuance: Is it made in good faith, or is it a mere pretext for delay? This issue is tendered to and must be decided by the court upon all the circumstances before it. It is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and the exercise of its discretion, while reviewable, will not be reversed, unless it plainly appears that it has been improperly exercised.

In the case before us the accused made the required affidavit; but the circuit court, after hearing evidence, concluded that his motion was not made in good faith.

At the moment of the homicide, there were present in the room in which it was committed the deceased, his wife, his married daughter, a little child, who was asleep, and the prisoner. He claims that there were four men on the outside of the house. The wife and daughter say that the door was shut, and that they neither saw nor heard of the presence of any one else at any time. The weight of evidence, then, was against the prisoner. But this is not all. It subsequently appeared, by the return of the sheriff and deputy sheriff and by their testimony, that no such witnesses were found, and that no such persons dwelt in the counties to which the writs of summons were directed at the instance of the accused. It also appears from the testimony of the prisoner that on the night of and just before the homicide he went into the store of W. T. Ould, and that he was accompanied to the store by the four men who were on the outside of the Kid house; but Ould says that the prisoner came into his store alone, and that he neither saw nor heard of any companions of the accused.

On the whole case I am of opinion that the circuit court decided the motion for a continuance in accordance with the weight of evidence, as it appeared when the motion was made and disposed of, and that the conclusion of the court was vindicated by all the facts and circumstances of the case as they were subsequently developed; and on the whole case I fully concur with the judgment of the court.

CARDWELL, J. (dissenting). I am unable to concur in the opinion of the court in this case.

How the course pursued by the trial court with reference to the motions made for a continuance and to lay the case over to a later day of the term, in order that counsel might confer with the prisoner and prepare for his defense, made in the utmost good faith, as counsel assured the court, can be condemned as it is in the opinion, and yet it be held that the denial of these motions was harmless error, is beyond my comprehension.

The offense with which the prisoner was charged was committed on April 24, 1905. The prisoner was arrested in Bluefield, W. Va., the next day, and voluntarily returned to Giles county, where he was lodged in jail to await indictment by the grand jury; he having waived a preliminary examination before a justice. The regular grand jury terms of the court of Giles county are February and September, and prisoner did not know and had no reason for knowing that a special grand jury would be impaneled to consider his case, and had therefore made no preparation for the trial, when on the 8th day of May, 1905, a special grand jury was impaneled and brought in an indictment against him for murder in the first degree. The prisoner being unprepared for trial, without counsel to conduct his defense, and without means to employ counsel, the court appointed two members of the bar to defend him, and the trial was immediately gone into.

Even after the refusal of the continuance asked by the prisoner, to which he was entitled, as the opinion of the court admits, and the request of the counsel that the case be laid over till a later day in the term, that they might properly prepare the prisoner's defense, was denied, the trial court saying, that "it would award process for the witnesses and permit them to testify, provided they arrived before the trial was concluded, otherwise this evidence would be taken and considered upon a motion to set aside the verdict," and after the evidence for the commonwealth had gone to the jury, counsel for the prisoner again asked that the case be passed until the summons addressed to the sheriff of Buchanan county on the first day of the term had been returned, and this request was also denied.

It will be observed that the opinion of the court, after discussing the rights of one accused of crime which are to be safeguarded, and stating the course pursued at the trial of the prisoner, says: "Such practice, we conceive, violates both the letter and spirit of the Constitution." Yet it is held that the several errors committed by the court below were harmless, because "both by the return upon the process, and the testimony of the deputy sheriff of Buchanan county and the sheriff of Dickenson county that no such persons lived in either county, or could be found there, and as the sole ground assigned for delay was the absence of these alleged witnesses, the prisoner could not have been prejudiced by the ruling of the court in the particulars mentioned."

This leaves out of view the fact that the prisoner had been afforded no opportunity whatever to be prepared to refute the statements made by the deputy sheriff of Buchanan county and the sheriff of Dickenson county, after he had been tried and convicted, and assumes, to the prejudice of the prisoner, plainly, that these officers knew every person who could be found in their respective counties, although they did not profess to have such knowledge. Was it to be expected, under these circumstances, that the prisoner would be prepared to refute the statement of these officers? Surely not. Who knows but that, by reason of these persons whom prisoner desired as witnesses being at or near the deceased's house when the alleged crime was committed, and the excitement in the neighborhood over the occurrence, they were in hiding in the apprehension that they might be considered as participants criminis? The widow and daughter of the deceased, it will be observed, qualify materially their statement that "there were no such witnesses on the outside of the house, as claimed by the defendant," when they add, "if there were, they did not know it."

Of course, whenever it is made to appear that the application for a continuance is for the mere purpose of evading or to delay a trial, the continuance should be denied. In Hewitt's Case, cited in the opinion of the court, the indictment for assault and battery was found April 25, 1863, and the accused was arrested September 23, 1863, and admitted to bail. There was no term of the court of Bedford county till April, 1864, when the case was called for trial. The accused was not present when his counsel made a motion for a continuance, based on the affidavit of the accused as to the materiality of a witness who had been summoned, but was absent, made two days before, and on the morning that the motion was made the accused was at Liberty (the county seat), and left going west, not saying where he was going. Held, that the trial court did not err in its opinion "that the defendant was attempting to evade a trial by absenting himself from court, so as to prevent a personal examination in open court on his motion for a continuance."

That case and the case before us are wholly dissimilar.

The cases cited in the opinion of the court in this case in support of the conclusion that the prisoner was not prejudiced by the rulings of the trial court complained of by the prisoner are all civil cases, in which the court was dealing only with the question whether or not the party complaining was prejudiced by instructions given or refused, and not with the question presented in this case.

The case before us involves human life, and the question to be determined is whether or not the citizen condemned to suffer the extreme penalty of the law has had that fair and impartial trial guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the state. In the consideration of that question, the enormity of the crime charged and the evidence in support of the charge are to be left out of view; for, however grave the charge, or incriminating the evidence in support of it, or low the accused's station in life may be, he was nevertheless entitled to the trial the mandate of the Constitution of the state requires in all cases involving the life or liberty of the citizen.

If, however, we are to look to the evidence for the prosecution in determining the question, whether or not the prisoner in this case has had such a trial—which, I repeat, we have no right to do—a horrible murder has been committed by him, and if, upon such a trial, he had been found guilty of the crime charged against him, he would rightly share the fate that now awaits him; but not without such a trial, as appears plain to me. Although the commonwealth was in the acquisition and submission of its evidence unhampered, it fails to show malice on the part of the prisoner towards his victim, or that there was any premeditation in the act of shooting him; while the theory of the prisoner's defense was that the shooting was accidental, and he, who alone testified in his behalf, so testified. The record does not, in my opinion, justify the statement in the opinion of the court that the prisoner invaded the home of the deceased, etc. On the contrary, it appears that he had been there that very evening of the shooting as the guest of the deceased, on the most friendly terms, and had been gone from the house but a very short while, when he returned to look for something he claimed to have left or missed after he went away.

Under the circumstances surrounding the trial of the prisoner, can it be safely said what the verdict of the jury would have been, had the trial court done what clearly it should at least have done—postponed the trial for a reasonable time to afford the prisoner an opportunity to prepare for his defense? I think not.

Far better and safer, in such a case, as it seems to me, to award the prisoner a new trial, than to carry the doctrine of harmless error to the extent of establishing the dangerous precedent that a trial court may impose upon one accused of a crime a hardship and a wrong, and then put him upon terms of extricating himself, in the event the jury finds him guilty, without affording him an opportunity to do so, and bind him to the results by subsequent testimony taken and considered by the court, which the victim of the practice could not, under the circumstances, by any possibility have refuted.

In stating my views of this case, I have done so with the utmost deference to the views of the majority of the court, and of the learned and conscientious judge who presided at the trial in the circuit court; but, believing as I do that a very dangerous precedent is to be established in the refusal of a new trial to the prisoner, I deemed it necessary to state my reasons for dissenting.

(104 Va. 673)

ROWLAND et al. v. ROWLAND et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 7, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—PARTIES ENTITLED TO APPEAL.

A party has no right to appeal from a decree, the reversal of which would give him nothing more than that which he had received thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 947.]

2. WILLS—SUIT TO ESTABLISH—ISSUES.

Code 1887, § 2544 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1297], provides for the filing of a bill in equity to impeach or establish a will, on which bill a jury shall be ordered to ascertain whether any, and, if any, how much, of what was offered for probate, is the will of the decedent. Held, that where a bill stated a case which, if true, avoided the whole will, and the answer accepted the issue, an issue framed for a finding for or against the will in its entirety was not erroneous, on the theory that under the statute it should have been so phrased as to permit a finding sustaining a part of the instrument.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Clarke County.

Bill by John J. Rowland and others against George W. Rowland and others to review a decree entered in a contest over the will of Thomas J. Rowland, deceased. From a decree in favor of defendants, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

A. Moore, Jr., and Chas. M. Broun, for appellants. Marshall McCormick, for appellees.

KEITH, P. A bill was filed in the circuit court of Clarke county by George W. Rowland and others, in which it is stated that Thomas J. Rowland, of Clarke county, died seised of a tract of land valued at about $4,000, and that in addition thereto he left some personal property; that since he died a writing, purporting to be his last will and testament, has been admitted to probate in the county court of that county, which, as plaintiffs allege, is not the true last will and testament of the decedent, who, as they charge, was incapable by reason of physical and mental infirmity of making a will, and because it was obtained by undue influence and fraud practiced by certain of the defendants.

The defendants, who were the beneficiaries under the will, answered, denying the allegations of the bill, and maintaining, on the contrary, that the said paper writing so admitted to probate "is the true last will and testament of Thomas J. Rowland, deceased, and that he was perfectly capable, both mentally and physically, of making a will."

Upon the pleadings an issue was awarded to ascertain "whether or not the paper, dated February 18, 1901, purporting to be the last will and testament of Thomas J. Rowland, is the true last will and testament of the said Thomas J. Rowland"; and it was provided further that "on the trial of this issue the propounders of the will shall be the plaintiffs and contestants are defendants."

A jury was impaneled on the common-law side of the court, which rendered a verdict as follows: "We, the jury, on the issues joined, find that the paper dated February 18, 1901, signed by Thomas J. Rowland, witnessed by Daniel Hefflebower and C. W. Conrad, and purporting to be the last will of said Thomas J. Rowland, is not the last will of said Thomas J. Rowland."

This verdict was certified to the court upon its chancery side, which received and approved it, and decreed accordingly; and the cause was retired from the docket.

On the 2d of February following John J. Rowland, Jennie Posten, and others presented a bill of review, in which they set out the object of the original bill, the proceedings thereunder, and then allege that Abbie Posten was, at the time of the decree which they ask to be reviewed, and now is, an infant under the age of 21 years, and that, while she was made a party to the original bill, no guardian ad litem was appointed or asked for as to her, and she is therefore advised that the proceedings in the said suit are, with respect to her, null and void.

The complainants in the bill of review assign also as error that the issue tried by the jury under the original bill is not the issue prescribed by the statute in such cases, that it was irregular, and that the verdict of the jury thereon is illegal, because upon the issue as framed the jury were compelled to find for the will in its entirety or against it in its entirety, while the issue prescribed by the statute is so phrased as to permit a jury upon the issue of devisavit vel non to sustain the instrument submitted to it in part and reject it in part.

Answering this bill, the defendants tendered and offered to bring into court the full amount of the bequest to Abbie Posten in the will under investigation, to be received in full discharge of the legacy to her. They denied that the issue directed by the decree of the February term, 1902, is not the issue prescribed by statute in such cases.

Upon the issue raised by the bill of review, the answer thereto, and the depositions of witnesses, the court entered a decree denying the relief prayed for with respect to the adult defendants, and with respect to Abbie Posten the decree recites that "the verdict of the jury as to her is set aside, by the consent of all of the other parties in interest, except the complainants in the bill of review. As to said infant defendant it is by like consent ordered that the will shall be established as to the infant defendant, and as to her legacy said decedent died testate; but this consent does not extend beyond her interest, and it is ordered as to all other parties in interest said decedent died intestate.

"In order that no one can be prejudiced by this decree, the defendants to the bill of review moved the court to permit them to pay $100, the amount of the legacy left her by the will of the alleged testator, with interest thereon from the 8th day of August, 1901, into the hands of the general receiver, to be by him held until in the proper course of administration the same shall be disbursed by proper proceedings, which said motion the court granted. Thereupon the said defendants paid the said money to the general receiver. As to the decree for costs the said Abbie Posten by like consent is relieved and released from the payment of all costs, either in the original proceeding or in this proceeding had upon the bills of review. In all other respects the final decree in this cause, sought to be reviewed, is approved and confirmed."

In order that an appeal may be successfully prosecuted, it must be shown that the appellant has been aggrieved. It is manifest that Abbie Posten is in no respect interested in the case before us. A reversal of the decree would give her nothing more than that which she receives under the decree.

The remaining question to be considered is as to the form of the issue submitted to the jury.

By section 2544 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1297] it is provided that "after a sentence or order under this section, a person interested, who was not a party to the proceeding, may, within two years, proceed by bill in equity to impeach or establish the will, on which bill a trial by a jury shall be ordered, to ascertain whether any, and if any, how much of what was so offered for probate, be the will of the decedent."

The statute does not undertake to prescribe the terms of the issue. It states the object in view in the framing of the issue, which is to ascertain whether any, and, if any, how much, of what was offered for probate is the will of the decedent; but it was not intended to make hard and fast the exact terms in which the issue should be framed. A substantial compliance with the statute, looking to the object to be accomplished, is sufficient.

The bill in this case attacks the will as a whole. It states a case which, if true, avoids the whole and every part of the paper which had been probated as the will of the decedent. The answer accepts the issue thus tendered, and undertakes to maintain the will in its entirety. There is no suggestion in bill or answer, or in the evidence adduced, that a part of the paper may be established as a will, and the residue rejected as having been obtained by fraud or undue influence. The issue was framed by the court precisely as it was tendered by the plaintiffs and accepted by the defendants, and it is manifest that it did not and could not have operated to the prejudice of appellants.

We are of opinion that the decree complained of should be affirmed.

(204 Va. 665)

NORFOLK & W. RY. CO. v. COFFEY.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 7, 1905.)

On petition for rehearing. Order reversing and remanding the cause set aside, and judgment of circuit court affirmed.

For former decision, see 51 S. E. 729.

PER CURIAM. Upon the petitions of both the plaintiff in error and defendant in error to rehear the judgment of this court, rendered in this case on the 26th day of September, 1905, at its place of session in the city of Staunton, reversing the judgment of the circuit court of Rockbridge county, and remanding the case to that court for further proceedings to be had therein not in conflict with the opinion of this court, it appearing from said petitions that the plaintiff in error has expressly waived its pleas of the statute of limitations, and that both parties desire a final disposition of this case upon the merits as presented by the record, independently of the defense of the statute of limitations:

On mature consideration whereof the court, being of opinion that the plaintiff in error was guilty of actionable negligence in failing to use ordinary care to keep its rock quarry, in which the defendant in error was employed as a laborer, in reasonably safe condition (and that said unsafe condition was not attributable to the work which was being conducted in said quarry), which negligence was the proximate and efficient cause of the injuries suffered by the defendant in error, and that the charge of contributory negligence alleged against the defendant in error is not sustained by the evidence, doth so decide and declare.

Therefore (without in any manner receding from the views expressed by this court in its opinion delivered in the case, as originally submitted on the pleadings) upon the case as now presented by the record, with the pleas of the statute of limitations withdrawn, it is considered by the court that the order heretofore entered in the case be set aside, and that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

And it is further considered by the court that the plaintiff in error pay to the defendant in error damages according to law, and also his costs by him about his defense herein expended.

Which is ordered to be entered in the order book here, and forthwith certified to the clerk of this court at Staunton, who will enter the same in the order book there and certify it to the said circuit court of Rockbridge county.

(104 Va. 501)

NORFOLK & W. RY. CO. v. HARMAN.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. CARRIERS—BILLS OF LADING—CONSTRUCTION.

A bill of lading, made out on a form used for the transportation of live stock, was issued to cover a shipment of live stock and also of household goods. One clause of the bill required the shipper to give notice of his claim as a condition precedent to his right to recover "for loss or injury to said animals." Held, that the shipper was not required to give notice of a claim for injury to his household goods before suing for damages on account of such injury.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—DISREGARD OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a carrier for injuries to goods in transit, a charge that the bill of lading constitutes the contract between the parties and that the jury must disregard parol evidence in conflict therewith was properly refused, as leaving the jury to review the rulings of the court in admitting testimony and to decide for themselves whether any evidence conflicted with the bill of lading, whereas no evidence was admitted to which defendant excepted as inadmissible.

3. CARRIERS—BILLS OF LADING—CONSTRUCTION.

A bill of lading having on it the characters "Rel. Val. Lts. [or Ltd.] 5 cwt." will not, in the absence of evidence on the subject, be construed as an agreement limiting the value of the property covered by the bill to five dollars per hundred pounds, especially in view of another clause of the bill of lading placing a different and higher valuation upon certain of the property.

4. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—MODIFICATION OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a carrier for injury to property in transit, defendant requested the court to charge that the jury must, under the bill of lading, estimate the damage on the basis of five dollars per hundred pounds weight. The court gave the charge, subject to the modification, "provided the jury believes the bill of lading was a special contract," etc. There was in fact nothing on the bill of lading which the court could as a matter of law declare to constitute a contract fixing the value of the goods at five dollars per hundred pounds. Held, that the modification of the charge was not prejudicial to defendant.

Error to Circuit Court, Botetourt County.

Action by O. E. Harman against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. There was a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

E. M. Pendleton and M. McCormick, for plaintiff in error. Benj. Haden, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. O. O. Harman, the plaintiff in this cause, was a farmer, and had resided with his family at Ewing, in Lee county, Va., until the early part of November, 1904, when, determining to return to Botetourt county, where he had lived formerly, he loaded in a box freight car his household goods, family supplies, wagons, utensils, and animals (two mules, one horse, and a cow and calf), and accepted and signed a bill of lading from the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company for the transportation of said articles by that company from Ewing, Va., to the terminus of that company's line at Norton, Va., there to be delivered to the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company for transportation to Cloverdale, Va., this being a station of the Norfolk & Western Railway Company in Botetourt county nearest to the new home to which Harman was moving.

The car was duly transported without special incident by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and delivered at Norton to the Norfolk & Western Railway Company, and from thence by the latter company was duly transported to Roanoke, Va., arriving at the latter point on the night of November 12, 1904; Harman and his young son traveling in the same train, and generally in the same car. While upon the yards of the Norfolk & Western Railway Company at Roanoke, and being shifted onto the line of that company, over which the car was to be transported to Cloverdale, the car was so roughly handled as to cause serious damage to the two mules, the family supplies, household goods, etc.; and to recover for this injury Harman brought this suit against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company.

There was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $500, with interest thereon from June 8, 1905, till paid, to which a writ of error was awarded by one of the judges of this court.

The first error assigned is that the trial court erred in refusing to give to the jury the following instruction, asked by plaintiff in error, viz.:

"The court instructs the jury that a bill of lading is a contract between the shipper on the one part and the carrier on the other, and they must be controlled in their verdict by it; and if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff did not give notice to defendant's agent at Cloverdale, as required by the twelfth clause of the bill of lading, then the jury must find for the defendant."

The twelfth clause of the bill of lading is as follows:

"As a condition precedent to the shipper's right to recover damages for loss or injury to said animals, he will give notice in writing of his claim thereof to the agent of the railroad company or other carrier from whom he receives said animals before said animals are removed from the place of destination above mentioned, or from the place of delivery of the same to said shipper, and before said animals are mingled with other animals."

This bill of lading is of the class used by the initial carrier "for the transportation of live stock over its lines," while opposite the name of "consignee, destination," etc., and under the heading, "Description of Stock," besides "3 Head Horses," "2 Do. Cattle," there also appear "H. H. Goods." "Rel. Val. Lts., 5 cwt." Clearly, as is readily to be observed, clause 12 of the bill of lading could not have had and was never intended to have, application to suits to recover damages for loss or injury to property other than "animals." In fact, it was nowhere claimed in the conduct of the case before the jury that this clause of the bill of lading had any such application. Defendant in error sued to recover for injuries, not only to his two mules, but to family supplies, household goods, furniture, etc., contained in the same car and set out in the bill of particulars filed with his declaration, amounting to $728.55, of which amount $300 was claimed for injuries to the mules; yet the trial court was asked to instruct the jury that he could not recover for the damages done to his household goods and other property unless he gave written notice to the agent at Cloverdale about the injury to his mules. If the full force and effect, as claimed by plaintiff in error, be given the bill of lading, it would not have justified the giving of this instruction, inasmuch as it could have no application to anything contained therein other than the "animals." For this all-sufficient reason, the instruction was rightly refused.

After the court had passed upon the instructions asked for by both parties, and after the argument had been partly made, it was asked by plaintiff in error to give the following instructions:

"B. The jury is instructed that the bill of lading introduced in evidence in this case, in all of its parts, constitutes the contract between the parties, and no parol evidence is admissible to vary its terms. If such parol evidence has been before the jury, which is in conflict with this contract, the jury must disregard it.

"C. If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action, then in assessing such damages against the defendant the jury must estimate the damages on the supposition that the plaintiff's goods, live stock, etc., were only worth $5 for every hundred pounds of weight they weighed, and the burden of proof of their weight is on the plaintiff. In no event can the jury find, on account of damage to the mules, more than $5 per hundred of their weight; the court telling the jury in this case that the measure of the railway company's liability is to be determined by the weight of the articles loaded in the car."

Instruction B directed the jury to disregard any parol evidence which the jury might decide to be in conflict with the bill of lading. It did not tell the jury that any evidence had been admitted which was in conflict with the bill of lading, and which they should disregard, but left them to review the rulings of the court in admitting testimony, and to decide for themselves whether any evidence introduced did conflict with the bill of lading, what that evidence was, and to disregard it, when in point of fact the record discloses that no evidence was admitted by the court to which plaintiff in error excepted as inadmissible. It has been said again and again by this court that it is the duty of the court, and not the jury, to pass upon the effect of written instruments. City of Richmond v. Gallego Mills, 102 Va. 165, 45 S. E. 877, and authorities cited. It is also too well settled to admit of citation of authority that the admissibility of testimony is for the court, and not for the jury.

It was sought by instruction C to announce to the jury as the court's interpretation of the bill of lading, in the light of the evidence, that the measure of the plaintiff's damage was $5 for every hundred pounds that his property—his goods and live stock—weighed, when there is nothing whatever in the evidence of any agreement between the parties that the value of the plaintiff's property was only $5 for every one hundred pounds of weight, or was to be limited to that valuation in case of injury thereto by reason of the negligence of the carrier, unless it be that the characters, "Rel. Val. Lts. [or Ltd.] 5 cwt.," appearing on the bill of lading as before stated, meant that the plaintiff and the defendant had agreed that the property should be considered as worth only $5 for every hundred pounds of weight.

There is certainly no evidence in the record as to what the characters stood for, or that they had any meaning at all. We have taken occasion to examine the original bill of lading, and find that the characters in question are not only badly written, but have no such connection with the intelligible portions of the paper as would throw any light upon them as showing their meaning, and therefore it cannot be said that their meaning was discernible to a person of ordinary intelligence. There is no dollar mark in front of the figure 5. Its use would be meaningless, certainly to a person even of a high order of intelligence, in the hurry usual in the issuing and receiving of a bill of lading for goods shipped. But, even if the characters of which we are speaking would bear the interpretation claimed for them, they would be glaringly inconsistent with the tenth clause of the bill of lading, in which a different and higher valuation is placed upon the mules.

Upon the record before us, we do not consider that we are called upon to review the authorities cited by counsel for plaintiff in error for the proposition that a statute such as we have (section 1294, p. 668, Va. Code 1904), providing that no agreement made by a transportation company for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect or misconduct as a common carrier shall be valid, does not prohibit the making of a contract between a common carrier and a shipper limiting the liability of the former for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect or misconduct as a common carrier. In the cases decided by this court, holding that a common carrier can make a valid and binding contract, not exempting the carrier from liability for the negligence of itself or its servants, but limiting the amount in which the carrier shall be liable, in consideration of carriage at a reduced rate, it is declared that the test to be applied in all such cases is, was the contract fairly entered into, and are its terms just and reasonable?

If it were conceded that the terms of the contract here contended for by plaintiff in error are just and reasonable, it cannot, in the face of the facts to which we have adverted, be maintained that such a contract was fairly entered into by the defendant in error, and therefore instruction C, asked by plaintiff in error, was properly rejected.

The third assignment of error relates to the modification of plaintiff in error's instruction A, which, as given, the modification being italicized, is as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action, in assessing damages against the defendant, they must estimate the damages upon the supposition that the plaintiff's goods, live stock, etc., were only worth $5 for every hundred pounds they weighed; that is to say, if the plaintiff's mule weighed 1,000 pounds then in estimating damages they must treat it as worth not more than $50 when received by defendant, and the jury cannot find any more damages on account of injuries to the mule than the difference between $50 and the value of the mule when it was delivered by defendant to the plaintiff, and under this bill of lading plaintiff can recover no more than $50 for each mule injured: provided the jury believes the bill of lading was a special contract, fairly made in consideration of a special rate of transportation, and that the minds of the parties fairly met on the agreement."

To what we have said in considering the second assignment of error, all of which is applicable to the assignment here under consideration, it need only be added that the circuit court, in the absence of evidence, could not, as a matter of law, say what these characters, "Rel. Val. Lts. [or Ltd.] 5 cwt.," meant, or that the minds of the parties had met as to their meaning. Therefore the modification of the instruction is no ground of complaint on the part of plaintiff in error, since the most it could reasonably ask was to have submitted to the jury the question whether the parties understood and agreed that the characters had the meaning contended for by plaintiff in error in the instruction A, with the modification made to it by the court.

The remaining assignment of error is to the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict and grant plaintiff in error a new trial.

The evidence proves clearly the negligence—gross negligence—of plaintiff in error, resulting in injury to defendant in error's property, and the latter proves his whole bill of particulars filed in the cause, amounting to $728.55, while the jury found for him a verdict of $500 only, thereby leaving to plaintiff in error no ground whatever for complaint as to the amount of damages assessed against it.

The judgment of the circuit court is right, and will therefore be affirmed.

(104 Va. 650)

WOOD'S ADM'X v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.*
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 7, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DUTIES OF MASTER—SAFE APPLIANCES.

Where a handhold on the manhole of an engine tender, while primarily used to raise the manhole cover, is also commonly used, without objection from the railroad, by brakemen and others as the most convenient and safe way to assist them in getting on and off the tender, the railroad is bound to exercise ordinary care to see that such handhold is in a reasonably safe condition for the use to which the brakemen and other employees put it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 173, 174.]

2. SAME—ACTIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an action against a railroad for the death of a brakeman, evidence held sufficient to require the submission to the jury of the question whether the death of the brakeman was not to be attributed to the negligence of the railroad in failing to keep a handhold on the tender on which the brakeman was riding in a reasonably safe condition.

3. EVIDENCE—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY—PREPONDERANCE OF PROOF.

Plaintiff in an action for personal injuries is not required to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt, but all that is required to make out a prima facie case is to make it appear more probable that the injury was the proximate result of defendant's negligence than of anything else.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, § 287.]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad for the death of a brakeman, alleged to have been caused by the giving way of a manhole cover, to the handhold on which the brakeman was clinging while getting off the tender, evidence held to authorize a finding that the brakeman was not guilty of contributory negligence in making use of the handhold while getting off the tender.

Error to Circuit Court, Amherst County.

Action by Anna P. Wood, as administratrix of J. Buckner Wood, deceased, against the Southern Railway Company. There was a judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Strode & Tucker and Caskie & Coleman, for plaintiff in error. Horsley & Kemp, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. This action was brought by the personal representative of J. Buckner Wood, deceased, to recover damages for the death of his decedent, caused, as alleged, by the negligence of the Southern Railway Company.

Upon the trial of the cause, the defendant company's demurrer to the evidence was sustained, and judgment rendered in its favor. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

There was evidence tending to prove that about 10 o'clock on the night of February 7, 1904, one of the defendant company's freight trains from Alexandria arrived at Monroe, a station on the defendant's road in Amherst county. The train was to be placed on a siding there and the engine taken to the roundhouse. The front brakeman on the train not being acquainted with the switches at the station, the plaintiff's decedent, who was a yard brakeman, was ordered by the yardmaster to assist in "putting away" the train, and was engaged in that service when he lost his life.

The train came in from the north on the main track, and after passing the depot was switched to another track, where the engine and tender were cut loose from the cars. The engine and tender proceeded over another switch to the main line, and were backed down that track with the intention of getting on the "lead" track through another switch, so as to get to the roundhouse. As the train went south over the main line, and before the engine and tender were cut loose, the deceased lit a "fusee," which makes a flaming red light and burns about 10 minutes, and stuck it in the ground to give warning to an approaching train from the south. After the engine and tender had been cut loose, and as they were backed north on their way to the roundhouse, the deceased picked up the lighted fusee, and with his lantern got on top of the tender of the engine and sat on its rear end, holding the fusee in his hand to signal the engineman, and to give warning to the train approaching from the south and another which was expected from the north. The position of the deceased was a proper one for the duties he had to perform.

When the engine and tender reached the switch over which they had to pass to reach the "lead" track, it was the duty of the deceased to throw or change the switch. As the engine and tender approached the switch, and were within 100 or 125 yards of it, running at the rate of about 12 miles an hour, the deceased was seen sitting on the "manhole" on the rear end of the tender by the engineman, as he turned to shut off the steam and slow down his engine so as to go in on the switch. There was some slight hitch in reversing the lever and slowing down the engine, and when the engineman again looked in the direction his engine was backing he did not see the plaintiff's intestate, but took "it for granted," as he testified, "that he had gotten down and later would throw the switch." As soon as the engine stopped the attention of the engineer was attracted by the action of the car inspector upon the track over which the engine and tender had just passed. The engineer got off his engine and went back to the car inspector, where was found the dead body of plaintiff's intestate.

The car inspector, who was following after the engine, came first upon the lamp of the deceased, then the "manhole" cover, and, a little nearer the engine, upon the dead body of the deceased, all between the rails of the track. The cross-ties and ballast between the ties showed that the manhole cover and the body of the deceased had both been dragged some distance.

*Rehearing denied.

The manhole, upon the cover or lid of which the deceased was sitting when last seen alive, and immediately before his death, is located in the center of the rear of the tender, in a line with the top of the ladder leading up and down the rear end of the tender. The manhole cover is about 40 inches in length and 21 inches in width, oblong in shape, is made of iron, and has upon it an iron handhold, parallel with the rounds of the ladder referred to above, and of about the same diameter, located on the side of the cover nearer the end of the tender; and the cover is fastened to the tender by hinges on the side next to the engine. It was the common practice of brakemen and others passing over the tender to use the handhold of the cover for the purpose of pulling themselves up on the tender from the ladder and in letting themselves down the ladder. The location of the handhold was such that it was convenient and inviting, as well as in common use for those purposes, and there was nothing else by which a person ascending or descending the ladder could as conveniently and safely catch hold of. The handhold was also used for raising the manhole cover to put water into the tank, and that was most probably its primary use.

About 30 miles from Alexandria, on the run from there to Monroe, the manhole cover slipped when one of the brakemen caught hold of the handhold in coming up the ladder and getting on the tender from the rear. The hinges of the cover, when found on the track after the accident, were broken; one hinge showing a fresh break, and the other an old break, which was rusty and had the appearance of having been made some time before. When both hinges were in proper condition, there was no danger of the cover slipping or breaking loose by the use of the handhold in getting off or on the tender at the rear.

The contention of the plaintiff is that the proximate cause of the accident, which resulted in her decedent's death, was the failure of the defendant to exercise due care in keeping in a reasonably safe condition the manhole cover, the handhold of which the deceased was using and had the right to use in performing his duty at the time of the accident.

The contention of the defendant as to the negligence charged is that it is not proved that the plaintiff's intestate had the right to use the handhold in getting off the tender, or, if he had, that he was so using it in the performance of his duty when he fell from the tender and was killed.

The evidence not only tends to prove, but the jury, if the case had not been taken from them by the demurrer to the evidence, might properly have found, that one of the hinges of the manhole cover was broken, and that it had been broken for so long that the defendant knew, or could by the exercise of reasonable care have known, of its condition. The jury might have further found, even though the primary use of the handhold on the manhole cover was to raise it for the purpose of putting water into the tank, that it was the most convenient and safe way for brakemen and others to get on and off the tender by way of the ladder at the rear end of the tender, and that it was their common practice to so use it, without objection by the defendant; and since it did not prohibit such use (which probably would have seemed absurd), it ought, therefore, to have exercised ordinary care in seeing that it was in a reasonably safe condition for such secondary use. Coates v. Boston, etc., R. Co. (Mass.) 26 N. E. 864, 10 L. R. A. 769; McIntyre v. B. & M. R. Co. (Mass.) 39 N. E. 1012.

The jury might have further found that the deceased, when last seen alive, was sitting on the manhole cover at the rear of the tender, in the performance of his duties, when the engine was within 125 yards of the switch, to change which was his next duty; that in discharging that duty in the customary and most speedy and convenient way he would have used the handhold on the manhole cover in going down the ladder at the end of the tender, preparatory to getting on the ground to change the switch; and that while thus using the handhole, the other hinge in the manhole cover was broken, and by reason thereof he fell, or was thrown, in front of the backing engine and tender and killed.

Upon all the facts and circumstances of the case, considered as on a demurrer to the evidence, we cannot say as a matter of law that the injury complained of was not more naturally to be attributed to the negligence of the defendant than to any other cause. A plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries is no more required to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt than in any other civil action. All that he is required to do to make out a prima facie case is to make it appear to be more probable that the injury was the proximate result of the defendant's negligence than from any other cause. Griffin v. Boston, etc., R. Co. (Mass.) 19 N. E. 166, 1 L. R. A. 698, 12 Am. St. Rep. 526; Labatt on Master & Servant, § 835; Marshall v. Valley R. Co., 99 Va. 798, 805, 34 S. E. 455; Va. Iron C. & C. Co. v. Tomlinson, 104 Va. —; 51 S. E. 362, 364; Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 24 Sup. Ct. 24, 48 L. Ed. 96.

It is insisted by the defendant that, even if it was guilty of negligence in failing to exercise ordinary care to maintain the manhole cover in a reasonably safe condition and the plaintiff's intestate had the right to make use of the handhold thereon in getting off the tender, he was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to do so under the facts and circumstances of the case.

Without discussing further the evidence in the case, and the proper inferences which the jury might have drawn from the facts and circumstances proved, it is sufficient to say that we are clearly of the opinion that, if the jury had found that the plaintiff's intestate was not guilty of contributory negligence, the court could not have set aside the verdict because contrary to the evidence. We are of opinion, therefore, that, since the jury might have found for the plaintiff upon both the question of negligence and of contributory negligence, we must so find.

The judgment of the circuit court must be reversed, and this court will enter such judgment as that court ought to have entered.

(104 Va. 635)

FISHER'S ADM'R v. CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 7, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEGREE OF CARE REQUIRED—SAFE PLACE TO WORK.

It is the duty of a master to exercise ordinary care to provide for the safety of his servant while engaged in the discharge of his duties, and to that end he must use ordinary care to furnish a reasonably safe place to work.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 173, 174, 179.]

2. SAME—ORDINARY CARE.

Ordinary care is such care as reasonable and prudent men use under like circumstances in providing safe and suitable appliances and instrumentalities for the work to be done and in providing generally for the safety of the servant in the course of his employment; regard being had to the work and difficulties and dangers attending it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 173, 174, 179.]

3. SAME — RAILROAD TRACKS — ADJOINING BANKS AND BLUFFS.

The duty of a railroad company to its servants employed on trains requires it to use ordinary care in guarding against obstructions caused by landslides and rocks falling from adjoining banks and bluffs.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 174, 179, 218, 224.]

4. SAME—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER.

In an action against a railroad company for injury to its engineer, evidence considered, and held, that defendant's negligence should have been submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 1000, 1001.]

5. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to an engineer, evidence considered, and held, that whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence should have been submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 1089–1132.]

Error to Circuit Court, Bedford County.

Action by E. C. Fisher, administrator of George Fisher, deceased, against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Caskie & Coleman and F. T. Glasgow, for plaintiff in error. Harrison & Long, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff in error to recover damages for the death of his intestate, which is ascribed to the negligence of the defendant.

The case arose as follows: Fisher had been employed for many years by the defendant in the capacity of locomotive engineer on its passenger trains on the James River Division, a line of road extending from the city of Richmond, along James river, to Clifton Forge. The road was built by the predecessor in title of the defendant, the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, in the year 1881, and was located principally upon the old towpath of the James River and Kanawha Canal.

For the distance of three-fourths of a mile, including the point at which the accident happened, in a westerly direction, the river is on the right-hand side of the track; while on the shore side there are a series of bluffs, with intervening ravines, rising abruptly from the water line in some places to the height of 200 feet, along the base of which the roadbed has been cut, and the face of which forms its southern side or wall.

The property was transferred to the present company in the year 1897, and has been since that time operated by it. In its operation the defendant exercises control over these bluffs, and keeps a watchman continuously on the beat in question, whose duty it is to keep a lookout for rocks, trees, and other obstructions likely to fall or wash upon the track, and remove them when practicable, or else flag approaching trains.

On Sunday, December 29, 1901, the regular west-bound passenger train having been delayed by an accident east of Lynchburg, the passengers and baggage were transferred to a special train, composed of an engine and tender, a combination baggage and express car, and a passenger coach. This special train left Lynchburg for Clifton Forge about 6 o'clock in the evening, two hours behind schedule time.

The watchman on the beat in question was returning from the western end of his course, and had proceeded about one-fourth of a mile eastward when he heard the train blow for Reusens, a station four miles west of Lynchburg and two miles east of the scene of the accident, and stepped off the track to allow it to pass him. While thus waiting, he heard a rock fall on the track towards the eastern end of the bluff, and hurried forward, waving his lantern across the track to stop the train.

The railroad approaches the bluff from the east on an 11° reverse curve, and at that point Fisher, in obedience to the rules of the company, reduced the speed of the train to "almost a stand-still," and came around the curve very slowly; but on clearing it he observed a white light ahead, and, believing the track to be unobstructed, increased his speed to 15 miles an hour, which rate was maintained until the engine collided with a rock weighing about a ton, which had broken loose from the adjacent bluff and fallen upon the track between the rails. The rock was wedge-shaped, and the pilot "rode up on it" with all the wheels of the engine except the back drivers. An examination showed that the engine was not seriously damaged, but it was impossible to replace it on the track, and a messenger was dispatched to Reusens to telegraph to Lynchburg for assistance.

It had been raining continuously for several days, and the night was intensely dark. The passenger coach was crowded, and the trainmen and most of the male passengers assembled in the baggage and express car, where they remained for more than a half hour, awaiting assistance, smoking, and discussing the accident. At intervals, during that time, gravel and rock were falling from the bluff above, and it was suggested that it would be safer for the passenger coach to be pushed back from under the bluff. Accordingly, with the assistance of the passengers, the coach containing the women and children was shoved back some 65 feet. Thereupon the conductor requested the passengers to aid in removing the baggage and express car also; and while the express messenger was engaged in uncoupling the car for that purpose, a large quantity of rock and earth fell from the side of the bluff upon and against the car, casting several men into the river, part of the mass falling upon Fisher and the express messenger, and held them fast, despite the efforts of their companions to release them, until they were overwhelmed and killed by another mass of matter which shortly thereafter came down upon them.

The trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence and rendered judgment for the defendant; and the plaintiff brings error.

The defendant denies liability for the death of plaintiff's intestate on the grounds that the evidence fails to show actionable negligence on its part, and also that it establishes such contributory negligence on the part of Fisher as would defeat a recovery, even if the initial negligence of the railroad company had been proved.

The relation of the parties being that of master and servant, the law imposed upon the defendant the duty of exercising ordinary care to provide for the safety of its servant while engaged in the discharge of his duties, and to that end required the use of ordinary care on the part of the company to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work.

Ordinary care is defined to be "such care as reasonable and prudent men use under like circumstances, in providing safe and suitable appliances and instrumentalities for the work to be done, and in providing generally for the safety of the servant in the course of his employment; regard being had to the work and difficulties and dangers attending it." Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin, 93 Va. 804, 22 S. E. 869; Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins, 90 Va. 261, 17 S. E. 890.

In the case of Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 417, 418, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485, it is said: "The terms 'ordinary care,' 'reasonable prudence,' and such like terms, as applied to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be deemed ordinary care in one case may, under different surroundings and circumstances, be gross negligence. The policy of the law has relegated the determination of such questions to the jury, under proper instructions from the court. It is their province to note the special circumstances and surroundings of each particular case, and then say whether the conduct of the parties in the case was such as would be expected of reasonable, prudent men under a similar state of affairs. When a given state of facts is such that reasonable men may fairly differ upon the question as to whether there was negligence or not, the determination of the matter is for the jury." B. & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 611, 16 Sup. Ct. 105, 40 L. Ed. 274.

In case of railroad companies, the duty involves proper construction of the roadbed and track, primarily, and also the correlative obligation of maintenance and inspection.

The principle is thus stated by the Supreme Court of the United States: "The railroad cut is as much a part of the railroad structure as is the fill. They are both necessary, and both are intended for one result, which is the production of a level track over which the trains may be propelled. The cut is made by the company no less than the fill, and the banks are not the result of natural causes, but of direct intervention of the company's work. If it be the duty of the company (as it unquestionably is), in the erection of the fills and the necessary bridges, to so construct them that they shall be reasonably safe, and to maintain them in a reasonably safe condition, no reason can be assigned why the duty should not exist in regard to the cuts. Just as surely as the laws of gravity will cause a heavy train to fall through a defective or rotten bridge to the destruction of life, just so surely will those same laws cause landslides and consequent dangerous obstructions to the track itself from ill-constructed railway cuts. To all intents and purposes, a railway track which runs through a cut where the banks are so near and so steep that the usual laws of gravity will bring upon the track the debris created by the common processes of nature is overhung by those banks. Ordinary skill would enable engineers to foresee the result, and ordinary prudence should lead the company to guard against it. To hold any other view would be to overbalance the priceless lives of the traveling public by a mere item of increased expense in the construction of railroads, and, after all, an item in the great number of cases of no great moment." Gleeson v. Va. Mid. Ry. Co. 140 U. S. 435, 440, 11 Sup. Ct. 859, 861, 35 L. Ed. 458.

It is not perceived that there can be any difference, in principle, between the duty of a railroad company with respect to the artificial banks of a cut, and natural banks and bluffs along the base of which it has chosen to locate its road. The mandate of the law, which imposes upon companies the duty of using ordinary care to furnish the employé a reasonably safe place in which to work, is as imperative in the one case as in the other; and this rule is founded upon the just, reasonable, and humane principle that, where human life is at stake, such precautions must be taken as will afford reasonable assurance of its preservation.

In the case of Union Pacific R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 452, 459, 16 Sup. Ct. 618, 620, 40 L. Ed. 766, Chief Justice Fuller, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "This engineer was entitled to rely upon the company as having properly constructed the road, and to presume that it had made proper inquiry in respect to latent defects, if there were any, in the construction, for such was its duty; and he cannot be held to knowledge of the danger lurking in this narrow seam in the mountain side, by whose inequalities its sinuosities were hidden. We agree with the Circuit Court of Appeals that the Circuit Court properly instructed the jury in this regard, and that no error was committed in allowing the jury to consider the evidence in the light of its own judgment and knowledge, taking into consideration all the facts bearing on the defective construction in question."

So, also, in the case of Beam v. Western N. C. R. Co. (N. C.) 12 S. E. 600, the court observes: "The masses of stone just above and near to the railroad track on which trains were moved, were in condition, as to situation, to slide or fall upon the track, were dangerous, were a standing menace, and were allowed to be so for several years; and the agents of the defendants knew the fact. The stone ought to have been removed when the road was constructed. The fact that the defendant kept a 'track walker,' whose duty was to examine and see, just after a train had passed the dangerous point, whether rock had fallen or was about to fall, cannot excuse the defendant. It was its serious duty to avert such danger, because it was obvious, could be seen, and ought to have been removed. It is not sufficient to be simply cautionary, when a manifest danger exists that may and ought to be removed." See, also, Elledge v. Nat'l City, etc., R. Co., (Cal.) 34 Pac. 720, 38 Am. St. Rep. 290.

In our view it is unnecessary, in either aspect of the case, to enter upon a circumstantial discussion of the evidence.

Upon the first proposition, involving the question of the defendant's negligence, considered from the standpoint of a demurrer to the evidence, there is no escape from the conclusion that the evidence strongly tended to establish it. It was in testimony that the bluff, at the point of the accident, appeared to be, and was believed to be, in an unsafe condition; that it was not solid, but seamed; and that there was a dry crack across the face of it, through which loose earth had exuded, which circumstance, in the opinion of some of the witnesses, indicated the presence of an earth pocket behind the surface of the rock. These conditions were discernible from the track beneath, and had been long known to the defendant's watchmen and supervisor of track. Yet the defendant had wholly failed to make it the object of special inspection, or test its stability by scaling or otherwise. In this state of the case, the trial court was not warranted in declaring, as matter of law, that the allegation of negligence on the part of the defendant had not been sustained. On the contrary, it is the settled doctrine of this court that under such circumstances the question of negligence is one for the determination of the jury.

Thus, in the case of Kimball & Fink v. Friend, 95 Va. 125, 140, 27 S. E. 901, 904, the court said: "The question of negligence in such a case is peculiarly one for the consideration of the jury. In Carrington v. Ficklin, 32 Grat. 670, 676, 677, the court, Judge Burks delivering the opinion, said: 'Where the question arises upon a state of facts on which reasonable men may fairly arrive at different conclusions, the fact of negligence cannot be determined until one or the other of these conclusions has been drawn by the jury. The inferences to be drawn from the evidence must be either certain and incontrovertible, or they cannot be decided by the court. Negligence cannot be conclusively established by a state of facts upon which fair-minded men may well differ.'" Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Medley, 75 Va. 499, 505, 40 Am. Rep. 734; Winchester v. Carroll, 99 Va. 727, 744, 40 S. E. 87.

On the issue raised by the defendant's second ground of defense, that plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence, there was also a conflict of evidence. The witnesses were not agreed as to the character and size of the particles of gravel and rock which at intervals fell from the bluff before the fatal slide occurred. It was conceded that the darkness of the night was so intense that it was impossible to discover the true condition of the face of the bluff, and the impression made on one of the witnesses was (to quote his own language) "that, when the first small slide occurred, it left a ragged place, and the downfall of rain was washing down the gravel and dirt that had been torn up by the other rock in its passage down the cliff. The fact that practically all the adult male passengers, some 15 in number and of various occupations, volunteered, after the passenger coach had been pushed back from under the cliff, to assist the crew in removing the combination car, is convincing evidence of the fact that Fisher, in remaining at his post of duty, to say the least of it, was not guilty of negligence per se. Their collective opinion, as evidenced by their conduct, refutes that contention. Therefore the question of his alleged contributory negligence was for the jury, and not for the court.

In Bass v. Norfolk Ry. etc., Co., 100 Va. 1, 8, 40 S. E. 100, 102, it was held: "Whether or not the plaintiff's intestate, under all the facts and circumstances of this case, was guilty of contributory negligence, is a question about which reasonably fair-minded men might differ. The inferences to be drawn from the evidence must be certain and incontrovertible, or they cannot be decided by the court."

"It was, therefore, a question for the jury. And since the jury might have found for the plaintiff on the question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff's intestate, on the defendant's demurrer to the evidence, the court must so find." See, also, Wood's Adm'r v. Southern Ry. Co. (decided at the present term) 52 S. E. 371.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the judgment complained of is erroneous, and must be reversed; and this court, proceeding to render such judgment as the circuit court ought to have rendered, will overrule the demurrer to the evidence and enter judgment for the plaintiff in error for the damages awarded by the jury.

HARRISON, J., absent.

(104 Va. 645)

SHANNON'S ADM'R v. CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 7, 1905.)

1. CARRIERS — INJURIES TO PASSENGERS — LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

Under Code 1904, p. 668, § 1294c (25), providing that "no agreement made by a transportation company for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect or misconduct as a common carrier shall be valid," a contract between an express company and its messenger, stipulating that the messenger shall exempt the company from liability for its own negligence, and undertaking to afford similar immunity to railroad companies in whose cars he might travel in the performance of his duties, was void, and afforded no defense in an action against a railroad company for negligence resulting in such messenger's death.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 1252-1255.]

2. SAME—CARE REQUIRED AS TO SERVANTS OF EXPRESS COMPANIES.

A messenger in the employ of an express company, while engaged with the servants of a railroad company in the service of transportation on the road, is entitled to at least as high a degree of care for his protection by the railroad company as it owes to its employés.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 978.]

Error to Circuit Court, Bedford County.

Action by J. Boyd Shannon, as administrator of John H. Shannon, deceased, against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Lee & Howard and Caskie & Coleman, for appellant. Harrison & Long, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. This case is controlled in all respects, except one, to which we shall presently advert, by the case of Fisher's Administrator v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, 52 S. E. 373, in which an opinion was handed down at the present term.

The cases arose out of a common accident, and were brought to recover damages for the deaths of Fisher and Shannon, respectively, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence in each case, and rendered judgment for the defendant; and the judgment in Fisher's Case was reversed by this court in the opinion referred to.

In addition to other defenses, applicable alike to both cases, in the case under review the defendant filed a special plea in which it averred "that, as a condition of its permitting the plaintiff's intestate to travel in its car over its line of railway as express messenger in the employ of the Adams Express Company in his performance of his duties as such, * * * plaintiff's intestate * * * entered into a contract in writing with said Adams Express Company, which contract was in force at the time of the death of the plaintiff's intestate, whereby, in consideration of such employment and the compensation to be paid therefor, the said plaintiff's intestate did assume all risks of death or accident or damage to him or his property, whether from negligence or otherwise, and did release and discharge the said Adams Express Company and any connecting carrier, railroad company, express company, or other person or company or connecting carrier [in this instance the defendant], in whose cars or other conveyance he might travel in the performance of his duties aforesaid, from any and all claims, liabilities, and demands of every kind, nature, and description for or on account of his death, or any injury or damage to his person or property of any kind or nature sustained by him, whether caused by negligence of the said Adams Express Company, or any of said railroad companies or other carriers, or otherwise, and did further agree that he voluntarily assumed the risks of injury or death from said negligence or otherwise, and that none of said companies or persons should incur any further liability whatsoever than therein expressed by reason of permitting him to ride in said cars or other conveyance; * * * that at the time of the death of the plaintiff's intestate he was in an express car being transported by the defendant over its said line in pursuance of his contract with said Adams Express Company, and not otherwise."

The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the plea, and that ruling is assigned as cross-error by the defendant.

It will be observed that the precise question presented by this plea is a narrow one, and involves the validity of the contract set forth therein under section 1294c (25), p. 668, Va. Code 1904.

The section reads as follows: "No agreement made by a transportation company for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect or misconduct as a common carrier shall be valid."

The status both of the express company and the defendant as "common carriers" is fixed by the legislative declaration that the phrase shall include every railroad company and express company chartered by this or any other state and doing business in this state. Acts 1891-92, p. 971, c. 614, § 18.

The Virginia statute is merely declaratory of the common-law doctrine that contracts which stipulate for immunity from negligence are invalid as contrary to public policy, and emphasizes the legislative policy on that subject in the state. The language is so plain that an attempt at exposition would rather tend to obscure than elucidate the meaning of the statute.

In the recent case of Norfolk & Western Ry. Co. v. Tanner, 100 Va. 379, 41 S. E. 721, this court, in construing the foregoing section, held "that a person traveling upon a free pass is clothed with every right appertaining to a passenger for hire; and a railway company, having by virtue of the pass undertaken to carry the person to whom it is issued, is charged with the duty of transporting that person safely, even though by agreement signed by the passenger it undertook to relieve itself from the consequences of the negligence of its servants. Such an agreement, being against the policy of the state, is inoperative and void."

It is sought to withdraw this case from the precept of the statute, and the well-established rule of the common law upon which it is founded, and bring it within the influence of that line of authorities (of which the case of B. & O. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Voight, 176 U. S. 498, 20 Sup. Ct. 385, 44 L. Ed. 560, is a conspicuous type) which hold that, as it is not one of the duties of a common carrier to transport for an express company its messenger and merchandise, the defendant could therefore contract with the express company for exemption from liability for the death of plaintiff's intestate, although occasioned by its own negligence; the express messenger also voluntarily entering into a contract with the express company, in consideration of his employment, that he would assume such risk and absolve his employer and the defendant from all liability in the premises.

It will be seen that there is a marked difference between the contract set out in the plea in this case and the tripartite agreement in the Voight Case. The only parties to this contract are the express company and its servant, and its purpose is manifest. It stipulates, in the first place, to exempt the master from liability for its own negligence to its servant, and, secondly, undertakes to afford similar immunity to the defendant for its negligence. It is plain that such contract is violative both of the letter and spirit of the statute, and illegal. Indeed, independently of statute, the almost unbroken current of authority declares such contracts void.

The Voight Case constitutes a distinct exception to the general rule, and the averments of the plea do not bring the defendant within the exception. If, notwithstanding the unmistakable policy of this state in the interest of human life and safety, we were disposed to follow that case rather than the line of authorities of which Railroad Company v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. Ed. 627, is an exponent, as to which no opinion is expressed, it would not be permissible to do so under the pleadings in this case.

It follows from what has been said that the demurrer to the plea in question was properly sustained.

As remarked, the case in its other aspects is ruled by the decision in the Fisher Case.

In Voight's Case, 176 U. S., at page 514, 20 Sup. Ct., at page 391, 44 L. Ed. 560, it is said of his relations as an express messenger to the railroad company: "He was there as a servant, engaged with the servants of the railroad company in the service of transportation on the road. His duties were substantially the same as those of the baggage master in the same car; the latter relating to merchandise carried for passengers, and the former to merchandise carried for the express company. His actual relations to the other servants of the railroad corporation engaged in the transportation were substantially the same as those of the baggage master."

Upon that theory, the defendant owed the plaintiff's intestate at least as high degree of care for his protection as it owed to its employé Fisher, and the judgment ought to be the same in both cases.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the circuit court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the evidence, for which error its judgment must be reversed; and this court, pronouncing such judgment as that court ought to have rendered, will overrule the demurrer to the evidence, and enter judgment for the plaintiff in error for the damages assessed by the jury.

HARRISON, J., absent.

(104 Va. 700)

ACKISS' EX'RS v. SACHEL et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. JUDGMENT — LIENS — HOMESTEAD EXEMPTIONS—ENFORCEMENT—LIMITATIONS.

Under Code 1904, pp. 1904, 1908, §§ 3567, 3578, making judgments liens on real estate, and providing that no suit shall be brought to enforce the lien on which the right to issue execution or bring an action is barred by sections 3577, 3578 (pages 1910, 1912), prescribing the time for bringing an action, and directing that in computing the time any time during which the right to sue out execution on the judgment is suspended by the terms thereof or by legal process shall be omitted, and section 3649 (page 1946), providing that on the death of a householder, leaving neither wife nor minor child, the exemption of any estate of such householder shall cease, and it shall pass, as other estate, according to the law of descent and distribution, where a judgment was not rendered until a homestead was set apart, and it was barred by limitations before the exemption ceased, a suit to enforce the lien after the householder's death, leaving neither widow nor minor child, instituted more than 20 years after the issue of execution, was barred.

2. SAME.

A judgment on which an execution has issued may be kept alive by other executions within the statutory period.

Appeal from Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Suit by W. H. Taylor and others, executors of C. B. Ackiss, deceased, against R. D. Satchel and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Burroughs & Bro., for appellants. White, Tunstall & Thom, for appellees.

BUCHANAN, J. This suit was brought in the year 1903 to enforce the lien of a judgment on land which had been held as a homestead. The homestead was set apart in January, 1875, and the judgment was rendered in December of that year. An execution was issued, returnable to March rules, 1876, and returned "No effects." The householder died in the year 1900, leaving neither widow nor minor child.

The defense is that more than 20 years had elapsed from March, 1876, before the institution of this suit, and that the judgment was barred by the statute of limitations.

Section 3567, p. 1904, of the Code of 1904, so far as it affects this case, provides that "every judgment for money rendered in this state, heretofore or hereafter, against any person, shall be a lien on all the real estate of or to which such person is or becomes possessed or entitled at or after the date of such judgment. * * * This section is qualified by section 3649 and the three following sections."

By section 3573, p. 1908, of the Code of 1904, it is provided that "no suit shall be brought to enforce the lien of a judgment upon which the right to issue an execution, or bring a scire facias, or an action, is barred by sections thirty-five hundred and seventy-seven and thirty-five hundred and seventy-eight."

Section 3577 (page 1910), so far as it affects the question involved in this case, is as follows: "On a judgment, execution may be issued within a year, and a scire facias or an action may be brought within ten years after the date of the judgment; and where execution issues within the year, other executions may be issued, or a scire facias or an action may be brought within ten years from the return day of an execution on which there is no return by an officer, or within twenty years from the return day of an execution on which there is such return. * * *"

Section 3578 (page 1912), among other things, provides that "no execution shall issue, nor any scire facias or action be brought, on a judgment in this state, other than for the commonwealth, after the time prescribed by the preceding section, except that, in computing the time, any time during which the right to sue out execution on the judgment is suspended by the terms thereof, or by legal process, shall be omitted. * * *"

It is conceded that under the foregoing provisions of the Code the right to issue execution, or bring a scire facias or action upon the judgment, or to enforce the lien thereof on real estate other than the homestead, is barred by the statute of limitations. But it is insisted that, under the provisions of section 3649, p. 1946, of the Code of 1904, the right to subject the homestead land to the payment of the judgment is not barred. That section is as follows:

"When any person, entitled as a householder, to the exemption provided for in section thirty-six hundred and thirty, ceases to be a householder, or when any person removes from this state, his right to claim or hold any estate as exempt under the provisions of this chapter, shall cease; and upon the death of a householder leaving neither wife nor minor children surviving him, or if she or any of them survive him, and he leaves any estate which they or any of them are entitled to hold, or to have set apart to be held by them, as exempt under the preceding sections of this chapter, then upon her death or marriage, and if there be minor children, as soon as the youngest of those who attain the age of twenty-one years attains that age, or all marry, if they all marry before attaining that age, the exemption of any estate, real or personal, of such householder, then remaining and held as exempt under the provisions of this chapter, shall cease, and it shall pass as other real and personal estate, according to the law of descents and distributions, or as the same may be devised or bequeathed by said householder, subject to his debts; but the lien of a judgment, or decree for money, rendered against a householder, and which is not paramount to the exemption provided for in this chapter, shall, as to the real estate held as exempt by him, his widow, or minor children, attach to such only of that estate as he may be possessed of or entitled to at the time the exemption thereof ceases, as aforesaid, and until that time the said lien shall not be enforced."

Prior to the Code of 1887, where that section first appears, there had been a diversity of opinion as to what interest or estate the householder had in the property set apart as his homestead. To put at rest as far as possible that vexed question was one of the objects of that section.

Judge Burks, one of the revisors of the Code of 1887, says, that the "main object of that section, in declaring when the exemption shall cease, was to fix the time when the judgment lien shall attach to the exempted real estate; and it is declared that it shall not attach except to such real estate as the householder shall have at the time the exemption ceases, and it shall attach then. This leaves the householder at liberty, while the exemption continues, to alien the exempted real estate, free from any incumbrance by the lien of a judgment (in the absence of waiver) recovered during the time the right of exemption exists, and thus enables him to make a good title to the purchaser, at least so far as any such judgment is concerned." Burks' Address before the State Bar Association, Reports Va. Bar Ass'n, vol. 4, pp. 137, 138; 2 Barton's Law Pr. (2d Ed.) 1402.

In Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 680, 24 S. E. 223, in construing that section, it was held that as to debts not paramount to the homestead exemption the householder or head of a family holds the property set apart exempt, and may alien the same at pleasure; and, although a limit is fixed to the duration of the homestead, no lien attaches thereon until that time has arrived.

This being so, the judgment sued on never was a lien upon the homestead property. It was not rendered until after the homestead had been set apart, and it was barred by the statute of limitations before the exemption ceased. But, if it were a lien, as the appellants insist, and they were prohibited from enforcing it until the exemption ceased, that prohibition did not suspend the running of the statute of limitations as to the judgment.

Section 3578, p. 1912, of the Code of 1904, provides that "no execution shall issue, nor any scire facias or action be brought on a judgment in this state, other than for the commonwealth, after the time prescribed by the preceding section, except that, in computing the time, any time during which the right to sue out execution on the judgment is suspended by the terms thereof, or by legal process, shall be omitted. * * *"

Prohibiting the bringing of a suit to enforce the lien of a judgment is not one of the exceptions mentioned in the statute. The general rule is, that the courts have no authority to make any exception in favor of a party to protect him from the consequences of the statute, unless they come clearly within the letter of the saving clauses therein contained, and that the exercise of any such authority by the courts is an usurpation of legislative powers wholly unwarranted, and to which the courts should never resort. By making the exceptions which exist in the statute, the Legislature has exercised its prerogative, and the fact that no others were made clearly indicates that no others should exist, and the courts have no power to add any, however much the ends of justice in a particular case may seem to demand it. 2 Wood on Lim. § 252; Angel on Lim. §§ 194, 476; Bickle v. Chrisman, 76 Va. 678, 685; Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 320, 9 Sup. Ct. 530, 32 L. Ed. 946.

There are, however, some exceptions to the general rule, it seems, and the statute may be suspended by causes not mentioned in the statute itself. But the cases where the general rule does not apply, as was said by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Amy v. Watertown, supra, are very limited in character, and are to be admitted with great caution; otherwise, the courts would make the law, instead of administering it.

The ground relied on in this case to take it out of the operation of the statute of limitations is not only not within the letter, but it is not within the spirit, of the statute, and none of the cases cited furnish a precedent for holding that the general rule is not applicable to the case. There is nothing in section 3649 which prohibited the judgment creditor or the appellants from issuing other executions or bringing a scire facias to keep the judgment alive so that when the exemption ceased they would have a lien. But if the judgment, to which the lien owes its existence, is barred by the statute of limitations—has ceased to exist—it is clear that the lien, which is a mere incident to the judgment, has also ceased to exist. Flemming v. Dunlop, 4 Leigh, 341; Werdenbaugh v. Reid, 20 W. Va. 592.

The appellants' counsel insists, or at least suggests, that the utmost limit of a judgment is 20 years from the return day of an execution issued, and that the life of a judgment cannot be prolonged by issuing other executions.

Whilst doubts have been expressed by some members of the bar, and perhaps by some of the trial courts, whether or not under the provisions of section 3577 of the Code a judgment could be preserved in force after 20 years by issuing other executions, the better and the prevailing opinion seems to have been that it could. See Report of Revisors, Code 1849, p. 920, note; Rowe's Adm'r v. Hardy's Adm'r, 5 Va. Law Reg. 672-675, note; Id., 861, 862. But that question is no longer an open one since the decisions of this court in Gunnell v. Dixon, 101 Va. 174, 43 S. E. 340, and Wicks v. Scull, 102 Va. 290, 46 S. E. 297, in which it was held that a judgment might be kept alive by the issue of other executions within the statutory period. The same construction has been placed upon a similar statute by the Court of Appeals of the state of West Virginia. Laidley v. Kline, 23 W. Va. 565; Reilly v. Clark, 31 W. Va. 571, 8 S. E. 509.

We are of opinion that there is no error in the decree appealed from, and that it must be affirmed.

(104 Va. 679)

NORFOLK RY. & LIGHT CO. v. WILLIAR.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1906.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—INJURIES TO WIFE—DAMAGES.

Under the married woman's act (Acts 1899-1900, p. 1240, c. 1139 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1138]), the husband is entitled to the services of his wife; and, in an action by a wife for injuries, it is error to instruct that, in assessing the damages, the jury can consider the diminution, if any, of the plaintiff's physical ability to perform the ordinary duties of life.

Error to Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Action by Margie E. Williar against the Norfolk Railway & Light Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

White, Tunstall & Thom, for plaintiff in error. R. B. Tibbett and Brooke & Elliott, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This action was instituted by Margie E. Williar, a married woman, to recover damages for personal injuries caused, as alleged, by a collision between two cars of the plaintiff in error, in one of which she was a passenger.

The declaration charges that by said collision, without contributing thereto by any act or neglect on her part, and as the direct result thereof, she was badly bruised, etc., and suffered therefrom great nervous shock, physical pain, and anguish of mind, and as the direct result thereof she had become permanently disabled and a helpless invalid.

The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $4,500, which the court of law and chancery of the city of Norfolk refused to set aside, and entered thereon the judgment to which this writ of error was awarded.

The first assignment of error is to the action of the court in giving for the plaintiff the following instruction:

"The court instructs the jury that, if they find for the plaintiff, they may, in assessing damages, take into consideration her physical and mental suffering, if any, arising from said injury; the diminution, if any, of her physical ability to perform the ordinary duties of her life, caused by said injury; and whether her said injuries are of a permanent or temporary character."

This court has held that, notwithstanding the provisions of chapter 103, p. 1138, of the Code of 1904, the husband is entitled to the services of his wife. Richmond, etc., Co. v. Bowles, 92 Va. 738, 24 S. E. 388; A. & D. R. Co. v. Ironmonger, 95 Va. 625, 29 S. E. 319. These cases dealt with the law touching married women and their estates as it was under chapter 103 of the Code of 1904. We now have a new married woman's act. See Acts 1899-1900, p. 1240, c. 1139. A careful reading of this later act, however, discloses no ground affecting the view taken by this court in the cases cited. The new act is no broader than the prior law, and under it, therefore, the husband is still entitled to the services of his wife.

This being so, we are of opinion that it was error to instruct the jury that in assessing damages they could take into consideration the diminution, if any, of the plaintiff's physical ability to perform the ordinary duties of her life, for the reason that "the ordinary duties of her life" embrace elements of damage which would be properly recoverable by the husband, and which constitute no part of the wife's separate estate.

Granting it to be true, as contended, that the ordinary duties of a married woman's life include duties in which she has a personal interest, separate and apart from her husband's right to her services, still the language also includes, as already said, those duties the performance of which constitute services belonging to the husband and which he alone had the right to recover. The only testimony as to a diminution in her ability to perform her ordinary duties related to her impaired capacity for attending to her household duties, and as to these her husband was entitled to her services. The instruction made no discrimination, but included all the ordinary duties of life, and therefore it was equivalent to telling the jury that they could find, in a case brought by her alone, damages for that for which the husband alone could recover.

As said in a New York case, damages for the injury to her person belong to her, because the statute has given them to her, but damages for the loss of her services belong to her husband, because the common law gave them to him and the statute has not taken them away. Blaechinska v. Home for Little Wanderers, 180 N. Y. 497, 29 N. E. 755, 15 L. R. A. 215.

The action of the court in refusing to give the following instruction, asked for by the defendant company, is also assigned as error:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that prior to the date of the alleged accident, namely, the 4th day of December, 1902, the plaintiff had pseudo angina pectoris, or any nervous disorder, then she cannot recover under the declaration and proofs in this cause on account of such pseudo angina pectoris, or other nervous disorder, existing before said accident, or any aggravation thereof produced by said accident."

It is contended that the declaration and the proof adduced in its support were expressly based upon the theory that the plaintiff, before the accident, was well, hearty, and healthy, and had no pseudo angina pectoris, nor any nervous disorder, but that those troubles had been produced by the accident and were the direct result of it, and, therefore, that the refusal to give this instruction was a refusal to tell the jury that the plaintiff was to be restrained by the case she had claimed and attempted to sustain, and could not recover upon another and different case. It is further insisted that there can, as stated in the instruction, be no recovery for the aggravation of an existing disease, where the declaration is framed upon the theory that the particular disease was produced by the injuries, and not merely aggravated thereby.

For the error already pointed out the case will have to be remanded for a new trial, and therefore we forbear to express an opinion upon this last-mentioned assignment of error, for the reason that the plaintiff will, before another trial, have an opportunity to amend her declaration, and thus avoid the difficulty suggested by the court's refusal to give the instruction under consideration.

The judgment complained of must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial, to be had not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

(104 Va. 707)

MURRAY et al. v. MOORE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. DAMAGES — TRIAL—VERDICT—RESPONSIVENESS OF ISSUES.

In an action of tort for conspiracy and fraud of defendants, resulting in depriving plaintiff of an interest in a mine, where there was no allegation that plaintiff was deprived of any one's services, or deprived of compensation for his own services, by any act of defendant, a verdict finding for plaintiff and assessing his damages at $500 "for loss of services" was not responsive to the declaration, and it was error to enter judgment thereon.

2. EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY—COLLATERAL MATTERS.

In an action for fraud and conspiracy of defendants in depriving plaintiff of an interest in a mine, a letter written by one defendant to plaintiff, while he and plaintiff were interested in the mine together, and which indicated that they were using disreputable devices to make a success of their undertaking, was collateral to the issues and inadmissible in evidence, either against the writer or his codefendant.

3. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—JUDICIAL RECORDS.

In an action for fraud and conspiracy of defendants in depriving plaintiff of an interest in a mine, defendant was asked on cross-examination whether he had ever been found guilty of any other fraudulent transaction, and replied in the negative. Plaintiff's counsel thereupon introduced in evidence parts of the record in a chancery suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance to which defendant was a party. Plaintiff was neither a party nor privy to any party to the chancery suit. Held, that the record in the chancery suit was inadmissible, and its introduction in evidence was prejudicial.

4. SAME—EXPLANATION OF IMPEACHING TESTIMONY.

Parts of the record having been admitted in evidence over defendant's objection, it was error to refuse to permit defendants to show, by the attorneys who represented the parties in the chancery suit, that the charge against defendant was purely technical, so far as the question of fraud was concerned, and that neither party to the suit considered him guilty of any moral turpitude.

Error to Circuit Court, Buckingham County.

Action by Charles A. Moore against N. R. Murray and another. There was a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

H. D. Flood, for plaintiffs in error. R. T. Hubbard, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. Charles A. Moore and N. R. Murray held an option on what was considered a valuable gold-mining property, situated in Buckingham county, Va., known as the "Bondurant Gold Mine," which gave to Moore and Murray the right to work and develop the mine during the continuance of the option, but to expire by its terms on December 1, 1902, if the property was not purchased by Moore and Murray on or before that date.

A company was organized and stock issued. Moore worked and managed the mine, and Murray undertook to finance the enterprise by the sale of stock and the negotiation of loans. R. M. Anderson was a large merchant, doing business near the mine and deriving considerable profit by selling supplies to the mine operatives and their workmen, and for this reason was very much interested in the continuance and success of the operation of the mine. On December 1, 1902, Moore and Murray were unable to comply with the terms of the option contract, and the same by limitation expired. Subsequently R. M. Anderson aided Murray in making another contract with the owners of the mine, by which Murray became the purchaser thereof with the view of carrying on the work. Whereupon Moore instituted his action of trespass on the case in the circuit court of Buckingham county against Murray and Anderson, charging them with a conspiracy to defraud him; the gravamen of the amended declaration, upon which the case was tried, being that defendants "did combine, confederate, and conspire to defraud and injure the plaintiff, and to deprive him of a valuable equitable interest in a gold mine in said county [Buckingham] and to break up and destroy his business or trade of miner in said mine." The facts and circumstances of the alleged fraud and conspiracy are then set out in detail, and the declaration concludes with the charge that: "By reason of which conspiracy and fraud of said defendants against said plaintiff, and wicked devices in the execution thereof, said plaintiff has been injured in the destruction aforesaid of his business and deprivation of his said mineral rights in the sum of $8,000."

The demurrer to the declaration being overruled, issue was joined on the defendants' plea of not guilty, and upon this issue the jury rendered the following verdict: "We, the jury, upon the issue joined, find for the plaintiff and assess his damages for loss of services at five hundred dollars, and allow nothing for loss of interest in the mine." To the judgment upon this verdict this writ of error was awarded.

We are of opinion that the amended declaration set out, and with sufficient clearness, the plaintiff's cause of action, and that there was no error in overruling the demurrer thereto. In fact, the demurrer was not urged in the oral argument here.

It will be observed that upon the allegation of the declaration that the conspiracy and fraud of the defendants had deprived plaintiff of a valuable equitable interest in the Bondurant gold mine the jury found for the defendants, and on the other allegation, that the fraud charged had broken up and destroyed plaintiff's business or trade as a miner in said mine, the verdict is silent. There was no allegation in the declaration that plaintiff was deprived of the services of any one, or that he had been deprived of compensation for his own services, by any act or default of the defendants; and, had there been such an allegation, it would have rendered the declaration plainly demurrable, on the ground that the plaintiff was seeking to recover for a tort and in assumpsit in the same action. This cannot be done in any case. Therefore, as the verdict of the jury does not respond in plaintiff's favor to any allegation in his declaration, clearly it was error to enter judgment for him thereon. But, as we must remand the case for a new trial, it is necessary to consider other assignments of error relating to the introduction and refusal of evidence during the progress of the last trial.

It appears that during the cross-examination of the defendant Murray the plaintiff offered to introduce three letters, which it was claimed had been written by Murray to Moore, two in November, 1901, and one in August, 1902, to the introduction of which the defendants, by counsel, objected, on the ground that the letters were not pertinent to the inquiry before the jury and would tend to prejudice them against defendants. But the objection was overruled, and the letters were introduced in evidence, to which ruling the defendants excepted.

The court is of opinion that this exception is well taken. These letters formed a part of a correspondence between the plaintiff, Moore, and the defendant Murray, when these parties were endeavoring to make a false impression as to the value of the Bondurant gold mine property, in order to make sale of the stock of the company organized under the option they then held, and with which transactions or correspondence the defendant Anderson had no connection or interest. The letters indicate plainly that both the writer, Murray, and Moore, to whom they were addressed, were using very disreputable devices to make a success of the undertaking in which they were engaged at the time; but they tended to prove only collateral facts, not pertinent nor relevant to the matter in issue in this suit. It is true that large latitude is always given to the admission of evidence where the issue is fraud; as, where fraud in the sale or purchase of property is in issue, evidence of other frauds of like character, committed by the same parties at or near the same time, is admissible, its admissibility being placed upon the ground that, where transactions of similar character are executed by the same parties and closely connected in point of time, the inference is reasonable that they proceed from the same motive. Piedmont Bank v. Hatcher, 94 Va. 229, 28 S. E. 505, and authorities cited. But that is not the case here. The conditions were not such as to make the letters in question admissible as evidence against the defendant Murray, and it is inconceivable that they could have been introduced to the prejudice of the defendant Anderson under any conditions. Greenleaf on Ev. § 458; Trogdon's Case, 31 Grat. 862; Moore v. City of Richmond, 85 Va. 538, 8 S. E. 387.

The fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth assignments of error may be considered together.

It appears that, while the defendant Anderson was on cross-examination by plaintiff's counsel, he was asked if he had ever been found guilty of any other fraudulent transaction by decree of the court in which he was then testifying, to which he answered that he "never knew or heard of such charges." Whereupon, over the objection of counsel for the defendants, the plaintiff's counsel introduced in evidence certain parts only of the record in a chancery suit finally ended in the circuit court of Buckingham county several years before, in which a deed was attacked and set aside as being a fraudulent conveyance of property to different parties, among others, to a trustee to secure the payment of a debt of $500 due to Anderson; and after the said parts of the chancery record had been allowed to go to the jury the defendants offered to introduce as witnesses the attorneys who represented both parties in that suit, and who were then present in court, willing to testify that in the prosecution of the said chancery suit neither side considered that Anderson was guilty of any moral turpitude in connection with the transaction which was attacked, and that the charge against him was purely technical, so far as the charge of fraud was concerned; but the objection of the plaintiff to the introduction of said attorneys as witnesses was sustained.

We are of opinion that the error in the rulings of the circuit court in this connection is twofold. First, in no view of the proceedings in the chancery suit was the record therein or any part thereof relevant or pertinent to the issue being tried in this suit. The plaintiff, Moore, was neither a party nor a privy to any party to the chancery suit, and the introduction of that record or any part of it in this suit could only serve to draw away the minds of the jury from the point in issue, and to excite, prejudice, and mislead them. There are exceptional conditions under which evidence of that character might be admissible, but they did not exist in this case. Piedmont Bank v. Hatcher, supra; Bargamin v. Clarke, 20 Gr. 544.

Second, portions of the record in the ended chancery suit having gone to the jury, the purpose and effect of which was to attack Anderson's character and to prejudice the minds of the jury against him, it was unjust and unfair to the defendants to deny them the right to refute the attack by the introduction of witnesses who would testify to the bona fides of Anderson's conduct in the transaction dealt with in the chancery suit.

The ninth and tenth assignments of error relate to the giving, over the objection of the defendants, of certain instructions for the plaintiff, and the refusal to give others asked by the defendants, except as modified by the court.

With reference to these assignments, we consider it only necessary to say that we are further of opinion that the defendants were not prejudiced by the four instructions given at the instance of the plaintiff, nor by the giving of the one instruction in lieu of the two they asked. The instructions, as given, fairly submitted the question at issue to the jury, and could not have misled them to the defendants' injury.

The remaining assignment of error requiring consideration is to the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict of the jury as contrary to the law and the evidence.

It is only necessary to say, in addition to what has been said of the verdict, that if it is to be interpreted as meaning that the plaintiff was injured by being thrown out of employment, and damages awarded him for that reason, which would seem to be the only interpretation to be given their finding, the evidence utterly fails to sustain it. In fact, there is no evidence whatever of that character in the record, nor does the finding in favor of the plaintiff of damages for loss of services respond to any issue made in the pleadings.

The judgment of the circuit court will be reversed and annulled, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial, to be had in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

(104 Va. 716)

ELLIOTT v. ASHBY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

The Court of Appeals has jurisdiction on appeal of a suit involving defendant's liability on a stock subscription amounting to $1,000, though the judgment appealed from was for $140.

2. CORPORATIONS—SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—PROCEEDINGS BY RECEIVERS—DEFENSES.

Under Code 1904, p. 519, § 1103a, providing that all suits or motions for the recovery of unpaid subscriptions to the stock of joint-stock companies shall be brought in the courts of common law of the commonwealth, and they shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine all questions involving the validity of each subscription, but it shall not be construed to deprive the chancery courts of the power to settle the affairs of an insolvent corporation, on motion by a receiver of an insolvent corporation for judgment against a subscriber to its stock, defendant may make any defense involving the validity of his subscription.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

On motion by a receiver of an insolvent corporation for judgment against a subscriber to its stock, evidence by a stockholder, who solicited defendant's subscription, that before the charter was obtained defendant requested his name stricken from the subscription list and that defendant was not regarded as a stockholder, was sufficient to warrant a finding that defendant's subscription was not regarded either by himself or the company as binding.

Error to Corporation Court of Newport News.

Motion by C. A. Ashby, receiver of the Schulz Brewing Company, against J. W. Elliott, for judgment against him as a stockholder. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

A. C. Garrett, for plaintiff in error. Ashby & Read, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. A chancery suit was brought by Phipps against the Schulz Brewing Company and others, an insolvent corporation, for the payment of its debts, which resulted in an assessment of 14 per cent. upon the stock subscribed, and C. A. Ashby was appointed a receiver, with direction to bring an action at law in his own name against the several subscribers for that amount.

Acting under this order, the receiver gave notice of a motion for judgment against J. W. Elliott, which afterwards came on for trial in the corporation court of the city of Newport News, and a judgment was rendered against the defendant for $140. To this judgment a writ of error was awarded the defendant.

We are met by a motion to dismiss the writ of error for want of jurisdiction; defendant in error relying upon the proposition, which as a general rule is true, that the real matter in controversy is that for which the suit is brought and judgment is rendered, and not that which may or may not come in question—in other words, that the sole test of jurisdiction is the amount which the defendant may pay and thereby discharge himself, and, if that sum be less than the minimum jurisdiction of the court, the appeal or writ of error should be dismissed.

On behalf of the plaintiff in error it is urged that while the judgment before us is for $140, which could be satisfied by the payment of that sum, this suit involves the liability of plaintiff in error (defendant in the court below) upon a stock subscription amounting in the aggregate to $1,000, which was the real subject in controversy.

It is needless to consider what our view would be of the law, were the subject an open one in this court. In the case of Stuart v. Valley Railroad Co., 32 Grat. 146, it was held that, though the judgment against S. for the $300 and interest was less than $500, yet the subject in controversy was the validity of the subscription for five shares of stock (of the par value of $500), and the Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to hear the case. That case was decided at the September term, 1879; Judge Moncure delivering the opinion. Since that time the laws of the state have been codified, and two of the judges who were then upon the court were upon the commission charged with that duty, and the statute upon the subject was re-enacted in totidem verbis. More than that, since that time a new Constitution has been adopted, which has retained, so far as it affects this case, the language of the preceding Constitution, which was the law when Stuart v. Railroad Co. was decided. The jurisdictional sum, it is true, was diminished from $500 to $300, but in no other respect was it changed.

We have, then, a judgment of this court, which has remained unquestioned as the law of this state for more than a quarter of a century, construing a provision of the Constitution and a statute passed in pursuance thereof, and the construction placed upon them has not only been unchallenged, but must be taken as having been approved by the adoption of the identical language in the Code and the Constitution.

Defendant in error also insists that plaintiff in error could not question in the court of law the fact that he had subscribed to and become a stockholder in the Schulz Brewing Company, but that he would be confined to defenses in the nature of confession and avoidance; that is to say, which admit that he had subscribed as a stockholder, but that by reason of fraud or misrepresentation he should not be bound by his contract of subscription—and in support of this proposition cites Reed v. Gold, 102 Va. 37, 45 S. E. 868, where it is said: "When the proportion which each delinquent shareholder is to pay has been ascertained, the receiver is directed to institute suit against him at law, upon his refusal to pay it, and in that suit the stockholder may make any defense which involves the validity of his subscription; but we do not understand that it authorizes the court of law to rehear and to review matters which are necessarily adjudicated in the court of chancery."

The statute which was there being construed now appears as section 1103a, p. 519 of Va. Code 1904:

"All suits or motions for the recovery of unpaid subscriptions to the stock of any joint stock company shall be brought in the courts of common law of this commonwealth in the county or corporation where the defendant resides, if he be a resident of this state, or in the case of a joint or partnership subscription then in the county or corporation in this state in which either of the joint subscribers or any member of the partnership subscribing shall reside; and said courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions involving the validity of such subscriptions, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive courts of chancery of their jurisdiction to settle and wind up the affairs of insolvent corporations or to make assessments on unpaid stock subscriptions."

That section, on its face, applies to questions which are to be heard and determined in the chancery courts. For instance, the chancery court ascertains the indebtedness of the corporation, the amount necessary for its liquidation, the percentage which is to be paid by each stockholder, and appoints a receiver to enforce its decree. But the statute in unmistakable terms declares that the courts of law shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions involving the validity of such subscriptions; and the quotation from Reed v. Gold, supra, conforms strictly to the terms of the statute.

As a matter of course, all who appear to be stockholders must be brought before the chancery court, and it proceeds upon the assumption that all who appear to have subscribed to stock are bound for its payment; otherwise, it would be impossible for it to ascertain what amount should be collected from each. But the object of the statute was to take away from courts of chancery the power to fix the liability of the stockholder, and to transfer all questions affecting the validity of the subscription for inquiry and adjudication in the courts of common law.

Upon the trial, after the plaintiff had introduced evidence to prove the subscription list upon which the company was organized, and that plaintiff in error had signed his name thereto, subscribing to 10 shares of stock, of the par value of $100 each, and that the company had been duly organized, its indebtedness, the institution of the chancery suit to wind up its affairs, the appointment of a receiver with direction to collect 14 per cent. of the par value of the stock of each subscriber—in other words, had made out a prima facie case—the defendant introduced a witness who testified that he was a stockholder in the company; that together with one Newkirch they called upon the defendant Elliott, explained to him the plans of the company, and induced him to subscribe for ten shares of the stock; that when the charter was obtained Newkirch was named as secretary and treasurer; that within from three to five days after his subscription, and at least six days before the charter of the company was obtained, Elliott phoned to him that he had decided to take his name off the list; that he told Mr. Elliott to write him a letter to that effect, which he said he would do, and did do, which letter is as follows:

"J. W. Rollison, Esq., City—Dear Sir: A few days since, upon your solicitation, I subscribed ten shares to the capital stock of a company to be organized and chartered and to be known as the Leon Schulz Brewing Company. For certain reasons, which appear to my mind good and sufficient, I now desire to rescind my action in this matter, and request you to erase my name from said subscription papers, and fully cancel my said subscription. Yours truly, J. W. Elliott."

Witness further testified that he never saw the subscription list after that time; that if he had gotten hold of it he would have erased Mr. Elliott's name therefrom, as he felt in honor bound so to do; that he asked Mr. Newkirch to erase Mr. Elliott's name, and Mr. Newkirch promised to do so; that he did not know whether the same had been done or not until he saw the subscription list at the time of the chancery suit; that as far as he knew Mr. Elliott was never considered by the stockholders of the company as a subscriber; and then, being asked by counsel for defendant what he meant by "as far as he knew," said, "Well, that the secretary was notified to strike his name off;" that he understood that Mr. Elliott was not regarded as a stockholder, and that Mr. Elliott did not regard himself as a stockholder; that he did not know whether the charter was granted upon the subscription list in evidence or not.

It does not appear that Mr. Elliott ever acted as a stockholder, or participated in any way in the affairs of the company. There was evidence of other stockholders that they understood that Mr. Elliott was a stockholder and regarded him as such.

This being the testimony, the defendant in error (plaintiff in the court below) demurred to the evidence, and the jury found the following verdict: "We, the jury, find for the defendant, subject to the court's opinion upon the demurrer to the evidence; and if upon such demurrer to the evidence the court finds for the plaintiff, then we find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at $140.00." Upon this verdict the court rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

It is unnecessary to discuss the statute which controls in such cases, as it has been so frequently discussed and enforced as to be familiar to all.

In Stuart v. Valley Railroad Co., supra, it is held that, though a contract of subscription to the stock of a company can be released only by the stockholders or by the board of directors duly authorized to do so by the stockholders, "yet such release can be proved, not only by the records of the company, but also by other evidence showing that such subscription was in fact not regarded by the company as binding upon it, and that the subscriber was not regarded by himself or by the company as a stockholder thereof."

Tested by this principle, we are of opinion that the judgment upon the demurrer should have been for the plaintiff in error. The testimony of Rollison was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that Mr. Elliott's subscription was not regarded, either by himself or by the company, as binding upon him.

The judgment of the corporation court must be reversed, and this court will enter such judgment as it should have rendered.

(104 Va. 723)

HAGAN v. CITY OF RICHMOND.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. NAVIGABLE WATERS—REMOVAL OF OBSTRUCTIONS—FEDERAL POWERS.

Act. Cong. March 3, 1890, c. 425, § 19, 30 Stat. 1154 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3546], relating to rivers and harbors, and authorizing the Secretary of War at his discretion to remove obstructions from the navigable waters of the United States, did not invest the Secretary of War with exclusive jurisdiction of the removal of obstructions, but was intended to clothe him with discretionary power, which he might exert or leave to the enforcement of the local authorities; and, if he fails or declines to act, the local authorities may protect their domestic commerce by keeping navigable waters in their jurisdiction unobstructed.

2. SAME—EXPENSE OF REMOVAL—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

Act Cong. March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 19, 30 Stat. 1154 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3546], relating to the removal of obstructions from navigable waters, and limiting the liability of the owners of vessels without personal negligence, are paramount; and Code, § 2011, as amended by Acts 1889-90, p. 624, c. 371 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1022], and Richmond City Ordinances, c. 77, § 8, declaring that the board of harbor commissioners and the committee on improvements of James river shall remove any wreck injurious to the harbor at the owner's expense, are invalid, unless the obstruction occurs with the privity or knowledge of the owner.

Error to Circuit Court of City of Richmond.

Action by the city of Richmond against Peter Hagan. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

The facts of this case, which are undisputed, and the sections of the Code and charter and ordinances of the city of Richmond relied on to sustain the demand asserted by the city against the plaintiff in error, are set out in the opinion of the judge of the circuit court as follows:

"It appears from the facts developed in this case that defendant's barge, John Hagan, loaded with coal, from Philadelphia, Pa., to Richmond, Va., when nearing Richmond struck a rock, filled with water, and, before it could reach the wharf, sunk in the harbor of Richmond on July 3, 1898, thereby obstructing navigation; that in the same month the council committee of the city of Richmond took the matter up with the owner, Peter Hagan, and endeavored to have him remove the wreck.

"The various proceedings of this committee, the correspondence, and the resolutions adopted are in evidence. It appears therefrom that this sunken barge was a serious menace to navigation as it lay in the harbor; that after it had been there several months, the house on top of it was washed away, and there was nothing to mark it. More than a year elapsed, during which demand after demand was made by the city upon Hagan to remove it, but he still delayed. Then it was that the city took final action, and had the barge blown up and removed from the harbor, at a cost of $442.75, which sum was demanded from Hagan, but he refused payment. The city instituted this action in October, 1899, to recover the amount expended.

"The whole question of law and fact, a jury having been waived, was submitted to the court.

"The city, to support its action, introduced sections 2011 (as amended by acts 1889-90, p. 624, c. 371), 2012, 2013, and 2014 of Code 1887 [Va. Code 1904, pp. 1022, 1023], section 19, subsec. 6, of the charter of the city of Richmond and chapter 77, § 8, of the City Ordinances.

"Sec. 2011. They [the board of harbor commissioners of Norfolk and Portsmouth] shall have authority to cause the removal of any wharf, dock, wreck, or other obstruction to navigation, or that may, in their opinion, be injurious to the harbor or that may cause shoaling at any point in the channel of said river, its branches or tributaries, at the expense of the owner or party causing the obstruction; provided, the rights of any owner of a wharf whose lines have been heretofore fixed by authority of law shall in no way be disturbed.

"Sec. 2012. The said board, if in their judgment expedient, may employ the services of a competent engineer at any time, who may make a survey of any waters lying within their jurisdiction, and perform such other duties as the board may require of him.

"Sec. 2013. When any dredging is done in any of the waters aforesaid, the board shall have power to designate the places at which the dredging material shall be dumped.

"Sec. 2014. The said board shall have power to make and enforce such rules and regulations for the preservation of the harbor, its police government, and the better use of the wharf, mooring, and other facilities thereof, as they may from time to time deem proper."

"Section 19, subsec. 6, of the city charter: "The city council shall have power to make such ordinances, by-laws, orders, and regulations as they may deem desirable to carry out the following powers, which are hereby vested in them: To establish, construct, and keep in order, alter or remove, landings, wharves, and docks on lands belonging to the city; and to lay and collect a reasonable duty on vessels coming to and using the same, and to regulate the manner of using other wharves and landings within the corporate limits; to prevent or remove all obstructions in and upon any landings, wharves, or docks. They may also appoint port-wardens for the port of said city, who shall exercise such powers as the council may give them up to the port-warden's lines, as they may be established from time to time by the United States government, and fix their fees and compensation. The said city shall have power to improve and keep in good, safe, and navigable condition the harbor of James river within the corporate limits. The city council of said city shall have all the powers set forth in sections two thousand and eleven, two thousand and thirteen, and two thousand and fourteen of the Code of Virginia, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, which powers it may delegate to some proper committee of persons satisfactory to said council."

"Chap. 77, § 8, of the City Ordinances: "The committee on improvement of James river shall have power to fix lines along said harbor within which riparian owners may erect wharves, docks and proper structures and fixtures for commercial and manufacturing purposes.

"They shall have authority to cause the removal of any wharf, dock, wreck, or other obstructions to navigation, or that may, in their opinion, be injurious to the harbor, or that may cause shoaling of said harbor, its branches or tributaries, at the expense of the owners or the party causing the obstruction; provided, the rights of any owner of a wharf whose lines have been heretofore fixed by authority of law shall in no way be disturbed."

"Also, witnesses were introduced to prove the various steps taken by the city in order to have the sunken barge removed.

"It was admitted that the harbor of Richmond was within the corporate limits, and that the James river was wholly within the confines of the state of Virginia.

"The city proved that the sum expended, and for which it brought its action, was a reasonable and necessary expenditure for the public benefit, in order to keep the harbor open for navigation; and, further, that every possible opportunity was given to Hagan to remove the barge before action was taken, even waiting for more than a year, and it only acted in the face of the advance of fall and winter, when navigation would be rendered more dangerous."

The plaintiff in error, Hagan, on the other hand, rests his defense upon the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States (article 1, § 8, cl. 3), section 19 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1899—the River and Harbor Bill—(30 Stat. 1154, c. 425 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3546]), and the limited liability act, section 4283, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2943].

John A. Lamb, Hamilton Rogers, and Ro. H. Talley, for plaintiff in error. H. R. Pollard, City Atty., for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. Two questions are submitted upon this writ of error for our determination:

1. It is insisted on behalf of the plaintiff in error, that section 19 of the river and harbor bill (Act March 3, 1899, c. 425, 30 Stat. 1154 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3546]), was intended to invest the Secretary of War with exclusive jurisdiction in the matter of removal of obstructions contemplated by the statute from the navigable waters of the United States.

The section is as follows: "That whenever the navigation of any river, lake, harbor, sound, bay, canal, or other navigable waters of the United States shall be obstructed or endangered by any sunken vessel, boat, watercraft, raft, or other similar obstruction, and such obstruction has existed for a longer period than thirty days, or whenever the abandonment of such obstruction can be legally established in a less space of time, the sunken vessel, boat, water craft, raft, or other obstruction shall be subject to be broken up, removed, sold or otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of War at his discretion, without liability for any damage to the owners of the same. Provided, that in his discretion, the Secretary of War may cause reasonable notice of such obstruction of not less than thirty days, unless the legal abandonment of the obstruction can be established in a less time, to be given by publication, addressed 'To Whom It May Concern,' in a newspaper published nearest to the locality of the obstruction, requiring the removal thereof; and provided also, that the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, at or after the time of giving such notice, cause sealed proposals to be solicited by public advertisement, giving reasonable notice of not less than ten days, for the removal of such obstruction as soon as possible after the expiration of the above specified thirty days' notice, in case it has not in the meantime been so removed, these proposals and contracts, at his discretion, to be conditioned that such vessel, boat, water craft, raft, or other obstruction, and all cargo and property contained therein, shall become the property of the contractor, and the contract shall be awarded to the bidder making the proposition most advantageous to the United States. Provided, that such bidder shall give satisfactory security to execute the work. Provided, further, that any money received from the sale of any such wreck, or from any contractor for the removal of wrecks, under this paragraph, shall be covered into the treasury of the United States."

It must be allowed that, in the absence of legislation on the subject by Congress, it would be within the competency of the several states, in the interest of their citizens and the reasonable exercise of their police power, to remove obstructions from rivers and harbors and other navigable waters of the United States wholly within their limits. If it were true, as contended, that the mere fact that Congress had legislated on the subject divested the states of all jurisdiction in the premises, it would deprive them of many conceded rights, as to which they exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the United States.

The paramount authority of Congress to assume such absolute and exclusive control over the navigable waters of the United States may be conceded. But it is plain from an examination of section 19 that it has not chosen to exercise that power in the present instance. If it had been the design of Congress to deprive the states of the important and essential right to police the rivers and harbors within their respective limits, it is inconceivable that it would have declared that purpose in language of doubtful import. There is nothing in the phraseology of the section to warrant that construction; but, on the contrary, the object of the enactment was evidently intended to clothe the Secretary of War with large discretionary powers, which he might exert or leave to the enforcement of local authorities, as his judgment might dictate. The object of the legislation is to keep the navigable waters of the United States clear and unobstructed, and supplemental legislation on the part of the states in furtherance of that design is in aid of commerce, and, where not in conflict with any system adopted by Congress, is universally upheld. The states have no control over the discretion of the Secretary of War, and, if he should fail or decline to act in a given case, it would be most unreasonable to hold that the local authorities are powerless to protect their domestic commerce by keeping navigable waters wholly within their respective limits unobstructed.

The correspondence between an officer of the War Department and the city engineer shows that he so interpreted the act of Congress, because, while he states that an appropriation had been made for the purpose, and he had been authorized to remove the wreck, he interposed no objection to the city authorities removing it, and pointed out the best method to accomplish it.

But we find abundant authority to sustain the concurrent jurisdiction of the federal and state governments in this class of cases.

The doctrine is thus stated by Ray in his work on Negligence of Imposed Duties, at pages 483, 484: "So long as the state legislation is not in conflict with any law passed by Congress in pursuance of its powers, and is merely intended, and operates, in fact, to aid commerce, and to expedite instead of hindering the safe transportation of persons and commodities from one commonwealth to another, it is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and will be enforced either as supplementary to partial federal statutes relating to the same subject, or in lieu of such legislation, where Congress has not exercised its power at all."

In Sutherland's Notes on the United States Constitution (Ed. 1904) pp. 102-104, it is said: "The states have concurrent powers with Congress in matters which are local in their operation, or which are mere aids to commerce, or which relate to rights, duties, and liabilities of citizens, although indirectly and remotely affecting operations of commerce, e. g., the regulation of wharves, the establishment of buoys and beacons, the improvement of harbors. * * * When, however, Congress has acted with relation to such matters as these, state laws in conflict with congressional action are void, and, while the commerce clause does not comprehend internal domestic commerce, the power enters the interior of every state whenever the interests of foreign or interstate commerce require."

Again, it is said in Ray on Negligence of Imposed Duties, at page 496: "Within the second class of cases (that is, of what might be termed concurrent jurisdiction) are embraced laws for the regulation of pilots, quarantine and inspection laws, and the policing of harbors, the improvement of navigable channels, the regulation of wharves, piers, and docks, the construction of dams and bridges across navigable waters, and the establishment of ferries."

The concurrent jurisdiction of the United States and of the several states in supplying local aids and instrumentalities in respect to commerce is fully recognized in the opinion of Chief Justice Taney in the case of The James Gray v. The John Fraser, 21 How. 184, 16 L. Ed. 106, where it was held that an ordinance of the city of Charleston prescribing what part of the harbor a vessel should occupy, how long she might remain in port, the character of lights she should display at night, and other similar regulations, was not in conflict with the act of Congress regulating commerce and the general admiralty jurisdiction conferred on the United States courts, and is valid.

In Faust v. City of Cleveland (Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit), 121 Fed. 810, 58 C. C. A. 194, it was said: "The river Cuyahoga is a navigable river, and, as such, is subject to the control of Congress, and to its regulations and general supervision. But the interest of the state in its own domestic commerce is such that the regulation of Congress is not necessarily exclusive of all control or authority by the state. It has therefore been held that legislation by the state for the purpose of aiding commerce by the improvement of such streams, by providing for the deepening of the channels or the removal of obstructions, does not encroach upon the power of Congress, if not in conflict with any system for their improvement provided by Congress"—citing Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238, in which case Mr. Justice Field, in an able and exhaustive opinion, sustained the validity of an act of the Legislature of Alabama providing for the improvement of the river, bay, and harbor of Mobile, as not conflicting with the power of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

In the case of Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. State of Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702, Mr. Justice Harlan observes that the decisions of that court recognize "the fundamental principle that outside of the field directly occupied by the general government, under the powers granted to it by the Constitution, all questions arising within a state that relate to its internal order, or that involve the public convenience or the general good, are primarily for the determination of the state, and that its legislative enactments relating to these subjects, and which are not inconsistent with the state Constitution, are to be respected and enforced by the courts of the Union, if they do not, by their operation, directly trench upon the authority of the United States, or violate some right protected by the national Constitution. The power here referred to is, to use the words of Chief Justice Shaw, the power to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth and of the subjects of the same"—citing Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 85.

Postal Tel. Co. v. Umstadter, 103 Va. 742, 50 S. E. 259, is one of a line of cases in this court to the effect that, although a state statute may incidentally affect interstate commerce, it is not necessarily an obstruction, but may be in aid of commerce, and a valid exercise of the police power of the state. The principle is illustrated by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which sustain the validity of state legislation of the character involved in the first branch of our inquiry. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 196, 6 L. Ed. 23; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 446, 6 L. Ed. 678; Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 243, 16 L. Ed. 243; Railway Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 560, 21 L. Ed. 710; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 630, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257; Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co. v. State of Ohio, 165 U. S. 365, 368, 17 Sup. Ct. 357, 41 L. Ed. 747; Missouri, etc., Ry. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 618, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878; Cummings v. Chicago, 188 U. S. 410, 428, 23 Sup. Ct. 472, 47 L. Ed. 525; Montgomery v. Portland, 190 U. S. 89, 106, 23 Sup. Ct. 735, 47 L. Ed. 965.

2. The second contention of plaintiff in error is that the circuit court erred in rendering a personal judgment against him for the expense incurred by the city in blowing up and removing the sunken barge John Hagan from its harbor.

In that connection it is insisted that section 19 of the river and harbor bill (Act March 3, 1899, c. 425, 30 Stat. 1154 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3546]), and section 4283 of the Revised Statutes of the United States [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2943], provide that there shall be no personal liability upon the owner of a vessel in a case such as we are considering.

The latter section reads: "The liability of the owner or owners of any ship or vessel, for any embezzlement, loss or destruction by the master, officers, passengers, or any other person or persons, of any property, goods, or merchandise, shipped or put on board of such ship or vessel, or for any loss, damage or injury by collision, or for any act, matter or thing, loss, damage, or forfeiture, done, occasioned, or incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner or owners, respectively, in such ship or vessel, and her freight then pending."

This limited liability act is said to be the outgrowth of modern maritime law and codes. The first act of Congress on the subject was passed March 3, 1851, and in the case of Norwich & N. Y. Trans. Co. v. Wright, 13 Wall. 104, 20 L. Ed. 585, the policy of the legislation is explained by Mr. Justice Bradley as follows: "The great object of the law was to encourage shipbuilding, and to induce capitalists to invest money in this branch of industry. Unless they can be induced to do so, the shipping interests of the country must flag and decline. Those who are willing to manage and work ships are generally unable to build and fit them. They have plenty of hardiness and personal daring and enterprise, but they have little capital. On the other hand, those who have capital, and invest it in ships, incur a very large risk in exposing their property to the hazards of the sea, and to the management of seafaring men, without making them liable for additional losses and damage to an indefinite amount. How many enterprises in mining, manufacturing, and internal improvements would be utterly impracticable if capitalists were not encouraged to invest in them through corporate institutions, by which they are exempt from personal liability, or from liability except to a limited extent? The public interests require the investment of capital in shipbuilding quite as much as in any of these enterprises. And if there exist good reasons for exempting innocent shipowners from liability, beyond the amount of their interest, for loss or damage to goods carried in their vessels, precisely the same reasons exist for exempting them to the same extent from personal liability in cases of collision. In the one case, as in the other, their property is in the hands of agents whom they are obliged to employ."

We think it quite clear, in light of the foregoing exposition of the limited liability act, that where a vessel is lost without the privity or knowledge of the owner, he is only liable to the extent of his interest in the vessel, and cannot be held personally responsible for expense incurred by local authorities in removing the wrecked vessel from their harbor. Hughes on Admiralty, p. 321.

As remarked, that is also the measure of liability fixed by section 19 of the United States river and harbor bill, supra, and it follows from the authorities cited that, inasmuch as Congress has outlined a definite policy, limiting the liability of owners of ships and vessels lost without personal negligence on their part, its enactments are paramount, and section 2011 of the Code, as amended by Acts 1889-90, p. 624, c. 371 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1022], and section 8 of chapter 77 of the Ordinances of the City of Richmond, in so far as they declare that the board of harbor commissioners and the committee on improvements of James river shall have authority to cause the removal of any wreck which in their opinion is injurious to the harbor, "at the expense of the owner," are in conflict with that policy and are invalid, unless the obstruction occurs with the privity or knowledge of such owner, are in conflict with that policy and invalid.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the circuit court erred in rendering a personal judgment against the plaintiff in error in this instance, and for that error its judgment must be reversed.

(104 Va. 683)

STANDARD OIL CO. v. COMMON-WEALTH.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. CORPORATIONS—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS — IMPOSITION OF FEE FOR TRANSACTING BUSINESS IN STATE—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Revenue Law, § 37 (Va. Code 1904, p. 2214), imposing on a foreign corporation authorized to exercise the powers of a transportation company a prescribed fee, on its obtaining a certificate of authority to do business in the state, requires a foreign corporation authorized to exercise the powers of a public service corporation to pay the fee in order to carry on any business in the state, though it does not intend to carry on the business of a public service corporation, and though it cannot carry on such business under Const. art. 12, § 163 (Va. Code 1904, p. cclx), prohibiting foreign corporations from exercising the powers of a public service corporation; the test of a foreign corporation's liability for the fee imposed being whether its charter authorizes it to carry on that business.

2. SAME.

A foreign corporation, included in the class designated by Revenue Law, § 37 (Va. Code 1904, p. 2214), imposing a fee on foreign corporations authorized to exercise the powers of a transportation company before obtaining authority to do business in the state, does not belong to the class of corporations named in section 38, imposing a prescribed fee on foreign corporations in order to obtain authority to do business in the state; for it by its express terms excludes corporations included in section 37.

3. SAME.

The rule that, in case of doubt as to the validity of a tax, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the citizen, has no application to the construction of a statute imposing a fee on a foreign corporation as a condition precedent to its obtaining the right to transact business in the state.

Keith, P., and Cardwell, J., dissenting.

Error to State Corporation Commission.

Action by the commonwealth against the Standard Oil Company. Judgment imposing a fine on defendant, and it brings error. Affirmed.

Christian & Christian, for plaintiff in error. Wm. A. Anderson, Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

HARRISON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the State Corporation Commission, imposing a fine of $10 and costs, under section 1105 of the Code of 1904, as amended by the act of May 15, 1903 (Acts 1902-04, p. 360, c. 242), upon the Standard Oil Company for the alleged offense of transacting business within the state of Virginia without having first obtained from the Corporation Commission the certificate of authority required by law.

It appears from the record that the Standard Oil Company is a foreign corporation, created and organized under the laws of New Jersey, with an authorized capital stock of $110,000,000. It further appears that the appellant company is authorized by its charter to exercise some of the franchises and powers of a public service corporation.

The solution of the present controversy involves a construction of section 37 of the revenue law of Virginia (Va. Code 1904, p. 2214), which provides as follows: "Every domestic corporation authorized by its charter to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company, or to own, lease, construct, maintain and operate a public service line or road of any kind, upon the granting or extension of its charter, and every foreign corporation authorized by its charter to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company, or to own, lease, construct, maintain and operate a public service line or road of any kind, when it obtains from the State Corporation Commission a certificate of authority to do business in this state, shall pay a fee into the treasury of the state of Virginia to be ascertained and fixed as follows." Then follows a table of the fees to be paid, graded according to the maximum capital stock authorized by the terms of the charter.

According to this table, the fee for the appellant company, having a maximum authorized capital of $110,000,000, is fixed at $5,000.

It will not be denied that a state has unlimited power in the matter of prescribing the terms and conditions upon which a foreign corporation shall be permitted to do business within her limits, and that if she chooses such corporations can be excluded entirely. Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Lafayette Insurance Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357; Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. Ed. 972. Therefore the sole question to be determined in this case is, what are the terms and conditions upon which the appellant corporation is permitted to do business in this state?

These are prescribed by section 37 of the revenue law as follows: "Every foreign corporation authorized by its charter to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company, etc., when it obtains from the State Corporation Commission a certificate of authority to do business in this state, shall pay a fee into the treasury of the state of Virginia to be ascertained and fixed as follows."

It is clear from this language that a foreign corporation which is authorized by its charter to do the business of a public service corporation must, in order to carry on business of any kind in this state, obtain from the State

*Rehearing denied.

Corporation Commission a certificate of authority to do such business, and pay into the state treasury the fee prescribed for such certificate; the test of its liability for such fee being, not whether it can or intends to carry on the business of a public service corporation, but whether its charter authorizes it to carry on that business. No matter which of the numerous businesses authorized by its charter it may be carrying on or proposing to conduct in Virginia, if it is authorized by its charter to carry on the business of a public service corporation, her condition is that the fee prescribed by the section mentioned shall be paid into her treasury.

It is insisted on behalf of the appellant company that the language of section 37 of the revenue law, "to do business in this state," has reference only to doing the business of a public service corporation; that, if appellant was asking for authority to carry on the business of a public service corporation, it would be liable for the fee imposed by section 37, because it is "the business in this state" which is contemplated to be done, or possible for the corporation to do, for which the "certificate of authority" is issued and the fee "ascertained and fixed"; that inasmuch as appellant cannot carry on the business of a public service corporation in Virginia, by reason of the inhibition of section 163, art. 12, of her Constitution (Va. Code 1904, p. cclix), therefore it follows that the Corporation Commission could not have granted it authority to exercise any such powers; that it never could have been the intention of the Legislature of the state to tax the petitioner on a business which it did not ask the privilege of doing, and which the Legislature could not empower it to carry on in the state.

The object of this revenue law was not, in our opinion, to confer upon foreign corporations authority to exercise any particular power granted by their respective charters. The language of section 37 was employed as a means of designating and classifying certain foreign corporations, and fixing the rate of fee that should be paid by such corporations for the certificate of authority to carry on any business in Virginia. The intent of the statute is that corporations, whether created under the laws of Virginia, or coming into the state as foreign corporations, having under their charters extensive powers in connection with the operation of transportation and transmission companies, shall pay a larger fee than ordinary industrial companies. The Legislature might well have enacted that a foreign corporation having powers of this character in its charter should be required to pay more than one not having such powers, although these powers could be exercised in some other state or states, but not in Virginia.

Giving the language of section 37 its literal and natural interpretation, it seems plain that the fee prescribed had no relation or reference to the character or the amount of business to be transacted by the foreign corporation in this state, but was ascertained and determined, first, by the character of the chartered powers of the corporation in the state of its domicile, and, second, by the maximum amount of its authorized capital. The fact that a foreign company possessed, among others, the great powers of a public service corporation, was doubtless regarded by the Legislature as sufficient evidence of its capacity and importance as a business enterprise, no matter what business it might conduct, to justify its being placed in a higher class than its less pretentious neighbors.

Whether the criterion adopted be arbitrary or not, it is a method of determining the fee to be paid which the General Assembly chose to adopt and had the right to prescribe.

Nor did the business to be carried on by the foreign corporation in this state have any bearing upon the question whether a particular corporation was embraced within the class of corporations mentioned in section 37. That question was to be determined solely by the inquiry whether such corporation had, by virtue of its charter, the powers of a public service corporation. If it had those powers, then it belonged to the class and came within the terms of section 37 and must pay the fee there prescribed.

It is further contended that appellant belongs to the class of corporations named in section 38 of the revenue law, and therefore is only liable to pay a fee of $600, as prescribed by that section.

It is only necessary to say that, appellant being, as we have held, included in the class designated by section 37, it is, by the express terms of section 38, excluded from that class of corporations there referred to; the language of section 38 being that every foreign corporation other than such as are described in the last preceding section (37) shall pay, etc.

It is suggested that, in case of doubt as to the validity of a tax, the doubt should be solved in favor of the citizen. We recognize the soundness of this principle when applied to the state and her citizens; but it has, we think, no application to this case, where the party complaining is not a citizen of Virginia, but a foreign corporation, merely asking for the privilege of doing business in this state. We have, however, no doubt of the correctness of the construction placed upon section 37 by the State Corporation Commission. If we entertained doubt merely, our hesitation would have to be solved in favor of the state, as the Constitution requires us to regard the action of the Corporation Commission as prima facie correct. Const. art. 12, § 156, cl. "f" (Va. Code 1904, p. cciv).

For these reasons, the judgment complained of must be affirmed.

KEITH, P. (dissenting). I am unable to agree with the view expressed by the court, and deem the question involved of sufficient interest to justify me in filing a dissenting opinion.

As the two cases (Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth and American Can Co. v. Same) are identical, I shall refer only to the Standard Oil Company.

This is a corporation chartered under the laws of the state of New Jersey, which has very varied and extensive privileges. It appears that by its charter it is authorized to exercise the powers of what is known in the laws of this state as a public service corporation. It further appears, however, that it has not, either in this state or elsewhere, exercised such powers; and the question for consideration is whether it is taxable as a public service corporation, or whether it is taxable under another section of the statute and liable to the payment of a less fee for the exercise of such business as it is actually engaged in within the limits of the state of Virginia.

Section 37 of the revenue law of the state (Va. Code 1904, p. 2214) is as follows: "Every domestic corporation authorized by its charter to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company, or to own, lease, construct, maintain and operate a public service line or road of any kind, upon the granting or extension of its charter, and every foreign corporation authorized by its charter to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company, or to own, lease, construct, maintain and operate a public service line or road of any kind, when it obtains from the State Corporation Commission a certificate of authority to do business in this state, shall pay a fee into the treasury of the state of Virginia, to be ascertained and fixed as follows." Then follows a table fixing the fee in each case according to the maximum capital authorized, and according to which table the fee to be paid by the Standard Oil Company would be $5,000.

By section 38 of the revenue law it is provided that "every domestic corporation, other than such as are described in the last preceding section, upon the granting or extension of its charter, and every foreign corporation, other than such as are described in the last preceding section, when it obtains from the State Corporation Commission a certificate of authority to do business in this state, shall pay a fee into the treasury of the state of Virginia, to be ascertained and fixed as follows." Then follows a table fixing these fees, which would make the tax on the Standard Oil Company $600, which amount has already been paid into the treasury of the state.

By section 163, art. 12, of the Constitution of the state (Va. Code 1904, p. cclx), it is provided that "no foreign corporation shall be authorized to carry on in this state the business, or to exercise any of the powers or franchises of a public service corporation, or be permitted to do anything which domestic corporations are prohibited from doing, or be relieved from compliance with any of the requirements made of similar domestic corporations by the Constitution and laws of this state where the same can be made applicable to such foreign corporation without discriminating against it. But this section shall not affect any public service corporation whose line or route extends across the boundary of this commonwealth, nor prevent any foreign corporation from continuing any such lawful business as it may be engaged in in this state when this Constitution goes into effect. But any such foreign public service corporation so engaged shall not, without first becoming incorporated under the laws of this state, be authorized to acquire, lease, use or operate within this state any public or municipal franchise or franchises in addition to such as it may own, lease, use or operate when this Constitution goes into effect."

The contention on the part of the commonwealth is that the Standard Oil Company is within the letter of section 37, which imposes a fee upon every foreign corporation authorized by its charter to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company; that these words are descriptive of a class upon which the higher rate of fee, or taxation (by whichever term it may be called), is to be imposed; that inasmuch as the Standard Oil Company is, by its charter, authorized to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company, it is taxable as such, though it is conceded that it has never exercised, and that by section 163 of the Constitution, which has been quoted, it is prohibited from exercising, any such powers.

To me it seems plain that to adopt this construction is, with all respect to the majority of the court, to "stick in the bark"; that the section is to be read as a whole, and not in disjointed parts; and that the language relied upon to justify the imposition of the fee which has been demanded is qualified by that which follows, to wit, "when it obtains from the State Corporation Commission a certificate of authority to do business in this state, shall pay a fee into the treasury of the state of Virginia, to be ascertained and fixed as follows."

It is inconceivable to me that the state of Virginia is to be put in the attitude of exacting a fee for "a certificate of authority to do business in this state," when by the terms of its own organic law it has solemnly declared that "no foreign corporation shall be authorized to carry on in this state the business, or to exercise any of the powers or franchises of a public service corporation," unless it comes within the exceptions to section 163 of the Constitution, which it is not pretended is the case here.

But it is said that, unless the effect attributed by the opinion of the court to this section be the true one, the language of the act, which imposes a tax upon every foreign corporation authorized by its charter to exercise the powers of a transportation or transmission company, would be inoperative; but that I apprehend not to be the case. There are foreign corporations, authorized to carry on the business of public service corporations in this state, which are liable to the payment of the fees prescribed by section 37, because they come within that clause of section 163 of the Constitution which provides that "this section shall not affect any public service corporation whose line or route extends across the boundary of this commonwealth, nor prevent any foreign corporation from continuing any such lawful business as it may be engaged in in this state when this Constitution goes into effect." To illustrate, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company could with propriety be assessed under section 37 of the law.

The Standard Oil Company, not having been engaged, either before or since the adoption of the Constitution, in the business of a public service corporation within this state, will not be allowed, under section 163 of the Constitution, to do such business, unless it goes before the State Corporation Commission and becomes incorporated under the laws of this state; and such a charter having been granted constitutes it a domestic corporation, and it would, of course, be entitled to exercise all the powers and functions conferred by its charter, including those of a public service corporation, and would then be within the terms of section 37, and be properly charged with the fees which it prescribes.

It is not contemplated by the law that this extraordinary fee under section 37 shall be levied but once. Having been once levied and paid, the law with respect to the corporation so paying it is satisfied. But if, under the view of the law presented by the majority opinion, the Standard Oil Company be required to pay a fee under section 37 in order to obtain a certificate of authority to do business in this state, it will be prohibited by the Constitution from doing the very business upon the basis of which the fee is charged, and, if it should then come forward and ask to have issued to it a domestic charter, would come squarely within the terms of section 37, and be required to pay the fee a second time.

It is axiomatic that before an imposition by the government can be enforced upon the citizen, the will of the sovereign which imposes the burden must be clearly and exactly declared. It has been said that in such a case to doubt is to deny the authority, and it does seem to me that, if the construction of the majority of the court is what was intended by the Legislature, it should have been clothed in less ambiguous terms.

CARDWELL, J., concurs.

(104 Va. 633)

AMERICAN CAN CO. v. COMMON-WEALTH.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

Error to State Corporation Commission.

Action by the commonwealth against the American Can Company. Judgment for the commonwealth, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Christian & Christian, for appellant. Wm. A. Anderson, Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

HARRISON, J. This appeal from the State Corporation Commission involves the precise question decided to-day in the case of Standard Oil Company v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 390; and for the reasons there given, and filed with the record, the judgment here complained of must be affirmed.

KEITH, P., and CARDWELL, J., dissent.

(58 W. Va. 380)

STATE v. PEYTON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—WRIT OF ERROR BY STATE—IMPROVIDENT ALLOWANCE.

A writ of error does not lie from this court, at the instance of the state, to an order of a circuit court overruling a motion by the state to set aside a verdict of "not guilty" by a jury in a criminal case for the violation of a law relating to the revenue, when there has been no final judgment on the verdict.

2. SAME—DISMISSAL.

In such case the writ of error allowed will be dismissed as improvidently awarded.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Tucker County.

Charles Peyton was found not guilty of selling liquor on Sunday, and the state brings error. Dismissed.

Frank Lively, Atty. Gen., for the State. Cunningham & Stallings, for defendant in error.

COX, J. Charles Peyton was indicted, tried, and found "not guilty" by a jury, in the circuit court of Tucker county, upon a charge of selling intoxicating drink on a Sunday; he having a state license to sell spirituous liquors, etc. A writ of error was allowed the state by this court.

The record discloses that there was a motion by the state to set aside the verdict, and that the motion was overruled, but does not disclose that there was any judgment on the verdict. Section 3, c. 160, Code 1899, provides: "A writ of error shall lie in a criminal case, to the judgment of a circuit court, from the Supreme Court of Appeals. It shall lie in any case for the accused, and if the case be for the violation of a law relating to the revenue, it shall lie also for the state." This provision is constitutional and allows a writ of error for the state to a judgment of acquittal by the circuit court in a criminal case for the violation of a law relating to the revenue. State v. Allen, 8 W. Va. 680; State v. Fitzpatrick, Id. 707; State v. Cooper, 28 W. Va. 338; State v. Thompson, Id. 149. The law does not authorize a writ of error at the instance of the state to an order of the circuit court overruling a motion to set aside a verdict of a jury in a case for the violation of a law relating to the revenue, when there has been no judgment on the verdict. Judge Dent, speaking for the court, in the case of State v. Bluefield Drug Co., 41 W. Va. 638, 24 S. E. 649, in relation to this section of the statute, says: "This section only applies to cases tried in the circuit court where there is a final judgment of conviction or acquittal." It is clear that a writ of error does not lie in this case to the order overruling the motion to set aside the verdict.

*Rehearing denied.

We cannot, in the absence of a final judgment on the verdict, review the errors assigned, but must dismiss the writ as improvidently awarded.

(37 W. Va. 514)

MORRISON v. McWHORTER.*

(Special Court, Twelfth Judicial Circuit of West Virginia. June 2, 1905.)

1. ELECTIONS—SPECIAL COURT—JURISDICTION.

A special court, constituted and convened under the provisions of chapter 6, Code 1899, has a limited jurisdiction; but such jurisdiction necessarily draws to it the right to hear and determine all questions touching the regularity and sufficiency of the pleadings in a contest for a judicial office, including the legal sufficiency of the notice of contest, as well as all other pleadings and notices.

2. SAME—NOTICE OF CONTEST.

A notice of contest for a judicial office is a pleading, or is in the nature of a pleading, and its purpose is not only to institute the proceeding of contest and to bring the respondent or contestee into court, but also fully and plainly to inform him of the character and cause of the ground of contest.

3. SAME—SUFFICIENCY.

Notice of contest, which on its face discloses no ground upon which an office may be contested for, is fatally defective.

4. SAME—QUESTION FOR COURT.

The sufficiency of the pleadings in a contest for a judicial office, as a question of law, is for the consideration and determination of the court.

5. SAME—OBJECTIONS TO PLEADINGS.

The sufficiency of the pleadings in such case, such as the notice, petition, or other pleading, may be conveniently raised and brought on for adjudication, by motion to quash, by demurrer, or by mere objection or suggestion; and where, in such case, the pleadings do not disclose on their face a ground of contest, it is the duty of the court sua sponte to notice fatal defects and abate the proceedings.

*This opinion is here reported because appearing in official volume.

6. SAME—GROUND OF CONTEST—BRIBERY.

Before bribery in an election can be used as a basis of contest for a judicial office, or removal therefrom, the accused party must have been convicted of bribery at the election, upon an indictment by a grand jury and a regular trial before a court and petit jury.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COURTS—SPECIAL TRIBUNAL.

A special tribunal, constituted under authority of section 15 of chapter 6, of the Code of 1899, is a subordinate legislative tribunal, and not a part of the judicial department of the state.

2. BRIBERY—DEFINITION.

McWhorter v. Dorr, 50 S. E. 838. Bribery is an offense at common law; and the common-law offense of bribery has never been abrogated by the Constitution or any statute in the state of West Virginia, in so far as the same applies to the conduct of elections.

3. ELECTION—EFFECT OF BRIBERY.

It is a well established principle of law, both in England and the United States, that bribery in an election committed by a person claiming to be elected, or by any agent of his, with or without his knowledge or direction, renders his election void.

4. SAME.

At common law a person guilty of bribery in an election need not be indicted, tried, and convicted before declaring his election void. Bribery in an election by the party claiming to be elected renders his election void, regardless of the fact whether he has been indicted, tried, and convicted.

Per Dorr, J., dissenting.

Election contest between J. B. Morrison and J. C. McWhorter. Dismissed.

See 50 S. E. 838.

JACOBS, P. J. C. McWhorter and J. B. Morrison were rival candidates for the office of judge of the Twelfth judicial circuit at the general election held on the 8th day of November, 1904. On the canvass of the returns from the several counties of the circuit, McWhorter was declared elected, was commissioned by the Governor, qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties. Within the period prescribed by law, Morrison served on McWhorter notice of contest, which he then filed with Gov. White, and by the same document nominated C. P. Dorr, of Webster county, a member of the contest court. McWhorter served a return or counter notice upon Morrison, and nominated C. W. Dalley, of Randolph county, as a member of said court. Gov. White then appointed Thos. P. Jacobs, of Wetzel county, president of the court, and by proclamation convened the court for the purpose of hearing and determining said contest. Voluminous evidence was taken in the form of depositions, and the controversy submitted to the court.

Upon the hearing the contestee objected to the sufficiency of the notice of contest by way of demurrer or motion to quash. The contestant protested against any consideration of any form of objections to the sufficiency of the notice, and insisted that the court should decide the case upon the whole record, regardless of the character of the notice. The contestee insisted that it was competent to question the sufficiency of the notice and other pleadings in the case in some manner, and, if the same were not sufficient and did not make out and state a case on their face, they should be quashed and abated. In other words, the first duty of the court was to determine whether the court had a case before it on the pleadings on which to act, and whether the pleadings, whatever their form, make out on their face a case upon which the judgment of the court can be properly invoked on the merits. We think the notice of contest, the petition, or any other paper which serves to bring on the contest—the issue—whatever be its form or name, is a pleading, or in the nature of a pleading; that it serves, or is intended to serve, a vital and essential purpose; and that it is impossible to conduct a contest without some pleadings defining the issue and the scope of the inquiry. The law provides for a notice and specification (Code 1899, c. 6, § 13), and contemplates a petition (Code 1899, c. 6, § 15). The notice, specifications of contest, and petition, if any, are intended to subserve a substantial purpose. They are analogous to the declaration at law or the bill in equity. They serve a double purpose: First, to bring the contestee into court; and, second, to inform him of the grounds of contest. Without a sufficient notice of contest, there can be no contest. Therefore the conclusion is self-evident, unless the notice of contest and specifications on their face state some legal ground of contest, there can be no contest—there can be no case in court. At the threshold this is a question for the judgment of the court. If raised in any proper manner, it must be decided. Indeed, if no case is made on the pleadings, the court sua sponte must so find and hold, even although neither party raises the question. The pleadings are to guide the court, as well as the parties, and without some form of pleadings, sufficiently setting forth on their face a prima facie case, the court has no foundation on which to base its judgment on the merits. This is elementary. As long as the sufficiency of the pleadings is a question for the court, it is immaterial how the question is raised. Such sufficiency may be conveniently raised in this case by a motion to quash, by demurrer, or by mere suggestion to the court. The form is wholly immaterial. We hold it competent, therefore, to demur, move to quash, or make a mere suggestion, and we entertain the demurrer or motion to quash, and proceed to consider the sufficiency of the notice of contest, specifications, etc.

Are the notice of contest, specifications, etc., sufficient under the law? Do they present a case on their face? This is the one question on the demurrer or motion to quash.

We are not unmindful of the gravity and importance of the question and the necessity of a correct decision. There is no appeal in case of error, and this circumstance has induced more than ordinary care and caution in an effort to reach a correct solution. The case made out on the face of the notice of contest is simply this: There are 21 specifications of grounds of contest contained in the notice. It charges that the ground of contest is that the contestee, at the time of election, was not qualified to hold the office of judge of the Twelfth judicial circuit. The 21 specifications profess to set forth the facts relied on to substantiate said grounds. The first specification alleges an offer to pay money for a vote and influence; the second is to the same effect; the third alleges a payment or agreement to pay for vote and influence; the fourth, to same effect; the fifth and sixth, offer to pay for vote and influence; the seventh alleges a payment of money for a vote and influence; the eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth specifications allege that contestee, or his agents, paid various sums of money to divers persons for their respective votes and for their influence to secure other votes; the seventeenth alleges the use of money with other and unknown voters in the circuit; the eighteenth and nineteenth specifications allege payment by contestee, or his agents, for votes and to secure other votes; the twentieth alleges payment to commissioners and poll clerks, without naming them, in Upshur county, to secure the votes and influence; the twenty-first and last alleges the use of $5,000 by contestee's law partner for the purpose of securing the votes of citizens in the circuit. How used or when, where or with whom, is not said. The notice then includes a summation as follows: "That by the use of said money and means aforesaid, for the purpose of corrupting and influencing the voters of said circuit at said election, you have disqualified yourself to hold said office." The petition in more general terms alleges the use of money in said election.

The contest proceeds upon the theory of the bribery and corruption of the general electorate, without descending into particulars. No attempt is made to challenge and reject any single vote, with a view of changing the general result as certified by the canvassing boards; but the contest goes upon the theory that, if contestee used money to procure votes of some and their influence to secure other votes, then the contestee disqualified himself, and the court can oust him. It is difficult to imagine any notice of contest more vague, indefinite, and uncertain than the one under consideration. The charges are tantamount to an allegation of bribery, or, rather, they charge in some instances a bribery, or attempt to bribe, by the contestee, or his agents. Some of them charge "him or his agents," and some charge his agents. The contest goes upon the theory that contestee secured his election by bribery and thus disqualified himself to hold the office of judge; and such charges are so vague and indefinite as to be wholly insufficient to put contestee upon notice of any kind of defense. Contestant does not claim to have been elected. The one vital question, then, is: Does bribery, if sufficiently charged and fully proved, disqualify the contestee?

We are now considering the notice and petition on the motion to quash or demur, and, though the facts relied on are not well pleaded, yet we regard them so for the purpose of deciding the legal question whether bribery at an election disqualifies. The court is of opinion that bribery at an election does disqualify the guilty party to hold office. But on the question when the bribery disqualifies the court is not unanimous. The majority of the court is of opinion that, before bribery works disqualification, the accused party must have been indicted by a grand jury and convicted upon the indictment after regular and formal trial. If this be the law, then notice and specifications simply charging that the contestee committed bribery at the election, without further specifying and alleging that he had been indicted and convicted therefor, are radically and fatally defective. The Constitution provides that all male citizens of the state shall be entitled to vote, except minors or persons of unsound mind, paupers, and persons "under conviction of treason, felony, or bribery in an election." The same article provides that no person, except citizens entitled to vote, shall be elected or appointed to any office. This, in the absence of further qualifications prescribed by the Legislature, is equivalent to saying that any citizen entitled to vote shall be eligible to election or appointment to any office, subject to the age requirement as to judges and some other officers. Qualification to vote and qualification to hold office are coincident, therefore, with the exception of the age qualification. What disqualifies the voter disqualifies the office holder, and vice versa. The Constitution in plain terms provides that there must be a conviction before disqualification arises. The only evidence of the disqualification is the previous conviction. To the same effect is section 4 of chapter 7 of the Code of 1899, enacted in pursuance of the Constitution.

The only offense against the election law which seems to work disqualification, so as to authorize removal from office without a previous conviction, is the offense of offering to, giving, or distributing among voters, on election day, by or on behalf of the candidate, any intoxicating drinks, in which event, on "proof of the fact," the candidate shall be "removed" from office. Code 1899, c. 5, § 10. Even under this section it may well be doubted whether a contest court could exercise this power, and whether such removal should not take place in a direct proceeding to remove the officer upon formal complaint and "proof of the fact." At any rate this court certainly has no power to remove from office on a charge of bribery previous to a conviction. A careful search of the Constitution and statutes will disclose no other instance where a contest court, on mere "proof" of the fact, in advance of conviction, is authorized to act. It may well be, and we believe it to be true, that, on a proper contest, proof that a candidate has purchased a vote would work the rejection of that vote, though there seems to be no specific statute on the subject. But, if a contest goes upon that theory, a list of the votes so contested must be given the contestee. This contest goes upon no such theory. No list of votes challenged and objected to on the ground of bribery is either given or relied on. The evident belief of the contestant and his counsel was that, if they could show bribery, it would disqualify and oust the successful candidate. We hold this is not the law. There must be a conviction to disqualify. Even in that case we doubt whether this court would have jurisdiction to oust.

We suggest, because it is not necessary to decide, that, even after conviction, the removal from office could take place only in some direct proceeding instituted for the purpose and based upon the unreversed conviction of the offending party. Having reached the conclusion that there is no ground upon which the office of judge of the Twelfth judicial circuit can be contested for, set up and disclosed on the face of the notice and specifications, or any other pleading in the case, we sustain the demurrer or motion to quash, and quash and dismiss said notice and specifications, and wholly dismiss this proceeding, and the contestee is directed to go thereof without day. This disposition of the case renders it unnecessary to enter upon a discussion of the case upon its merits.

It is not out of place, however, and we think it entirely proper, in view of the fact that neither party has the right, under the law, to review the action of this court, to say that, besides the questions raised and discussed upon the demurrer, Judge McWhorter, the contestee, by proper and appropriate pleading put in issue the allegations of bribery, fraud, and corruption alleged in the notice of contest against him. Such denial was prompt, emphatic, and unequivocal. Looking to the merits of the case, as disclosed by the depositions taken, it must be apparent to the candid mind, upon a careful review of the evidence, that it wholly fails to establish the charges of bribery, corruption, and fraud—all or any of them. There is no evidence which, measured by any known rule of law, supports any of the charges and specifications.

The candid and unbiased mind may well go further and easily conclude there is no evidence which tends to raise even a respectable suspicion of the truth of such charges. In this case the evidence fails on the merits to make out any kind of a case for the contestant.

DAILEY, J. (concurring). I concur fully in the views expressed and in the conclusions reached by JACOBS, P., on the demurrer or motion to quash, and in the dismissal of the proceedings. I can neither concur in nor dissent from his observations on the facts, for I have not read the evidence or any part thereof.

DORR, J. (dissenting). This court, being a subordinate legislative tribunal, could only consider the contest upon the notice and petition of contestant, the answer of contestee, with the specifications of each, and the evidence taken and filed by the parties interested. No pleadings could be considered by way of demurrer or motion to quash. Who ever heard of a demurrer or motion to quash in a proceeding before a legislative body? Nothing in my opinion could be legally considered on the hearing except the notice of contest and the specifications thereof, the answer thereto, and the evidence. Specification 1 of the contestant charges the contestee with offering to pay Chas. B. Mayo, of Curtin, Nicholas county, W. Va., $1,000 if he would vote for contestee and use his influence to secure his election to the office of judge of the Twelfth judicial circuit. Specification 2 charges the contestee with offering to pay R. L. Mace, of Hackers Valley, Webster county, $2,500 for the same purpose. Specification 3 charges the contestee with paying to Marion Mick $500 for his influence in securing his election. The other specifications charge the contestee, either by himself or his agent, with paying to various persons, naming them, or offering to pay said parties, certain specific sums of money, named in the specification; and the specifications close with the allegation, as to contestee, that "by the use of said money and means aforesaid, for the purpose of corrupting and influencing the voters of said circuit at said election, you have disqualified yourself to hold said office." The contestee in his reply does not deny the use of money, either by himself or his agent, in securing his election, but simply traverses each specification by way of denial. He admits paying to L. H. Kelly $500, the amount assessed by the campaign committee of Braxton county against him. If he could pay this campaign committee $500 in Braxton county with which to secure his election, why could he not pay all his campaign committees in his circuit $5,000 each, or any sum necessary to corrupt the voters of the entire circuit? To say that these specifications do not give the contestee notice of the charges against him seems to me to be a travesty on the English language.

At common law bribery by the candidate or his agents to secure his election disqualified him from holding office. 6 American and English Encyclopedia of Law (1st Ed.) p. 364, and cases there cited; Donnelly v. Washburn, Cong. Dig. Elect. Cas. 355; Page v. Pierce, Id. 419; Mitchell v. Walsh, Id. 521. Contestee's counsel in their argument admit that at common law bribery disqualified a candidate from holding the office. Does the common law exist in West Virginia? I think it does. The Constitution of the state (section 21, art. 8) is as follows: "Such parts of the common law, and of the laws of this state as are in force when this article goes into operation and are not repugnant thereto, shall be and continue the law of the state until altered or repealed by the Legislature." At common law the candidate, being guilty of bribery in another election, was not disqualified from holding office. Section 4 of chapter 7 of the Code of 1899 was passed to correct this, and is as follows: "No person convicted of treason, felony or bribery in an election, before any court in or out of this state, shall, while such conviction remains unreversed, be elected or appointed to any office, under the laws of this state; and if any person while holding such office, be so convicted, the office shall be thereby vacated." Section 10 of chapter 5 is as follows: "If any person who is a candidate for any office under the Constitution and laws of this state, shall, by himself or another, offer to give or distribute among the voters any intoxicating drinks, on the day of election, he shall, if elected, forfeit his office and on proof of the fact be removed therefrom, and if any person, whether a candidate or not, offer to give or distribute any intoxicating drinks to any voter on the day of an election, he shall forfeit not less than $10 nor more than $50." These sections must be strictly construed, as they are in derogation of the common law. 23 American and English Encyclopedia of Law (1st Ed.) p. 387, cases there cited; 1 Kent's Commentaries, p. 464; Harrison v. Leach, 4 W. Va. 383. The Legislature knew that at common law a candidate or his agents using bribery to secure his election disqualified him from holding office, and therefore left the common law just as it was. At common law the use of intoxicating drinks on the day of the election did not disqualify. These statutes simply enlarge the common law, making that which was not a disqualification at common law a disqualification, and leaving the common law as it stood as to bribery by the candidate to secure his election. There is no such thing as repealing the common law by implication, as the Constitution forbids it to be done in any other way than by an act of the Legislature.

It is the policy of this state that all elections should be fair. The use of money by either candidate for an office prevents a fair election. The use of money by a candidate against his opponent is a fraud upon him. Fraud vitiates all things—wills, deeds, judgments, decrees, and elections. No one should be permitted to hold office in this state who has obtained the same by fraud. So far as bribery is concerned, as shown above, a candidate who uses bribery in his election is disqualified from holding office. My conclusions are that the specifications are sufficient, and that they are supported by the law applicable to this case.

In the opinion of the majority of the court, Judge JACOBS undertakes to say what the evidence filed in the case proves. This is clearly voluntary on his part, and is wholly out of place, as the contest was decided upon the demurrer and motion to quash, offered by the contestee. The testimony was not read upon the hearing of the contest. In view of the specifications of contestant and the answer and admissions of contestee, and the fact that the contestee did not go upon the witness stand to deny any of the charges or the facts alleged against him, and the fact that the contestant did go on the stand, I am unable to see how Judge JACOBS can draw his conclusions announced by him upon the merits of the case, which I decline to discuss in this opinion.

(58 W. Va. 366)

LOGAN'S HEIRS v. WARD et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 21, 1905.)

1. EJECTMENT—WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

An owner of land in actual possession, who is entered upon by an adverse claimant, may, both by common law and chapter 90 of the Code of 1899, maintain ejectment against the intruder, and cannot sustain a bill in equity to remove cloud over his title.

2. QUIETING TITLE—REMOVAL OF CLOUD.

Equity will entertain a suit to remove cloud over the title to land by one in actual possession against an adverse claimant not in actual possession who sets up an adverse title.

3. SAME—TITLE TO MAINTAIN.

A bill to remove cloud over the title to land cannot be maintained, unless the plaintiff has both title and actual possession. He cannot rely on weakness of the title of his adversary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Quieting Title, §§ 8, 36.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

When a patent or deed includes within the exterior bounds of the lands thereby conveyed lands which are excepted by such grant or deed from its operation, a plaintiff in equity, suing to remove cloud from his title, must show that the land he claims against the defendant is not the land so excepted.

5. JOINT TENANCY—ADVERSE POSSESSION—PRESUMPTION OF GRANT.

The law will not presume a grant of his undivided share from one joint tenant to another simply from mere silent possession by one for a long time.

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION—PRESUMPTION OF GRANT.

A presumption of a grant from lapse of time with possession never arises where all the circumstances are consistent with the non-existence of such grant.

Poffenbarger, J., dissenting.
(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Bill by James H. Logan against Wirt C. Ward and Elihu Hutton. Decree for defendants, and the heirs of said plaintiff appeal. Affirmed.

C. H. Scott and Mollohan, McClintic & Mathews, for appellants. Baker & Strader, Harding & Harding, M. H. Dent, and Linn, Byrne & Cato, for appellees.

BRANNON, P. James H. Logan brought a chancery suit against Wirt C. Ward and Elihu Hutton to remove a cloud over Logan's title to land, and upon the hearing Logan's suit was dismissed, and his heirs appealed.

I state Logan's claim thus: By patent dated 13th February, 1798, the state of Virginia granted to William Bowyer, William Breckenridge, Hugh Paul, and Edward Bryan a tract of 50,000 acres of land in Randolph county. William Logan obtained the conveyance of the Breckenridge and Paul shares in said tract, and was thus owner of half of it. James H. Logan claims that his father, William Logan, had deeds for the other interests in the tract, but does not show them. William Logan, by deed dated 15th May, 1851, conveyed to his sons, James H. and Joseph M. Logan, that portion of said tract, which is commonly called the "Breckenridge Survey," west of Elk Water run to a certain line running N., 70° W.; and Joseph M. and James H. Logan afterwards, by deed, 1st August, 1899, made a division between them of said portion of the Breckenridge survey, whereby that part of it covering the land in dispute became the sole property of James H. Logan. Thus James H. Logan claims under the Breckenridge survey. It is the only title set up by his bill. The bill states that the Breckenridge tract was sold by the United States in 1815 for direct taxes, and was purchased by Jinks, and conveyed by him to See, who conveyed part of it, said to include the land in controversy in this case, to William Logan by deed dated 20th November, 1851. This seems to be the same part of said survey before conveyed by William Logan to James H. and Joseph M. Logan.

The grant from Virginia to Bowyer and others for the 50,000 acres is what is called an "inclusive grant"; that is, lands are included within its bounds which were excepted from the operation of the patent. This patent excluded 13,690 acres for prior claims. The deed from Jinks to See also excluded the same lands covered by prior claims which were excepted in the said patent, as also several thousand acres which Jinks had disposed of before he conveyed to William Logan. The deed of Jinks may be thus called an "inclusive deed." The deed from William Logan to James H. and Joseph M. Logan is a quitclaim deed. James H. Logan and Joseph M. Logan also obtained a grant from Virginia, dated 30th November, 1850, for 815 acres of land claimed to be within the bounds of the Breckenridge grant. James H. Logan and his father long before him had actual possession within the bounds of what he claims to be the Breckenridge survey, and he continued that possession at the date of the commencement of this suit. Neither side had actual possession of the land in controversy in this case, but Logan claims constructive actual possession by reason of his possession inside of the Breckenridge survey. Logan asserts that the land claimed by the defendants is inside his part of the Breckenridge grant. The claim of the defendants is under a grant from the state of Virginia to J. M. Bennett and John S. Hoffman for 990 acres, dated 1st February, 1854, which came by conveyance to defendant Wirt C. Ward, with whom Elihu Hutton had an interest. The defendants also set up a claim under a grant of 105,000 acres, known as the "Welsh Survey", which Hutton claims. The bill avers that under these grants to Bennett and Hoffman and Welsh the defendants Ward and Hutton set up a claim adverse to Logan, but averred no actual possession in them.

Counsel for Logan devotes effort to sustain equity jurisdiction in this case, seeming to doubt it because of the well-known rule that equity will not try title to land. It is true that this is practically an ejectment in equity, because it is only a battle between distinct and adversary titles; but the case falls under the head of equity jurisdiction to dispel cloud over title to land arising from adverse claim. There is some evidence in the case tending to show that the defendants were in possession of the disputed land, and if that were in fact so I do not think a suit in equity could be sustained, since by common law I think it is clear that where one man is in actual possession, and another enters upon him under adverse claim, the true owner may by common law, regardless of our ejectment statute, sustain ejectment. The intruder's entry is a disseisin or ouster, but only a partial one, to the extent of his inclosure; his adversary still retaining his former possession. Taylor v. Burnside, 1 Grat. 165; Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 246. The true owner, still remaining in possession, may treat his enemy's entry as an ouster and sue in ejectment. "The plaintiff, in possession of a portion of the premises, may bring ejectment for the remainder in the defendant's possession." 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 526; Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Grat. 172; Witten v. St. Clair, 27 W. Va. 771; Stuart v. Coalter, 4 Rand. 74, 15 Am. Dec. 731. Therefore, if in fact defendants were in possession when suit was begun, I think there could be no jurisdiction in equity, because, before our present ejectment statute, ejectment would lie. Equity long ago assumed jurisdiction to remove cloud, but only in favor of one in possession, because he could not sue in ejectment; but where both are in possession he can sue by common law. Va. Coal & Iron Co. v. Kelly (Va.) 24 S. E. 1020. But the evidence shows that the defendants were not in possession actual when this suit began, and counsel for defendants do not base any stand on that theory. The bill states only hostile claim, not possession. The evidence shows that William Logan and his sons under him had possession many, many years before this suit, 75 or 80 years, and James H. Logan continued in possession actual. Some evidence goes to show that some years before the suit was brought a cabin, or rather a shanty, was built on the land in a trackless wilderness, and during one summer one Salisbury one night in the week slept in it; his actual residence with his family being elsewhere. There was no inclosure or cultivation. It was mere nominal transient possession of nights. It was no open, notorious, continuous occupation. It was not possession actual in the eye of the law. Hutchison, Land Titles, § 365; Anderson v. Harvey, 10 Grat. 386. Therefore there is jurisdiction in equity for this suit, and we pass to a consideration of its merits.

This is an ejectment in equity, because a contest between hostile titles, and in it we must apply the rule in ejectment that a plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title, no matter how weak his opponent's title may be. Those only who have a clear title connected with actual possession have a right to claim the interference of equity to dispel a cloud over their title. Mills v. Henry Oil Co., 57 W. Va. 255, 50 S. E. 157; Hitchcock v. Morrison, 47 W. Va. 206, 34 S. E. 993; Christian v. Vance, 41 W. Va. 754, 24 S. E. 596; Moore v. McNutt, 41 W. Va. 695, 24 S. E. 682; Hogg, Eq. Princip. 83; Helden v. Hellen (Md.) 31 Atl. 506, 45 Am. St. Rep. 371; Dewing v. Woods, 111 Fed. 575, 49 C. O. A. 443, and citations in Judge Goff's opinion. The plaintiff cannot recover unless he fixes on the ground his exterior boundaries by lines and corners. Coal Co. v. Howell, 36 W. Va. 490, 15 S. E. 214. The plaintiff cannot meet this requirement. He claims under the Breckenridge survey. He has not identified it. He claims that the defendants' land lies within that survey. The defendants deny it. Not a corner or a line of that survey is proven. No man proves that he ever saw a corner or a line of it. No reputation thereof is given. Marsteller's evidence is relied on by the plaintiff. He is a young man of only 42. He does not state that he ever saw what he knew to be an original corner or line to this old survey, made away back in 1798. He tested no corners or lines. It is proven that clearing and fire breaks have destroyed them, if ever they existed. Marsteller says he never made a survey of the lines of the Breckenridge survey, but simply be-

Heves that a plat, made by the attorney for the purpose of this case, truly represents that survey; or rather he says that, if the plat made by counsel to show Logan's claim is correct, it would cover the controverted land, but he does not say it is correct. It is only fair to Marsteller to say that he repudiates speaking from actual knowledge. He says, as a sample of his evidence, "No, sir; of my own knowledge I don't know this." Taking his whole evidence, it is manifest that he knows nothing of the actual location of the survey, and simply has an opinion as to its location, standing on no basis. The same may be said of Tallman's evidence. He is 56 years of age. He says he knows of the survey only in a general way. When asked if he knew the Breckenridge survey, he replies, "I know of it in a general way." He never ran or tested any of its known lines. Though asked if he had seen any of the original corners or marked lines, he could not say that he had. He said he did not give much attention to marks when he was running a line or two at the request of the plaintiff's attorney in this case. He said he was not definite about the lines.

Next take the evidence of James H. Logan, himself a surveyor. I can safely say that, if any living man could be brought to identify this survey, it would be Logan. He says he was born in 1816, and with his father moved from Rockbridge county, Va., to this survey, in 1827. His father claimed it, and resided, as claimed, within the survey. James H. Logan and his brother claimed it for years. He knew it when a young, active man, when the marked trees constituting its lines and corners were yet probably standing. He was a practical surveyor, deputy of the county surveyor. In all his surveying, in all the surveying of those old surveys, he does not tell us on the witness stand that he saw or knew a marked corner or line tree of this old survey, or had one shown him by an ancient. He said distinctly, "I have never made a survey of these lines of the Breckenridge survey, but believe it is correct as laid down in the map." He refers to the map or plat used in the present case. He does not claim to know a corner or line, except from mere hearsay—not that even. His evidence is wholly insufficient to identify and establish this survey. The great point of controversy in this case is the location of the western line of the Breckenridge survey, as James H. Logan claims a part of it lying between Elk Water run and the western line of the survey. Is the land in controversy inside of the western line as claimed by Logan, or outside of it as claimed by the defendants? The evidence does not answer this question, unless it answers it for defendants. The burden is on the plaintiff to show that the land he claims is inside the line. Logan says himself, as a witness: "I do not know exactly where the western boundary line of the Breckenridge survey is located. I never ran it." His own action and declarations in the past strongly war against his claim in this case. He was a surveyor, and in 1846 as deputy surveyor of Randolph county he made a survey for an entry of 430 acres for himself and his brother, and in it he makes its lines call for a Breckenridge line. That would make the Breckenridge line have a location far from the line he claims now to be its western line in this suit, and would locate it as the defendants claim it, and throw the land contested in this case outside the Breckenridge survey. Now this is strong evidence against Logan. When he was a young man of 30 years, living right in the Breckenridge survey, as he claims, while yet its corner and line trees were likely standing and ascertainable, he fixed that line in a different place from where he now claims it. He would be then likely to know the corners and the lines; but, if he did know them, he does not tell us so now as a witness. If he cannot locate them, who can? But he says he cannot do so. He does not do so. Away back many years he told several persons, who are witnesses in this case, that the western line of the Breckenridge survey was along the 430 acres, or where the defendants would locate it, not where Logan now claims it to be. He admitted that the Bennett-Hoffman did not conflict with his land. I would not cast aspersions upon the memory of Mr. Logan, and I think this is to be explained by the fact, manifested by his whole deposition, that he did not know the location of this line. We are referred to this particular portion of his evidence: He was asked, "Do you know where the beginning corner of the Breckenridge survey is?" and answered, "Yes; I know. It is the south corner of the old Jacob Ward place." He said so simply because the patent called for "a corner to lands of Jacob Ward." It was mere opinion, a "take for granted," because he did not say that he ever saw the corner, or saw a man who saw it, or had been told by any one who knew it. He says he did not of his own knowledge know a corner. Shall we fix the corner from the Jacob Ward land? That is not located. If one tract is to be located by another, that other must itself be located. We must take his entire deposition to get its meaning.

Stress is laid upon evidence of Tallman. He surveyed what is said to be the western line of the Breckenridge tract. That is the line on which the controversy in this case hangs. If here, the plaintiff's claim covers the land in controversy; if not here, it does not. He ran the line as Logan pointed it out. Logan did not know it—never saw a tree of it. He said frankly: "I do not know exactly where the western boundary line of the Breckenridge survey is located. I never ran it." Well, Tallman ran this line for miles, and not an old line tree did he find. He says

so. On another line he saw two marked trees, but could not say they were corners. He had no ax, did not block any. He said of these trees, "Don't know whether they were original corners or not." Not one tree does he prove to be a corner or line tree. Not a witness says he ever looked upon a corner or line tree of this old survey. Logan was on the ground from 1827 near the beginning corner, but never saw it or any other corner or line tree. He does not, nor does any witness, say that any old man pointed out or said that any tree belonged to the survey. Not even the slightest reputation of any tree's belonging to the survey is shown. Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh, 697, allows proof of declarations to prove identity of a corner by a person deceased having peculiar means of knowledge, as a surveyor or chain carrier on the original survey, or the owner of the tract or adjoining tract of same boundary, or tenants and others whose duty or interest would lead to diligent and accurate information, always excluding declarations liable to suspicion of bias from interest. No evidence of this kind even was offered. There is a total want of evidence to identify the Breckenridge survey, or to show that its western line covers the disputed land. Logan proves no title to it. I think that not only does the evidence of plaintiff fail to prove that the Breckenridge survey covers the land in dispute, but proves that it does not do so.

As to any claim under the See deed, that is liable to the same objection just stated. It is not located; for the See land is the Breckenridge land. Besides, the deed from See to Logan being a quitclaim deed, dating after the conveyance from William Logan to James H. Logan and Joseph M. Logan, they could derive no title from it. Such a deed does not pass after-acquired land. Such title as William Logan had to it went to his heirs, and they are not joined in this suit, as they must be to recover; they being parceners. Newell on Eject. 64; 7 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 317; Marshall v. Palmer, 91 Va. 344, 21 S. E. 672, 50 Am. St. Rep. 838; Nye v. Lovitt (Va.) 24 S. E. 345. This is another bar against Logan's recovery in this suit. The bill alleges that the Breckenridge tract was sold for direct taxes, purchased by Jinks, and by him conveyed to See, and by him conveyed in part to William Logan. The bill does not assail this tax title, but, on the contrary, puts it forward as a good title. It is vested in William Logan's heirs, of whom we know there were several. Is it not an outstanding title?

I see another reason against Logan's success in this suit. Logan presents deeds to his father for only two of the four shares of the patentees under the Breckenridge patent; but for want of deeds from the other two patentees under the Breckenridge patent he summons the doctrine that from long possession the law will presume conveyances from them to his father or to him. There is a salutary principle that from long possession the law sometimes presumes a grant, in order to quiet possession and make it consistent with rightful title. The tooth of time may have destroyed the deeds. Under this rule this court raised a presumption that Lord Fairfax had granted to Virginia the famous Berkeley Springs property now owned by this state. Virginia and this state had held long, long possession, but showed no grant. One was presumed. Smith v. Cornelius, 41 W. Va. 59, 28 S. E. 599, 30 L. R. A. 747. It is established that grants from the state will be so presumed. Matthews v. Burton, 17 Gr. 312; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 45. A deed from a vendor to a vendee may be presumed to save land from forfeiture. Hale v. Marshall, 14 Gr. 489. Valuable discussion of this interesting subject will be found in University v. Reynolds, 23 Am. Dec. 234; 1 Jones, Ev. §§ 72, 73, 74. But this presumption is raised to protect a title apparently good, but wanting a formal grant. It is only where, but for such grant, possession would be wrongful. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 46. But this presumption cannot be raised to prove an ouster by one joint tenant, parcener, or tenant in common of another, or to prove a grant from one to another. In this state the law is confirmed by numerous cases that the possession of one such person is the possession of the others, and there can be no adverse claim or title, unless there is actual ouster and notice or knowledge of hostile claim brought home to the other party. Mere silent possession by one, no matter how long continued, does not destroy the right of another, unless there be ouster, or adverse claim with notice to the other of adverse claim. Justice v. Lawson, 46 W. Va. 163, 33 S. E. 102; Cochran v. Cochran, 55 W. Va. 178, 46 S. E. 924; Cooey v. Porter, 22 W. Va. 121; Bogges v. Meredith, 16 W. Va. 1. "Where the possession of one is entirely consistent with title in another, it cannot give rise to a presumption of a conveyance from the latter." 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 1290. Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59, 5 L. Ed. 898, says that this presumption can never arise "where all the circumstances are perfectly consistent with the nonexistence of a grant." As the possession of one joint tenant is consistent with that of another—is in fact his possession—the law raises no presumption that the other has conveyed his title to the one in possession. No presumption is raised that two of the patentees conveyed their shares to William Logan, or that James H. Logan's heirs conveyed their right under the See deed to James H. Logan. Their rights are outstanding.

There is another insuperable obstacle in the way of the plaintiffs' success. The Breckenridge grant and the Jinks deed being an inclusive grant and deed—that is, excluding from their operation certain lands and passing no title to the excepted land—Logan must show that the land he seeks to assert title to in this case is not the land so excepted. The reason for this will be found stated in Stockton v. Morris, 39 W. Va. 432, 19 S. E. 531. I cannot add anything to what is there said, except to add to the authorities there cited the case of Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 227, 21 S. E. 347. That case again overrules the case of Hopkins v. Ward, 6 Munt. 38, and holds that where the title papers of the plaintiff disclose the fact that the exterior boundaries of the survey upon which a grant or deed to one under whom he claims is founded include lands which have been excepted from the operation of the grant, or lands which have been aliened since the grant was issued or the deed made, and which have been excepted from the operation of the deed of his grantor, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show that the lands in controversy are not within the excepted lands; also later case of Va. Coal Co. v. Keystone Co. (Va.) 45 S. E. 291. Does not Kenna v. Quarrier, 3 W. Va. 210, hold the same? There is not a particle of evidence in this case to meet the requirement of the law; none to show that the land involved in this suit is not the land excepted in the Breckenridge patent and See deed from Jinks.

There is another bar against Logan's recovery. The land he claims from the defendants is forfeited for omission to charge it for taxes. The Breckenridge was on the books down to 1851. In 1852 William Logan was charged with 6,000 acres, transferred to him from C. C. See. He abandoned all the land save that part conveyed by See by omitting from tax books. The 6,000 acres continued on until 1856. In 1857 Logan is charged with 4,750 acres, in lieu of 6,000, and was charged with 4,750 acres down to 1860, and it was never afterwards on the books. That is the last charge to William Logan. Never was any of this land under the Breckenridge title charged to James H. and Joseph M. Logan, because the quitclaim deed to them from their father, dated 15th May, 1851, never was on record until August 5, 1899. Anyhow, it was not on the books to them. So we say that the Breckenridge was not, in the whole or part, on the books after 1860. That forfeits it for non-entry under article 13, § 6, Const. It is true that Logan and his brother, Joseph, owned three tracts of 815, 1,000, and 1,000 acres, and they, in one or another name, have been on the tax books, one from 1851, one from 1852, one from 1854; but their title to the 815 acres came from a grant, 30th November, 1850, to James H. and Joseph M. Logan, under a deed from J. M. Crouch, 26th April, 1852, for 1,000 acres, and a deed from Adam See for 1,000 acres, 31st December, 1851. These titles were not under their father's title, but hostile and different. These were distinct tracts, of prescribed boundary, not covering the land in dispute, not claimed to do so, clearly proven not to do so. Their taxation could not save the balance of the Breckenridge land from forfeiture. There is no identity between the title under that grant and those deeds and that under William Logan; no identity between the lands so charged and that in dispute. Though inside the Breckenridge bounds, the taxation of tracts of specific bounds would not save from forfeiture lands outside the bounds of those three tracts. The taxation of 2,815 acres of specific limits would not save the whole 50,000 acres. I repeat that the three tracts so taxed do not include the disputed land. Any right to that under the Logan claim is outstanding in the state, not in Logan.

We see no reason to differ with the finding of the circuit court, and therefore affirm its decree.

POFFENBARGER, J. (dissenting). The decree in this cause, which the court now affirms, does not merely dismiss the bill because plaintiffs fail to show their title to the land covered by the patent which they wish to cancel, and thus remove a cloud from their title, but determines that the plaintiffs have no title and that the defendants have. The decree reads as follows: "It is therefore adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the plaintiffs take nothing by their said bill and suit, that the same be wholly dismissed, and that the said defendants," etc. Believing, as I do, that under our practice—the ordinary equity jurisdiction, unaided by statute—there can be no such thing as an ejectment in equity, I cannot concur in that part of the decision which affirms the adjudication against the plaintiffs as upon the merits. I think the bill should have been dismissed in such manner as not to prejudice any rights which they might assert in any other proper proceeding either at law or in equity. The theory of a bill to remove a cloud is clearly and well stated by the Supreme Court of Mississippi in Phelps v. Harris, 51 Miss. 789, as follows: "This jurisdiction of equity cannot properly be invoked to adjudicate upon the conflicting title of parties to real estate. That would be to draw into a court of equity from the courts of law the trial of ejectments. He who comes into a court of equity to get rid of a legal title, which is allowed to cast a shadow on his own title, must show clearly the validity of his own title and the invalidity of his opponent's." This was quoted with approval by the Supreme Court of the United States in the same case on appeal. 101 U. S. 370, 375, 25 L. Ed. 855. In Orton v. Smith, 18 How. 263, 15 L. Ed. 393, Mr. Justice Grier said: "Those only who have a clear legal and equitable title to land connected with possession have any right to claim the interference of a court of equity to give them peace and dissipate a cloud upon the title." This court asserts the same principle and rule in Harr v. Shaffer, 45 W. Va. 709, 31 S. E. 905, in the following language: "A party who files a bill to remove a cloud from his title to a tract of land, who show on the face of his bill that he has no title to the land himself, and no right to interfere with others who appear to have good title thereto, is not entitled to be heard in a court of equity, and his bill will be dismissed." See Hogg's Equity Principles, § 46. The principle is strikingly illustrated in McRee v. Gardner, 131 Mo. 599, 33 S. W. 166, in which the court held as follows: "Where a bill to remove a cloud on the title to land is dismissed because plaintiff is not in possession, the judgment should not be so absolute as to constitute a bar to the maintenance by plaintiff of another form of action he may have to the land." Originally, equity jurisdiction to quiet title did not arise until after one or more trials in ejectment. Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 402, 18 L. Ed. 925. Mr. Justice Field said: "The equity asserted in such cases had its origin in the prolonged litigation which the action of ejectment permitted. That action being founded upon a fictitious demise between fictitious parties, a recovery therein constituted no bar to a second similar action, or to any number of similar actions for the same premises. With slight changes in these fictions a new action might be instituted and conducted as though no previous action had ever been commenced. Thus the party in possession, though successful in every case, might be harassed, if not ruined, by the continued litigation. To prevent such litigation after one or more trials, and to secure peace to the party in possession, courts of equity interposed upon proper application and terminated the controversy." This jurisdiction to quiet title differs from the jurisdiction to remove a cloud, but it falls short of an ejectment. It proceeds upon the assumption of a perfect title in the plaintiff, ascertained and determined in a court of law, and does not open the doors of the equity court to a retrial of the matters which have been determined in the law court. It has jurisdiction to restrain one of the parties from vexatiously relitigating questions of title which have already been settled in the legal forum. In order to invoke such jurisdiction, the plaintiff must show his possession and his perfect title. Thus he may call in a paper under which his adversary claims and cause it to be canceled, to the end that it may no longer be the means of annoyance to him. So a bill to remove a cloud invokes a jurisdiction which goes only against the paper title of the adversary, to cancel it because of its invalidity in some respect, so that no vexatious litigation may be predicated upon it. The plaintiff cannot call for the exercise of that jurisdiction until he shows title in himself and possession of the property. If he fails to do this, he is not in a position to invoke the jurisdiction of the court, and his bill should merely be dismissed, not because the defendant has superior title, but because the court cannot adjudicate anything, as between them, except that the plaintiff is not in a position to demand cancellation of the defendant's title papers. Equity cannot try questions of title, unless jurisdiction be obtained upon some equity in the party. Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895. In this class of cases, the plaintiff shows no equity, and can show none, until he has established his title and possession. When he fails to do this, he fails to bring himself and his adversary within the jurisdiction of the court, and want of jurisdiction is all the court can declare or adjudicate.

(58 W. Va. 408)

BAKER v. MONUMENTAL SAVINGS & LOAN ASS'N et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. INSURANCE — PAYMENT TO MORTGAGEE — SUBROGATION.

Where a cestui que trust purchases insurance on the trust property for the security of his debt, secured by the deed of trust, and a loss from fire occurs, and the insurance company pays the whole debt secured, it is entitled to take an assignment from the trust creditor of the debt so secured and paid, and to recover the same in the same manner as its assignor could do.

2. SAME.

Where the owner of real estate, which is subject to a deed of trust executed thereon to secure a debt by his vendor, sells and conveys the same, reserving his vendor's lien thereon for the purchase money, such conveyance being subject to such deed of trust, and the trust creditor purchases insurance in said owner's name without notice or knowledge that he has conveyed his title thereto, and a fire occurs, and the insurance company, in settlement of the loss, pays the whole trust debt, it is entitled to an assignment thereof and to be subrogated to the rights of the trust creditor.

3. SAME—INSURABLE INTEREST.

In such case, after such conveyance, such grantor has no interest in such real estate, except as to his vendor's lien, and he has no other insurable interest therein.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Tucker County.
Bill by B. Baker against the Monumental Savings & Loan Association and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant Scottish Union & National Insurance Company appeals. Reversed.

Cunningham & Stallings, for appellant.
R. H. Allen, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. The Vincents owned lot No. 37 (sometimes in the record designated "No. 27") in the town of Thomas, Tucker county, and borrowed from the Monumental Savings & Loan Association $600 in two sums—$300 the 25th of August, 1896, and $300 the 20th of January, 1897—and executed two deeds of trust at the dates mentioned upon the said lot and premises to secure the same. In 1897 Joseph Vincent, one of the parties, became the sole owner of the said lot and conveyed the same to R. Baker; the said Baker assuming the debts aforesaid. In 1898 Baker conveyed the same to Chester Brumbaugh for $1,170, taking a check as the cash payment of $390 from said Brumbaugh, and his two notes, at 6 and 12 months, for $390 each, reserving a vendor's lien to secure the purchase money. The check was not paid. At April rules, 1901, Baker brought his suit in the circuit court of Tucker county against Clayton Brumbaugh, administrator of Chester Brumbaugh, who had died, ——— Brumbaugh, father and heir at law of Chester Brumbaugh, and the Monumental Savings & Loan Association, defendants, for the purpose of enforcing his vendor's lien; and at the October rules, 1901, said Baker filed an amended bill, alleging that the payments made by the Vincents and by himself upon the association's debt had entirely paid up the said debt, and making J. R. Collett, who had filed a mechanic's lien against Baker, a party to his suit, and also making H. J. Wagoner and E. J. Bond, trustees in the said deeds of trust, parties to the suit. The cause was referred to a commissioner to state an account, ascertaining the lands owned by Chester Brumbaugh, deceased, the nature and condition of the title thereto, the liens thereon, their amounts and priorities, and to whom owing. The commissioner reported that the said Brumbaugh had died seised of lot No. 37 in the town of Thomas; that the debt due the Monumental Savings & Loan Association, amounting to $366.50, with interest from March 5, 1902, was the first lien on said lot, and the debt due B. Baker, $1,371.44, with interest from said 5th day of March, 1902, was the second lien on said property; that the amount due John R. Collett was $75.57, to be paid out of the lien of Baker when collected. This report, not being excepted to, was confirmed on the 7th day of March, 1902, and a decree then entered to sell the said property to pay the said liens. The property was sold on the 5th day of March, 1903, by the commissioner appointed therefor, and purchased by the plaintiff, B. Baker, for $501, of which one-third, $167, was paid by him in cash, and he executed to the commissioner his two notes of like sums of $167 each, payable in three and six months, according to the terms of the decree. The sale was confirmed, without exception to said report, by decree entered March 10, 1903, and the commissioner ordered to pay out of the cash payment the costs of the suit and sale, and the remainder to be applied by him to the payment of the debts as ascertained and decreed, and that he withdraw the notes and collect the deferred payments, and "when collected pay the same on the debts remaining unpaid in the priority as specified in the decree of sale entered in this cause on the 7th day of March, 1902." On the 26th day of June, 1902, the Monumental Savings & Loan Association, in writing, by two assignments of $183.25 each, making together $366.50, the amount of the lien of the said loan association, assigned all its right, title, and interest in and to the two deeds of trust securing the said loans of $300 each, to the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company in satisfaction and settlement of the loss sustained by the Monumental Savings & Loan Association under insurance policies, numbered respectively 2,455,593 and 2,652,177, issued by said insurance company in the name of B. Baker of Parsons, W. Va., containing the usual mortgage clause in favor of said association; the building on said lot No. 37 having been destroyed by fire on the 12th day of November, 1901.

At the May rules, 1903, Baker filed his bill in the circuit court of Tucker county against Clayton Brumbaugh, administrator of Chester Brumbaugh, the Monumental Savings & Loan Association, the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company, and J. P. Scott, special commissioner, enjoining and restraining them from collecting the two notes of $167 each, and that the commissioner be required to retain all of said money then in his hands or to come into his hands from said notes, and that he be in the end directed to pay such cash then in his hands and the notes to be collected to the plaintiff, and that any further claim of the Monumental Savings & Loan Association or the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company be held to be void as against said special commissioner, and for general relief. The injunction was granted as prayed for. The Scottish Union & National Insurance Company filed its demurrer and answer, which demurrer was overruled by the court. Depositions were taken, and the cause came on to be heard on the 25th day of March, 1903, upon the bill and answer of the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company and exhibits filed therewith, and the general replication thereto, former orders and decrees, and the depositions duly taken and filed on behalf of the plaintiff, when the court held that the lien of the Monumental Savings & Loan Association on lot No. 37 was discharged by the payment to said association of the amount due it by the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company under the said policies of insurance, and the said defendant Scott, special commissioner, was restrained and enjoined from paying to the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company or the Monumental Savings & Loan Association, their agents or assigns, the money arising from the sale of the real estate in this cause; and it was decreed that said commissioner pay the money in his hands, or to come into his hands by virtue of the notes executed for the deferred payment of the purchase money as mentioned in the bill, to plaintiff, Baker, except that he pay to John R. Collett the sum of $75.57 by virtue of his mechanic's lien, and decreed plaintiff costs in this suit against the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company, from which decree the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company appealed and assigned many grounds of error.

The only question really involved in the cause is whether the appellant insurance company had a right to purchase from the Monumental Savings & Loan Association its lien for $366.50, which had been reported by the commissioner as the first lien upon the lot No. 37 and so decreed to said association, and to be subrogated to the rights of said association under said decree, or whether the payment of said sum to the association was a discharge of the lien. It is contended by counsel for appellant that the decree of March 7, 1902, fixing the priorities of the liens and making the amount in question the first lien and directing its payment in that order, was res adjudicata, and it was too late to change the priorities and to disturb its relation. It is not a question of res adjudicata, as it would be if the purpose was to change its relation as a lien, but a question of the subsequent payment of the decree by the appellant company. Plaintiff, Baker, conveyed the lot No. 37 to Chester Brumbaugh by deed dated December 10, 1898, reserving his vendor's lien for the purchase money, from which time he ceased to own the lot, or have any other or further interest in it than his vendor's lien upon it. It is true he had an insurable interest in the property for the further security of his lien, but he took out no insurance upon it. After the policies first taken out by the Vincents expired, on the 27th day of January, 1900, and the 4th day of September, 1900, the Monumental Association, without the knowledge that Baker had conveyed the property more than a year prior thereto to Chester Brumbaugh, took out two policies of insurance of $300 each in the name of B. Baker in the appellant company, loss, if any, payable to the said Monumental Association, as a further security for their said two loans. This the association had an unquestioned right to do for its own benefit. The fire which destroyed the property insured occurred November 12, 1901, and, although the policies provided that if fire occur the insured should give immediate notice of any loss thereby in writing to the insurance company and make full proofs of loss within 60 days after the fire, plaintiff, Baker, complied with none of the requirements of said policies, never pretended to make any claim on account of said policies until after he had purchased the lot at judicial sale in March, 1903, nor until he filed his bill of injunction at May rules, 1903, 18 months after the fire occurred. Indeed, it very clearly appears from the testimony of Baker that he knew nothing about the existence of the insurance policies upon which the money was paid by the appellant company for the decree assigned to it by the Monumental Savings & Loan Association.

While he says in his examination in chief that he paid insurance premiums, on his cross-examination it is made to appear that what he paid on account of insurance premiums was on the insurance taken by Vincent, during which time the first fire occurred, and he got $200 out of it, and he knew nothing of any insurance afterwards. He says he does not know that it was afterwards insured. If it was, it was by his attorneys. It is very certain that his attorneys did not take out the insurance in question in the appellant company.

The debt of the Monumental Association was paid in full, or, rather, the appellant company paid for it the full amount of the debt. In Carpenter v. Insurance Co., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 495, 10 L. Ed. 1044, it is held by the court: "No doubt can exist that the mortgagor and the mortgagee may each separately insure his own distinct interest in property against loss by fire. But there is this important distinction between the cases: That, where the mortgagee insures solely on his own account, it is but an insurance of his debt, and, if his debt is afterwards paid or extinguished, the policy ceases from that time to have any operation; and, even if the premises insured are subsequently destroyed by fire, he has no right to recover for the loss, for he sustains no damage thereby, neither can the mortgagor take advantage of the policy, for he has no interest whatsoever therein. On the other hand, if the premises are destroyed by fire before any payment or extinguishment of the mortgage, the underwriters are bound to pay the amount of the debt to the mortgagee, if it does not exceed the insurance. Upon such payment, the underwriters are entitled to an assignment of the debt from the mortgagee, and may recover the same from the mortgagor. The payment of the insurance is not a discharge of the debt, but only changes the creditor." See 27 A. & E. E. L. 263, and cases cited; Dunbrack v. Neall, 55 W. Va. 565, 47 S. E. 303; Insurance Co. v. Bank, 85 Va. 765, 8 S. E. 719, 2 L. R. A. 667, 17 Am. St. Rep. 101; Hogg's Eq. Prin., § 415.

For the reasons herein given, the decree of the circuit court of Tucker county is reversed and set aside, the injunction dissolved, and the plaintiff's bill dismissed.

(38 W. Va. 418)

LAIDLEY et al. v. REYNOLDS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—SETTING ASIDE—PLEADING LIMITATIONS.

A bill to subject land of a wife to pay a debt of her husband, on the claim that it was paid for by the husband's money and conveyed to the wife with intent to defraud creditors on the part of the husband, must charge notice on the part of the wife of the husband's fraudulent intent, in order to make it a bill for relief on the claim of fraud in fact; otherwise, it is to be regarded a bill to annul a voluntary conveyance, and the statute limiting suits to set aside a voluntary conveyance to five years applies.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 24, Cent. Dig. Fraudulent Conveyances, § 779.]

2. JUDGMENT—LIEN.

The lien of a judgment exists, though execution be suspended by the death of the creditor, and may be enforced in equity without revival.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 30, Cent. Dig. Judgment, § 1425.]

3. SAME—ENFORCEMENT IN EQUITY.

When a suit in equity is brought in one county to enforce a judgment upon real estate in that county and also on land in another county, jurisdiction as to the land in such other county is not lost because, on the facts, the court finds that the land in the county of the suit is not liable, but it may proceed against the land in that other county.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Bill by James M. Laidley, administrator, and others, against William C. Reynolds and others. Decree for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. S. Laidley, for appellants. J. M. Payne and C. M. Alderson, for appellees.

BRANNON, P. James M. Laidley recovered a judgment in 1874 in the county court of Kanawha county against William C. Reynolds. Laidley brought a chancery suit in 1896 in the circuit court of Kanawha county, stating in his bill that by deed dated 25th January, 1892, Mary D. McClung and her husband had conveyed to Annie L. Reynolds, wife of William C. Reynolds, two lots of land in the town of Ruffner for the consideration of $800, as recited in the deed, and that by deed dated 30th December, 1884, Julia Hopkins and others had conveyed to Annie L. Reynolds a tract of 340 acres of land lying in Boone county, and charging that William C. Reynolds had purchased and paid for both of said properties with his own money, and that his wife had paid none of the considerations therefor, and that Reynolds had procured the conveyances to be made to his wife with intent to defraud his creditors. Reynolds and wife filed answers denying all the charges of fraud, and pleading the statute of limitation of five years and laches in bar of the suit. The case was heard upon the bill, answers, and depositions, and a decree was made exonerating the Ruffner lots from liability, but subjecting the Boone county land to sale to pay the judgment; and Reynolds and wife appealed because the decree subjected the Boone county land to sale, and the plaintiffs cross-assigned error because the decree did not hold the Ruffner lots liable to the judgment.

The plaintiffs' bill is defective in failing to allege that Annie L. Reynolds had notice of the fraudulent intent of her husband in procuring the deeds to be made to her, according to the principles laid down in Scraggs v. Hill, 43 W. Va. 162, 27 S. E. 310, holding that, "a creditor cannot set aside a voluntary conveyance, after five years from the making thereof, without proof of actual fraud participated in by the parties to the transaction." The syllabus includes both parties as participating in the fraud to take it out of the statute. The opinion pointedly says so. The question depends upon the construction of sections 1 and 2, c. 74, Code 1899, and section 14, c. 104. One construction is that section 1, c. 74, annuls a transfer made with intent to defraud creditors, whether voluntary or on valuable consideration, saving only purchasers for value without notice. Taken alone, that section would avoid every fraudulent deed not on consideration valuable in law. The law (outside of section 14) is surely as laid down in Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances, § 239: "The validity of a voluntary conveyance depends upon the intent of the party making it, and not on the motive with which it is received. The proviso at the end of the statute only extends to transfers made upon a good consideration, and the only consideration which is good within the meaning of the statute is a valuable consideration. It is the innocent purchaser, and not the innocent donee, that is protected. It is the motive of the giver, and not the knowledge of the acceptor, that is to determine the validity of the transfer. If any evidence of the grantee's participation in the fraudulent intent of the grantor were necessary, the mere acceptance of the transfer would be sufficient; for the law would presume such participation from this fact alone. A donee, who sets up a voluntary conveyance when it would, if established, defeat creditors, participates in and carries out the intent of the donor." To the same effect is Wait on Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 200, 208. Thus it matters not whether the grantee in a voluntary conveyance has or has not notice of the grantor's evil intent, because he has paid nothing, and the law gives preference to creditors over him for that reason. Section 1 is sweeping, since it declares all fraudulent transfers void, excepting only innocent purchasers. Grantees in voluntary conveyances are left under the sweep of the broad language of section 1. The fraud of the grantor alone taints the act, and his fraud is by law attributed to the grantee, as if he had notice of it. He is in no better plight than the grantor because he has paid nothing. McCue v. McCue, 41 W. Va. 156, 23 S. E. 689. Under this theory the first section deals only with certain transfers, namely, those infected with fraudulent intent, whether that intent is only in the mind of the grantor or in the minds of both grantor and grantee. Under this theory notice by the grantee of the grantor's fraudulent intent is immaterial, and therefore need not be alleged or proven.

But those who contest this theory might answer with the question, What about section 14, c. 104, saying that "no gift, conveyance, assignment, transfer or charge, which is not on consideration deemed valuable in law, shall be avoided, either in whole or in part, for that cause only, unless within five years after it is made suit be brought for that purpose"? Those who advocate the construction just stated might respond to the question that section 2, c. 74, declares that "every transfer or charge which is not upon consideration deemed valuable in law shall be void as to creditors whose debts shall have been contracted at the time it was made." They may say that section 2 deals with a different class of transfers from those dealt with by section 1; that section 2 brands as void only those transfers that are simply voluntary and condemns them only because voluntary; that it refers only to those transfers not tainted by fraudulent intent either in grantor or grantee, but those made in innocence on the part of both parties. They might say that section 1 has one office to perform, and section 2 a different office. The one condemns all fraudulent deeds, including voluntary deeds, though the fraudulent intent move only the grantor. The other condemns deeds wholly free from fraudulent intent on the part of both parties. They might argue that, when section 14 of chapter 104 gives the limitation to suits to set aside a transfer not on consideration deemed valuable in law, it means those transfers mentioned in section 2, c. 74, and that this is shown, not only by the description of the transfer as being "not upon consideration deemed valuable in law," found in both sections, but also because section 14 declares that no conveyance "which is not on consideration deemed valuable in law shall be avoided * * * for that cause only, unless within five years." Those words "for that cause only"—that is, because on consideration not valuable—show that the limitation is intended to apply only to deeds avoided by the statute simply and only because voluntary.

The other theory or construction is that section 1 applies to or includes a voluntary conveyance made with fraudulent intent on the part of the grantor, and that section 14 gives a limitation of five years protecting every voluntary conveyance, fraudulent or not fraudulent. It says that a transfer by a grantor intending fraud, where there is no valuable consideration, is just as much a voluntary conveyance as where both parties are innocent of fraud, and that this statute of limitation was meant to protect the innocent grantee, and him alone, and could not have been intended to protect the fraudulent grantor, because he has nothing to be protected. It says that it is this section 14 that rules, and operates to deny the application of the principles laid down in the quotation above from Bump. What difference whether there is or is not notice of fraud? Upon mature consideration I think the first construction is sound, and so think some other members of the court; but Scraggs v. Hill, 43 W. Va. 162, 27 S. E. 310, has given a different construction to the statute, and, this construction having stood for years without legislative intervention, we will adhere to it. McCue v. McCue, 41 W. Va. 151, 23 S. E. 689, holds the same as the Scraggs Case. It admits (on page 156 of 41 W. Va., page 690 of 23 S. E.) that the voluntary conveyance is, under section 2, conclusively fraudulent, whether the grantee had notice or not; that means for five years. After five years, the syllabus says, there must be fraud in fact; that is, in both parties, because the opinion (page 159 of 41 W. Va., page 692 of 23 S. E.) says: "Unless notice of the debtor's actual fraudulent intent, if any, of his dishonest intention, or complicity therein, be in some way brought home to the wife, the creditor may no longer go against this land of the wife. The lawmakers give the creditor a plain and sure remedy, but upon the express condition that he brings his suit within five years before the grantee became a quasi purchaser for value." To hold otherwise than as we do, we must overrule both the Scraggs and the McCue Cases, which we hesitate to do, especially as the court is divided three to two.

The argument is made that as the judgment creditor died after judgment, and it does not appear to have been revived in the name of his administrator, its lien has ceased. It is not necessary to hold that this is a lien for the purposes of this case. A general debt would do just as well. But very plainly a judgment lien on land does not cease to be such because of the death of its owner, because section 5, c. 139, Code 1899, makes it an absolute lien. The judgment is a lien by mere force of the statute. When once it fastens on the land, it sticks to it notwithstanding the death of either party, and may be enforced in equity without revival; revival being necessary only for the purpose of issuing execution. The lien does not come from an execution. It is not a part of the action in which the judgment was rendered. It comes from the statute, and may be enforced always in equity under section 7. Maxwell v. Leeson, 50 W. Va. 361, 40 S. E. 420, 88 Am. St. Rep. 875; Burbridge v. Higgins, 6 Grat. 120; Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Grat. 44; James v. Life, 92 Va. 702, 24 S. E. 275; Black on Judgments, § 467.

The point is made that, when the circuit court found that the Ruffner lots were not liable, that instant the Kanawha circuit court lost jurisdiction and could not decree against the Boone land. This is rested on chapter 123, § 1, Code 1899, saying that a suit to subject land to a debt must be brought in the county where the land is. Plainly there is nothing in this point. The bill proceeds against both tracts. They both are parts of the subject-matter of the suit, both enter into the jurisdiction, one being in Kanawha county, thus giving lawful jurisdiction in that county, and the fact that one property could not, because of want of evidence, be made liable, did not oust the jurisdiction once acquired. Having jurisdiction for one purpose, the court gives full relief upon all matter of the suit. Besides, having jurisdiction, it has power to sell land in any county by the letter of section 1, c. 132. For the reason that the suit was not begun within five years after the deed for the Boone land, and is barred as a suit to set aside a deed merely voluntary, we cannot hold it liable, for want of allegation and evidence of notice by Mrs. Reynolds of the alleged fraudulent intent of her husband. This prevents charging the land on the ground of actual fraudulent intent. As to the Ruffner lots, upon the evidence we conclude that they were not purchased with the means of the husband.

We are asked to remand the case to allow amendment of the bill. To allow this it must appear from the proof that a case exists which, on a bill charging Mrs. Reynolds with knowledge or participation in the fraud, could be sustained. Lamb v. Cecil, 25 W. Va. 288. But the proof does not show that Mrs. Reynolds knew of her husband's indebtedness to the plaintiff—does not fix guilt upon her. We cannot guess that such evidence exists, so that upon amendment of the bill it would be sustained by evidence. We cannot remand to let the plaintiff hunt up new evidence.

Therefore we reverse the decree and dismiss the bill.

(189 N. C. 643)

STATE v. HOLLOMAN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. HIGHWAYS—USE—REGULATION—NOTICE.

Laws 1905, p. 292, c. 259, requires persons desiring to use the highways of certain towns for heavy hauling to procure a license on payment of $15 per wagon; and section 23 (page 298) provides that section 17 (page 297), making it a crime for any person to use the roads for heavy hauling without such license, shall not be enforced in any township, unless a majority of the members of the board of supervisors of the township shall vote to enforce the same. Held that, where the board of supervisors of a township voted to enforce the provisions of the act, it was no defense to a prosecution against a person for violating the same that no written notice of the action of the board had been served on him.

2. SAME—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

Laws 1905, p. 292, c. 259, provides that persons desiring to use a public road for heavy hauling shall procure a license and pay an annual vehicle license fee of $15, which should be placed to the credit of the board of supervisors of the township, to be used as other funds of the township, and declares that any person violating the same shall be guilty of a crime, the penalties for which shall be used for the benefit of the road fund of the township. Section 12 authorizes the levy of a county tax for road purposes to be used in the township from which it is derived, and section 17 declares that the act shall not be enforced in any township, unless a majority of the members of the board of supervisors shall vote to enforce the same. Held, that such act was a valid exercise of the power of the Legislature to prescribe by what methods the roads should be used, worked, and kept in repair.

Appeal from Superior Court, Hertford County; Peebles, Judge.

Luther Holloman was charged with violating Laws 1905, p. 292, c. 259, regulating the use of public roads, and from an order adjudging him not guilty the state appeals. Reversed.

The Attorney General, for the State.

OLARK, C. J. The General Assembly (Laws 1905, p. 292, c. 259) prescribed a carefully drawn method for working the public roads in Hertford county. Section 17 (page 297) thereof provides "that any person, firm or corporation desiring to use any of the public roads of a township for carrying on his or its business of hauling mill logs or timber or other heavy material with log wagons, log carts or other heavy vehicles shall first obtain a license for this purpose from the board of supervisors of the township in which he or they may desire to operate and make use of the roads by paying an annual license tax of fifteen dollars for each wagon or cart or vehicle of the kind above described to be used, which tax shall be paid to the treasurer of the board fund and placed to the credit of the board of supervisors of the township, to be used by the board as other funds for said township. Any person violating this section shall be guilty of a crime and liable to a penalty of fifty dollars to be recovered in an action by the board of supervisors of roads of the township where the offense took place, for the benefit of the road fund of that township." And section 23 (page 298) provides "that section 17 of this act shall not be enforced in any township unless a majority of the members of the board of supervisors of that township shall vote to enforce the same." Section 12 (page 296) authorizes the levy by the county commissioners of a county tax on property for road purposes, such tax to be used in the township from which it is derived; and section 24 (page 298) provides that one-half the net proceeds of all dispensaries for the sale of liquor in the county shall be apportioned per capita among the several townships and used by the board of road supervisors of each township, to be used solely for repairing the public roads therein.

The special verdict finds that the majority of the justices of Murfreesboro township, on June 3, 1905, under authority of section 23 of said act, adopted the provisions of section 17 above set out, and imposed the license tax of $15 upon all persons or corporations using the roads of said township for carrying on their business of hauling mill logs or timber or other heavy material with log wagons, log carts, and other heavy vehicles, and that the defendant had verbal notice, both from a justice of the peace and member of the board of road supervisors of said township, and also from the secretary of said board, of such action, and that the law was in force requiring a license tax of $15; but the defendant nevertheless continued the business of hauling logs over the public roads in said township with log wagon and team after having received the verbal notices aforesaid, without taking out license or paying the license tax, until later, upon receiving written notice that the board had refused to rescind the order, he discontinued using the public roads for hauling logs with log wagons. As the law did not require written notice of the action of the board under section 23, the defendant cannot avail himself of the fact that no written notice was served upon him. The special verdict finds that he had notice that the law had been put in force in said township by virtue of the authority conferred by section 23 of the act, above set out. The public roads are for ordinary use, and it is common knowledge that, when used by heavy vehicles hauling heavy logs and timber over them, the roads are cut up, and require an extraordinary expenditure to be kept in order. The general public might well complain at being called upon to bear this additional expense for the profit of lumber companies using the road, not for ordinary travel and usage, but for their individual benefit, not as members of the community, but in the prosecution of a special and usually temporary, but profitable, business.

That the General Assembly can provide a special road law and method of working the public roads for a county or several counties, or a township or other locality, and make the adoption of such system depend upon the acceptance or rejection thereof by the people or the landholders (as with "no fence" laws), or by the official boards of such county, township, or locality, is well settled. This is the flexible "local option" system which gives the greatest freedom of local self-government, and has been applied already to the sale of liquor, to fence laws, to the sale of seed cotton, to cattle running at large, to variations in the methods of electing town commissioners and in the mode of selection of county commissioners, to local provisions for public schools, to dispensaries, to close season for game, to this very matter of working the public roads, and in many other instances. State v. Sharp, 125 N. C. 632, 34 S. E. 264, 74 Am. St. Rep. 663, and cases there cited. This license tax is simply a mode of regulating the use of the public roads and requiring that those desirous of using them for extraordinary purposes, as hauling heavy lumber and logs over the roads in unusually heavy vehicles, shall not do so without taking out a license for such unusual and extraordinary and injurious use of the public highway, and paying a license tax for the privilege. This statute prescribes that the license tax shall be "placed to the credit of the board of supervisors of the township, to be used by the board as other funds for said township." As all the funds of each board of road supervisors are to be used "solely for road purposes in its township," the evident purpose is to use these license taxes to make good the extra cost of road maintenance entailed by the use of the public road by heavy vehicles in hauling heavy logs and timber by these lumber companies and others. In State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477, 2 S. E. 458, 2 Am. St. Rep. 305, it was held that "the Legislature has complete power to regulate the highways in the state, and may prescribe what vehicles may be used on them, with a view to the safety of passengers over them and the preservation of the roads." This power may be conferred upon local governing agencies. Elliot, R. & S. (2d Ed.) § 424; State v. Summerfield, 107 N. C. 895, 12 S. E. 114. And its being put into effect can be made dependent upon the action of the board of supervisors. State v. Barringer, 110 N. C. 525, 14 S. E. 781; State v. Chambers, 98 N. C. 600. This statute deprives no citizen of any right to use the highway. It does not restrain trade, nor is it oppressive. Heavily loaded vehicles cut up and injure the public road, and a reasonable license tax, the proceeds of which are appropriated to repairing the damage thus produced, is exceedingly equitable.

The method of providing for working and keeping in repair the public roads is a matter solely for the legislative department. The old system of working the roads by conscription of labor was exceedingly inequitable, because it threw the cost of road maintenance upon those deriving the least benefit therefrom, the laboring element. This system was handed down to us by our British forefathers, in whose government that class had small voice, if any, in the adjustment of public burdens. It was a part of the "trinoda necessitas" under the Roman law, and in France, where that system of working the roads was known as "corvées," it was one of the great grievances which found utterance in the great French Revolution and was swept away. State v. Covington, 125 N. C. 644, 34 S. E. 272. The change to working the roads by taxation has been complete in most civilized countries, but has been slower in this state than in most. This is fairer than working by compulsory labor, but is far from being entirely equitable, since the taxable property of individuals rarely bears direct proportion to the benefits received from the use of the public roads. An ideal tax probably would be one proportioned to the benefits received by each, but this would be evidently impracticable. The license tax here imposed for raising a fund to be paid by those making extraordinary use of the roadways, to be applied to repairing the extra wear and tear of the roads caused thereby, is an approximation to the just rule of taxation for roads in proportion to benefits received. In many other states there has been similar legislation, which has been upheld by the courts. The cases presenting the question are mostly those in which there has been an abatement of the road tax in consideration of the use of broad tires, an abatement granted by reason of the lessened wear and tear of the roads when those are used. People v. James, 16 Hun, 426; Utica v. Blakeslee, 46 How. Prac. 165; Gartside v. East St. Louis, 43 Ill. 47; City of St. Louis v. Green, 70 Mo. 562; Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591; Nagle v. Augusta, 5 Ga. 546; Com. v. Mulhall, 162 Mass. 496, 39 N. E. 183, 44 Am. St. Rep. 387; Harrison v. Elgin, 53 Ill. App. 452; and others.

It is for the legislative department to prescribe by what methods the roads shall be worked and kept in repair—whether by labor, by taxation on property, or by funds raised from license taxes, or by a mixture of two or more of these methods; and this may vary in different counties and localities to meet the wishes of the people of each, and can be changed by subsequent Legislatures. This matter has been fully discussed in State v. Sharp, 125 N. C. 632, 634, 34 S. E. 264, 74 Am. St. Rep. 663. Under this statute the state prosecutes for the misdemeanor, and the board of supervisors can sue for the penalty. State v. Parker, 91 N. C. 650; State v. Bloodworth, 94 N. C. 918; State v. Taylor, 133 N. C. 755, 46 S. E. 5; School Directors v. Asheville, 137 N. C. 510, 50 S. E. 279.

Upon the special verdict the court should have instructed the jury to find the defendant guilty.

Reversed.

(140 N. C. 83)

BALL & SHEPPARD v. PAQUIN et ux.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. PLEADING—GENERAL DEMURRER.

A demurrer not specifying wherein the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is general, and not allowable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, §§ 475, 477.]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE—ACTION AGAINST WIFE—PLEADING—DEFENSE OF COVERTURE—DEMURRER.

A demurrer on the ground that defendant was a married woman is properly overruled, where her coverture does not appear in the complaint.

3. SAME—CONTRACTS.

Under Const. art. 10, § 6, providing that the property, real or personal, of a married woman, whether acquired before or after marriage shall remain her sole and separate estate, and Code, § 1826, providing that no woman during coverture shall be capable of making any contract to affect her real or personal estate, except for her necessary personal expenses, etc., without the written consent of her husband, a contract of a married woman, admittedly for the improvement of her separate real estate, assented to by her husband, and where she was privately examined apart from her husband, is binding on her separate real estate.

4. SAME—MECHANIC'S LIEN—ENFORCEMENT.

Under Const. art. 10, § 6, providing that the property, real and personal, of a married woman, whether acquired before or after marriage, shall remain her separate estate; section 3, relating to the homestead exemption; Code, § 1826, providing that no married woman during coverture shall make any contract to affect her real or personal estate without the written consent of her husband; section 1781, subjecting all buildings to liens for work and materials furnished in their construction; and Acts 1901 p. 859, c. 617, expressly extending the lien law to the property of married women—a lien may be enforced on the separate property of a married woman for work and material furnished under a contract for its improvement executed with her husband's consent, and where she was examined apart from her husband.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Justice, Judge.

Action by Ball & Sheppard against Paul Paquin and wife to enforce a mechanic's lien on the separate property of the wife under a contract for its improvement. From a judgment for the plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The plaintiffs allege that the feme defendant, Hannah B. Paquin, was on or before October 15, 1900, the owner of a lot in the city of Asheville on Haywood street, known as the "Coffin Lot"; that she and the male defendant had begun the erection of a house on the lot to be used as a residence, to be fitted up with lavatories and equipped with a steam-heating apparatus and a number of tubs for both hot and cold baths; that said residence is known as "The Halthenon"; that on the 15th October, 1900, the defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiffs, whereby the plaintiffs were to complete certain plumbing in the building. The terms upon which the work was to be done are set forth, and the defendants "agree that upon completion of the work in a good workmanlike condition, they will pay to the said parties of the second part the contract price for the same, as hereinbefore set forth." The plaintiffs were permitted to amend in this court by alleging that said contract was in writing and was executed according to law, and that a charge and lien were created thereby on the land upon which the building was being erected. They allege that the work was performed and the materials furnished by them in accordance with the contract; that defendants made payments on the contract price, leaving due thereon at the time this action was instituted the sum of $1,337.04; that prior to the commencement of this action, the plaintiffs filed a lien on the lot and building, in the office of the clerk of the superior court, in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the state, a copy of the lien is attached to the complaint. They demanded judgment for the balance due and the enforcement of the lien.

Defendants answered, saying that they had no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegation in regard to the partnership of plaintiffs; that the male defendant had no interest in the real estate other than as husband of the feme defendant. They deny the other material allegations of the complaint, and for a further defense say that the defendant Paul B. Paquin entered into the contract with the plaintiffs by which they were to do "the plumbing on the building which was being erected on the property of the defendant Hannah B. Paquin, on Haywood street." They allege that the work was not done according to the contract, and that by reason of the failure to do so the defendants have sustained damage, etc., demanding judgment against the plaintiffs for $443, amount overpaid, and $1,000 damages sustained by the defendants. The plaintiffs filed a reply to the counterclaim. The pleadings are verified. The defendants upon the opening of the cause demurred ore tenus to the complaint for that it did not set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. His honor reserved the question raised by the demurrer, and submitted a series of issues to the jury presenting the controverted questions of fact. The defendants tendered the general issues which his honor declined to submit, and they excepted. The jury found upon the issues that the plaintiffs furnished, after October 15, 1904, material and labor on the building, the cost price and value of which was $1,222.39; and that the defendants were entitled to recover $50 on their counterclaim. From a judgment on the verdict, the defendants appealed.

Merrick & Barnard, for appellants. Tucker & Murphy, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). The demurrer is general, in that it does not specify wherein the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This, under the Code practice, is not allowable. His honor could have overruled it for that cause. Elam v. Barnes, 110 N. C. 73, 14 S. E. 621. We assume, however, that the real ground of the demurrer was that the feme defendant was a married woman. Baker v. Garris, 108 N. C. 218, 13 S. E. 2. The difficulty encountered by the defendant is that it does not appear, on the face of the complaint, that she was a married woman at the date of the contract or the commencement of the action. The pleaders appear to have carefully avoided this allegation. His honor properly overruled the demurrer.

The feme defendant does not plead her coverture, nor does it appear by the answer that she is covert, except that the male defendant informs the court that nothing can be made out of him because he has no interest in the dwelling house and lot, save as the husband of the feme defendant. He says, however, that he alone contracted for the work on the house which the written contract declares was being erected, "by the said Hannah B. Paquin." How all of this is we do not know, except as the jury have found. The plaintiffs put the contract of October 15th in evidence by which it appears that they had theretofore furnished some material, and done some work for the defendants on the dwelling on the lot of the feme defendant "in the city of Asheville on Haywood street, known as the 'Coffin Lot,'" being erected by the said Hannah B. Paquin. The terms upon which the balance of the work is to be done and material furnished are set forth, and the defendants promise to pay promptly the amount due on the contract. It is signed by the defendants, acknowledged by them, and the private examination of the feme defendant taken and certified by a notary public in the manner and form prescribed for executing deeds of conveyance of real estate. The jury have found that there is due the plaintiff for material furnished and work done on the dwelling, since the execution of the contract, the sum of $1,337. In this court the plaintiffs were permitted to amend the complaint to correspond with the proof.

The defendants contend that they may have, use, and enjoy the labor and material furnished, by which the dwelling is supplied with lavatories, hot and cold baths, and pay nothing for it; that the right to do all of this is secured to them by the Constitution and laws of this state, because the property is the separate estate of the feme defendant. If this contention is correct, it would seem that our Constitution and laws are sadly in need of radical amendment. The appeal renders it necessary to examine the statutory law and decisions of this court relied upon to sustain the defendant's exception to the judgment. It would serve no good purpose to review the numerous cases which have been before this court, in which creditors have endeavored to collect debts from married women. The construction of the Constitution and laws has received the most anxious and careful consideration of the judges who have sat upon this bench. We find that the same effort has been made in England, and in many of the states of the Union, to break away from the common-law conception of the status of married women, in regard to their property rights and contractual capacity. An interesting history of the course of parliamentary and judicial thought and action on the subject is given by Professor Dicey in "Law and Opinion in England," 369; Pomeroy's Eq. (3d Ed.) § 1098 et seq. Mr. Bishop (volume 1, § 847) says: "That since the confusion of tongues in the Tower of Babel, there has been nothing more noteworthy in the same line than the discordant and ever shifting utterances of the judicial mind on the subject." Flaum v. Wallace, 103 N. C. 306, 9 S. E. 567. It is but natural, and not to be regretted, that under our system of jurisprudence, in which, by the operation of the three agencies, legal fiction, equity, and legislation, the law is brought into harmony with society (Maine, Anc. Law), the movement is slow, and at times unsatisfactory. In no court in this country was the common-law conception of the marital relation with all of its incidents more clearly and tenaciously retained than ours. Prior to 1848 we find no statute interfering with or limiting the common-law right and power of the husband over his wife's property. In respect to dower, the law was so changed that the husband could sell his land without her consent and deprive her of "her third." This was changed by the act of 1866-67, and dower as at common law restored. It is therefore not unnatural that when, by the Constitution of 1868, an entirely new theory was adopted by which it is declared that "the real and personal property of any female in this state acquired before marriage, and all property, real and personal, to which she may after marriage become in any manner entitled, shall be and remain the sole and separate estate and property of such female," etc. (Const. art. 10, § 6), the court should have moved with caution in giving it operation.

It would seem that this language carries with it, as an essential attribute of ownership of the wife, the power to deal with and make contracts in regard to such property, except as expressly restricted by the same instrument, as a feme sole. This was clearly intimated in Withers v. Sparrow, 66 N. C. 129. That expression was doubtless taken as an indication that this court would so hold when the question was fairly presented. At the session of 1868-69 we find no legislation upon the subject of married women. The effect of the holding, as foreshadowed in Withers v. Sparrow, supra, would have been to adopt the English and New York doctrine, by which a married woman could contract with respect to her separate estate as a feme sole. At the session of 1871-72 (Acts 1871-72, p. 328, c. 193) an act was passed "concerning marriages, marriage settlements, and the contracts of married women." The act is comprehensive in its scope, and evidently drawn with care. The subject-matter, as published in the Public Laws of 1871-72, is classified under "headings"; the third being, "What Contracts a Married Woman may Make with Strangers." Section 17, p. 334 (being section 1826 of the Code). "No woman during her coverture shall be capable of making any contract to affect the real or personal estate, except for her necessary personal expenses or the support of her family, or such as may be necessary in order to pay her debts existing before marriage, without the written consent of her husband, unless she be a free trader, as hereinafter allowed." It would seem that the Legislature enacted this statute with full recognition of the radical change made by the Constitution, and the clear suggestion by the court that the power to contract, as a feme sole, was conferred as a necessary incident to the power to own property "as if unmarried." It was not supposed that the words "devise" and "with the written assent of the husband convey," used in the Constitution, referred to her power to enter into executory contracts. For the purpose of throwing around her the protection of her husband's counsel and advice, the Legislature declared that, with certain exceptions, she should not contract "without the written assent of her husband." In the absence of controlling decisions to the contrary, we should unanimously hold that she could make all manner of contracts with the written assent of her husband, and that for breach of them her property was liable as if she were a feme sole. The cases which came to this court during the years 1868 to 1876 clearly indicate that such was the construction of the statute by the profession and laymen. The first case is Harris v. Jenkins (1875) 72 N. C. 183. The feme plaintiff signed a sheriff's bond as security without the written assent of the husband. The case came clearly within the words of the act of 1871-72, and the court did not hesitate to hold that she was not bound. Pippen v. Wesson (1876) 74 N. C. 437, presented the question for the first time, whether, under the Constitution and the act of 1871-72, a married woman could, with the written assent of her husband, enter into an executory contract for breach of which she could be sued to judgment, and her property subjected to sale under final process. It will be noted that the statute uses the word "contract." There is no suggestion therein of any other form of obligation or remedy for breach thereof. This court held that no power to enter into an executory contract was conferred by the Constitution or statute on a married woman; that the only change made in her contractual capacity was that her separate estate, formerly called her equitable separate estate and property secured by the intervention of a trustee, was by the Constitution made her statutory separate estate, her husband occupying the position of trustee; that the only way in which such separate estate or property could be subjected to her engagements, even with the written assent of her husband, was by a specific charge or by showing a beneficial consideration; and that thereby her separate estate was charged with her obligations, not upon the theory that she had contracted a debt, but that her engagement, thus made, constituted a charge which the courts of equity had theretofore enforced.

It is not our purpose to do more than say that this decision was based upon the view that neither the Constitution nor the statute enlarged her common-law contractual capacity, and that the statute was disabling, rather than enabling in its provisions, except as to the class specified. Whatever, in the light of thought and experience of 30 years, may be said of this decision, it became the accepted law of this state, and its fundamental principle with modification, has been followed. A number of important and disturbing results have flown from it. A constant struggle has been going on to find some adjustment of the law to the inevitable result of the radical change made by the Constitution. Married women to-day are the owners of property, both real and personal, worth millions of dollars. They employ tenants and croppers and cultivate thousands of farms, engage in merchandise, conduct hotels, boarding houses and almost every kind of business suited and sometimes unsuited to their mental and physical capacity. The largest possible powers have been conferred upon them in respect to the control of their property, as in Manning v. Manning, 79 N. C. 293, 28 Am. Rep. 324, and many other cases. It has been found by an experience of 30 years that the most unexpected and often startling results have come from this condition. As a matter of everyday experience, we know that a very large portion of the industrial and commercial life of the state is under the control and subject to their judgment and opinion. It is possible that nine-tenths of the contracts entered into by them are not enforceable in the courts. In Harvey v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352, 45 S. E. 644, upon a review of and in accordance with all former decisions, this court held that a note executed by husband and wife, charging her separate estate, is sufficient to bind her separate personal property; that, in the absence of a privy examination, it did not bind her separate real estate. In that case it appeared that the consideration enured to the benefit of her estate. In Flaum v. Wallace, supra, such a note was held binding on her separate personal estate, although not for her benefit. This court took one step forward in the enfranchisement of married women by holding, in a well-considered opinion, in Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784, 67 L. R. A. 461, that the restriction upon her right to convey her land, requiring the written assent of her husband, did not apply to her separate personal estate; hence, it is now the law of this state that she can sell and transfer her personal property as a feme sole. It is unnecessary to make further reference to the numerous decisions of the court in which her power to deal with her separate personal estate is discussed. Flaum v. Wallace and Vann v. Edwards, supra, settle her rights in this respect.

It is said, however, that a different principle obtains when it is sought to subject her separate real estate to her contractual obligations. While expressions had been used by some of the judges indicating an opinion that she could do so only by a contract executed with the formalities prescribed for the conveyance of her land, no decision was made to that effect until 1890, when the question underwent a careful and thorough consideration in Farthing v. Shields, 106 N. C. 289, 10 S. E. 998. There, Mr. Justice Shepherd, referring to Flaum v. Wallace, said: "We were greatly influenced in so holding because of the power of the wife to absolutely dispose of her statutory separate personal estate by the simple assent of her husband, and we deemed it but reasonable that if she could so absolutely dispose of such property, she might exercise the lesser power of charging it, either expressly or by necessary implication. But when we come to the statutory separate real estate, the foregoing reason fails, because under our statute law the wife and husband cannot dispose of such property unless the former has been privately examined, separate and apart from her husband." The learned justice concludes that the power to charge her separate estate is measured by her power to dispose of the same; hence if she had expressly charged the debt in that case with the written assent of her husband, "it would have been of no avail without privy examination." In further discussing the law he says that the lands of a married woman cannot be charged by any undertaking on her part "unless it be evidenced by deed with privy examination." This, for the reason that she will not be permitted to do indirectly what she cannot do directly. Scott v. Battle, 85 N. C. 184, 39 Am. Rep. 694. Similar expressions are used in Thurber v. LaRoque, 105 N. C. 301, 11 S. E. 460; Williams v. Walker, 111 N. C. 604, 16 S. E. 706; Loan Ass'n v. Black, 119 N. C. 327, 25 S. E. 975; Bank v. Fries, 121 N. C. 241, 28 S. E. 350. In Weathers v. Borders, 121 N. C. 387, 28 S. E. 524, the contract was not in writing, and of course there was no privy examination. The expression that she could only charge her real estate by "a regular conveyance executed as required by the statute, etc.," was not necessary to the decision of the case, and, as we have seen, is not required by any decision of this court. When the question came directly before the court, it was said that the cases did not hold it to be necessary that a mortgage should be executed. Bank v. Ireland, 122 N. C. 571, 29 S. E. 835. It will be found in all these cases that the question whether it was necessary that the form of the contract should be a conveyance was not presented. It is evident that the judges were referring to the formalities with which such contracts should be executed. In Bank v. Howell, 118 N. C. 271, 23 S. E. 1005, it is said that she cannot charge her separate real estate "except upon privy examination." In Bank v. Ireland, 122 N. C. 571, 29 S. E. 835, the present Chief Justice, writing in that respect for a unanimous court, referring to Farthing v. Shields, supra, and other cases, said: "Those decisions do not require that the charge shall be made by mortgage." In so far as it was intimated that no privy examination was necessary, the then Chief Justice and other justices did not concur.

The conclusion is irresistible that where the contract has all of the elements required by the statute and is reduced to writing, assented to by the husband, and the wife is privately examined separate and apart from her husband, it is binding upon her separate real estate. In this record we have such a contract, executed with all the formalities required for conveying the property, describing it with sufficient certainty to convey, the consideration clearly set forth, admittedly for the improvement of her separate real estate. Why is such estate not bound for the breach of her express contract, by necessary implication? It is true that she does not expressly charge it upon either real or personal estate, but she refers to her separate real estate, describing it as her property, and stating that she is erecting a dwelling thereon, and that the work and material contracted for are for such dwelling. Language not so strong was held in Bates v. Sulton, 117 N. C. 94, 23 S. E. 261, sufficient to charge her personal estate. Brinkley v. Ballance, 126 N. C. 393, 35 S. E. 631. The decisions, while not in all respects harmonious, indicate a movement of the court towards bringing the law in this respect into harmony with our social, industrial, and commercial conditions. The Legislature has to some extent responded to this demand. In so far as it is within our province to do so, we desire to express our opinion that it is desirable that the Legislature simplify the subject by giving to married women full power to enter into executory contracts, binding their property, real, and personal, "as if unmarried", removing all doubt and uncertainty either as to the form of the contract, its execution, or remedy for breach. How far they should be restricted or protected by requiring the assent of the husband is worthy of the most careful consideration. It is manifest that the court, in its desire to so construe the statutes as to prevent injustice and wrong, has been hampered by the early decisions made when we were passing from the old into the new conception of the status of married women, in respect to their rights of property and power to contract. The wisdom of the experiment was seriously doubted by many of our wisest men, both lawyers and laymen. It was probably well, when confronted with two cases in which married women had signed bonds as security, that the court should move cautiously. We do not feel at liberty, nor is it necessary in this case, to overrule any of the decisions made in this court upon the subject. This, with the exception of Bank v. Ireland, supra, is the first case in which an executory contract was executed by the wife with privy examination. She was held liable there, because there was an express charge. In this case, in which the contract is executed with privy examination, we hold that she is liable upon an implied charge upon the separate real estate. We have not overlooked Dougherty v. Sprinkle, 88 N. C. 300, nor Thompson v. Taylor, 110 N. C. 70, 14 S. E. 513. In neither of these cases was there any express contract by the married woman.

We are of the opinion and so hold that upon the pleadings and contract, his honor correctly held that the separate real estate of the feme defendant was bound for the amount found to be due by the jury. The plaintiffs are entitled to enforce their lien on her property. This court, in Thompson v. Taylor, supra, said that the lien, given by the Constitution and statute for work and labor done and material furnished, was predicated upon a valid contract, and, as a married woman had no capacity to make such a contract, her property could not be subjected to such lien. This was not the point in the case. The feme covert had not made any contract, either express or implied. In Smaw v. Cohen, 95 N. C. 85, it was held that an action against a married woman to enforce a lien for an amount less than $200 was within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. The court, as we construe the opinion, did not pass upon the validity of the contract. Mr. Justice Shepherd, in Farthing v. Shields, supra, intimated that the lien could be enforced upon a simple contract by the married woman because of the lien law. However this may be, we are of the opinion that by construing section 6 in connection with section 3 of article 10 of the Constitution, and section 1826 in connection with section 1781 of the Code, the conclusion is sustained that for all debts contracted for work and labor done, a lien is given upon the property of a married woman. It is true that the lien is given for the amount due upon debts contracted. In this connection it is permissible to give the term "contracted" the larger meaning, "agreed to be paid," thereby giving a highly remedial statute an operation commensurate with its purpose. The provisions for the mechanic's and laborer's lien, and for securing to the married woman her property, are found in the same article of the Constitution. In this case, the principle "noscitur a sociis" is invoked to ascertain the intention of the law maker. Sutherland Const. St. § 414 et seq. It has been held by many courts that when a married woman was empowered to contract for the benefit of her separate estate, the lien for debts contracted for that purpose attaches. Boisot, Mech. Liens, § 271; Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 96; Carthage M. & W. Co. v. Baumann, 44 Mo. App. 336. In Stephenson v. Ballard, 82 Ind. 87, it was held that a statute forbidding a married woman to incumber her separate estate, except by deed with her husband, must be so construed in connection with another statute giving a mechanic's lien as to give effect to the latter. Greenough v. Wigginton, 2 G. Greene (Iowa) 435; Appeal Germania Savings Bank, 95 Pa. 329; Kuhns v. Turney, 87 Pa. 497. However this may be, the act of 1901, p. 859, c. 617, expressly extends the lien law to the property of married women. It has been sustained in Finger v. Hunter, 130 N. C. 529, 41 S. E. 890. We think, that in the light of the authorities and upon the reason of the thing, the judgment can be sustained upon either view: that under the act of 1871-72 (Code, § 1826) the feme defendant is liable, and that upon a proper construction of the lien law she is equally so.

We have examined the exceptions in the record to rulings of his honor during the trial, and do not find any error. We have taken this case under advisement from the last term, and given to it our most serious consideration. We hope that the subject of the powers and rights of married women in respect to their property and contracts may attract the attention of the General Assembly, and be brought into harmony with the best modern thought and conditions.

The judgment must be affirmed.

BROWN, J., concurs in result.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). Code, § 1826, expressly provides that a married woman can contract and thereby "affect" both her personal and real property, requiring only in some cases her husband's "written consent," and dispensing with it in others. There is no need in this case to discuss the doctrine of "implied contracts" for here the wife made an express contract, and in writing, with the plaintiff to place these improvements upon her property. There was no necessity for her privy examination, for this was not a conveyance of her property, but only a contract. Her privy examination, however, was in fact taken. The husband's written consent under Code, § 1826, is amply evidenced by his joining in the written contract. Jones v. Craigmiles, 114 N. C. 613, 19 S. E. 638. The status of married women in North Carolina is very clearly stated in the Constitution and laws, as written by the convention and General Assembly, and may be thus succinctly summed up:

Property Rights. The property, real and personal, of a married woman, whether acquired before or after marriage, "shall be and remain the sole and separate estate and property of such female." Const. art. 10, § 6.

Right to Devise and Bequeath. By the Constitution this right cannot be restricted.

Conveyances. The only restriction placed by the Constitution upon conveyances by the wife is that there must be "the written assent" of the husband. Const. art. 10, § 6. Her privy examination is required by the Constitution only as to a conveyance of homestead by the husband (Const. art. 10, § 8), not as to conveyances by her. The statute (Code, § 1256) requires her privy examination as to any conveyance of realty.

Transfer of Personality. There is neither written assent of the husband nor privy examination required as to the disposal by sale, gift, or otherwise by a married woman of her personal property. Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784, 67 L. R. A. 461.

Contracts. There is in the Constitution no restriction upon the power of a married woman to contract, and as her property rights remain as if she were single, with power to devise and bequeath it, and to dispose of it by sale, gift, or otherwise, save that the "written assent" of the husband is required as to conveyances of realty, it would seem it was intended that she should be free to contract. But Code, § 1826, provides that she can make any contract whatever "with the written consent" of her husband, though this requirement of written consent is entirely dispensed with as to contracts for her necessary personal expenses, or for support of the family, or to pay her antenuptial debts, or when she is a free trader (Code, § 1830), or lives separated from her husband, or is abandoned by him. Code, §§ 1831, 1832. To avoid palpable fraud the written consent of the husband has further been dispensed with by chapter 617, p. 859, Laws 1901, in cases (like the present) where buildings are placed or repaired on the wife's land by her consent or procurement. Finger v. Hunter, 130 N. C. 529, 41 S. E. 890.

Such is the law as the lawmaking power has made it. It is plain and simple, and reasonably abreast with the spirit of the age, though in England, New York, and in most other states, the statute law does not add (as we have done) to the plain provisions of our Constitution, a requirement of privy examination as to conveyances of realty and of written consent of the husband as to some contracts. 1 A. & E. Encyc. (2d Ed.) 522. In none of the states adjacent to us—Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, and Tennessee—is the privy examination of the wife now required. It is a useless and troublesome formality handed down from the past, and of most doubtful constitutionality under a Constitution which requires only the written assent of the husband to the wife's conveyances as the sole modification upon her property rights as a feme sole and expressly provides that with such assent, her property may be "conveyed by her as if she were unmarried." Const. art. 10, § 6. By our Constitution and laws, the status of married women is thus very plain. There is required by the Constitution only the written assent of the husband to conveyances and the statute requires only privy examination of the wife to convey realty, and written consent of the husband as to the wife's contracts, except those cases specified as to which the written consent is dispensed with. That is all.

Turning to the four pages of fine type in Vann v. Edwards, 128 N. C. at pages 431-434, 39 S. E. at pages 68, 69, are the tables wherein Prof. Mordecai has endeavored in vain to draw some order out of the confusion caused by the doctrine of "charging in equity." As was said by this court, in Brinkley v. Balance, 126 N. C. 396, 35 S. E. 631: "An examination of the Constitution (article 10, § 6) and of the statute (Code, § 1826) shows no foundation for the 'charging' the wife's property. The Constitution requires only the written assent of the husband to 'conveyances' and section 1826 requires only 'the written consent' of the husband to contracts affecting the wife's real or personal estate in certain cases, dispensing with it in others." There is no statute which authorizes or recognizes a feme covert "charging her property in equity." The statute (Code, § 1826) requires no more as to the contract of a married woman, in any case whatever, than the "written consent" of the husband, and dispenses with even that in many cases. The courts should not require what the law does not. As Judge Daniel well said: "The court cannot be wiser than the law." The sooner they are in harmony the better.

Overruling the doctrine of "charging in equity" cannot possibly affect any rule of property, for to do so will not affect any title. It will not invalidate, but recognizes as valid, contracts, when made as the law requires, "with the written consent of the husband." In this connection my attention has been called to my dissenting opinion in Zachary v. Perry, 130 N. C. 202, 41 S. E. 533. It is needless for me to say that no sort of discourtesy was intended towards the distinguished justice who wrote the opinion in Flaum v. Wallace. The phrase, "charge in equity," there used, was not a quotation from that opinion.

(140 N. C. 121)

HAYES v. ATLANTA & C. AIR LINE RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)

APPEAL—UNNECESSARY NONSUIT—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—REMAND.

In an action in which plaintiff alleged his injury was caused by defendant's negligence, and specified various acts or omissions as constituting the negligence, each act not being pleaded as the basis of a distinct cause of action, but as singly, or in connection with the others, tending to establish the one cause of action for the negligence resulting in the injury, the court at the close of the testimony intimated it would charge that there was not sufficient evidence as to the negligence of defendant in failing to use a switch engine, but that it would submit only the evidence as to defendant's negligence in respect to the flange on the engine used and the questions of contributory negligence and proximate cause, whereupon plaintiff took a nonsuit, and appealed. Held, that the nonsuit was unnecessary at that time, and the appeal therefor could not be dismissed, but the cause will be remanded, with direction to set aside the nonsuit and proceed with the case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by Samuel Hayes against the Atlanta & Charlotte Air Line Railway Company. Plaintiff took a nonsuit, and appealed. Remanded.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. He was a switchman in defendant's employ, and belonged to the crew in charge of the "switch local" between Gastonia and Gaffney, which places were about 30 miles apart.

Plaintiff complains that defendant used a road or line engine, when it should have had a switch engine for that kind of work, and that the road engine was in itself unfit for such service, and, lastly, that it was out of order, in that it had a defective flange on the lower rim of the pilot, which was used by switchmen as a step to get on and off the engine when in motion and while they were engaged in switching; that plaintiff while in the performance of his duties stepped upon this flange, as it was his custom to do, and it gave way, causing him to be knocked down by the pilot and dragged some distance, when the wheel of the engine ran over his leg and crushed it. Plaintiff further alleged that he rode on the pilot with the knowledge and consent of defendant's employes, under whose orders, as his superiors, he worked. Defendant denies these allegations and avers that plaintiff was not entitled to have a switch engine for such work as he was doing, and that it was not required in such service and could not safely be used, as the train moved from place to place along a considerable stretch of the main track of its railway, and the switching was therefore not done in a regular switchyard where such engines are commonly used; that a road engine was proper and sufficient for the purpose; and that the engine in question was in good condition and supplied with a step and a staff behind the pilot, as good as a footboard and handhold, where plaintiff could get on and off the engine, and where he could stand and hold on with perfect safety. Defendant specially denies that the flange was not in good condition and avers that it was safe and sound, and that plaintiff's injuries were caused by his own negligence. Plaintiff denied that there was any step behind the pilot. Testimony was introduced by each of the parties to sustain their respective contentions. At the close of the testimony, the court intimated that it would charge the jury that there was not sufficient evidence as to the negligence of defendant in failing to use a switch engine, and that it would submit only the evidence as to defendant's negligence in respect to the condition of the flange, the contributory negligence of plaintiff, and the proximate cause of the injury as between these two alleged acts of negligence. In deference to this intimation, plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit and appealed.

Pharr & Bell and A. G. Mangum, for appellant. W. B. Rodman, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). We will not discuss the question raised in the argument before us, whether it was the duty of defendant to have had a switch engine instead of a road engine for the use of the crew on its train, as it is not necessary to a decision of the case. Plaintiff alleges that his injuries were caused by the negligence of defendant and specified different acts or omissions as constituting the negligence. Each act or omission, so alleged, was not pleaded nor intended to be treated as the basis of a separate and distinct cause of action, but as singly, or in connection with the others, tending to establish the one cause of action for the negligence which resulted in his injury. When the court intimated that it would withdraw a portion of plaintiff's evidence from the jury, it acted prematurely, for the case was not being submitted to the jury at the time, and the ruling did not extend to the entire cause of action, as would be the case with a judgment sustaining a motion to nonsuit or to dismiss. The ruling at that time was calculated to embarrass and to handicap plaintiff in the development of his case and necessarily to prejudice him. But we will not further discuss this matter, nor will we even refer to the legal merits of the case, so far as presented by the pleadings and evidence, when it was abruptly brought to a close by the intimation of the court. Nor is it necessary to decide, as will hereafter appear, whether plaintiff proceeded properly when he elected to be nonsuited and appealed. It is common practice for a plaintiff to submit to an involuntary nonsuit, which he is driven or compelled to take, reserving leave to move afterwards to set the same aside, with a view, not to abandon the prosecution of the suit, but to further prosecute it by appeal, in order to test the correctness of a ruling of the court which may otherwise be fatal to his case; and the practice is a useful one when restricted within its proper limits. Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. C. 284, 8 S. E. 677; Hickory v. Railroad, 188 N. C. 311, 50 S. E. 683; Hedrick v. Pratt, 94 N. C. 101.

In order to avoid appeals based upon trivial interlocutory decisions the right thus to proceed has been said to apply ordinarily only to cases where the ruling of the court strikes at the root of the case and precludes a recovery by plaintiff. Plaintiff's right to take the course he did was challenged in this court, because the ruling did not cover the whole case, but left him ground upon which a recovery could be had. But we do not find it necessary to resort to said rule of practice in order to dispose of this appeal, and we do not therefore decide that it warranted or did not warrant the action of plaintiff. In Davis v. Ely, 100 N. C. 283, 5 S. E. 239, plaintiff sought by the allegations of his complaint to have a contract corrected in certain respects. After the jury were impaneled and the pleadings read, the court intimated that he was not entitled to the equity of correction but to that of rescission. He excepted, submitted to a nonsuit, and appealed. It was held that the nonsuit was unnecessary at that stage of the trial, and the appeal therefore could not be entertained. But notwithstanding this decision, the court, referring to the ground upon which it had based the ruling and in disposing of the case, said: "For these reasons we should dismiss the appeal and allow the cause to proceed in the court below, but that such would not be the result in this case because of the nonsuit which ends the action, and this action was in deference to the intimated ruling. We therefore remand the cause that the nonsuit may be set aside and the action proceed." Pursuing the course taken in that case, we remand the cause, with direction to set aside the nonsuit and thereafter to proceed in the same according to the law and the course and practice of the court.

New trial.

(140 N. C. 203)

STANALAND et al. v. RABON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 12, 1905.)

BOUNDARIES—ESTABLISHMENT—SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS—DENIAL OF TITLE.

Acts 1893, p. 44, c. 22, provides that the owner of land may have any disputed boundary line established by filing a petition, etc., and requires the cause to be heard by the clerk of the superior court, declaring that occupancy of the land by the petitioner shall be sufficient evidence of ownership. Held, that a mere denial by defendant of plaintiff's ownership or occupation did not entitle defendant to have the proceeding dismissed, because an issue of title was raised which could not be tried in such proceeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Brunswick County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by Thaddeus W. Stanaland and others against J. W. Rabon and others to establish a boundary line. From a judgment dismissing the proceeding, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Special proceeding commenced before the clerk, to determine boundaries under the processioning act. Pub. Laws 1893, p. 44, c. 22. The defendants, J. W. Rabon and wife and F. M. Rabon, denied that the plaintiffs are the owners of the land described in the complaint, and also denied that there is any dispute between the plaintiffs and the said defendants as to any boundary lines. Other allegations are also denied. The clerk, on the return day of the summons, after hearing the matter, entered judgment against all the defendants except J. W. Rabon and wife and F. M. Rabon, directing the lines to be run, and appointing W. W. Drew, surveyor, for that purpose. The latter ran the lines after due notice, and filed his report. On the 14th day of December, 1903, the clerk heard the case and by his judgment established the lines as against all the defendants except the defendants, J. W. Rabon and wife and F. M. Rabon. The judgment as to them was without prejudice. The clerk did not pass upon the contention as to title raised in their answer, but upon their motion transferred the issue so raised to the civil issue docket. At the fall term, 1904, the court remanded the cause to the clerk to hear and determine the same and render judgment in full therein as to all the parties. No exception was taken to this order. On October 31, 1904, after notice the clerk entered his judgment as to all the parties, establishing the boundaries. To this judgment the defendants, J. W. Rabon and wife and F. M. Rabon, excepted and appealed. The cause came on to be heard at the April term, 1905. The said defendants, by their counsel, moved to dismiss the action as to them, because there was a distinct issue of title raised in the pleadings, which could not be determined in this proceeding, but only by an action of ejectment. The counsel for petitioners stated that he was ready for trial, and, if allowed by the court to go to trial, the petitioners would be ready to prove their title and possession. The court granted the motion of the said defendants, and dismissed the action, for the reason, as stated in the judgment, that a distinct issue of title is raised, which cannot be settled in this cause, but only in an action of ejectment. Petitioners excepted and appealed.

Iredell Meares and Davis & Cramner, for appellants. John D. Bellamy, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). It seems to us that the question presented in this appeal is fully covered by the recent decision in Smith v. Johnson, 137 N. C. 43, 49 S. E. 62, and that case conclusively determines the matter herein involved against the contention of the defendant. The act of 1893 (Acts 1893, p. 44, c. 22) was evidently intended to simplify the procedure in processioning cases, and to afford a speedy and effective method of determining the true location of disputed lines and boundaries of lands as between their proprietors, instead of requiring them to resort to the cumbersome, and sometimes intricate and costly, remedy by suit to try the title, formerly an action of ejectment. Whether the Legislature has succeeded, as yet, in accomplishing this commendable purpose, is a question which naturally addresses itself to the consideration of that honorable body. But, however that may be, it cannot be doubted that if, upon a mere denial of ownership or occupation, a defendant is entitled to have the proceeding dismissed, the whole object in passing the act may be utterly defeated. If the plaintiff alleges in his petition such facts as bring his case within the provisions of the act, and these essential or material allegations are denied, the issues thus raised should be transferred to the superior court for trial, just as is done in other cases of special proceedings. The act in terms requires this to be done. The issues thus raised are to be tried and the cause further proceeded in according to the manner pointed out in Smith v. Johnson, supra. That case had not been reported, perhaps, at the time of the trial of this cause in the court below, and we presume was not brought to the attention of the court. It is closely analogous to our case, and, indeed, is substantially the same kind of case in its facts and in the principles involved. It must therefore govern our decision in the matter presented in this record. His honor erred in dismissing the case.

The judgment will be set aside, and further proceedings will be had in accordance with the law and the course and practice of the court as herein indicated.

Error.

(72 S. C. 576)

MARION v. CITY COUNCIL OF CHARLESTON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL—DEATH OF PARTY—CONTINUANCE OF ACTION—PRACTICE.

Where it is desired to continue an action by or against a personal representative of a decedent, the proper practice is to make an ex parte application, supported by affidavit, for a rule to show cause why the action should not be continued; but any procedure having substantially the same effect is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 1, Cent. Dig. Abatement and Revival, §§ 445-450.]

2. EQUITABLE — PRACTICE — MOTIONS FOR JURY TRIAL.

In an action to cancel a deed on the ground of fraud and to recover damages on account of such fraud, a motion to fix a day for the submission of an issue to the jury was properly denied, where the moving party failed to comply with circuit court rule 28, prescribing the procedure on the submission to the jury of an issue of fact arising in an equity case.

3. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL—SUBSTITUTION ON APPEAL.

Where a party died during the pendency of a case in the circuit court, and that court refuses to substitute the personal representative of such party, and an appeal is taken from the order refusing substitution, the Supreme Court will not on appeal grant an order of substitution.

4. APPEAL — JURISDICTION — EXERCISE — DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

The Supreme Court cannot, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, order a judgment by default.

5. JUDGMENT—DEFAULT—WHEN ALLOWABLE.

An action to cancel a deed for fraud and for damages in consequence of the fraud is within Code Civ. Proc. § 267, requiring the relief to be afforded plaintiff in case of default in certain cases to be ascertained either by a verdict of a jury, or, in cases of chancery, by the judge, and consequently the court cannot give judgment by default.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by Sophia S. Marion against the city council of Charleston. From an order refusing to substitute a party, and to submit an issue to the jury, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See 47 S. E. 140.

Julian Fishburne, for appellant. Geo. H. Moffett, for respondent.

JONES, J. This appeal is from an order of Judge Townsend, dated December 22, 1904, refusing to grant a motion to substitute the name of Sophia Helen Fishburne, as executrix under the will of Sophia F. S. Marion, as plaintiff in the above-stated case, and to assign a date for submitting the question as to damages to a jury. So far as the case shows, the only paper served upon the defendant was the notice signed by "Julian Fishburne, Agent," to the effect that he would on the day specified make the motion for the purpose above named. So far as appears in the "case," there was nothing before the court to show that Sophia F. S. Marion was dead, that she left a will which had been probated, and that Sophia Helen Fishburne had qualified as executrix.

1. Under these circumstances, it was proper to refuse the motion. A proper practice in such case is to make an ex parte application, based upon a proper showing by affidavit for a rule to show cause why the action should not be continued by or against the party sought to be substituted, as suggested in Dunham v. Carson, 42 S. C. 391, 20 S. E. 197, and approved in Pickett v. Fidelity Co., 60 S. C. 484, 38 S. E. 160, 629. However, under any procedure having substantially the same effect, filling the requirements of notice, proof of necessary facts, and opportunity to contest such alleged facts, would be sufficient, as in DeLoach v. Sarratt, 55 S. C. 275, 33 S. E. 2, 35 S. E. 441; Shull v. Bradford, 58 S. C. 580, 37 S. E. 30. The appellant not having made any proper showing before the circuit court, it was not error to deny his motion to substitute.

2. With reference to the second branch of the motion, which was to fix a day for the submission of an issue to a jury. The action was brought to cancel a deed on the ground of fraud, and recover damages in consequence of the alleged fraud by the city council of Charleston. Assuming that the action was being properly continued in the name of Sophia F. S. Marion, the motion was properly denied for noncompliance with rule 28 of the circuit court, providing the procedure when it was desired to submit to a jury an issue of fact arising in an equity case.

3. The appellant served notice of a motion requesting that this court grant (1) an order to substitute as plaintiff Sophia Helen Marion Fishburne, as executrix of Sophia F. S. Marion; (2) an order for judgment by default, and presented such motion on the call of the case. The movant now presents to this court a showing of the facts which he should have presented, but failed to present, to the circuit court, as it appears in the "case" prepared for argument. We will not, however, entertain this motion under the circumstances. While there are cases in which this court might find it proper or necessary to make such a substitution, as in the case of a death occurring pending appeal in this court, it would not be proper in this instance, when the necessity for substitution occurred while the case was pending in the circuit court. Furthermore, the appeal is from an order of the circuit court denying such motion, and, if we should now grant such motion, the result would be to practically reverse the action of the circuit judge, when he committed no error as the case was presented to him.

4. This court, in its appellate jurisdiction, cannot order a judgment by default, as requested. Even the circuit court could not have ordered a judgment by default in this case upon facts presented in this motion, for it is shown that defendant appeared in due time, demurred in due time, and after the filing of the remittitur in the former appeal in this case, sustaining the action of the circuit court in overruling the demurrer, served answer in due time, in accordance with the rule stated in Barnwell v. Marion, 56 S. C. 54, 33 S. E. 719. In addition to this, the present case is such that, under section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, even in case of default of answer, "the relief to be afforded the plaintiff shall be ascertained either by the verdict of a jury or in cases of chancery by the judge, with or without a reference, as he may deem proper." The motion must therefore be overruled.

The exceptions are overruled, and the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(73 S. C. 547)

Ex parte EVANS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 31, 1905.)

APPEAL—FROM CITY COUNCIL—WHEN LIES.

No appeal lies to the circuit court from the refusal of a city council to issue a permit to build a house; the council acting in an administrative capacity.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Gage, Judge.

Petition to city council of Greenville by Mrs. Mary Evans for permit to build a house. Upon objection by Mrs. Maude Simmons, the permit was refused. Mrs. Evans appealed to circuit court, which reversed the action of the city council. From this order, Mrs. Simmons and the city council appealed. Reversed.

Mauldin & Townes, for appellant Simmons. M. F. Ansel and Cothran, Dean & Cothran, for respondent.

JONES, J. On June 14, 1904, petitioner applied to the board of fire commissioners of the city of Greenville, under the provisions of the ordinances of said city, for permission to erect a two-room frame dwelling on Academy street, in said city, and on same day a permit was granted, signed by the chairman of the board of fire commissioners and chief of the fire department; but on the 18th day of June, 1904, the chief of the fire department revoked said permit and forbade work on said building. On July 5, 1904, the petitioner applied to the city council of Greenville for the building permit. The appellant, Mrs. Maude Simmons, one of petitioner's neighbors, presented a petition opposing the permit on two grounds: (1) That the erection of the proposed building in such close proximity to her house and that of E. B. Owens will constitute a danger to their property in case of fire; (2) that the proposed cottage is to be occupied by negroes, and will operate as a nuisance. The matter was referred by the city council to the board of fire masters. This board referred the matter back to the city council, reporting that they did not feel justified in refusing the permit on the first ground, and had accordingly issued it. With reference to the second ground, this board reported that it was out of their jurisdiction to consider. The city council claiming to act under the ordinance approved April 20, 1887, after considering the petition and affidavits submitted, and hearing argument for and against the same, refused to approve the permit granted by the board of fire masters and refused permission for the building of the house. From this action of the city council, the petitioner appealed to the circuit court. A motion was made in the circuit court to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the circuit court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, which was overruled. The circuit court then proceeded to hear the appeal, and made an order reversing the action of the city council, and allowing petitioner to proceed with the erection of the proposed building.

Mrs. Maude Simmons and the city council of Greenville served notice of intention to appeal. On the call of the case, the city council of Greenville, having announced that they abandoned the appeal, the appeal was by order of the court, dismissed so far as the city council of Greenville is concerned. Mrs. Maude Simmons presents a number of exceptions to the judgment of the circuit court, the first of which is that the circuit court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal of Mrs. Mary Evans, for the reason that the city council, in this particular matter, was not acting as a court of inferior jurisdiction, from which an appeal could be taken. If this view be correct, then no other question sought to be raised by the exceptions is properly before the court.

We are of the opinion that the circuit court was without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal sought to be taken from the action of the city council. Section 15, art. 5, of the Constitution, gives to the court of common pleas appellate jurisdiction "in all cases within the jurisdiction of inferior courts, except from such inferior courts from which the General Assembly shall provide an appeal directly to the Supreme Court." Is this a case within the jurisdiction of the city council as an inferior court? Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution (vol. 3, p. 626) says: "The essential of appellate jurisdiction is that it reviews and corrects the proceedings in a case already instituted, and does not create that cause in reference to judicial tribunals; an appellate jurisdiction, therefore, necessarily implies that the subject-matter has been instituted in and acted upon by some other court whose judgment or proceedings are to be reviewed. This appellate jurisdiction may be exercised in a variety of forms, and, indeed, in any form which the Legislature may choose to prescribe, but still the substance must exist before the form can be applied to it." In order, therefore, to give the circuit court appellate jurisdiction in the matter appealed from the city council, it must appear that the city council was, in the matter sought to be reviewed, acting in a judicial capacity as distinguished from doing a ministerial, administrative or discretionary act. "Appellate jurisdiction is the power vested in a superior tribunal to review and revise the judicial action of an inferior tribunal." 2 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 11.

The charter of the city of Greenville (19 St. at Large, pp. 109, 110), in section 13, gives the city council "power to prohibit the erection of any wooden building or buildings, or any wooden roof building or buildings, in any portion of said city that they may by ordinance define as the limit of the fire district, and to prescribe of what material buildings or structures within said limits shall be constructed," and in section 14, the city council is given power to abate all nuisances within the corporate limits, and in said section power is given to appoint a board of health and a board of fire masters for said city, and to pass such ordinances in regard thereto as may be necessary. By an ordinance ratified April 7, 1903, the city council created and established a board of fire masters, which defined the powers and duties of such board with respect to buildings in the city, and providing penalties for obstructing the action of said board or refusing to comply with their directions, and in section 6 provided "that no house, building, store or other structure shall be built, altered or erected in the city of Greenville without first obtaining a permit to do so, signed by the chief of the fire department and the president or secretary of the fire commission." By a previous ordinance, ratified April 20, 1887, it is provided:

"Section 1. That on and after the passage of this ordinance, it shall not be lawful for any party or parties to erect or move any wooden building of any kind whatever, within the distance of two hundred and fifty feet of Main street of said city at any point between Reedy river and North street.

"Sec. 2. That before any person or persons shall erect any storehouse, dwelling house, hotel, stable, fence, awning, cellar door, or structure of any kind on any street whatever, application in writing shall first be made to the city council, stating the use and purpose for which said building or other structure is designed, and stating the place of location for the same, and a permit from the mayor and aldermen be obtained to erect said building or other structure, before the same shall be commenced: Provided, that before any permit to build shall be granted by the city council, the same shall be recommended by the board of fire masters, who shall have the power to require the person or persons who make application to build to submit their plans and specifications to them in writing."

Section 6 provides a penalty for failure to comply with this ordinance.

This would doubtless give the city council jurisdiction as a court to try offenses for a violation of said city ordinance, if sustained as valid, but no such authority is attempted to be exercised in the present matter, but it confers no authority upon the city council as a court to hear and determine a controversy arising between neighbors as to whether the owner shall have the right or a permit to build a certain kind of house upon her premises. In so far as the city council may assume to grant or refuse such a permit, their action is administrative rather than judicial. Their decision in such matters is not binding in the sense of a judgment of a court. The application for a permit is ex parte. If objection be offered, that does not raise a controversy between the petitioner and the objector which is submitted to the judicial authority of the city council. As the city council was not acting in the capacity of a court in the premises, there was no case before the city council for which a right of appeal is saved in article 5, § 15, of the Constitution. When the Constitution does not save the right of appeal from an inferior or special tribunal, there is no right of appeal unless expressly conferred by statute. Whipper v. Talbird, 32 S. C. 3, 10 S. E. 578. We find no express statutory authority for the present appeal from the city council. The petitioner must, therefore, seek other remedy.

The cases of City Council v. Eichelberger, 44 S. C. 351, 22 S. E. 345, and City Council v. Brown, 42 S. C. 184, 20 S. E. 56, have no application, as in those cases the city council acted as a court in the trial of offenders charged with violating the city ordinance. The circuit court being without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal in this matter, and as this court has no jurisdiction to go further than annul such decision, the other exceptions do not properly arise, and will not be considered.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed for want of jurisdiction in that court to entertain the appeal from the action of the city council of Greenville, in refusing to approve the building permit granted by the board of fire commissioners.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(72 S. C. 556)

KEAN v. LANDRUM et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 2, 1905.)

1. WITNESSES—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENTS.

Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 400, relative to evidence as to transactions with decedents, does not prohibit testimony as to conversations between plaintiff's agent and defendant's testator. [Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 50, Cent. Dig. Witnesses, § 577.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—EVIDENCE OF AGENCY.

An agent to buy land may give parol testimony as to his agency.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 40, Cent. Dig. Witnesses, § 39.]

3. SAME—CREATION OF AGENCY—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

A power of attorney given by plaintiff, authorizing another "to make contracts to conduct farming and mill operations for me," creates an agency in that other to run the mill for plaintiff, and does not authorize that other to run it on his own account.

4. EVIDENCE—EXPERT TESTIMONY—VALUE.

On the issue of the value of timber cut from a tract of land, one who owns an adjoining tract, and who has testified that the timber on his land was about the same as that cut, and as to the price for which his timber was sold, and other facts concerning the same, may give his opinion as to the value of timber on his own land.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 2218.]

5. SAME—DECLARATIONS OF DECEDENT.

Where it was alleged that a certain person was the party in interest in a settlement made by testator, declarations of testator that, if she made the settlement in question, it would inure to the benefit of such person, are competent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 876.]

6. MORTGAGES—TRANSACTIONS CONSTRUED AS MORTGAGES.

A. bought certain land from B. for C., taking a deed from B., and giving him in return a mortgage for the purchase money. He then put C. into possession and agreed to convey to him on payment of the purchase money. After payment he refused to convey. Held, A. could not be considered toward C. as a mortgagee.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—REMEDIES OF PURCHASER—RECOVERY OF PURCHASE MONEY—DEMAND.

Where a vendee demanded, and his vendor refused to convey, land according to contract, and the vendor subsequently died, it was not necessary for the vendee to demand a conveyance from the vendor's executor before suing the executor for money paid on the contract.

8. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARGE ON FACTS.

A charge stating the legal conclusions which would result from the establishment of certain facts is not subject to objection as a charge on the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 471.]

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—BREACH BY VENDOR—DAMAGES TO VENDEE.

Where A. buys land for B. at the latter's instance, and agrees to convey the same to B. upon payment of the purchase money, and A. refuses to convey, the measure of B.'s damages is the actual value of the land at the time of tender and refusal of title, with interest from that date, less any depreciation subsequent thereto due to B.'s action, and is not the money paid for the land, less the value taken from it by B.

10. SAME—RETURN OF PURCHASE MONEY—CONDITIONS OF RELIEF.

Where the purchaser in a contract for the sale of land is not in position to restore what he has received by the contract, and such position does not result from any fault on his own part, he need not return the consideration of the contract before demanding from the vendor the money paid thereon, but he may offer to allow credit for the value he cannot restore.

11. SAME—DAMAGES.

Where a purchaser in a contract for the sale of land pays more than the amount due, he may, on a breach of the contract by the vendor, recover the excess, with interest, in addition to damages for the breach.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Edgefield County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by May Belle Kean against Elizabeth R. Landrum and others, as executrices of Emily G. Budwell. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants' appeal. Reversed.

J. Wm. Thurmond, E. H. Folk, Croft & Tillman, Thompson & Wells, and J. W. De Vore, for appellants. Hendersons and Sheppard Bros., for respondent.

WOODS, J. The facts in this case were complicated, the evidence contradictory, and the questions submitted to the jury must have been difficult of solution. The foundation of the action was the allegation that Mrs. Emily G. Budwell, defendant's testator, bought for the plaintiff a tract of land from Mrs. Mims, and agreed with plaintiff, through her agent, John M. Bell, to convey the land to her on receiving from plaintiff the money expended in the purchase, with interest; that the purchase money, with interest, was paid, part to Mrs. Budwell and the remainder to Mrs. Mims, on Mrs. Budwell's debt for the land; that Mrs. Budwell nevertheless refused to make title to the plaintiff unless she would pay all debts due to her by plaintiff's agent, John M. Bell; that upon such refusal plaintiff elected to recover back the money paid, with interest, rather than seek specific performance of the contract to convey. The defense was that Mrs. Budwell made no contract with the plaintiff, but bought the land for John M. Bell altogether as an accommodation to him; that he had not paid the debts due by him to her on account of the purchase money of the land and on other matters; that John M. Bell took possession of the land, and by cutting the timber from it reduced its value to one-third of what it was at the time of the purchase; that even if the plaintiff, and not John M. Bell, is the real party in interest, she could not recover back the purchase money, because she would be unable to restore the land to the condition it was in before her alleged agent Bell had committed waste to the extent of $4,000 by cutting off the timber. The plaintiff, replying, alleged she was ready and willing that the purchase money claimed by her should be reduced by the value of any timber taken from the land by her agent. Defendant moved to have John M. Bell made a party to the cause, but the motion was refused, and from this decision there was no appeal. The plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendants appeal, alleging error in admission of evidence, in refusing a motion for nonsuit, and in the charge to the jury.

1. The evidence of John M. Bell and Mrs. Clotworthy as to the conversations with Mrs. Budwell was not rendered incompetent by reason of the fact that they were agents of the plaintiff. An agent is no doubt usually partial to his principal, but he is not legally interested in the suit of his principal in the sense that his testimony as to transactions or communications with deceased persons is incompetent, under section 400 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1902. Sanders v. Bagwell, 37 S. C. 145, 16 S. E. 770.

2. It is competent to prove by parol an agent's authority to make a contract to buy land for his principal, and the testimony of Bell as to conversations with plaintiff tending to prove his authority to buy the land for her was competent.

3. The written power of attorney was also competent for the same purpose, because the conferring of authority thereby on Bell by the plaintiff "to make contracts to conduct farming and mill operations for me" tended to indicate that the sawmill was to be run by Bell, as plaintiff's agent, and not on his own account, as defendant alleged it was. As the point was not argued, we assume the exception complaining of the introduction of a deed from Bell to the plaintiff is abandoned. The deed covered entirely different property, and could have no effect whatever on the issues tried in this cause. Its admission or exclusion, therefore, could not be reversible error.

4. On the issue of the value of the timber cut from the land, the witness Holland was allowed to give his estimate of the value of timber on his own land; the land from which the plaintiff claims to have had the timber cut and the land of the witness having been originally in one tract, and the timber being in the opinion of the witness of about the same value. The witness had sold his timber, and gave the price received and all the facts upon which he based his estimate. The testimony was competent. Mauldin v. Ry. Co. (S. C.) 52 S. E. 677.

5. The objection made to the testimony of John Bell Towill reciting a conversation between Mrs. Budwell and her sister, Mrs. Timmerman, cannot be sustained. In this conversation, as recited by the witness, Mrs. Timmerman urged her sister to make a settlement with their brother, John M. Bell, saying it would help him in his old age, and the response attributed to Mrs. Budwell, "if I do settle with John, it will not benefit him; that May Belle Keese will be the beneficiary of the settlement," tended to give some support to the allegation that the plaintiff, then Miss Keese, was the party in interest in the transaction between Mrs. Budwell and Bell.

6. It was submitted, first, on the motion for nonsuit, that "the deed to Mrs. Budwell from Mrs. Mims was only a mortgage, being a security for money," and from this the court was asked to conclude that even if Mrs. Budwell agreed to make a deed to the plaintiff, and not to John M. Bell, on the payment of the purchase money, she and the plaintiff stood in the relation of mortgagee and mortgagor; the payment of the purchase money therefore entitling her to the land free from the mortgage, but not to a return of the money paid on the mortgage. Under this view the defendant contends the only remedy of the plaintiff was an action for specific performance to compel the representatives of Mrs. Budwell, the equitable mortgagee, to convey the legal title to the plaintiff, the equitable owner, on payment of the mortgage debt. It is true Mrs. Budwell stood in the relation of mortgagor to Mrs. Mims, and upon payment of her mortgage could not recover back the purchase money, because Mrs. Mims had already made, and she had accepted, the title. But the plaintiff never had title to the land, and therefore could not execute a mortgage of it. The motion for nonsuit, therefore, could not be granted on the theory that Mrs. Budwell stood in the relation of mortgagee to the plaintiff.

7. There was evidence of a demand made on Mrs. Budwell for title to the land and of her refusal. This was a breach of her contract, and it was not necessary for the plaintiff to make another demand on her executors after her death. There was no tender of title by the executors, or devisees, or heirs, and therefore we do not consider what would have been the effect of such a tender before the action was commenced.

8. As to the other grounds of the motion for a nonsuit, it is sufficient to say that the allegations of the complaint and the evidence were sufficient to sustain a verdict for damages for breach of contract, even if the facts did not warrant a recovery for the specific sums of money paid on the contract, and hence a nonsuit could not have been granted for a total failure of proof to establish any cause of action alleged in the complaint.

9. There are numerous exceptions alleging that the circuit judge charged the jury with respect to matters of fact. The portions of the charge complained of were nothing more than statements of the legal conclusions which would result if the jury found certain facts alleged in the complaint. This was evidently not charging on the facts.

10. The most serious question is whether, under the facts of this case, the circuit judge was in error in charging that, if Mrs. Budwell breached her contract to convey the land, the plaintiff could recover for the money paid on the contract. It is to be borne in mind this is not an action in equity for rescission, which is the converse of specific performance, but an action at law for the recovery of money paid on a contract which it is alleged the defendant refused to carry out. The right to recover money so paid arises from the obligation imposed by law to restore money for which the party who paid it has not received the consideration agreed upon, and is founded on the principle that no one shall be allowed to enrich himself unjustly at the expense of another. This obligation is frequently spoken of as an implied contract. The restoration of the purchase money under the obligation of a quasi or imputed contract because no equivalent has been given is a very different thing from the damages which the law exacts for breach of contract. The money paid under a contract sometimes is the true measure of damages for its breach, but it is not necessarily so. To illustrate, if one buys land at the instance and request, and for the benefit, of another, taking the title to himself merely because he advanced the purchase money, and the land is subsequently greatly enhanced in value, and then, after repayment of the purchase money to him, undertakes to benefit himself by retaining the land, it is evident he should pay as damages, not the amount of the purchase money repaid to him, but the value of the land. In the other hand, if, after such a purchase, the land should decrease in value, and the person advancing the money and taking title should refuse to convey on repayment of the purchase money on account of some other claim set up in good faith by him, which turned out not to be well founded, it is equally evident it would be unjust to fix as damages the purchase money refunded to him, because to do so would be requiring him to be responsible for the bad bargain of the person for whom the purchase was made. So here, if Mrs. Budwell made a contract with the plaintiff and refused to carry it out after the payment of the consideration, it follows she is liable for the damages resulting to the plaintiff. But whether her estate must restore just the sum of money paid out by the plaintiff depends upon the answers to these questions: (1) Was the purchase of the land really her bargain or the bargain of the plaintiff? (2) Was she unjustly enriched at the expense of the plaintiff to the extent of the purchase money? (3) Did the plaintiff restore to her estate that which the plaintiff received from her? We do not pause to consider whether the plaintiff's evidence made Mrs. Budwell the trustee of a resulting trust in favor of the plaintiff, for whether that was the technical relation or not will make no difference in fixing the measure of plaintiff's recovery, if the jury accept her version of the facts of the transaction. Assuming all the plaintiff's evidence to be true, her case was this: Mrs. Budwell advanced part of the purchase money of the land and assumed obligations for the remainder to Mrs. Mims purely as an accommodation, and at the instance of the plaintiff through her agent, John M. Bell. Plaintiff sought the accommodation from Mrs. Budwell, and agreed to buy the land, on the judgment of her agent, John M. Bell, mainly for the timber standing on it. Much of the timber turned out to be inferior in quality, and hence the lumber cut from it was, to a large extent, unmerchantable. It is not pretended Mrs. Budwell received for herself from the plaintiff any of the price of the land, or profited by the purchase in any way beyond the land itself; on the contrary, all the purchase money went to Mrs. Mims at the plaintiff's instance. Obviously, therefore, Mrs. Budwell was not enriched at the expense of the plaintiff to the extent of the purchase money. It is alleged in the complaint that Mrs. Budwell's refusal to make title to the plaintiff was unreasonable, in that she demanded that the debts of plaintiff's agent, John M. Bell, should be paid before she parted with the title; but there is no allegation or proof of fraud on her part in withholding the title. In these circumstances nothing can be clearer than that the bargain for the land was the plaintiff's bargain, and, if it turned out to be of less value than the money paid for it, the loss should be the plaintiff's, and, if more, the gain should be hers. If Mrs. Budwell refused to convey, she has not taken from the plaintiff the purchase money, for that was paid to another by her or at her instance, but only the land which was bought for her. Under these facts the conclusion seems obvious that the measure of plaintiff's damage upon the refusal of Mrs. Budwell to convey was not the money paid for the land, less the value the plaintiff had taken from it, but the actual value of the land at the time she made tender to Mrs. Budwell and demanded title, and interest from that time, less any depreciation of it subsequent thereto due to plaintiff's own action.

11. It is said in Keener on Quasi Contracts, 302: "If the plaintiff is in a position to return what he received, it seems equally clear that a defendant should have a right to insist on a return thereof as a condition of refunding what he has received under the contract, in preference to being credited with the value thereof in an action brought to recover the money received by him under the contract. Accordingly it is held that, as a condition of maintaining an action to recover money so paid, the plaintiff must restore to the defendant what he has received under the contract. Thus, in Miner v. Bradley, 22 Pick. 457, the plaintiff, who had bought from the defendant a cow and a quantity of hay for a gross sum, on refusal of the defendant to deliver the hay, while retaining the cow, brought an action to recover the purchase money. It was held that the return of the cow to the defendant was a condition precedent to his right to maintain the action." This rule does not apply in strictness, however, when the plaintiff, without any fault of his own, is not in a position to restore what he has received under the contract. In such case it is sufficient if he offers to allow credit for the value of the thing he is unable to restore. This offer should be made before suit brought, but whether this is in all cases indispensably necessary as a condition precedent to bringing the action for money had and received we do not now decide, for the reason that we have held on other grounds that this could not be sustained as an action of that character.

12. We conclude the circuit judge was in error in instructing the jury that, if Mrs. Budwell refused to carry out her contract to convey, the plaintiff could recover the money paid on the contract, less the value of any timber cut from the land by the plaintiff, and that he should have charged if there was a breach of the contract, as alleged, the recovery should be for the value of the land at the date of the tender and demand for title, with interest from that date, less the subsequent depreciation, if any, due to the action of the plaintiff or her agent.

13. If $500, or any less amount, in excess of the purchase price agreed on was paid by mistake to Mrs. Budwell and retained by her, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum so paid, with interest, in addition to damages for any breach of the contract alleged to have been made with the plaintiff. There was no error in the charge on this point.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(72 S. C. 579)

BRUNSON v. FURTICK.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE — PLEADING — AMENDMENT.

Where, in an action on a note in a magistrate's court, it is alleged that $100 is due, but the facts are not stated showing the amount due, it may be amended by alleging the date of the note and the time and place of payment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Justices of the Peace, § 328.]

2. SAME—JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of a magistrate, which, by Code Civ. Proc. § 71, subd. 1, is limited in actions on contracts for the recovery of money only to $100, is determined by the amount claimed, and not by the amount actually due.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Justices of the Peace, § 157.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County.

Action by Peter C. Brunson against W. F. Furtick. From a judgment of the circuit court sustaining a judgment of a magistrate, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

De Pass & De Pass, for appellant. Weston & Aycock, for respondent.

JONES, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment of the circuit court affirming the judgment of the magistrate court in favor of plaintiff for $100 in an action on a promissory note.

1. The first question presented is whether there was error in affirming the order of the magistrate overruling defendant's demurrer. The action was commenced March 12, 1904, before B. P. McMaster, Esq., a magistrate for Richland county, and the complaint alleged that the defendant "is indebted to him in the sum of $100 on a promissory note, which said sum is long since due and payable." The demurrer to this complaint on the ground that it fails to state any cause of action, and that it is not sufficiently explicit to enable defendant to understand it, was overruled by the magistrate. The magistrate, however, permitted the complaint to be amended so as to insert these words: "Note dated at Columbia, S. C., November 29, 1901, promising to pay on March 1, 1902, to the order of Peter C. Brunson a certain sum of money, value received, payable at Central National Bank at Columbia, S. C., interest after maturity at eight per cent. per annum." On a subsequent date, when the case was called for trial, defendant demurred to the amended complaint, which the magistrate overruled.

We think the demurrer was properly overruled. Section 88, subd. 5, Code Civ. Proc., provides that in a magistrate court "pleadings are not required to be in any particular form, but must be such as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." In subdivision 6 it is provided that "either party may demur to a pleading of his adversary, or any part thereof, when it is not sufficiently explicit to enable him to understand it, or it contains no cause of action or defense, although it be taken as true." In subdivision 7 it is provided that, "if the court deem the objection well founded, it shall order the pleading to be amended," etc. The original complaint informed the defendant plainly that the action was upon a promissory note, and that the amount claimed thereon was $100. The amendment specifically described the note, except as to the amount thereof, but the complaint, as it stood originally and after amendment, claimed $100 upon the note. This was certainly sufficient to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended.

2. The next point raised by several exceptions is whether the magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain this suit, inasmuch as the amount of the note sued on, with interest, exceeded $100. The note in question was one of a series of four notes, each for $89.25, with interest after maturity at 8 per cent. per annum, and each dated November 29, 1901, maturing 30, 60, 90, and 120 days thereafter, respectively. This note, maturing March 1, 1902, the principal and interest at the time of the commencement of this action exceeded $100, but, as stated, the complaint claimed only $100. The Constitution of 1895 (article 5, § 21) provides: "Magistrates shall have jurisdiction in such civil cases as the General Assembly may prescribe: Provided, such jurisdiction shall not extend to cases where the value of property in controversy, or the amount claimed, exceeds one hundred dollars," etc. In accordance with this provision, section 71, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides that magistrates shall have civil jurisdiction in actions arising on contracts for the recovery of money only, if the sum claimed does not exceed $100. In the cases of Cavender v. Ward, 28 S. C. 472, 6 S. E. 302, and Catawba Mills v. Hood, 42 S. C. 204, 20 S. E. 91, this court, construing a similar provision in the Constitution of 1868 and a similar statutory provision, held that the jurisdiction of a trial justice (now magistrate) in matters of contract is determined by the amount claimed, and not by the amount due. These cases are decisive of the question. The rule which prevailed in South Carolina previous to the Constitution of 1868 and statutes pursuant thereto, as laid down in Ramsay v. Court of Wardens, 2 Bay, 180, Simpson v. McMillion, 1 Nott & McC. 192, and St. Amand v. Gerry, 2 Nott & McC. 487, is not of force now.

All the exceptions which are not controlled by the foregoing conclusions were abandoned.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(124 Ga. 349)

WATERS v. WATERS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. HOMESTEAD—RIGHT TO CONVEY.

As has been repeatedly ruled, the head of a family to whom has been set aside a homestead under the Constitution of 1868, may convey his or her reversionary interest therein.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—PLEADING.

A petition filed in 1903, seeking to cancel a deed made in 1877 on the ground that its execution was induced by fraudulent misrepresentations by the grantee, but which does not allege when the fraud complained of was discovered, is bad, as against an appropriate demurrer setting up the statute of limitations. This is so for the reason that it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show in himself a complete right of action, and because pleadings must be construed most strongly against the pleader.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 33, Cent. Dig. Limitation of Actions, §§ 664-668.]

3. EVIDENCE—PAROL CONTEMPORANEOUS AGREEMENT.

Equity will not decree the specific performance of a parol agreement made contemporaneously with the execution of a deed and alleged to have been a part of the consideration moving the grantor; the deed on its face being an unconditional conveyance, and it not appearing that anything was omitted therefrom by mistake. If the written instrument does not speak the true intention of the parties, it must be reformed before relief can be obtained.

4. INJUNCTION—ACTION AT LAW.

Equity will not enjoin the institution of a suit to which the party seeking the injunction may have a defense available to him on the trial of the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Injunction, § 56.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bullock County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Suit by Mrs. Sarah Waters against Robert B. Waters and others. There was judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

This case comes up on exceptions to the ruling of the court below sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition. The allegations of the petition were substantially as follows: In June, 1870, Mrs. Sarah Waters, the petitioner, being then the head of a family consisting of herself and certain minor children, took a homestead, under the Constitution of 1868, in described realty, title to which she had acquired some two years previously. In March, 1877, during the continuation of said homestead, and before the beneficiaries thereof had attained their majority, petitioner executed to her son, Robert B. Waters, one of the defendants, a paper purporting to be a warranty deed to the land mentioned. This instrument was executed only on condition that petitioner be allowed to remain in possession and control of the land during her life; this agreement being made simultaneously with the execution of the deed, and understood as part of the consideration thereof. The deed recited a consideration of $250, but this amount has never been paid to petitioner; the only payment which Robert B. Waters has ever made on the land being a sum less than $200, the exact amount being unknown to petitioner, which was paid about the time of the execution of the deed to cancel a mortgage in favor of one Preetorious, which was not a legal lien against the land, but which Robert B. Waters represented to petitioner was enforceable and valid. In making this representation to her Robert B. Waters misled petitioner, and took advantage of the confidence she placed in him as her son; and petitioner, "being ignorant of the forms and processes of law," believed that she was in danger of losing her home. Robert B. Waters then offered to take up and settle the mortgage on condition that his mother would execute a deed to the land to him, at the same time making the oral agreement already mentioned. Petitioner has ever since remained in the open and peaceable possession of the property, and has never paid any rent therefor, nor has any rent been exacted of her. Recently Roberts B. Waters has sold the property to Deal, who is preparing and threatening to eject petitioner from the premises; and, unless restrained by the court, he will carry out his threats. The agreed purchase price is $4,000, of which amount $1,000 is a cash payment; the remainder being secured by a note and mortgage from Deal to Waters. It was alleged that the deed from the plaintiff to her son was void because it was without sufficient consideration, because it was procured by undue influence over petitioner, because it purported to convey homestead property which could not be conveyed, and because it was in truth a deed to secure a debt growing out of the Preetorious mortgage, and Waters has been fully repaid, having received from the sale of a portion of the land and certain timber thereon more than enough to satisfy the debt mentioned. It was also alleged that petitioner's uninterrupted possession of the land was notice to Deal, the purchaser from Waters, of her title; that Deal acquired no better title than Waters had; and that he is bound in law and equity by petitioner's right in the same manner as Waters. Petitioner claims the full legal title to the land; but, if the court should decree otherwise, she claims an equitable title, and alleges that the deed to her son was only a security deed, and, the debt having been paid, she is entitled in equity to the land. If, however, it should be held that she parted with the title to the land, she alleges that she is entitled to the possession, control, and occupancy, and to the rents, issues, and profits thereof, for the remainder of her life, in accordance with the terms of the agreement made with her son contemporaneously with the execution of the deed to him. But if it should be held that Deal by reason of his purchase from Waters, has acquired the legal title and the right to the possession of the premises, petitioner alleges that Robert B. Waters is indebted to her, by reason of his failure to carry out his agreement, in a sum equivalent to the value of her life estate in the property, based on the standard tables of life expectancy. Also, if Deal has acquired the legal title to the property and the right to the immediate possession thereof, it is alleged that the money and notes given in payment therefor are her property, and charged with a trust in her favor in the hands of Waters and Deal. She prayed (1-3) that her deed to Waters, executed in 1877, and the deed from Waters to Deal, be canceled, and the full legal title to the property in dispute be decreed to be in petitioner; (4) that Waters and Deal be enjoined from interfering with petitioner's possession, by process of law or otherwise; (5) that Waters be enjoined from transferring or otherwise disposing of the notes, mortgage, or other evidence of indebtedness given him in the purchase of the land by Deal; (6) in the event it should be decreed that title was in Deal, that this title should be decreed to be an estate in remainder, to take effect only after the death of petitioner;

(7) in the event it should be decreed that full legal title, with the right to immediate possession, is in Deal, that the $4,000 purchase price of the land be decreed to be a trust fund for the benefit of petitioner; (8) in the event that none of the preceding prayers be granted, that judgment be awarded against Robert B. Waters for damages in the sum of $4,000 for the violation of his contract with petitioner; (9-10) for general relief, and for process. The demurrer was general, and on the further grounds that the right to cancellation prayed for is barred by the statute of limitations; that the petition sets up inconsistent and contradictory causes of action; that the petition seeks to annex a condition to a deed by parol, and to contradict, add to, and vary the terms of a written contract by parol; and that certain paragraphs were not sufficiently definite to constitute the basis of a recovery.

Brannen & Booth, for plaintiff in error. J. K. Hines, J. F. Brannen, and G. S. Johnston, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. (after stating the facts). 1. The question whether Mrs. Waters could, under the Constitution of 1868, obtain a valid homestead as the "head of a family," was not raised by counsel, either at the trial below or upon the hearing before this court; but both sides treated the homestead set apart to the plaintiff as in every respect valid. Without going into this question, then, we come to consider the effect of the deed made by Mrs. Waters to her son, in which she undertook to convey the fee to the land to her son. While the plaintiff could not convey the homestead property in such a way as to defeat the rights of her minor children therein, her deed was sufficient to pass out of her whatever claim to, or interest in, the land that she may have possessed. Huntress v. Anderson, 110 Ga. 427, 35 S. E. 671, 78 Am. St. Rep. 106. There is no merit in the contention that the deed was void as to the plaintiff because it sought to convey homestead property.

2. The only other reason assigned why the deed from the plaintiff to her son should be held void is that fraud was committed in its procurement. It is extremely doubtful if the allegations of the petition as to the alleged misrepresentation by Waters of the legal effect of the Preterious mortgage make such a case of fraud as to warrant the cancellation of the deed made to him in consequence of such misrepresentation. But granting, for the sake of the argument, that they do, more than 26 years elapsed between the commission of the alleged fraud and the filing of the present suit, and it does not appear at what time during that long period the plaintiff discovered that she had been defrauded. Apparently nothing was done to prevent her from acquainting herself with the truth as to the legal effect of the so-called Preterious mortgage. It was incumbent upon her, in filing her petition, to show that her cause of action was not barred. This was not done. Her pleading must be construed most strongly against her, and therefore it will be presumed that she discovered the alleged fraud at such a time in the past as that her right of action has expired by limitation.

3. As to the prayer that the plaintiff be decreed to have a life estate in the property in dispute, it is sufficient to say that this would be nothing more or less than ingrafting a parol agreement upon a written deed and changing the estate conveyed by the written instrument. The relief sought is not available without a reformation of the deed from the plaintiff to her son, which was not prayed (Perkins Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson, 117 Ga. 394, 43 S. E. 696); and that reformation of the deed could not be had, because it appeared that there was no intention to insert in the instrument any provision of the character indicated. Ligon's Adm'r's v. Rogers, 12 Ga. 281.

4. As to the various other prayers of the petition, it does not appear that the plaintiff's possession of the premises has been interfered with, nor does it appear that the plaintiff has any right which she may not assert in defense to an action of ejectment or other legal proceeding that may be taken to oust her from possession. "Equity will not enjoin the proceedings and processes of a court of law unless there is some intervening equity, or other proper defense, of which the party, without fault on his part, cannot avail himself at law." Civ. Code 1895, § 4915; 7 Enc. Dig. Ga. Rep. 340, 369. Should Deal make any effort to oust the plaintiff from possession of the land, it will then be time for her to assert any rights she may have. The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(194 Ga. 357)

SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. v. O'QUIN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. CARRIERS—FORCIBLE EXPULSION OF PASSENGER—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Punitive damages are recoverable in an action against a railroad company by a passenger, where the evidence shows that he was, without justification, or excuse, forcibly expelled from its train by the conductor or other employees in charge thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 1439.]

2. SAME—TORTS OF SERVANTS.

When a common carrier undertakes, through its servants, to exercise its rights to eject from its cars passengers who have been guilty of disorderly conduct, it acts at its peril in determining their identity; and if by mistake one who has in no way forfeited his rights as a passenger be ejected, the carrier will be liable to respond in damages for the tort thus committed by its servants, their good faith being only available in defeating a recovery of punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 1412, 1483.]

8. JUDGMENT — CONCLUSIVENESS — CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

In such an action it is not permissible for the carrier to plead or prove the conviction of the plaintiff, in a criminal prosecution brought against him on the charge of using profane and vulgar language in the presence of females, while upon its cars on the occasion when he was forcibly expelled from the train.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 30, Cent. Dig. Judgment, § 1310.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by Preston O'Quin against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

This was an action to recover damages from the defendant for unlawfully and wrongfully expelling the plaintiff from its cars on which he was riding as a passenger, and for ejecting him with unnecessary force and causing him to be arrested for an offense alleged to have been committed on the cars. The jury on the trial found a verdict for $500 damages. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was refused by the court, and it excepts to the judgment overruling this motion. The evidence for the plaintiff tended to prove that he was a passenger on the cars of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, and was traveling from Savannah to his destination at Fitzgerald; that when the train reached the station of Collins, in Tattnall county, certain detectives, employes of the railway company, forcibly ejected him from the train, without allowing him to get his baggage, and turned him over to the marshal of Collins; that on the next day a warrant was sued out in Bryan county at the instance of one of the detectives who ejected him from the train, and he was arrested on this warrant and had to give bond for his appearance before the committing court; that the warrant was subsequently dismissed for want of prosecution; that at the time of his ejection he was conducting himself in a proper and orderly manner; and that his previous conduct had given no pretense to the servants of the railway company for expelling him from the train, causing his arrest, and suing out a warrant against him. The defendant offered evidence to show that at the time the plaintiff boarded its cars at Savannah he was partially intoxicated; that while on its cars he used profane and obscene language in the presence of the passengers, among whom were several females; that because of such improper conduct he was expelled from the train by its employes; and that in ejecting him no more force was used than was necessary.

Brown & Randolph, Tom Eason, and J. V. Kelley, for plaintiff in error. W. T. Burkhalter and Jos. K. Hines, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). 1. The first ground of the amended motion for a new trial complains that the court erred in charging the jury: "In every tort there may be aggravating circumstances, either in the act or in the intention; and in that event, the jury may give additional damages, either to deter the wrongdoer from repeating the trespass, or as a compensation for the wounded feelings of the plaintiff." The error assigned on this charge is that it was not applicable to the facts of the case. The charge was almost a literal excerpt from Civ. Code 1895, § 3906, which is applicable in all cases where there has been a trespass upon or unlawful invasion of the personal rights of the aggrieved party. W. & A. R. v. Turner, 72 Ga. 292, 53 Am. Rep. 842; City & Suburban Ry. v. Brauss, 70 Ga. 368; Georgia R. v. Homer, 73 Ga. 257; Georgia R. Co. v. Dougherty, 86 Ga. 744, 12 S. E. 747, 22 Am. St. Rep. 499. The case made by the plaintiff is that, while traveling as a passenger and behaving in a decorous manner, he was ruthlessly ejected from the defendant's train by its servants, without any excuse and without informing him why he was so treated; that he was forcibly expelled; and that in ejecting him the company's employes, in the presence of other passengers, roughly took hold of his person and jerked him from the train. If this was the truth of the case (and the verdict of the jury solves this question in favor of the plaintiff), the conduct of the railway company's employes evinced a reckless disregard of the plaintiff's rights, their wrongful act amounted to a trespass upon his person, and the charge of the court was applicable to the case as made out by the evidence introduced in his behalf. Georgia R. v. Homer, supra; Head v. Railway Co., 79 Ga. 358, 7 S. E. 217, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434; Atlanta St. Ry. Co. v. Hardage, 93 Ga. 457, 21 S. E. 100; Southern Ry. Co. v. Harden, 101 Ga. 263, 28 S. E. 847.

2. The following charge was also excepted to: "I charge you further, in determining this question and in dealing with the passenger while on the train, the railroad was bound to exercise extraordinary diligence in looking into the facts and circumstances and determining the question as to whether or not this particular passenger, or whether somebody else, had been using profane and vulgar language. In other words, in determining the question as to whether or not the passenger was subject to the section of the Code which I have read to you—being ejected for using obscene language—they should use extraordinary diligence in determining that question." This charge is alleged to be erroneous, because the rule as to extraordinary diligence did not apply to the facts of the case, and because the court should have qualified the charge by instructing the jury that if the employes of the company acted in good faith and used ordinary diligence in undertaking to ascertain whether the plaintiff was the person who had been guilty of disorderly conduct on the train, the company could not be held liable for his expulsion. We agree with counsel for the plaintiff in error that the question of extraordinary diligence was not involved under the facts of this case. A common carrier owes to a passenger the duty of exercising extraordinary diligence to guard him against injury and to provide for his safety while he is traveling on its cars; but where the carrier, through its employes, acting within the scope of their authority, wrongfully ejects a passenger, the carrier is liable for the tort thus committed, irrespective of the good faith of its employes and the exercise on their part of ordinary prudence in determining whether or not the passenger has been guilty of misconduct. A mistake of fact on their part will not relieve the carrier from liability, even though they may have acted in entire good faith. Georgia R. Co. v. Eskew, 86 Ga. 641, 12 S. E. 1061, 22 Am. St. Rep. 490; Atlanta Ry. Co. v. Keeny, 99 Ga. 266, 25 S. E. 629, 33 L. R. A. 824. Their intention can only be looked to in determining whether the case is one calling for punitive damages. Georgia R. Co. v. Eskew, just cited. In expelling a passenger from its train, the carrier acts at its peril; and, if he be wrongfully ejected, the fact that its servants acted under a misapprehension in supposing that he had been guilty of misconduct can afford no excuse to the carrier for his unlawful expulsion. A conductor on a passenger train is "invested with all the powers, duties, and responsibilities of police officers while on duty," and may lawfully eject a passenger who is guilty of disorderly conduct, and cause him to be arrested and detained for a violation of any of the penal laws of this state; but the statute which clothes a conductor with this authority expressly provides that nothing therein contained "shall affect the liability of any railroad company for the acts of its employes." Pen. Code 1895, § 902. While the law as to extraordinary diligence does not apply to a case where a passenger is wrongfully ejected from a train by the servants of a railway company, yet the charge excepted to affords no cause of complaint to the defendant company, as the charge was more favorable to it than would have been a correct presentation to the jury of the law bearing upon its liability as a common carrier. Atlanta St. Ry. Co. v. Keeny, 99 Ga. 266, 25 S. E. 629, 33 L. R. A. 824.

3. On the trial the defendant offered an amendment to its plea, alleging that since the filing of the suit, the plaintiff had been indicted and convicted in the superior court of Chatham county for using profane, obscene, and vulgar language, in the presence of females, on a passenger car, on the same day as that on which he claims he was unlawfully ejected from the defendant's train. The court declined to allow this amendment. The record of the criminal proceeding therein referred to was offered in evidence in behalf of the company, but was excluded by the court. Error is assigned upon both of these rulings. The judgment of conviction in a criminal prosecution constitutes no bar to a civil action based upon the same act or transaction. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. (2d Ed.) 831; Cottingham v. Weeks, 54 Ga. 275. This rule rests upon the reasoning that the two proceedings are not, ordinarily, between the same parties; different rules as to the competency of witnesses and as to the weight of evidence exist, and the issue in the criminal proceeding is not necessarily the same, either as to scope or as to its attendant results, as that involved in the civil action. In this state the defendant is not, in a criminal case, permitted to testify, and his version of the transaction may be believed or rejected in the discretion of the jury; while, on the other hand, the party against whom the civil action is brought should not be held bound by the result of the criminal proceeding, not being a party thereto, and not having the right to examine or cross-examine witnesses, or to control the conduct of the case. It follows that the court did not err in refusing to allow the amendment, or in rejecting the proffered evidence.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 361)

SCREWS v. ANDERSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—NEW TRIAL—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—NECESSITY OF STATING REJECTED EVIDENCE.

Where one ground of a motion for a new trial alleged that the court erred in refusing to permit two named witnesses to testify "what the whole services of the attorney for defendant in illegality are worth in the case up to date of trial and including the same," without stating what such testimony would have been, or whether the judge was informed of what was expected to be proved, it cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 1747.]

2. SAME—SETTING OUT DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

Nor can a ground be considered which alleges error in the exclusion of a written transfer, without setting out the rejected evidence. Evidence which has been rejected cannot properly be included in a brief of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 2905.]

3. EXECUTION — TRANSFER — NECESSITY OF WRITING.

The transfer of an execution must be in writing in order to put the legal title in the transferee, and authorize him to proceed in his own name.

4. NEW TRIAL—RELATIONSHIP OF JURORS TO PARTIES.

Where an execution was levied, and the defendant therein interposed an affidavit of illegality, alleging payment, and the jury found that the affidavit of illegality be sustained except as to a certain sum, for which the execution should proceed for the benefit of the plaintiff's attorney, it furnished no ground for a new trial, on the motion of the plaintiff in fi. fa., that two of the jurors trying the case were her second cousins. And this is true although the attorney testified that he had been employed under an agreement by which he was to have one-half of the recovery, and another person, not a party of record, testified that he had a transfer of the claim from the plaintiff, while she denied both of these statements.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

The evidence being conflicting, and the presiding judge having approved the verdict, this court will not interfere with his judgment on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 1836, 1875.]

6. SAME—PARTIES—AMENDMENT.

If parties who should be plaintiffs in error are omitted, they can be added by amendment to the bill of exceptions filed by one proper plaintiff in error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 1814, 1836.]

7. SAME.

No amendment is necessary in the present case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by Sarah Screws against J. C. Anderson, in which plaintiff recovered a judgment, and, upon the levy of a fi. fa. upon certain property, defendant interposed an affidavit of illegality, alleging payment of the execution. There was judgment upholding the fi. fa., and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

A suit was brought by Sarah Screws against J. C. Anderson, and judgment was recovered for $236.42, principal, and $203.71, interest to October 4, 1900. A levy was made on certain property, and the defendant interposed an affidavit of illegality, alleging that he had paid off and discharged the fi. fa. except the cost, which he tendered. On the trial it appeared that Mrs. Screws had made a settlement with Anderson, the defendant in fi. fa., that the fee of W. T. Burkhalter, the attorney of record for the plaintiff, had not been paid, and that he claimed the right to have the execution proceed, for the purpose of collecting such fee, which he claimed was to be one-half of the recovery. It was also claimed that there had been an assignment by Mrs. Screws to one Sapp, and that, in addition to proceeding for attorney's fees, the fi. fa. should proceed also for his benefit. Mrs. Screws admitted that she had settled the execution with Anderson, who was her nephew. She denied that she had ever employed Burkhalter to bring the suit, or made any contract with him. She admitted that she was very old, being between 80 and 90 years of age, and that her memory was bad. She also admitted that she had been present at the trial when the case was litigated and the judgment obtained. She denied that she had authorized Sapp to retain Burkhalter as her attorney, or that she had transferred the claim to Sapp. There was conflicting evidence, some of the witnesses testifying that Sapp had been authorized to employ Burkhalter, and had done so, and that Mrs. Screws ratified and confirmed the employment, and recognized him as her attorney; also, that the contract was that he was to receive one-half of the recovery as a fee. Sapp testified that the suit had been assigned to him. It appears that an effort was made to prove a written assignment, but it was rejected by the court. The jury found the following verdict: "We, the jury, find for the illegality, and direct that the fi. fa. proceed for the benefit of plaintiff's attorney for $75; so say we all." A motion was made for a new trial in the name of Mrs. Screws, which was overruled, and she excepted.

W. T. Burkhalter and Z. D. Harrison, for plaintiff in error. J. K. Hines and Isaiah Beasley, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). 1. 2. A ground of a motion for a new trial which alleges error on the part of the court in refusing to let two named witnesses state "what the whole services of the attorney for defendant in illegality are worth in the case up to date of trial and including the same," without stating what such testimony would have been, or that the judge was informed of what was expected to be proved, cannot be considered. Grant v. Noel, 118 Ga. 258, 45 S. E. 279 (2); Freeman & Turner News Co. v. Mencken, 115 Ga. 1017, 42 S. E. 369. For the like reason, the ground of the motion for a new trial, alleging error in the exclusion of a written transfer from Mrs. Screws to Sapp, cannot be considered, because the evidence excluded is not set out in the motion for a new trial.

3. The court charged that the transfer of an execution must be in writing in order to put the legal title in the transferee, and authorize him to proceed in his own name, and this was clearly correct. Civ. Code 1895, § 3682; Anderson v. Baker, 60 Ga. 599.

4. One ground of the motion for a new trial is because two of the jurors were disqualified by reason of relationship to Mrs. Screws, being her second cousins, and that this was not known to Burkhalter, the attorney, until after the trial. It is not shown that this was not known to his client, either Mrs. Screws, the original plaintiff in fi. fa., or Sapp, who claimed to be a transferee of it. The execution was proceeding in the name of Mrs. Screws as a party of record. It is true that the evidence developed the fact that she had made a settlement with the defendant in fi. fa., and the attorney claimed that such a settlement did not extinguish the execution, or prevent its proceeding. He testified that, under his contract of employment, he was entitled to one-half of the recovery as a fee. She denied that there was such a contract. In addition to the evidence on this subject, there was also evidence as to the value of services.

Thus, while the attorney claimed to have the execution proceed for his benefit, which he might do for the amount of his fee (Civ. Code 1895, § 2814; Kimbrough v. Pitts, 63 Ga. 496), and Sapp claimed to be a transferee, on the face of the record Mrs. Screws was the only party plaintiff, and the case proceeded in her name as such. A verdict was rendered against the affidavit of illegality to the extent of $75 as the attorney's fee. In Wright v. Smith, 104 Ga. 174, 30 S. E. 651, it is held that "relationship of a juror within the prohibited degrees to the unsuccessful party in a case, although unknown to such party or his counsel until after the verdict, is not sufficient ground for a new trial." See, also, Sikes v. State, 105 Ga. 592, 31 S. E. 567; Downing v. State, 114 Ga. 30, 39 S. E. 927. If, therefore, the plaintiff is to be considered as the losing party because the affidavit of illegality was sustained in part, these cases would be directly controlling. If she is to be treated as the successful party because the affidavit of illegality was not sustained in its entirety, a fortiori, one in whose favor a verdict is rendered is not in position to complain of having relatives on the jury. Although the attorney and his client differed in their testimony, yet he was not a party of record, nor can it be said that his client, in whose name alone the case was proceeding, was the opposite party.

5. While the evidence was conflicting, we cannot say that the trial court abused his discretion in refusing to set aside the verdict.

6, 7. A motion was made to dismiss the writ of error, but it is without merit. The only ground which need be mentioned is that neither the attorney nor Sapp was made a party plaintiff in error. Neither of them was a party of record in the court below, and although it was claimed that the fi. fa. should proceed for their benefit, the only parties of record were the plaintiff and defendant in fi. fa. It was not essential, therefore, to make them plaintiffs in error. Had it been so, they could have been joined with the original plaintiff in error by amendment to the bill of exceptions. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griffith, 111 Ga. 551, 36 S. E. 859.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 399)

HADEN v. ATLANTA NORTHERN RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)
EMINENT DOMAIN—REMEDIES OF OWNER—INJUNCTION.

Where, on the interlocutory hearing of a petition to enjoin a street railway company from using or operating its cars on a certain described strip of land to which petitioner claimed title, the judge, under the evidence submitted, could properly find that the petitioner had not shown title to the land in question, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to grant the injunction prayed for.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by W. W. Haden against the Atlanta Northern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

R. O. Lovett and W. W. Haden, for plaintiff in error. Rosser & Brandon, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 343)

GREEN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—STATEMENT OF ACCUSED AT INQUEST—METHOD OF PROOF.

It is competent to prove on a subsequent trial the statement of the prisoner at a coroner's inquest by the testimony of witnesses who profess to remember the substance of such statement; and it is not error for the court to overrule an objection to such testimony, urged on the ground that "the law requires the evidence before the coroner's jury to be in writing, and the writing would be better evidence of what the witness said."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 884, 1240-1245.]

2. SAME—COMPULSION—WANT OF EVIDENCE.

An objection to the admission of the same evidence, on the ground that "the defendant was in the custody of the officers, under arrest, and while thus situated was compelled to give testimony against herself and it was unlawful to require her to make any statement tending to incriminate herself, and therefore such statement would be inadmissible," is equally without merit where the record does not disclose any evidence, either of compulsion or that the statement proved by such testimony was not freely and voluntarily made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 460, 871.]

3. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

The evidence set out in the second ground of the amended motion for a new trial, being irrelevant, was properly excluded by the court.

4. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—JUSTIFICATION AND MITIGATION.

When on the trial of one charged with murder the accused admits the homicide, but at the same time states circumstances of justification or alleviation, and the only testimony of witnesses which proves the homicide also discloses circumstances of mitigation or justification, it is error for the court to charge, without qualification, "When a homicide, however, is proven, the burden is on the the slayer to justify or mitigate the crime or the offense."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Homicide, §§ 276-278, 611.]

5. SAME.

While the charge that "when homicide is proven, the law presumes malice, and, unless the evidence relieves the slayer, he or she should be convicted," is less objectionable, it does not aptly state the law in cases where, whether the admission of the defendant be considered or the evidence of the witnesses, there is no proof of the homicide save such as carries, in immediate connection with it, circumstances which, if believed to be true by the jury, would amount to a palliation or justification of the act.

6. SAME—CHARACTER OF DEFENDANT.

Although a defendant's character is not put in issue, still, where the evidence discloses facts which tend to show that the defendant is a woman of immoral life, it is not hurtful to her for the court to charge that a "woman or person of bad character has the right to defend [herself] upon the same principles as people of good character."

7. SAME—MANSLAUGHTER.

As there were facts and circumstances in evidence which would have warranted the jury to find that at the time of the homicide the deceased was attempting to commit a serious personal injury upon the accused, it was not error for the court to give in charge to the jury the law of voluntary manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Homicide, §§ 650-653.]

8. SAME — APPEAL — BURDEN OF SHOWING ERROR.

Before the refusal of a written request to charge the jury will be held to constitute error, it must appear that the request was in itself a correct statement of the law, and applicable to the case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Polk County;
A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

Clem Green was convicted of murder, and brings error. Reversed.

Blance & Tison and Bunn & Warrick, for plaintiff in error. W. K. Fielder, Sol. Gen., and John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BECK, J. The plaintiff in error, Clem Green, alias Clem Nunis, was convicted of the offense of murder. She made a motion for a new trial, based upon the general grounds, and by amendment added substantially the following: (1) That the court erred in admitting to the jury evidence of the defendant's statement before the coroner's jury, in which the defendant admitted shooting the deceased, but contended that she did it because he broke into her house, and was advancing on her with a razor. The defendant objected to the admission of this evidence, on the ground that the law requires the evidence before a coroner's jury to be in writing, and that this writing would be best evidence of what the witness said; and because the witness, being in the custody of officers, was while thus situated compelled to give the testimony against herself, and it was unlawful for her to have been allowed to make a statement tending to incriminate herself, and that therefore this testimony was inadmissible. (2) Because the court withheld from the jury the testimony of Levi Cook to the effect that he had "fixed a clock at Clem Green's house. Jim Davis [the deceased] broke into the door—broke the door open—and fired a shot through the door into the house. This was one or two years before his death. (4) [Should be 3, but numbered 4 in motion]. Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: 'When a homicide is proven, the law presumed malice, and, unless the evidence relieves the slayer, he or she should be convicted. If the state has failed to establish the guilt of the accused, the defendant should be acquitted.' The foregoing portion of the charge was error under the facts of this case, first, because the very evidence which proved that the defendant committed the homicide also showed complete justification. In this case the state was dependent upon the statement of the defendant for proof of the corpus delicti, and, while her statement showed that she did the killing, it also showed that the same was in self-defense. Therefore there could be no presumption of malice against her. (5) Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: 'When the homicide, however, is proven, the burden is on the slayer to justify or mitigate the offense.' The foregoing portion of the charge was error under the facts of this case, because the evidence which showed that the defendant committed the homicide also showed that she was justified in so doing. This was true of all the evidence which tended to show that the defendant committed the homicide. Therefore, the burden was never shifted." Error was also assigned because the court charged: "So, also, a woman or person of bad character has the right to defend themselves upon the same principles as people of good character," for the reason that "it amounted to an expression on the part of the court that the defendant was a woman of bad character," as she had not placed her character in issue. The court charged the law in reference to voluntary manslaughter as contained in Pen. Code 1895, § 65. The defendant alleges that that part of the section which begins with the sentence, "Provocation by words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures shall in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder," should not have been charged, "because it was not justified by the evidence in this case, and, the case * * * being a close case, it tended to unduly prejudice the jury against this defendant." And again, exception was taken because the court refused a written request to give in charge the following: "A statement which admits the commission of the act, but which also gives a legal excuse or justification, is not a confession. The jury would have no right, where the state relies on such a statement, to consider that part of it which tends only to criminate the defendant, and reject that part of it which would excuse or justify the killing; and when the statement is relied on for conviction as admitting the killing, but also, in itself, shows that the act was justified or excusable, the jury would not be justified in convicting the defendant of either murder or manslaughter. This rule of law applies where the state relies on such statement to identify the defendant as the slayer." The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

1, 2. There was no error in admitting the testimony complained of in the first ground of the amendment to the motion for a new trial, it not appearing from the record that the accused was under oath when she made her statement during the coroner's inquest. This court has in terms decided this very question. In Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 562, 8 S. E. 728, it was held: "Nor was there any error in admitting the testimony * * * in relation to * * * the statements of the defendant made during the [coroner's] investigation. The objection was that the circumstances then surrounding the defendant amounted to force and compulsion. We see no error in the admission of this testimony. * * * So far as this record discloses the statements made by the defendant were perfectly voluntary, and not under oath. It is true that there was some excitement in the crowd during the day, and that the defendant was under arrest, charged with the murder of his whole family; but there had been no threats made against him, so far as the record discloses." See, also, Wharton's Cr. Ev. §§ 664, 668; 1 Bishop's Cr. Proc. §§ 1255-1257. As it does not appear from the record in the case at bar that the incriminating statement of the accused was not voluntarily made, and the burden being upon her to show such fact, if it was a fact (Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 599), her failure so to do renders her objection to the testimony without merit. Nor should this testimony have been excluded on the ground that, because the law requires the substance of the evidence before a coroner's jury to be reduced to writing, the writing would be better evidence of what the witness said. It is true that a coroner is required to "commit to writing the substance of the testimony delivered before the inquest." Pen. Code 1895, § 1265. But this "substance of the testimony" is in its character very similar to the "abstract of evidence" which in courts of inquiry the judge is required to have made where the charge is of a felony; and it has been held that evidence of the testimony of a witness on a committing trial may be proved as well by one who heard it as by the notes or memoranda taken by the court. "This [abstract of evidence] differs from an approved record, where all the facts are taken down and scrutinized by the counsel for the parties, and approved by the court, and becomes a matter of record. It also differs from a voluntary statement made by the accused before a committing court, which the law requires the magistrate to take down in writing, and return to the superior court." Brown v. State, 76 Ga. 626.

3. The court properly rejected the evidence the exclusion of which is complained of in the second ground of the amended motion. In no event could it have been admissible, unless it had further appeared that at the time of such shooting Clem Green was in the house, and that the shooting was an attempt to do her an injury. But even if this had appeared, the admission of such testimony would have been of doubtful propriety; for it appears that whatever might have been the state of the deceased's feelings towards the defendant one or two years before his death, amicable relations had been re-established between them before the time of the tragedy that culminated in the shooting with which the defendant in this case is charged.

4. Though some other courts lay down a different rule, it is now a well-established rule in this state that, where a killing of a human being is proved, and the evidence adduced to establish the killing does not show circumstances of justification or alleviation, malice will be inferred. But if the evidence relied upon by the state to show the killing contains circumstances of alleviation or justification, the burden of proving that the crime was murder is not shifted. Until malice is shown, one vital element of the offense is lacking. This element, as we have seen, may be presumed to exist when by the evidence proving the homicide no circumstances of mitigation appear. "The law presumes every homicide to be felonious until the contrary appears from circumstances of alleviation, of excuse, or justification; and it is incumbent on the prisoner to make out such circumstances to the satisfaction of the jury, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him." Hudgins v. State, 2 Ga. 188. "'In every charge of murder,' says Mr. Justice Foster, 'the fact of killing first being proved, all the circumstances of accident, necessity, or infirmity are to be satisfactorily proved by the prisoner, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him; for the law presumes the fact to be founded in malice, until the contrary appears.' Foster, 255." Hopkins, Pen. Code 1895, § 858. But in the case at bar, whether the jury based their finding that the defendant did the killing upon the admissions of the accused herself, or upon the testimony of witnesses in the case, they could not have found the fact of the killing except from evidence or from admission which carried, in close and immediate connection with proof of the killing, circumstances of necessity, excuse, or mitigation. Of course, where the evidence or admission which established the fact of a killing contains also circumstances of the character just indicated, it would be within the province of the jury to accept the entire testimony, and give full effect to the circumstances reducing the killing from murder to some lower grade of offense than murder, or to find it justifiable homicide, or they might reject entirely all of the evidence of an exculpatory nature, if under all the proved facts and circumstances they disbelieved the same, and believe only that which tended to fix guilt upon the accused; but the charge should have been so adjusted to the facts as to allow to the jury the free exercise of their functions. The jury was authorized in this case to find that the defendant did the killing from the admission of the defendant herself, but in connection with that admission she stated strong facts of mitigation, excuse, and justification. So also, the testimony of the two witnesses, Mick Smith and Pope Means, would have authorized the jury to find that the defendant committed the homicide; but it is likewise true of their evidence that it contains circumstances of mitigation, for in the same breath in which they establish the killing they show circumstances of necessity or palliation, and these would have negated the presumption of malice which would otherwise arise upon the bare proof of the homicide, had the jury from all the evidence believed them to be proved.

5. The portion of the charge complained of in the fourth ground of the motion might not constitute reversible error, but it is not entirely unobjectionable. It is true that it is in the very language of the headnote in the case of Clarke v. State, 35 Ga. 75, and that in that case a charge very similar to the one under consideration was approved; but in the Clarke Case the evidence for the state, without disclosing any circumstances of alleviation or justification, clearly proved the fact of the homicide committed by the accused. But where the very witnesses whose evidence establishes the fact of the killing include in their testimony circumstances of mitigation, malice will not be presumed, and the jury will be left free to find, from all the proved facts and circumstances in the case, whether the killing was done with malice aforethought or not.

6-8. The other errors complained of are sufficiently dealt with in the headnotes.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 218)

MC COY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. ERROR—AFFIDAVIT—IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

An affidavit by the plaintiff in error that "he is, because of his poverty, unable to pay the costs" in the case, fully complies with the requirement of the statute as to taking criminal cases to the Supreme Court on affidavits in forma pauperis.

2. INDICTMENT—VARIANCE.

Where an accusation for cheating and swindling charged that the accused fraudulently procured $10 in money from the prosecutor, evidence that the accused procured from the prosecutor and had cashed a draft for $10 was admissible.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—WAIVER OF ERROR.

Though it was erroneous to admit, over the objection of the accused, secondary evidence of a fact, by subsequently admitting such fact in his statement to the jury, he lost the right to except to the ruling.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT—BREACH OF CONTRACT—EVIDENCE.

The evidence did not authorize the verdict, and the court erred in not granting a new trial. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Baxley; J. I. Carter, Judge.

Lawrence McCoy was convicted of being a common cheat, and brings error. Reversed.

Lawrence McCoy was convicted in the city court of Baxley of being a common cheat and swindler, under an accusation based upon the act of the General Assembly of August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90). His motion for a new trial being overruled, he excepted. The accusation charged that the accused, on December 1, 1903, in the county of Appling, contracted with the prosecutor to work for him as a laborer, with intent to procure money from him, and not to perform such service, and thereby procured from the prosecutor $10 in money, and after procuring the same failed to perform the labor in pursuance of the contract, to the loss and damage of the prosecutor in the sum of $10. On the trial the prosecutor testified: "On the 29th day of November, 1903, this defendant came to my place, and wanted to borrow from me the sum of ten dollars, and he wanted to cut boxes for me and work for me after Christmas. I first refused to loan him the money, knowing that he was at work for the Kirkland boys, but he stated to me that he wanted to work for me the next year, and that he was out of debt to the Kirkland boys, and that if I would let him have the ten dollars he would come to my place after Christmas and work for me. * * * Defendant agreed that if I would let him have the ten dollars, he would come back after Christmas and work for me. I did not have the ten dollars to let the defendant have in money, so I drew a draft on my factors, and gave to him, for the sum of ten dollars. The draft was of the value of ten dollars. I have been damaged, I consider, more than ten dollars by the failure of this defendant to complete his contract. He has never up to this time completed his contract. This all occurred in Appling county, this state. The defendant was to cut boxes for me after Christmas, and do work, too, during the year on my turpentine place. After Christmas the defendant came to me, and told me that Rich Kirkland claimed an account against him of six dollars, and stated that he was ready to go to work, and wanted me to pay the account of some four or six dollars for shoes to Rich Kirkland. I told him I would not do so, and told him that it would be satisfactory with me for him to go back to Rich Kirkland and work out the shoes, and that he could then come to my place and work out what he owed me. He came to see me twice about going to work for me before he went to work for me; that he could work it out in one week, and come back and go to work. Just about the 12th of March, before box season was out, he came to my place, and came on Monday morning, and commenced cutting boxes, and cut boxes for me one or two days, and then I had him to go to work cornering boxes, and he worked at that until Friday of that week, and told me that he had left his family, and would go and see how they were, and would return on the following Monday morning, but did not make any provision about going back the following Monday morning. His wife died, so I am informed, about the month of October. My woodsman and myself counted the boxes he cut, and his work, less the amount of rations he got to live on while he was at work, amounted to two dollars and fifty-seven cents, for which amount I credited him. I have never seen the draft I gave him since I gave it to him, and do not know whether the factors have ever paid it, or whether it has ever been presented for payment. The defendant's family lived seven miles from where he did this work. I do not know whether defendant's wife ever recovered from this illness defendant referred to when he left my place on that Monday morning or not. * * * I know I paid my factors the ten dollars for the draft." Another witness for the state testified that the accused admitted to him that Mr. Davis, a son-in-law of the prosecutor, "cashed" the draft for the accused. The accused, in his statement to the jury, admitted that he procured "the draft" from the prosecutor.

J. H. Thomas and N. E. Padgett, for plaintiff in error. N. J. Holden, for the State.

FISH, C. J. 1. Counsel for the state moved to dismiss the writ of error, on the ground that the plaintiff in error had not paid the costs, nor, in lieu thereof, made an affidavit in accordance with the statute. There is an affidavit by the plaintiff in error, properly entitled, attached to the bill of exceptions, in which the affiant makes oath "that he is, because of his poverty, unable to pay the cost in said case." This affidavit fully complies with the requirements of the statute. Counsel for the state relied on DeLoach v. Richards, 94 Ga. 730, 19 S. E. 717, but the ruling there made is not in conflict with that which is here held. That case, as was stated in Barnes v. State, 105 Ga. 830, 31 S. E. 561, is incorrectly reported. The record thereof of file in this court shows that the affidavit there in question conjunctively stated that the affiant was unable to pay the costs and give security, thus failing to affirmatively show that he was unable to pay the costs.

2. The accused objected to the testimony of the prosecutor, that he drew a draft on his factors for the sum of $10 and gave it to the accused, on the grounds that the accusation charged that the accused procured $10 in money from the prosecutor, and this charge could not be sustained by proof that a draft for $10 was so procured; and that the draft, being in writing, was the highest evidence of its contents. The first objection would have been meritorious if the state had offered no evidence to show that the accused procured the money for which the draft called; but, as the prosecution introduced such evidence, the objection was without merit. While the charge in the accusation that the accused procured from the prosecutor $10 in money could not be sustained by mere proof that he procured from the prosecutor a draft for $10, yet if this evidence was followed by proof that the accused had the draft cashed, this would be equivalent to his procuring the money from the prosecutor. In State v. Palmer, 40 Kan. 474, 20 Pac. 270, the indictment charged that the accused obtained money under false pretenses. The proof was that he obtained a check, which was cashed out of money deposited in bank by the drawer of the check. It was held that there was no variance between the charge and the proof. Similar rulings were made in People v. Dimick, 107 N. Y. 18, 14 N. E. 178, and Adams v. People, 25 Colo. 532 (2), 55 Pac. 806.

3. Whatever merit there was in the other objection to the evidence in question, the accused lost the benefit of the objection when he subsequently admitted, in his statement to the jury, that he had procured "the draft" from the prosecutor; clearly referring to the draft described by the prosecutor in his testimony, as this was the only draft which had been mentioned or alluded to in the case.

4. The evidence did not warrant a verdict of guilty, and the court, for this reason, erred in not granting a new trial. As was said in Glenn v. State, 123 Ga. 585, 51 S. E. 605, before one can be lawfully convicted of a violation of the statute upon which this accusation was based, there must be proof of a distinct and definite contract for service. No such contract was proved in the present case. The charge in the accusation was that the accused did contract with the prosecutor to perform service as a laborer for him, with intent to procure money, and not perform such service, and did thereby procure from the prosecutor $10 in money, and after procuring the money did not perform the labor as contracted, to the loss and damage of the prosecutor, etc. It is therefore clear that, in order to make out the case, the state had to prove that there was an existing contract at the time the accused procured the $10 from the prosecutor; for the accused, after having procured the $10, could not contract with the prosecutor with intent to procure it. We must look, then, for the contract upon which the accused procured the money, to what occurred before or at the time that the prosecutor gave the accused the draft for $10. Upon this subject the prosecutor testified as follows: "On the 29th of November, 1903, this defendant came to my place, and wanted to borrow from me the sum of ten dollars, and he wanted to cut boxes for me and work for me after Christmas." The accused "agreed that if I would let him have the ten dollars, he would come back after Christmas and work for me. I did not have the ten dollars, * * * so I drew a draft on my factors, and gave to him, for the sum of ten dollars. * * * The defendant was to cut boxes for me after Christmas, and do work, too, during the year on my turpentine place." What, then, was the agreement or promise of the accused upon the faith of which he obtained the draft for $10 from the prosecutor? It was that he would come back after Christmas, and work for the prosecutor on the latter's turpentine place. At what time after Christmas he was to come back and work for the prosecutor was not stated. How long he was to so work was not disclosed. How he was to work—whether by the day, by the week, or the month, or by the year—or whether he was to be paid according to the amount of work he should do, is left by this evidence to mere conjecture. So, too, it is utterly impossible from this testimony to ascertain what wages, if any, the accused was to receive for his work. The contract, if such there was, was indefinite as to the time when service thereunder should begin, indefinite as to the time during which such service should continue, and wholly silent as to the compensation which should be paid for such service. Even if, by strained construction of this testimony, it could be inferred that the accused was to work for the prosecutor until the debt contracted for the loan of $10 should be discharged, there is absolutely no way of ascertaining how much work, in time or quantity, the accused was to do in order to discharge this indebtedness, for the contract discloses no measure of compensation by which to estimate the value of his work. The accused did come back to the prosecutor's place after Christmas, and work thereon, by cutting and cornering turpentine boxes. This is all that he expressly agreed to do. Whether the work which he did was, as to time or quantity, sufficient to comply with the contract, interpreted as above indicated, cannot, for the reasons given above, be ascertained from the testimony. It is true that the prosecutor sought by his own testimony to show that the accused did not perform his contract, by testifying that the work which the accused did for him, less the amount of rations which he got to live on while at work, amounted to $2.57; but how or where the witness got the measure of value by which to estimate in money the work done by the accused does not appear. He certainly did not get it from anything that appears in the agreement between the parties, and it does not even appear what was the market value of the work done. Of course the mere statement by the prosecutor in his testimony that the accused had never completed his contract is of no probative value whatever, being a mere conclusion of the witness. The question whether the accused completed the performance of his contract was for the jury, and not for the witness. The statute involved in this case provides that, if any person shall contract with another to perform for him services of any kind, with intent to procure money or other thing of value thereby, and not to perform the service contracted for, etc., he shall be deemed a common cheat and swindler. A criminal statute must be construed strictly. It is clear, therefore, that before there can be a lawful conviction under this statute, the evidence must show a contract for service which is so distinct and definite as to its terms that nothing essential is left to be supplied by mere inference or conjecture. When the contract relied on is for a term of service which the parties have left indefinite and unascertainable from their agreement, it is insufficient to support a prosecution under this statute.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 159)

IVEY et al. v. COWART.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—TAX RETURNS.

Where the location of a line between two tracts of land was in dispute, and evidence was introduced to show the contents of certain land lots and fractional lots, and the effect which running the line as claimed by the adverse party would have on such lots and the improvements on some of them, it was admissible in rebuttal to introduce the tax returns of certain of the defendants, while claiming as owners, for the purpose of showing that they returned some of the lots as containing less land than the evidence on their behalf indicated.

2. SAME—PREVIOUS PROPOSAL TO FIX BOUNDARY.

Where land was bounded by a county line, and processioners ran and marked the line, and subsequently it was in controversy between landowners, it was error to admit evidence that at the time of the processioning one of the parties proposed to one of the adverse side that they, with the processioners, should go south to a place about seven or eight miles distant from the location of the tract of land involved, where the proposing party said there was no dispute about the county line, and run a line from that point, and that both sides should abide by it, and agree to make the decision final.

3. SAME—CONTINUATION OF ESTABLISHED BOUNDARY.

Where the location of the line between two counties was uncertain and disputed, and the lines between adjoining lands coincided with the county line, which was claimed by both sides to be a straight line, evidence was admissible to show that, for a considerable distance south of the place where the line was in dispute, owners of land in the two counties, whose lands were bounded by the county line, had built fences up to a certain line, and recognized it as being the county line, and had so bounded their possessions for 20 years or more, and that the line run between the lands of the parties by processioners was a continuation of the line so recognized.

4. SAME—ESTABLISHMENT BY ACQUIESCENCE—ACTS OF ADJOINING OWNERS.

Acquiescence for seven years by acts or declarations of adjoining landowners will establish a dividing line. But acquiescence of certain landowners, whose lands are bounded by a county line, as to the location of such boundary, will not be binding on other landowners not holding under them, and whose lands touch the county line at another place.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 8, Cent. Dig. Boundaries, §§ 232-242.]

5. INJUNCTION—TRESPASS—CODEFENDANTS.

In an equitable action seeking to recover land, to enjoin a trespass, and to recover damages against several defendants as trespassers, there was no error in refusing to charge that, "if the evidence showed that the title and possession of the defendants was not joint, or failed to show that the acts of trespass complained of by them were not committed by them jointly, then there could be no recovery by the plaintiff."

6. TRESPASS—RECOVERY AGAINST PART OF DEFENDANTS.

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 3915, where several trespassers are sued jointly, the plaintiff may recover against all damages for the greatest injury done by either. The jury in their verdict may specify the particular damages to be recovered by each, and judgment will then be entered severally; but the defendants are not entitled to require damages to be apportioned by the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Tresp., § 70.]

7. SAME.

In a suit against several persons as trespassers, some of the defendants may be found to be trespassers, and a recovery may be had against them, while some may be found not to be trespassers, and a verdict rendered in their favor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Tresp., § 70.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Early County; J. D. Rambo, Judge pro hac.

Action by J. S. Cowart against R. F. Ivey and others. There was judgment for plaintiff as against defendants R. F. Ivey and another, and they bring error. Reversed.

J. S. Cowart brought suit against R. F. Ivey, F. P. Ivey, T. J. Ivey, M. E. Livingston, E. E. Ivey, and Mollie Ivey, seeking to recover a strip of land which he claimed formed a part of land lot No. 400, in the sixth district of Early county, to recover damages for a trespass alleged to have been committed by the defendants in cutting timber on it, to enjoin further trespassing, and to recover the land and mesne profits. On the trial the jury found in favor of the plaintiff, and also that the plaintiff recover of R. F. Ivey and E. E. Ivey $150 as damages. The court entered judgment that the plaintiff recover of the defendants the premises in dispute, and that he recover of R. F. Ivey and E. E. Ivey $150 "for damages or mesne profits." Defendants moved for a new trial, which was refused, and they excepted.

Wm. C. Worrill and W. D. Sheffield, for plaintiffs in error. A. G. Powell, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. 1. The parties were in controversy as to the location of the line between lot No. 400 in the sixth district of Early county, and lots Nos. 381 and 382 in the seventh district of Baker county. Land lot No. 381 was a fractional lot, as was also lot No. 380, which lay just east of it. In seeking to determine where the line between Baker and Early counties ran, evidence was introduced as to the contents of various lots, and what effect as to the settlements upon some of the lots the establishing of the line in one place or another would have. Thus it was contended that lot No. 381 contained 50 acres. Plaintiff responded by introducing the tax returns of one of the defendants, showing that it had been returned as 10 acres. The returns of this defendant as to the other adjacent lots for that year were introduced, and the tax returns of another defendant for a preceding year were also introduced. Each return was made while the defendant making it claimed the land. These were admissible, and tended to throw some light on the question at issue. As to the admissibility of tax returns as admission, see Tolleson v. Posey, 32 Ga. 372; Lynch v. Lively, 32 Ga. 575; Smith v. Haire, 58 Ga. 446; Mashburn v. Dannenberg Co., 117 Ga. 567, 44 S. E. 97 (18). One of the returns introduced contained lot No. 337, which does not appear to have been a contiguous lot. The only possible relevancy of this, so far as we can perceive, was to explain the difference in the quantity of land included in the two returns; and this was no doubt the purpose of its introduction.

2. Evidence was introduced, over objection, that when processioners of Baker county ran the line between the property of the plaintiff and that of M. A. V. Ivey, one of the defendants (who appears to be the defendant called Mollie Ivey in the declaration), R. F. Ivey, another defendant, representing her, was present; that plaintiff proposed to him that they, with the processioners, should go south to a place about seven or eight miles distant, where the line between Baker and Early counties was undisputed, and run it from that point, and that both should abide by it, and agree to make the decision final, but that R. F. Ivey refused. This ruling was hurtful error. A proposition to begin a survey at a point which the proposer claimed was undisputed, and that the decision based upon the line thus run should be final, which was rejected by the adverse side, was not admissible in behalf of the person making the proposition. The possible injury which may have resulted from this error is made clear by another ground of the motion for a new trial, which alleges that counsel for plaintiff commented on this testimony, and urged that it showed R. F. Ivey to be unfair and acting in bad faith in his contention as to the line claimed, and that his testimony was therefore unreliable.

3. The line between the property of the plaintiff and that of the defendant coincided with the county line between Baker and Early counties, which both sides treated as being a straight line. Evidence was admitted to show that for a considerable distance south of the place where the line was in dispute owners of land in Baker and Early counties bounded by the county line had built dividing fences up to the line, and recognized it as the county line, and had so bounded their possessions for 20 years prior to the trial, and that the line lately run by the processioners was a continuation of the same line. This was objected to on the ground that it was irrelevant and not binding on the defendants. The evidence admitted may not strictly fall within the rule that "traditionary evidence as to ancient boundaries and landmarks is admissible in evidence, the weight to be determined by the jury according to the source whence it comes." Civ. Code 1895, § 5185. But where a public boundary, such as a county line, is the dividing line between two lots of land, use and occupancy by other neighboring landowners, whose lands are also bounded by the county line, for more than 20 years, up to a certain line as the county line, erecting fences, and treating it as the county line, and the fact that such line coincides with that claimed by one of the parties, is admissible. Tyler's Law of Boundaries, 296 et seq.; Aldrich v. Griffith, 66 Vt. 390, 29 Atl. 376 (8); Taylor v. Fomby, 116 Ala. 621, 22 South. 910, 67 Am. St. Rep. 149; Wimblish v. State, 70 Ga. 718; Riley v. Griffin, 16 Ga. 142 (18), 60 Am. Dec. 726; Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. 328, 8 L. Ed. 415. This hearsay or traditionary evidence was not conclusive on the defendants as to the location of the county line, but it was admissible, and its weight was to be determined by the jury.

4. It is complained in the sixth ground of the motion for a new trial that the court charged as follows: "General reputation in the neighborhood shall be evidence as to ancient landmarks, * * * if more than seven years standing, and acquiescence for seven years, by acts or declarations of adjoining landowners, shall establish a dividing line." The entire charge is not sent up, and this seems to be an incomplete extract, with some words omitted. Apparently the charge was taken from Civ. Code 1895, § 3247, which provides that "general reputation in the neighborhood shall be evidence as to ancient landmarks of more than thirty years standing, and acquiescence for seven years, by acts or declarations of adjoining landowners, shall establish a dividing line." This section is incorporated in the law of processioning. If the presiding judge meant to state that ancient landmarks of more than seven years standing were referred to in that section. It was a misquotation. The latter part of the charge also is not clear. Where lots of land are described as being bounded by a line between two counties, acquiescence for seven years by owners of some of the lands thus bounded would not be conclusive as to the true location of the line as against others, whose lands touched the line at a different point. It would be for the jury to determine, from all the evidence, where the true line was. If the location of the line was uncertain, and the parties to the controversy, or their predecessors in title, while holding it, had acquiesced by acts or declarations for seven years or more in a dividing line between their lots, this would establish it as to them. Civ. Code 1895, § 3247; Riley v. Griffin, 16 Ga. 142 (19), 60 Am. Dec. 726; Watt v. Ganahl, 34 Ga. 290; Glover v. Wright, 82 Ga. 115, 8 S. E. 452; Catoosa Springs Co. v. Webb, 123 Ga. 33, 50 S. E. 942.

5. It is contended that the presiding judge erred in refusing a request to give in charge the following: "If the evidence showed that the title and possession of defendants was not joint, or failed to show that the acts of trespass complained of them were not committed by them jointly, then there could be no recovery by plaintiff." It has been held by some courts that in an action of ejectment several defendants in possession, although holding separate and distinct titles, may be joined where the plaintiff's title in relation to all is the same, and they may defend separately, each for the part in his possession. Adams on Ejectment (4th Ed.) side p. 237, note 2; Tyler on Ejectment, 445, 446, 580, 581; 15 Cyc. 83; Jackson v. Woods, 5 Johns. 278. This court announced a different rule in Wood v. McGuire, 17 Ga. 308 (7); and the decision there made has been embodied in Civ. Code 1895, § 5000, in the following language: "When several persons claim several parcels of land under distinct titles, and do not sustain the relation to each other of landlord and tenant, a joint action of ejectment cannot be maintained against them, nor can a joint or several recovery be had in such action, either for the premises or mesne profits." The point may be raised by demurrer if the fact appears on the face of the proceedings (Lewis v. Adams, 61 Ga. 559), or by motion for nonsuit if it first appears from the evidence. In the latter event the plaintiff may dismiss as to the improper parties. Cunningham v. Bradley, 26 Ga. 238. And it has been said that where two or more defendants are charged in the plaintiff's declaration with holding possession of the premises in dispute jointly, if it appear on the trial that each of them possesses a parcel of the land not jointly but in severalty, the plaintiff will be entitled to a verdict for one possession only, at his election. Tyler on Ejectment, 580, 581; Jackson v. Hazen, 2 Johns. 438. The present action is neither ejectment nor complaint for land, but an equitable action, seeking not only to recover land, but also to enjoin a trespass, and to recover damages for a trespass already committed. The fact that it may seek to recover land and damages, as well as to have equitable relief, does not prevent it from being an equitable action. Collinsville Granite Co. v. Phillips, 123 Ga. 830, 51 S. E. 666. No demurrer was filed to it as being without equity, nor was any defense made on the ground of misjoinder of parties, and the case proceeded as such an action, including a prayer for injunction, although in fact none was granted. The common-law rule that in a joint action all of the plaintiffs must recover or none does not prevail in equity. In Bigham v. Kistler, 114 Ga. 453, 40 S. E. 303, it was said: "It is well settled at law that in a joint action to recover land, if it appears that one of the plaintiffs is not entitled to recover, the suit will fail as to all. * * * But even in cases of this character, where equitable defenses are interposed, the common-law rule above referred to will not be applied. Rumph v. Truelove, 66 Ga. 480 (2); Milner v. Vandivere, 86 Ga. 540, 545, 546, 12 S. E. 879. Much more would such a rule not be applicable in an action which is purely equitable. * * * The common-law rule that all must recover or none was never adopted by courts of equity. In such a case a decree will be moulded so as to do justice to all the parties. See Pomeroy's Rem. Rights, § 209 et seq." It would seem that in an equitable action against several defendants, the rule would equally apply that a failure to recover against some would not necessarily result in a failure as to all.

6. Where several trespassers are sued jointly, the plaintiff may recover against all damages for the greatest injury done by either. The jury may in their verdict specify the particular damages to be recovered of each, and judgment will then be entered severally. But the defendants are not entitled to have damages apportioned by the verdict. Some of the defendants may be found to be trespassers, and a recovery may be had against them, while some may be found not to be trespassers. Civ. Code 1895, § 3915; McCalla v. Shaw, 72 Ga. 458; Hollingsworth v. Howard, 113 Ga. 1099, 39 S. E. 465; Hay v. Collins, 118 Ga. 248, 44 S. E. 1002. Of course there cannot be a recovery for a trespass against a defendant if he is not connected with it. To recover against defendants as against trespassers they must be such.

On the subject of whether in a suit brought against two or more defendants as partners a recovery can be had against one there has been some diversity in the decisions of this court; but it has been said that, even in that case, a separate verdict may be had, and, if no objection was made until after verdict, it comes too late. Maynard v. Ponder, 75 Ga. 664. See, also, Waldrop v. Wolff, 114 Ga. 610, 617-619, 40 S. E. 830. The decision in Swift v. Tatner, 89 Ga. 680, 673, 15 S. E. 842, 32 Am. St. Rep. 101, does not conflict with the ruling here made. There an attachment was taken out against several defendants as joint owners of a ship, and it was held "that plaintiff having failed to prove the joint ownership as alleged, and that being the foundation of liability as to certain of the defendants, and this being an attachment case, the court erred in not granting a new trial for the want of evidence to uphold the joint verdict." Nor is there anything in the decision of Brownlee v. Abbott, 108 Ga. 761, 33 S. E. 44, in conflict with the present ruling. There, also, a joint verdict was rendered as to several defendants, without evidence to support it as to some of them.

As the case must be tried again, we refrain from expressing any opinion as to the evidence.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 181)

HUXFORD v. SOUTHERN PINE CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

A bill of exceptions which recites that a motion to dismiss a petition was made upon various grounds and overruled, and that to this ruling "the defendant then and there excepted, and now assigns the same as error," and that a motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and to this ruling "the defendant excepted, and now assigns the same as error," specifies "plainly the decision complained of and the alleged error," and specifically sets forth the error alleged to have been committed," within the meaning of Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5527, 5528.

2. INJUNCTION—TRESPASS—IRREPARABLE INJURY—PLEADING.

A petition by an owner of land and another, who holds a timber lease from him, alleging that, when the lessee entered into possession and undertook to exercise the privileges granted under the lease, the defendant, by threats of violence, intimidated the servants of the lessee, and drove them away from the land, and by intimidation continues to prevent the lessee and his servants from entering upon the land, thereby making it impossible for the lessee to exercise his rights under the lease, and praying for permanent injunction to restrain the wrongful conduct complained of, sets forth a cause of action, authorizing the granting of a writ of injunction, as against a motion to dismiss, in the nature of a general demurrer, made at the trial term.

3. EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

The courts of this state take judicial notice of the governmental survey of its territory and the relative location as originally laid off, as well as the effect of legislative enactments creating new counties, and fixing the boundary lines thereof.

4. TAXATION—WILD LANDS.

The act of 1874, regulating the manner of returning wild lands for taxes, authorizes the Comptroller General to issue an execution against an unreturned lot of wild land for the taxes of that year.

5. TRESPASS—OWNERSHIP OF LAND—FINDINGS.

In actions of trespass to realty, ownership of the premises is incidentally involved, and while in such cases a special finding by the jury as to ownership is not required, the incorporation of such a finding will not vitiate it, if the verdict is in other particulars regular and proper.

6. INJUNCTION—MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

The finding of the jury in favor of a permanent injunction did not, in the light of the petition and evidence, have the effect of granting an injunction which was mandatory in its nature.

7. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The evidence demanded the verdict directed by the court, and no sufficient reason has been shown for reversing the judgment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Coffee County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by the Southern Pine Company of Georgia and J. I. Crawley against C. Huxford. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

The Southern Pine Company of Georgia, a corporation, and J. I. Crawley were the plaintiffs and C. Huxford was the defendant. The petition alleged that the Pine Company was the owner of two described lots of land, and had a perfect title thereto, an abstract of which was attached to the petition, and that it had authorized Crawley to enter upon one of the lots, and box the timber thereon for turpentine, and to cut the timber suitable for cross-ties on the other. The petition then proceeded as follows: "Your petitioner further shows that, when said J. I. Crawley undertook to exercise the privilege which had been granted unto him by the said Southern Pine Company of Georgia, and had made arrangements to box and work the timber on said lot 236 aforesaid for turpentine, and to cut and remove the timber for cross-tie purposes on said lot 189 aforesaid, and had his agents, servants, and employes enter thereon for these purposes, respectively, thereupon C. Huxford, of said county, came on said lots of land where the employes of said J. I. Crawley were at work, and by threats of violence intimidated the employes of said J. I. Crawley, and drove them away from their work, and has since continued his said threats, and by intimidation continues to prevent the said J. I. Crawley and his employes from entering upon said lots of land, and boxing and using the same for turpentine, or cutting, felling, and removing the timber for cross-ties therefrom; and the said C. Huxford, by and through his intimidation aforesaid, makes it impossible for your petitioner to exercise their rights of ownership in and to the aforesaid property, and unless the said defendant is restrained and enjoined from further interference with your petitioners' rights in the premises, he will continue to intimidate the employes of said J. I. Crawley, and thereby defeat his right to exercise the privilege he has and holds in the timber aforesaid, and as well defeat the right of your petitioner Southern Pine Company of Georgia, who is the true and lawful owner thereof, and thus irreparably injure and damage your petitioners, respectively; and, being without remedy at common law, they therefore ask the aid and intervention of a court of equity for protection." There was no allegation of insolvency. The prayers were for an interlocutory injunction, and, upon the final hearing, for a permanent injunction, for damages, and for process. At the trial term the defendant moved to dismiss the petition upon various grounds, among them that there was no cause of action; that there was no allegation of insolvency, nor that the damages would be irreparable, nor that an injunction was necessary to avoid a multiplicity of suits; that the abstract of title attached to the petition is insufficient; that the petition asks that defendant be enjoined from committing a crime not affecting the property of plaintiffs; and that there is an adequate remedy at law for a recovery of damages for the alleged injury. The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted pendente lite. The case proceeded to trial, and at the close of the plaintiffs' evidence, the defendant introducing no evidence, the court directed the jury to find a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for a permanent injunction. The defendants made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled. Error is assigned in the bill of exceptions upon the judgment overruling the motion to dismiss, and upon the refusal to grant a new trial.

Frankford & Dickerson, for plaintiff in error. Jno. C. McDonald, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. 1. There was no motion to dismiss the writ of error, but the point is raised in the brief of counsel for the defendant in error that the assignments of error are not sufficiently definite and specific to be considered. The bill of exceptions recites that a motion to dismiss the petition was made upon grounds therein set forth, and was overruled, and the assignment of error is in the following language: "To which said ruling the defendant then and there excepted, and now assigns the same as error." This was sufficient to bring under review any question raised by the motion to dismiss. Melson v. Thornton, 118 Ga. 99, 88 S. E. 342 (2). The bill of exceptions also recites that a motion for a new trial was overruled, and the assignment of error on this judgment is in the following language: "To which said order the defendant excepted, and now assigns the same as error." This assignment of error is in compliance with the rule of this court in reference to assignments of error of the character now under consideration. Rule of Court 6; Civ. Code 1895, § 5605.

2. The plaintiffs are not the owners of timber, complaining of a trespass by a timber cutter, but they are timber cutters themselves, whose right to cut is alleged to have been interfered with by one who, they allege, is not the owner, nor in any way interested in the timber. It is apparent, therefore, that the timber cutter's act (Civ. Code 1895, § 4927) has no application to the case. The case must therefore be determined upon general equity principles governing where an application is made to enjoin a wrongdoer or trespasser from interfering with a property right of another. The circumstances under which a court of equity will by injunction interfere in such a case are set forth in Civ. Code 1895, § 4916, which is in the following language: "Equity will not interfere to restrain a trespass, unless the injury is irreparable in damages, or the trespasser is insolvent, or there exist other circumstances which, in the discretion of the court, render the interposition of this writ necessary, among which shall be the avoidance of circuitry and multiplicity of actions." There is no allegation of insolvency. The petition sets forth the wrongful conduct complained of, which is the interference with the plaintiffs in the right to the exclusive control of their property and the quiet possession of the same, and the narrative concludes with the averment that the plaintiffs are without a remedy at law, and would be irreparably injured and damaged. A mere general averment that the damages resulting from a wrongful act would be irreparable, being only a conclusion of the pleader, is generally not sufficient. Burrus v. Columbus, 105 Ga. 46, 31 S. E. 124 (2). It is necessary that the petition should set forth the facts, so that the court may determine whether the damages would be of this character. It is therefore necessary to determine whether, under the averments of the petition, such a case is made as would authorize a court of equity to interpose in behalf of the plaintiffs, and grant the injunction prayed for.

The question of the sufficiency of the petition not having been raised until the trial term, the averments of the petition will not be subjected to that scrutiny which would be required if the defects had been pointed out by special demurrer. While it is not alleged in terms that the wrongful acts complained of would give rise to a multiplicity of actions for damages, still it is apparent that the only remedy which the plaintiffs would have at law would involve a multiplicity of actions. The Pine Company is the owner of the land, and Crawley holds a timber lease under it. The Pine Company is entitled to the peaceful and uninterrupted occupation of its property, either by itself or its tenant, and Crawley is entitled to possession of the same character under his lease. The servants of Crawley have been driven from the place by the wrongful act of the defendant, and by intimidation, which continues from day to day, he prevents Crawley and his servants from using the timber upon the property for the purposes which, under the lease, he had a right to use it. Every day that he is deprived of the possession of the premises gives him a right of action against the defendant to recover such damages as would result from this wrongful act. Frequent acts of trespass, accompanied with a threat to continue, constitutes a sufficient reason to grant an injunction. Bish. Prin. Equity (4th Ed.) 490; 1 High on Injunction (3d Ed.) 536. In Gray Lumber Co. v. Gaskin, 122 Ga. 351, 50 S. E. 164, it was said: "An action at law for damages would have been a complete remedy for the injury sustained prior to the suit; but it would not have prevented further trespasses. Ought the plaintiffs to be harassed and annoyed by being required to bring a new suit every day as long as the trespasses continued, when the whole controversy could be settled in one suit? As has been shown above, the Code expressly authorizes the judge, in his discretion, to grant an injunction to restrain a trespass in any case where, under equitable principles, the writ should issue, and enumerates among such cases the prevention of a multiplicity of suits." But even if he were to bring suit each day for the wrongful conduct of the defendant on the day preceding, the damages recovered in all such suits would not be an adequate compensation for the wrong done by depriving him of the right to cut and dispose of the timber as he is authorized to do under the lease. It is not a sufficient reply to an application for an injunction that the defendant has a remedy by suit at common law for damages, but it must appear, in addition, that the common-law remedy is adequate and complete. Even if in a suit for damages against the defendant for wrongfully preventing Crawley from taking possession of the timber a recovery could be had for the value of the standing timber, there could not be a full recovery for all the damages sustained by him, for the reason that the profits resulting to him from the marketing of the timber after it has been cut, or other uses to which he may lawfully put the same, are dependent upon so many contingencies that it is impossible to estimate what such profits would be. The allegations of the petition are sufficient, not only to make a case of irreparable injury as against a motion to dismiss in the nature of a general demurrer, but also to show that the only remedy at law available to the plaintiffs involves a multiplicity of actions. But it is said that the application is one merely to prevent the commission of a crime, and that a court of equity has no criminal jurisdiction, and that an injunction will not be granted for the purpose of preventing a criminal act. The general rule undoubtedly is that no injunction, or order in the nature of an injunction, will be granted to restrain proceedings in a criminal matter; but where it is evident that a right of private property is involved and is invaded, or is about to be invaded, by acts which are criminal in their nature, equity will interfere by injunction to protect such right, and prevent the commission of the criminal act. See cases cited; 7 Ency. Digest Ga. Rep. 347. None of the grounds in the motion to dismiss was well taken, and there was no error in overruling the same.

8. While an assignment of error upon the admission of evidence will not be considered unless it appears that the objection relied on was made at the time that the evidence was offered, still when evidence has been admitted, either with or without objection, the losing party may in a motion for a new trial raise the question that the evidence as admitted was not sufficient to authorize the verdict rendered. A party may allow a deed relied upon by his adversary to go in evidence without objection, but his failure to object does not preclude him from urging in his motion for a new trial that the deed is invalid for some reason appearing upon the face of the same, or for other reason appearing in the evidence. While a number of documents were admitted in evidence without objection, the defendant in his motion now complains that the verdict is unsupported, for the reason that the evidence as a whole, including these documents, was not sufficient to authorize a finding in favor of the plaintiffs. The petition alleged that the Pine Company was the owner of lots Nos. 189 and 236 in the Seventh district of Clinch county. In the plaintiffs' chain of title to one of the lots appears a grant from the state to lot No. 189 in the Seventh district of Appling county, and a deed to lot No. 189 in the Seventh district of Appling county. It appears from the abstract of the deed in the brief of evidence that the Seventh district of Appling county is now the Seventh district of Clinch county. But even if this did not appear, the courts would take judicial notice of that fact. Stanford v. Bailey, 122 Ga. 404, 50 S. E. 161.

4. There was in the plaintiffs' chain of title a tax deed which was based upon a sheriff's sale under an execution issued by the Comptroller General against an unreturned lot of wild land. The execution was issued for the taxes of the year 1874. It is claimed that this deed is void, upon the ground that it did not appear from the evidence that there was an advertisement by the Comptroller General of the land as unreturned wild land, in which the owner was required to come forward and pay taxes upon the same, as required by law, before the execution was issued; and for the further reason that the execution was void, the taxes for which the same was issued being for the year 1874, the act under which the execution was issued having been passed after the beginning of that year. The deed recites a compliance with the provisions of the act of 1874 (Acts 1874, p. 106), and the execution is regular upon its face. But, even if this were not so, there is a presumption that the Comptroller General complied with his duty as to advertising in the manner required by the act, and the burden of proof was upon this defendant to show that he did not. Bedgood v. McLain, 94 Ga. 283, 21 S. E. 529. See, also, Bentley v. Shingler, 111 Ga. 780, 36 S. E. 935, and citations. The act of 1874 was approved February 28, 1874. It provided that from and after its passage wild lands owned by the citizens of this state should be returned to the tax receiver of the county of their residence by the 1st day of July in each year, and such land owned by nonresidents shall be returned to the Comptroller General by the 1st day of August in each year. Provision was then made for the collection of taxes upon both returned and unreturned wild land. It was clearly contemplated that this act should apply to the taxes of the current year, as it was approved prior to the time then fixed by law for the valuation of property for taxation, and also several months before the time fixed in the act for the return of the property affected by the act. No taxes for 1874 were due on the 28th day of February of that year, and the date for the valuation of all property at that time was the 1st day of April in each year. The lot in question not having been returned for taxation in the year 1874 in the manner prescribed by the act, the Comptroller General had authority to issue an execution against the lot for the taxes of that year.

5. The jury returned a verdict finding that the lots in dispute belonged to the Southern Pine Company, and that Crawley had the right to exercise his privilege under the lease; also finding in favor of a permanent injunction against the defendant. It is claimed that that part of the verdict which finds that the lots in dispute belong to the Southern Pine Company is illegal, for the reason that the land is situated in Clinch county, and the present suit was brought in Coffee county, where the defendant resides, and that the superior court of the latter county has no jurisdiction to determine any question of title to the land. If the purpose of the suit was to recover possession of the land, of course the superior court of Coffee county would have no jurisdiction. Such was not the object to be attained by the judgment prayed. It was simply to restrain the defendant from doing acts prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiffs, one of whom claimed to be the owner of the land. The title to the property was incidentally and collaterally involved, but it was not such a suit respecting title to land as under the Constitution is required to be brought in the county where the land lies. It was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to show that they had such an interest in the property as a court of equity would protect, and they showed this interest by showing a complete chain of title. While it was not necessary for the jury to specifically find that the property belonged to the plaintiffs, it was necessary that the jury, before they could find in favor of a permanent injunction, should believe that ownership in the plaintiffs was established. The insertion in the verdict of the finding as to ownership will not vitiate the verdict.

6. It is contended that the verdict of the jury is in fact the finding of a mandatory injunction, and that such an injunction is unauthorized by the law of this state. It is said that the effect of the injunction is to transfer the possession of the property from the defendant to the plaintiffs. We do not think this is a proper construction to be placed upon the prayer and petition, or upon the verdict, which is in accordance with that prayer. It does not appear, either from the petition or from the evidence, that the defendant was in possession of the land. So far as the record discloses, he has simply driven the servants of Crawley from the land, and by intimidation prevented them from going upon the same. Whether he was in possession himself at the time of the wrongful acts complained of, or whether he was out of possession, and by intimidation kept the servants of Crawley from entering, does not clearly appear. It is to be inferred from the allegations of the petition that he was not in possession, and there is nothing in the evidence to indicate that he was. We do not think that the injunction as it stands could be construed into one which is mandatory in its nature.

7. The defendant introduced no evidence. A witness for the plaintiffs testified that the defendant told him he did exactly what was alleged in the petition; that he claimed the land; that he ran the hands off, as set out in the petition; and that he was not going to let the plaintiffs get the timber, as it was his. This evidence, uncontradicted, not only warranted but required the verdict which the court directed. There was no error in directing the verdict, and no reason has been shown for reversing the judgment.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 376)

S. G. MOZLEY & CO. v. FONTANA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

EXEMPTION—ESTOPPEL OF WIFE TO CLAIM.

Where a man, as the head of a family, including his wife and minor children, applied for an exemption of personalty under the Constitution of 1877, and certain creditors objected, on the grounds that he had previously made a conveyance of a part of the property contained in the schedule to another person, and did not have title to it, and that also that the title to certain articles named in the schedule was not in him, and where, after hearing evidence, the ordinary dismissed the application without stating any ground therefor, this did not estop the wife of the applicant from making another application for exemption of the same and other property at a later date, alleging that her husband refused to apply.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by S. G. Mozley & Co. against Antonio Fontana. Judgment for plaintiff. Application of Rosa Fontana to have certain personal property set aside as exempt. From the judgment, Mozley & Co. bring error. Affirmed.

Antonio Fontana made application, on June 12, 1903, to have an exemption set apart to him under the Constitution of 1877, as the head of a family consisting of himself, his wife, and minor children. The schedule of personal property attached to the application contained certain marble and granite pieces, household furniture, live stock, machines, drays, buggies, and similar articles, and a growing crop of hay on each of two places. Mozley & Co., as judgment creditors, filed objections to the granting of the exemption on two grounds: First, that a part of the property sought to be exempted was not the property of the applicant but had long since been deeded by him to one Joseph Fontana; and, second, because the title to certain described property was not in the applicant. On July 15, 1903, to which time the hearing had been continued, the ordinary passed an order that "after hearing evidence submitted in said case, and argument of counsel, it is ordered said application be dismissed." From this judgment an appeal was entered to the superior court. A motion was made to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that it could only be taken in cases provided by the statute (Civ. Code, §§ 2836, 2838), where certain objections were made by creditors. The motion was overruled, and this judgment was reversed. Fontana v. Mozley & Co., 121 Ga. 46, 48 S. E. 707. On January 3, 1905, Rosa Fontana, the wife of Antonio Fontana, made application for an exemption of personalty, alleging that her husband was the head of a family of minor children, that he refused to apply for an exemption, and that she desired to do so. Attached to her application was a schedule of personalty, which appears to contain the same items as the schedule attached to the former application of her husband. By amendment, she added to it a number of other items of personalty. Mozley & Co. filed objections (as stated in the answer of the ordinary to the writ of certiorari), on the ground that the husband did not refuse to apply for the setting apart of an exemption, and that the property embraced in the schedule was not the property of the husband, "except to the extent and for the purpose of making said property liable for and subject to the said judgment debt of S. T. Mozley & Co., the judgment creditors of Antonio Fontana." They also pleaded that the judgment dismissing the application of the husband estopped the wife and children from applying for an exemption. The ordinary sustained this plea. The case was carried to the superior court by writ of certiorari, which was sustained upon the hearing, and Mozley & Co. excepted.

Price Bros. and Chas. P. Pressley, for plaintiff in error. C. Henry Cohen and S. H. Myers, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). It is not essential that the head of a family should have the legal title to property in order to apply for a homestead or exemption. "No present interest or estate in land beyond that implied in the fact of possession is requisite to sustain the claim of exemption as against a debt or lien inferior to the exemption right." Pendleton v. Hooper, 87 Ga. 108, 13 S. E. 313, 27 Am. St. Rep. 227; Whitehead v. Mundy, 91 Ga. 198, 17 S. E. 287. In a contest between one who claims the homestead and a person asserting a paramount title to the property, the general law applicable to titles would determine their respective rights. As against a title conveyed to secure a debt, a homestead would avail nothing. Johnson v. Griffin, etc., Co., 55 Ga. 691; West v. Bennett, 59 Ga. 507; Christopher v. Williams, 59 Ga. 779; Kirby v. Reese, 69 Ga. 452. It therefore furnishes no ground of objection on the part of creditors to allege merely that the title to the property is not in the applicant, or that he has made a conveyance of it. In the present case, the objectors insist that the applicant cannot obtain an exemption, because her husband does not own the property, and yet claim a status to urge this objection so as to subject the property as his. The objections made to the application of Antonio Fontana were not specified in the statute. The ordinary dismissed the application, not on demurrer, but after hearing evidence. He did not state any grounds for the dismissal or adjudicate in terms that no exemption could at any time be granted to the applicant. We think his action should be analogized to that of the magistrate in the case of Roseberry v. Roseberry, 81 Ga. 122, where it was held, that "an order of magistrates or of a magistrate, before whom a possessory warrant is returned, dismissing the warrant, without any reason stated in the order or appearing in the record, will not be regarded as an adjudication of the right of possession in favor of the defendant, but as a nonsuit, or dismissal in the nature of a nonsuit." The decision in that case has been criticised on another point, but not as to that just referred to. See Weaver v. Carter, 101 Ga. 209, 28 S. E. 869. In Phipps v. Alford, 95 Ga. 215, 22 S. E. 152, it was said: "Where an action was brought in a justice's court, which after the hearing of evidence was dismissed by the court, and an appeal entered by the plaintiff and thereafter dismissed by him, this constituted no bar to bringing a second suit upon the same cause of action." See, also, Herndon v. Black, 97 Ga. 327, 22 S. E. 924; Alabama R. Co. v. Blevins, 92 Ga. 522, 17 S. E. 836. The order dismissing the application of Antonio Fontana in 1903 did not estop his wife from making an application for an exemption in 1905. It might furnish additional reason for so holding, if more were necessary, that some 18 months intervened between the two applications; and even if the husband did not own or have an interest in the property when he made his application, it would not necessarily follow that such was not the case when the second application was made by the wife; and moreover the amended schedule annexed to the application made by the wife contains a considerable amount of property which was not included in the application of the husband. It is contended in the brief of counsel that these additional items arose from the use of the property described in the first schedule, but there is nothing in the record to show this. In fact, the objections filed to the husband's application did not purport to cover all the property included in the schedule.

When a homestead or exemption has been granted to the head of a family, he occupies the position of a trustee, and a judgment against him touching the homestead property, such as a judgment recovering it from him or subjecting it to a debt, binds the beneficiaries. Barfield v. Jefferson, 84 Ga. 609, 11 S. E. 149; Wegman Piano Co. v. Irvine, 107 Ga. 65, 32 S. E. 898, 73 Am. St. Rep. 109; Willingham v. Slade, 112 Ga. 418, 37 S. E. 737. But the difference between such a judgment and one of the character here pleaded in bar is apparent.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 384)

AUGUSTA RY. & ELECTRIC CO. v. WEEKLY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—PLEADING AND PROOF.

In a suit to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of negligence on the part of the defendant, the plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon proof establishing the specific acts of negligence alleged in his petition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, §§ 203-206.]

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

Even in a case to which the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is applicable, it is erroneous for the court to charge the jury that a given state of facts either constitutes, or affords prima facie proof of, negligence, when there is no statute expressly declaring that this is true as matter of law.

3. ELECTRICITY—STREET RAILROADS—LIVE WIRES—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN.

The charge of the court being in certain respects inaccurate and prejudicial to the excepting party, a new trial is ordered.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by Joseph Weekly against the Augusta Railway & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Wm. H. Barrett and Boykin Wright, for plaintiff in error. C. Henry Cohen and Bryson Crane, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. The plaintiff below, Joseph Weekly, brought an action for damages against the Augusta Railway & Electric Company, alleging that he had received serious injuries by coming in contact with a live wire belonging to the defendant company, which was lying across a public thoroughfare in the city of Augusta. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and we are called on to determine whether or not the company's motion for a new trial should have been granted.

1. Our attention is called, in the first place, to the fact that the investigation of the case was not confined to the issues raised by the pleadings. The plaintiff alleged in his petition that the breaking of the wire and the falling thereof to the ground were due to the negligence of the company in its maintenance of the wire, and that "the falling of said wire to the ground, as aforesaid, was due to the negligence of the said defendant in creating negligently, and maintaining, a dangerous condition that made the injury to petitioner possible." No complaint was made that the company did not exercise due diligence in discovering that the wire had fallen, or that the company was negligent in not promptly cutting off the deadly current with which it was charged, or that the company had failed to take proper steps to remove the wire from the street after it fell. The court declined a written request to give to the jury a charge presented in behalf of the company, wherein the specific acts of negligence upon which the plaintiff relied for a recovery were correctly stated and attention directed to the fact that a negligent failure to cut off the current was not alleged, and in which the proposition was laid down that no acts of negligence other than those alleged in the petition could be proved or considered by the jury. The court did, in general terms, instruct the jury that if they should find "the defendant was guilty of the acts of negligence set out in the declaration," and injury to the plaintiff resulted therefrom, while he was in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, he would be entitled to recover. But nowhere in the charge did the court undertake to inform the jury what were "the acts of negligence set out in the declaration," and, in charging the jury as to what would constitute due negligence on the part of the company, instructed them as to the duty resting on the company not to permit a wire, after it had fallen, to remain in a dangerous condition for an unreasonable length of time. Indeed, throughout the entire charge the court made the liability of the company depend, not alone upon the question whether or not it had exercised all ordinary and reasonable care in "constructing, maintaining, and inspecting its wires," but upon the further inquiry whether or not it had, "after the fall, exercised such care in repairing same."

2. A charge of which the plaintiff in error makes special complaint was in the following language: "If the jury believe that a horse attached to a brewery wagon stepped on a wire belonging to the Augusta Railway & Electric Company and fell to the ground in a dying condition, and the driver was thrown to the ground, receiving a shock and burn, it would be prima facie proof of defective insulation and negligence." Unless the commission of a particular act or an omission to do a particular thing be declared by law to constitute negligence, it is error for a judge to instruct the jury that such act or omission amounts to negligence. He cannot invade the province of the jury by declaring that a given state of facts raises a presumption of negligence, when this is not true as matter of law. Central Ry. Co. v. McKenney, 116 Ga. 13, 17, 42 S. E. 229, and cases cited. It must now be accepted as the settled law of this state that "on the trial of a suit for damages alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the defendant, it is always error, requiring the grant of a new trial, for the court to charge the jury that given acts constitute negligence, when such acts are not declared by statute to be negligent." Augusta Ry Co. v. Smith, 121 Ga. 29, 48 S. E. 681. And it has been held that, even when the plaintiff's petition is good as against a general demurrer, it is erroneous for the judge to charge the jury that, "if the defendant's failure to do its duty 'was in accordance with the allegations of the plaintiff's petition, then that would be negligence, as he charges in this case.'" City of Rome v. Sudduth, 121 Ga. 420, 49 S. E. 300; Atlanta R. Co. v. Hudson, 123 Ga. 108, 51 S. E. 29. It is urged by counsel for the defendant in error that in the present case the judge merely undertook to instruct the jury as to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, which was, under the decision in Chenall v. Palmer Brick Co., 117 Ga. 106, 43 S. E. 443, unquestionably applicable to the facts of this case. A complete reply to this suggestion is to be found in the opinion delivered in that case by Mr. Justice Cobb, when it was again before this court (119 Ga. 837, 47 S. E. 329), who said: "Under our system, where every question of negligence is left for determination by the jury, even in cases where the maxim under consideration [res ipsa loquitur] is applicable, the judge should not charge the jury that there would be an inference of negligence from a given state of facts, but should instruct them in clear and unequivocal terms that negligence must be proved, and it is for them to consider whether the manner of the occurrence and the attendant circumstances are of such a character that they would, in their judgment and discretion, be authorized to draw an inference that the occurrence could not have taken place if due diligence on the part of the master had been exercised." See page 843 of 119 Ga., page 330 of 47 S. E., and note the discussion which precedes and follows the above quotation. This was not a case, as the court below recognized, where any presumption of negligence arose upon proof of the injury, under the provisions of the Civil Code of 1895, § 2321, but the plaintiff was bound to assume the burden of establishing by sufficient evidence the acts of negligence alleged in his petition.

3. In certain particulars, other than those above mentioned, the charge of the court was open to criticism, as pointed out in the motion for a new trial. After charging as requested touching the diligence to be expected of the company to a traveler on a public street, his honor added that if the company failed to exercise ordinary care and diligence under the circumstances, and injury resulted, it "would be liable." He should, of course, have qualified this statement by informing the jury that this would be true only in the event the plaintiff was not chargeable with negligence which was the cause of his injury, and could not by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the consequences of defendant's negligence, if it was the proximate cause of the injury. While charging upon this phase of the case, the court further instructed the jury, in effect, that when an electric railway company has used ordinary care and diligence, such as a prudent man would use, "in the erection and maintenance of wires containing electricity of this degree, and without fault injury occurs, there would be no liability." The complaint made of this instruction is that the use of the words "without fault," in the connection in which they were employed, subjected the defendant to a higher degree of diligence than that imposed by law. The charge of the court was, in other respects than those above pointed out, free from any serious verbal inaccuracies, and sufficiently covered the law bearing on the case. Certain requests to charge with respect to the duty devolving upon the company to exercise ordinary diligence to prevent injury to the plaintiff were refused; but, as they embraced instructions as to the obligation resting on the company to ascertain the fact that one of its wires had fallen and to remove the incident danger within a reasonable time, these requests were not pertinent to any issue raised by the pleadings, and the company cannot justly complain that they were not given in charge. As already stated, the investigation should have been confined to a consideration of the question whether or not the falling of the wire was due to negligence on the part of the company, since it was not charged with any lack of diligence in failing to remove the wire from the street or rendering it harmless before the plaintiff came into contact with it.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 387)

WARNER et al. v. MARTIN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. INJUNCTION—CONTEMPT—EVIDENCE—AFFIDAVITS.

On the hearing before a judge in a proceeding for contempt for the violation of a restraining order granted on application for injunction, affidavits are admissible in evidence to prove the fact of violation.

2. SAME—APPEAL—REVIEW.

The judgment rendered on such a hearing will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court, unless the judge has grossly abused the sound discretion vested in him in such cases.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Injunction, § 517.]

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Where, in such a case, irrelevant evidence was admitted over the objection of the person on trial, such error is not cause for reversing a judgment against him, when it appears that his case was not thereby injuriously affected, and where the evidence as to the admissibility of which there could be no doubt warranted the judgment.

4. SAME—PUNISHMENT.

A judge of the superior court has no power to impose a fine of more than $200 for contempt in violating a temporary restraining order, where the violation was treated by the judge as a single act.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Injunction, §§ 521-528.]

5. SAME—COSTS.

The costs in a proceeding for contempt constitute no part of the fine imposed, and may be awarded against the contemner in addition to a fine of $200.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 10, Cent. Dig. Contempt, § 241; vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Injunction, § 518.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. J. Kimsley, Judge.

Action by Harrison T. Martin against A. J. Warner and others. A temporary restraining order was issued, and a rule nisi against the defendants for an alleged violation thereof. From a judgment holding defendants in contempt and imposing a fine, defendants bring error. Affirmed, with directions.

Harrison T. Martin presented an equitable petition to the judge of the superior court, in which he alleged that he was the owner of a certain lot of land lying along the bank of the Chattahoochee river, which derived its chief value from the fertility of its bottoms on the river and the shoals and waterpower which he owned in connection with the land; that A. J. Warner, W. A. Carlisle, and John Sargent were preparing timber and other material and making ready to construct a dam across the river at a place called "Wilson Shoals," below petitioner's land; that if the dam should be constructed it would cause the backwater in the river to flood his land and destroy his water power. The prayers of the petition were "that a permanent injunction be granted * * * enjoining [Warner, Carlisle, and Sargent] from constructing said dam, and that, after hearing, a temporary injunction be granted, enjoining said defendants from proceeding to erect said dam, and that in the meantime a restraining order be granted enjoining the defendants, their agents, * * * and confederates from erecting said obstruction in said river," etc. On June 2, 1905, the judge ordered the defendants to show cause on July 17, 1905, why a temporary injunction should not be granted, ordered that defendants be served ten days before the hearing, and further ordered that "in the meantime, and until the further order of the court, the defendants are restrained from erecting the obstruction in or across the Chattahoochee river, as complained of in this petition." The order further provided that the defendants might bring on an earlier hearing upon five days' notice to the petitioner. On June 13, 1905, Martin presented to the judge a petition, setting forth the fact of his filing the original petition, its substance, and the temporary restraining order granted therein, and alleging that since the granting of such order and its service the defendants had violated its terms, by themselves or their employes actually engaging in erecting such dam and obstructions, by "putting large logs in said stream, laying the foundation for said dam, bolting them to the rock bed of said stream with iron bolts, and hauling sand and gravel to a coffer-dam across a part of said river, preparatory and a part of the work of building the main dam; and that since the date of said order and service of the same, they have been building said coffer-dam." Petitioner prayed that an order be granted forbidding defendants from proceeding with said work, and calling upon them to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt in violating the restraining order. A rule nisi was issued against the defendants. They answered the same, denying that they had violated the restraining order. They denied that they had done anything to obstruct the flow of the river, or put any obstructions in or across the river. They claimed that, instead of putting obstructions in the river, they had merely been excavating a large hole on the right bank of the river and inside of their coffer-dam, which coffer-dam had been completed before the filing of the original petition in the case; that the water of the river had been entirely diverted to its left bank by the coffer-dam before the filing of the original petition, and was running unobstructed between the coffer-dam and such left bank; and that all defendants had done since they were served with the restraining order or had notice of it was to excavate a hole in the bottom of the river by removing the sand and debris so as to get down to hard rock and to fill up the hole with logs and rock, but that they had not placed the logs or rock above the bed or bottom of the river. They alleged that none of such work had been in the stream of the river, but had been done to one side, where the water had been diverted by means of the coffer-dam, and that all the work they had done was below the crest of the shoal upon which the coffer-dam had been erected, and could not in any way obstruct the flow of the river, even if the coffer-dam were removed. The answer also alleged that defendant had no intention of making any construction higher than the bottom of the river, but only intended to fill the hole or excavation below the bed of the stream. On the hearing the petitioner submitted in evidence his original verified petition and the orders thereon, and affidavits, by himself and others, which tended to sustain the allegations of his petition for the rule. Defendants put in evidence their verified answers, their affidavits, the affidavits of others, and the oral testimony of several witnesses, all of which tended to support defendants' answers. Defendants also introduced certain documentary evidence relating to the title of the land upon which the dam was to be constructed. The judge decided that the defendants had violated the restraining order, and adjudged that in so doing they were in contempt of court, and imposed a fine of $250 on Warner, a fine of a like amount on Carlisle, and a fine of $50 on Sargent, and rendered judgment against defendants for the costs of the rule proceeding, to all of which judgment defendants excepted.

H. H. Dean, for plaintiffs in error. H. H. Perry, G. H. Prior, Saml. C. Dunlap, Howard Thompson, and F. M. Johnson, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the foregoing facts). One of the assignments of error is that the court erred in admitting in evidence affidavits offered by petitioner against defendants, over the objection that the proceeding was quasi criminal, and only oral testimony was admissible. In Welch v. Barber, 52 Conn. 147, 52 Am. Rep. 567, it was said: "A civil contempt is one in which the conduct constituting the contempt is directed against some civil right of the opposing party, as where an injunction is disregarded, or some act required by the court for the benefit of the other party should be neglected. In cases of contempt of this sort the proceeding for its punishment is at the instance of the party interested, and is civil in its character." In such cases the general rule seems to be that the question of contempt or no contempt may be decided upon affidavits, where the chancery rule is in force that the answer of the contemner is not conclusive. Rapalje on Contempts, §§ 120, 126. "In proceedings for contempt for the violation of an injunction, the usual method of proving the fact of violation is by affidavit." 2 High on Inj. § 1452. See, also, 1 Beach on Inj. § 262; State v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 16 W. Va. 864; Una v. Dodd, 38 N. J. Eq. 460; Witter v. Lyon, 34 Wis. 564; People v. Brower, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 405; State v. Mitchell, 3 S. D. 223, 52 N. W. 1052; Rutherford v. Metcalf, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 58. So far as we know to the contrary, it has been the practice in the courts of this state to admit affidavits in evidence on the hearing of proceedings for contempt for the violation of an injunction. Among the cases where such practice was followed may be cited Howard v. Durand, 36 Ga. 346, 91 Am. Dec. 767; Thweatt v. Gammell, 56 Ga. 98; Hayden v. Phinzy, 67 Ga. 758. The same practice has been followed in proceedings for contempt in not paying over money, etc., to a receiver. Ryan v. Kingsbery, 88 Ga. 361, 14 S. E. 596. So far as we are advised, the question as to the admissibility of affidavits on the hearing in such proceedings has never been heretofore made in our courts. We are of opinion, however, from what we have said above, that affidavits are admissible in such a case, and that the court did not err in so ruling. We do not hold, however, that the judge could not in his discretion require witnesses to testify orally.

2. The evidence was to the effect that the defendants, after the restraining order was served upon them, continued the work of constructing the dam. One of the defendants testified: "We continued to make the excavation after the papers were served. After the excavation was made we began to put in timber and rock for the dam and bolted them down to the bed. That was part of the work of constructing the dam." There was evidence for the petitioner that logs were placed in the main dam, within the coffer-dam, and bolted or chained down, and that such logs were above the water. The contention of the defendants was that as the language of the order restraining them "from erecting the obstructions in or across the Chattahoochee river, as complained of in this petition," laying a foundation of the dam, in an excavation which was within the coffer-dam, and at a place where the river was not then running, but from which defendants had diverted it before the original petition was filed, was not an obstruction in or across the river, especially if, as they contended, such foundation was not built above the bed of the river. A restraining order has all the force of an injunction until vacated or modified, and a defendant is bound to obey it at his peril. He cannot set up his opinion as to its meaning as against the court's opinion. If he is in doubt as to what he may do without violating the restraining order, he should ask for a modification or a construction of its terms. 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1108; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. 436. The order in the present case was not in general terms, but defendants were restrained from doing a specific thing—from erecting a dam in the river. That is clearly the meaning of the order. The obstruction complained of was the dam, and that is what the court restrained the defendants from erecting. The defendants assumed the responsibility of construing the order, and construed it to mean that they could continue the construction of the dam until it should reach such a height that further construction would obstruct the flow of the water. They were not restrained, however, from obstructing the flow of the water, but from erecting the dam. One is erecting a dam when he is constructing it, whether he is constructing that portion of it which is below the bed of the stream or that portion which is above such bed. When he is engaged in placing logs, rock, or other material in an excavation below the bed of a river for the purpose of forming the foundation for a dam across such river, he is erecting the dam. It is too well settled to need citation of authority that the decision of a judge on the question of contempt will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court, except in a case where such discretion has been grossly abused. In the present case there was no abuse of discretion.

3. The court, over the objection of the defendants, allowed the petitioner to put in evidence a certified copy of a mortgage from the North Georgia Electric Company to the Knickerbocker Trust Company, dated November 1, 1904, recorded in the clerk's office of Hall superior court, reciting that it was to secure bonds for the erection of the dam in question, and creating a lien on the "Wilson Shoals water power" and other property. The objections urged were that the evidence was immaterial and secondary. The objection of irrelevancy, at least, was well taken, but we are unable to understand how the defendants were hurt by the admission of this evidence. As we have seen, there was ample evidence, about the admissibility of which there was no question, to warrant the judgment of the court. See Shirley v. Hicks, 105 Ga. 504, 31 S. E. 105 (3).

4. The judge exceeded his authority in imposing a fine of $250 each on two of the defendants. The Constitution declares that "the power of the courts to punish for contempt shall be limited by legislative acts." Civ. Code 1895, § 5717. The Legislature has enacted that "the superior courts have authority * * * to punish contempt by fines not exceeding two hundred dollars, and by imprisonment not exceeding twenty days." Civ. Code 1895, § 4320 (5). In Cobb v. Black, 34 Ga. 162, it was held that a similar section of the Code of 1863—section 242 (5)—was "applicable only to the punishment for contempt by acts done." In the case now under review the contempt for which the fines were imposed had been committed by doing an act or acts which the judge decided to be in violation of his restraining order, and therefore came directly within the scope of the legislative provision limiting the power of the superior courts in imposing fines for contempt. The judge treated the violation of the restraining order as a single act of contempt.

5. The judge, however, did not exceed his power in awarding the costs of the contempt proceedings against the defendants. The costs were no part of the fines. Rapalje, in his work on Contempts, § 132, states the rule to be that, "where the proceeding arises out of the disobedience of an order or decree in a civil suit, and is prosecuted between the parties to such suit, costs are generally awarded to the prevailing party, the same as in other civil proceedings. We affirm the judgment of the trial judge, with direction that he order the sum of $50 to be written off the fine of A. J. Warner and a like sum to be written off the fine of W. A. Carlisle, and that the costs of bringing the case to this court be taxed against the defendant in error.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concurring, except CANDLER, J., not presiding.

(58 W. Va. 546)

LEVY v. SCOTTISH UNION & NATIONAL INS. CO.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 15, 1906.)1. APPEAL—REVIEW—REFUSAL OF CONTINUANCE.

It is well settled as a general rule that the question of continuance is in the sound discretion of the trial court, which will not be reviewed by the appellate court, except in case it clearly appears that such discretion has been abused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 8837.]

2. INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—EVIDENCE—AWARD.

Upon an issue involving the question whether there was or not a verbal submission between the plaintiff and defendant and a written award of arbitrators ascertaining the loss under a fire insurance policy, where another insurance company and plaintiff had in writing submitted their differences touching the same loss to arbitrators, who had returned a written award, the defendant, claiming to be a party thereto by verbal agreement of submission to the same arbitrators and having offered evidence tending to prove that fact, offered in evidence a written award to which defendant claimed it was a party, which award is as follows:

"Award of Appraisers.

"To the Parties in Interest:

"We have carefully examined the premises and remains of the property hereinbefore specified, in accordance with the foregoing appointment, and we have appraised and determined the actual sound value to be six hundred and sixty-three 68-100 ($663.68-100 dollars, and the damages on same to be four hundred and forty-two 92-100 ($442.92-100)—which includes totally consumed goods—dollars.

"Witness our hands this 31st day of December, 1898.

"[Signed]

R. H. Bell,

"[Signed]

T. J. Boyd,

"[Signed]

J. L. Richardson.

"Appraisers."

Held error to exclude the said written award from the jury.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE TO DISCREDIT.

Such written award being admitted in evidence, the plaintiff would be entitled to introduce any evidence, oral or documentary, tending to discredit the award as being an award between the plaintiff and defendant, or to which defendant was in any way a party.

4. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is error to instruct the jury hypothetically upon a state of facts, when there is no evidence in the case tending to prove such facts.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 43, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 582-586.]

5. ARBITRATION AND AWARD—REVOCATION OF SUBMISSION.

After an award is made and published, neither party can revoke the submission without the consent of the other.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 4, Cent. Dig. Arbitration and Award, §§ 64-66, 342.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by Annie Levy against the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Watts & Ashby and Chilton, McCorkle & Chilton, for plaintiff in error. A. B. Littlepage, Brown, Jackson & Knight, and Angus W. McDonald, for defendant in error.

McWHORTER, J. This is an action brought by Annie Levy against the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company, in the circuit court of Kanawha county, to recover for a loss by fire, on an insurance policy issued by the defendant on a stock of goods in a storehouse in the city of Charleston. The insurance on the goods was for $850; the same policy carried $150 on fixtures in the said store. The amount of loss of fixtures was agreed between the parties and paid by the defendant. Plaintiff also carried $1,000 insurance on the same stock of goods in the Germania Insurance Company. The loss occurred on the 26th of December, 1898. William Lohmeyer was the agent of the defendant company and R. S. Frazier was the agent for the Germania Company. The agent of the defendant company, being called away from the city of Charleston the day after the fire, requested and authorized Frazier, the agent of the Germania company, to act for the defendant company in adjusting the loss. An appraisement was demanded by Mr. Frazier on behalf of both companies. The plaintiff by her attorney, A. B. Littlepage, refused to enter into an appraisement until he was satisfied by Mr. Frazier that both companies would be bound by any award made. Mr. Littlepage then made out an agreement for submission in writing. Mr. Frazier objected to signing Mr. Lohmeyer's name to it, but assured Littlepage that Lohmeyer would sign it immediately upon his return. The plaintiff and Frazier each selected an appraiser, and said appraisers selected an umpire and proceeded to discharge their duties, and made their award and finding on December 31, 1898. The award showed the actual sound value of the goods in the store at the time of the fire to be $663.68, and damages on same, including the value of the goods totally destroyed, at $442.92. The liability of the companies, respectively, under the award, if all parties were bound by the award, was, the Germania $239.41, and defendant company $203.51. On Mr. Lohmeyer's return to Charleston he offered to sign the paper of submission, but the paper was withheld from him by Mr. Littlepage, and he was not permitted to sign it. Tender was made by the defendant company for the amount it claimed to be liable for under the award. Plaintiff refused to accept the same and brought this action.

The defendant tendered seven pleas in writing, to the filing of which plaintiff objected. The court overruled the objection and filed the pleas, to which ruling of the court plaintiff excepted. Plaintiff then demurred to each and all of said pleas, which demurrers were overruled. The plaintiff replied generally to each of said pleas, and issue was joined thereon. Plaintiff also filed special replications in writing to pleas 5, 6, and 7, to the filing of which replications defendant objected; objection was overruled and replications filed, and defendant excepted and entered general rejoinder to each of said replications, and issue was joined. A jury was impaneled on the 23d day of March, 1900, and on the 27th of March, after a part of the evidence had been heard, plaintiff asked and obtained leave to file an amended statement of facts relied upon in waiver of the matters alleged in defendant's pleas, Nos. 5, 6, and 7, to the filing of which defendant objected, which objection was overruled and the statement filed, to which ruling defendant excepted and moved the court to withdraw a juror and continue the cause on the ground that defendant was surprised by the introduction of new matter in the statement filed, which motion was also overruled and defendant excepted. The jury returned a general verdict for plaintiff assessing her damages at $802.17, and returned certain special findings upon interrogatories asked to be submitted to them by the defendant. The defendant moved to set aside the general verdict because it was contrary to the law and the evidence, and also to set aside the special findings upon the interrogatories propounded to the jury by the court at the instance of the defendant, which motion the court overruled and rendered judgment on said verdict in favor of plaintiff, to which rulings of the court defendant excepted. Defendant's first plea was simply the general issue. The second set up a submission to an appraisal and award between the plaintiff, on the one part, and the defendant company and the Germania company on the other part, and a tender under the award of $203.51, the defendant's proportionate part of said award. Plea No. 3 was the same as plea No. 2, except that it alleged the agreement of submission and award to have been between the plaintiff and the defendant alone, and a tender of the amount that it claimed to be liable for under the award, the said $203.51. No. 4 alleged the liability of defendant under the policy to be the $203.51 and tendered the same. Plea No. 5 alleged the failure of plaintiff to furnish proof of loss within 60 days after the fire, as provided in policy, and No. 6 alleged default on part of the plaintiff to submit to examination, under oath, and to produce for examination all books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers as required by the policy, and plea No. 7 alleged failure on the part of the plaintiff to submit the loss to appraisal, as provided and called for in the policy.

Plaintiff's principal ground of objection to the pleas was that they were inconsistent, stating inconsistent defenses. This objection is fully met by section 20, c. 125, Code 1899, where the only exception is the plea of non est factum, where without the leave of the court the defendant will not be permitted to plead any other plea inconsistent therewith. Nadenbousch v. Sharer, 2 W. Va. 285.

Plaintiff's special replications to pleas Nos. 5, 6, and 7 were to the effect that the defendant waived the performance of the several covenants and provisions of the policy in the respective pleas mentioned, and denied liability upon the policy. During the trial the defendant took four several bills of exceptions. The first bill of exceptions was to the ruling of the court, in that, after plaintiff and her other witnesses Beulah Slaughter and Adam B. Littlepage had been fully examined, and after the defendant had offered its testimony in chief given by witnesses Adam B. Littlepage, R. S. Frazier, R. H. Bell, J. L. Richardson, Annie Bossey, and William Lohmeyer, and pending the cross-examination by the plaintiff of defendant's witness Littlepage, recalled for the plaintiff, the court permitted the plaintiff to file "An amplification of the plaintiff's statement of facts relied upon to show a waiver of the alleged failure on her part to comply with the conditions of the policy of insurance sued upon, as set forth in defendant's pleas Nos. 5, 6, and 7." It is insisted by plaintiff in error that the filing of this statement worked a surprise to the defendant which entitled it to a continuance to enable it to meet the matters set up in the statement. The statement filed was but an amplification of the special replications filed to the pleas of defendant Nos. 5, 6, and 7. In Harvey v. Insurance Co., 37 W. Va. 272, 16 S. E. 580, Syl., point 7, it is held: "Under section 66, c. 125, Code 1899, the court may during the trial permit plaintiff to file a special statement of any matter in waiver, estoppel, or otherwise in confession and avoidance, as provided for by section 65, c. 125, Code 1899, as justice may seem to require; but this will not give defendant a continuance as matter of right; but it is within the sound discretion of the trial court." In Cappellar v. Insurance Co., 21 W. Va. 576, such statements are held not to be in the nature of pleadings but in the nature of notices to the adverse party of the nature of the claim of defense intended to be set up against him. There is nothing contained in the statement permitted to be filed, by way of amendments, that is not substantially stated in the special replications to the pleas. It has been well settled by this court that the question of continuance is in the sound discretion of the trial court, which will not be reviewed by the appellate court except in case where it clearly appears that such discretion has been abused. Amos v. Stockert, 47 W. Va. 109, 34 S. E. 821; Bank v. Hamilton, 43 W. Va. 75, 27 S. E. 296; Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. 299. See, also, Buster v. Holland, 27 W. Va. 511; Logie v. Black, 24 W. Va. 21; Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253.

The second error assigned is in the court refusing to allow in evidence the award set out in bill of exceptions No. 2, which award is as follows:

"Award of Appraisers.

"To the Parties in Interest:

"We have carefully examined the premises and remains of the property hereinbefore specified, in accordance with the foregoing appointment, and we have appraised and determined the actual sound value to be six hundred and sixty-three 68-100 ($663.68-100) dollars, and the damages on same to be four hundred and forty-two 92-100 ($442.92-100)—which includes totally consumed goods—dollars.

"Witness our hands this 31st day of December, 1898.

"[Signed] R. H. Bell,

"[Signed] T. J. Boyd,

"[Signed] J. L. Richardson,

"Appraisers."

Lohmeyer, the agent of the defendant company, testified that on leaving town he authorized Frazier, the agent of the Germania company, to represent him in adjusting the loss; Frazier and Littlepage, the attorney for the plaintiff, agreed upon an appraisement and appointed appraisers R. H. Bell and T. J. Boyd, who together appointed an umpire, J. L. Richardson; Littlepage prepared an agreement of submission in writing, which agreement does not appear in the record. Witness Frazier testified that, he being authorized thereto, Wm. Lohmeyer, agent for defendant, appointed an appraiser for and on behalf of both companies, and testified also that Littlepage and plaintiff selected an appraiser whose name witness had forgotten, and when he found he could not get that man, who lived up the river somewhere out of town, Mr. Littlepage substituted Mr. Bell. Defendant also introduced in evidence a letter of Adam B. Littlepage, attorney for plaintiff, written January 4, 1899, four or five days after the signing of the award, addressed to and inclosing to defendant company proof of loss, in which he makes the following reference to the award: "I regret exceedingly that we do . . . feel justified in accepting the award recently made by the appraisers of about $445." He further says: "The court may force her to stand by the award, but I think not. The award, while intended as equitable and just upon the part of the appraisers, was a surprise to many people. The appraiser selected by your able and deserving adjuster certainly understood his business, and I am fearful that he cut so deep, and his course was such in arriving at the adjustment, that the result will not stand. Of this I may be mistaken, but it is my full determination to try to obtain for the assured that which she is entitled to at the hands of your company. I regret to be instrumental in having this matter legally adjudicated, but I guaranty to you that I am determined to have for this young woman that which I believe she is honestly entitled to at the hands of your company. I think the award was absolutely and unconditionally unjust, and the assured will not stand by it unless forced to do so by the court." In this letter, addressed to and received by the defendant company, the writer, Mr. Littlepage, attorney for the plaintiff, recognizes the company as a party to the award, and notifies it that the award is unjust and that plaintiff would not stand by it unless forced to do so by the courts.

The defendant company offered in evidence the written award in connection with the oral testimony of R. S. Frazier, William Lohmeyer, and the said letter of Adam B. Littlepage, attorney for plaintiff, to the company. It is true it is denied by plaintiff that there was an appraisement for and on behalf of the defendant company, but there was evidence tending to prove that fact, and also tending to prove that the appraisers named or who signed the written award had acted after a verbal agreement on the part of the plaintiff and defendant to submit to arbitration, and it is conceded, and on motion of the defendant the jury were so instructed, that a verbal submission is sufficient, that it does not have to be in writing under the terms of the policy. The question as to whether there was a verbal agreement of submission between the plaintiff and the defendant company, and, if so, whether there was an award in writing in pursuance of that submission, are questions for the jury to be deduced from all the evidence in the case, and it was for the jury to say whether the writing offered was an award returned in pursuance of the verbal agreement to submit between the parties to the action in case the jury should find there was such submission. The defendant was contending that there was a certain paper writing in existence and offered what they claimed to be the genuine original paper, it was then for the plaintiff to show that it was not what it purported to be, and for this purpose she could not only introduce oral testimony, but could introduce any writing that would tend to prove that it was not what it was claimed by defendant to be. The issue between the parties on this point was as to whether there had been a submission by them, and, if so, whether there was a written award in pursuance thereof. There was much evidence tending to prove the submission. The defendant then offered in evidence a writing purporting to be an award, claiming it to be an award between the parties in pursuance of the verbal submission they had sought to prove. It is conceded that submission was not required to be in writing. By refusing to admit this writing the court decided the fact in issue that the paper offered was not the written award, which there was evidence tending to prove had been made in writing between the parties to this suit. This was a fact in issue which only the jury could decide, and this material part of the evidence to prove it was withheld from the jury. It should have gone to the jury for what it was worth, subject to be discredited by evidence, oral or documentary, which might be offered against it. It is not at all, as claimed by counsel for plaintiff, analogous to an attempt to introduce as evidence one part or clause only of a written contract while withholding the residue or other parts of the same contract; this, if an award between the parties to this action as claimed by defendant, was a paper independent and complete in itself, not dependent on any other paper, but based upon a verbal agreement of submission which there was evidence tending to establish. If the agreement to submission had been required to be in writing, then there would be reason in plaintiff's contention that before introducing the award the agreement in writing should be introduced with it. The words "The foregoing appointment," contained in the award offered, were wholly immaterial and had no significance, as the submission, if such there was, as between plaintiff and defendant company was verbal, while that between plaintiff and the Germania company was in writing. It is claimed by counsel for defendant in error that the special finding of the jury in response to the interrogatory, whether appraisers and an umpire were selected, and did they reach a conclusion and make an award in writing, that they did not, is conclusive. If there was no submission, as contended by plaintiff in opposition to the contention of the defendant, then the way was still open, under the provisions of the policy, for a submission to arbitration.

The third and fourth errors assigned are set out in bill of exceptions No. 3, in giving plaintiff's instructions Nos. 1 to 7 inclusive, and refusing defendant's instructions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, and 10. Plaintiff's instruction No. 1 is bad and should not have been given for the reason that defendant's instruction No. 8, hereinafter mentioned rejected by the circuit court, is held to be good.

The second instruction of plaintiff, as follows: "The court instructs the jury that the finding of the appraisers under submission between the Germania Insurance Company and the plaintiff cannot be considered by the jury in ascertaining the amount of the loss sustained by the plaintiff at the fire in the declaration mentioned"—the defendant objected to as bad, because it withdrew from the jury defendant's defense of arbitrament and award. It was contended by the defendant, and there was evidence tending to prove, that the award which was claimed to be between the Germania Insurance company and the plaintiff was between both insurance companies and the plaintiff. The instruction to the jury, under the evidence, that the finding of the appraisers under the submission between the Germania company and plaintiff could not be considered, was misleading and should not have been given, as it was contended by defendant, and there was evidence tending to prove the fact that the award was made under the same submission, that on the part of one company in writing and on the part of the other verbal; the arbitrators being the same, one appointed by the two companies, the other by the plaintiff, the umpire being appointed by the two arbitrators, and the award being a common award under submission by both companies.

The third instruction complained of by defendant is: "The court instructs the jury that any party to a submission of arbitration and award, such as that alleged in this case, can revoke such submission at any time before the completion of the award." It is hard to conceive why the plaintiff would ask such an instruction, when the whole contention of the plaintiff was that no submission was ever had between the plaintiff and the defendant company, and there is not the slightest evidence that plaintiff ever revoked the submission which she claimed to have entered into, and, further, plaintiff could not revoke her agreement set out in the policy to submit to arbitration. In Winkler v. Railroad Co., 12 W. Va. 699, Syl., point 5, it is held: "Error to instruct the jury hypothetically upon a state of facts, where there is no evidence in the case tending to prove such facts." Bloyd v. Pollock, 27 W. Va. 75, Syl., point 2. It is contended that the letter of the defendant to the plaintiff of January 28, 1899, proposing an appraisal, was an admission that there had been no submission and award as between the parties to this action. It certainly could not be considered a revocation. The letter was in evidence to show for itself what it was and what its purpose. It was a letter returning the proof of loss as not complying with the provisions of the policy, and, as dissatisfaction with the award returned had been expressed by plaintiff's attorney when inclosing the proof of loss in his letter of January 4th, defendant company proposed an appraisement between defendant and plaintiff, and it was for the jury to give to the letter such construction and meaning as in their judgment was intended by defendant. "After an award is made and published, neither party can revoke the submission without the consent of the other." 3 Cyc. 610, and cases there cited.

Counsel for defendant company offer nothing to sustain their objections to the other instructions given for plaintiff, which are to the effect that the burden of proof is on the defendant to show a valid award of the kind and to the effect set up in its special pleas; that such award must be in writing to be binding upon the parties to it; and that such award could only be proven by the production in evidence of such writing or a satisfactory accounting for its loss, destruction, or absence; and also that an award is only binding between the parties to the submission and not binding upon a controversy between one of the parties and one not a party to the submission.

As to the instructions offered by the defendant and refused by the court, as set out in bill of exceptions No. 3, instruction No. 5 was to the effect that the burden being on the plaintiff to show that she gave to the defendant notice in writing of the fire and rendered a statement signed and sworn to by her, within 60 days after the fire, showing the matters and things set forth in lines 70 to 76, both inclusive, and that she having failed to prove that she gave said notice or rendered such statement, the jury should find for the defendant. The court here would seem to assume to tell the jury that plaintiff's evidence, tending to show her compliance with the said provisions of the policy, had failed to prove the fact, and therefore they should find for the defendant. There was evidence tending to prove that she had so complied with the provisions of the policy, therefore it was within the province of the jury and not the court to decide as to the weight of the evidence offered tending to prove it. The instruction was therefore properly refused.

The sixth instruction, so rejected, reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that they must not consider any of the evidence offered by the plaintiff as an excuse for not giving the notice in writing or rendering the statement in writing, required in lines 67 to 74, inclusive, of the policy, and set forth in defendant's plea No. 5, except such matters as are specifically stated in plaintiff's replication to said plea No. 5 or in the statement filed as notice of the waiver of the matters set up in plea No. 5." One of the objections to this instruction is rather a play upon the word "offered," which, of course, the jury would take with its proper meaning as "given." Plaintiff's counsel say that it has reference to all the evidence offered by plaintiff, whether admitted or rejected by the court, thereby making the jury the judge of the relevancy or irrelevancy, and each juror to judge for himself what evidence was properly admitted and what not. We see nothing in this objection, but it does seem that the instruction is rendered unintelligible to the jury by the last part of the instruction, when they are told they must not consider any evidence offered by plaintiff as an excuse for not giving the notice or rendering the statement in writing required, "Except such matters as are specifically stated in plaintiff's replication to said plea No. 5, or in the statement filed as notice of the waiver of the matters set up in bill No. 5." This refers the jury for information to papers which were not in evidence before them, and instruction No. 7 is liable to the same objection, and both were properly refused.

Instruction No. 8, offered by the defendant and rejected by the court, is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, if after the appraisalment made by R. H. Bell, T. J. Boyd, and J. L. Richardson, the plaintiff repudiated said appraisalment and refused to accept the amount thereof claimed to be chargeable to the defendant, then the defendant had the right afterwards to insist upon an appraisalment to be made by two competent and disinterested appraisers, the plaintiff to select one and the defendant one, and the two so selected to name an umpire, as provided in lines 86 to 91, both inclusive, of the policy, and if the jury find that the plaintiff for any cause refused to accept the result of said appraisal, and that after the knowledge of such refusal the defendant called upon the plaintiff by letter dated January 28, 1899, to submit to such an appraisal as is provided to be made by lines 86 to 91, both inclusive, of the policy, and if the jury further find that the plaintiff has failed or refused to enter into such an appraisal as demanded by said letter, then the plaintiff cannot recover." This instruction is based upon the letter of defendant to plaintiff dated January 28, 1899, asking for an appraisal under the provisions of the policy. If the plaintiff had, after the award, repudiated the appraisalment and refused to accept the amount thereof claimed to be chargeable to the defendant thereunder, and the defendant accepted plaintiff's repudiation, it had the right afterwards to insist upon an appraisalment under the provisions of the policy, and the plaintiff was bound under its terms to submit to an appraisalment. The instruction should have been given.

The instruction No. 10, rejected by the court, reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, if they find from the evidence that the 'defendant' has not made and rendered to the defendant a statement in writing, signed and sworn to by her, stating all other insurance, whether valid or not, covering any of the property insured by the defendant, the cash value of each item of property insured and the amount of loss thereon, then the plaintiff cannot recover, unless the jury shall further find that the defendant waived the furnishing of such statement by such conduct of the defendant as would reasonably cause the plaintiff to fairly conclude that such requirements or statements had been dispensed with and excused." The principal objection urged against this instruction is the use of the word "defendant" instead of "plaintiff," where the word first occurs in the instruction. This is evidently a clerical error. The instruction seems to be otherwise good and, as the case must go back for a new trial, it can be then amended if it should become necessary to ask the court to give it upon another trial.

The fifth assignment of error is in refusing to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant the defendant a new trial because the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence as set out in bill of exceptions No. 4. As the case must be remanded for a new trial, this court will not take up the question of the evidence and its sufficiency to sustain the verdict. The weight of the evidence to be given when the case is retried is a matter for the jury.

For the reasons herein stated, the judgment will be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial to be had therein.

(58 W. Va. 197)

ALLEN v. WILKINSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. EQUITY—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

On demurrer to a bill, all facts well pleaded are taken as true.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, § 494.]

2. PARTNERSHIP—ACTION—PLEADING.

Where parties are sued in chancery in their own right, and as partners doing business in the firm name by which the partnership is known, a demurrer filed in the name of the firm is the demurrer of all such defendants in their partnership capacity.

3. EQUITY—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

If a bill in equity shows right to any relief, a general demurrer thereto must be overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, §§ 508, 509.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Bill by William H. Allen against J. N. Wilkinson and others, partners trading under the firm name of the South Penn Coal Company. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

S. B. Griffith, S. V. Woods, and Harry H. Byrer, for appellant. J. Hop Woods, for appellees.

McWHORTER, J. William H. Allen filed in the circuit court of Barbour county his bill of complaint against J. N. Wilkinson, Buy N. Wilkinson, D. M. Willis, W. W. Rainey, and J. Truman Nixon, partners trading under the firm name of the South Penn Coal Company, alleging that prior to the 19th of April, 1902, he was negotiating with the defendants through the defendant J. N. Wilkinson, attorney in fact for said partners, concerning the purchase of certain coal lands, on which the defendants had or were about to secure options to purchase; that the lands so to be purchased are described in a general way in a paper filed with the bill, marked "Exhibit, Option and Acceptance," as follows:

"This agreement made this 19th day of April, 1902, between the South Penn Coal Company, by J. N. Wilkinson, its attorney in fact, party of the first part, and Wm. H. Allen of Pittsburg, Pa., party of the second part.

"Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, in consideration of one dollar in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, does hereby agree to grant and option unto the said party of the second part, the sole and exclusive option of purchasing all the coal under those certain tracts of land locally known as the Freeport and Kittanning or Kanawha River coals, located in the county of Barbour and the district of Phillippi, state of West Virginia, and which coal lands contain about eight or ten thousand acres more or less, and to include all the farms on which the coal has been optioned and purchased in the name of the South Penn Coal Company, which options are to be given to Wm. H. Allen, upon the depositing of the hereinafter mentioned ten thousand dollars ($10,000), and which coal is optioned to said optionee on the following terms and at the following prices: For the surface of the front land containing about three hundred acres, and all the coal underlying the same in fee, except the M. A. Price 25 acres (under which the coal is owned by J. N. B. Crim), at the sum and price of thirty-five dollars ($35.00) per acre, and for all the coal underlying other than the surface land mentioned, at the price of eighteen dollars ($18.00) per acre.

"But this option is to be absolutely null and void and of no effect whatever, unless the said coal is accepted by the optionee or his assignees on the date of this contract; and all rights and claims whatsoever, in and under this agreement, are voidable absolutely if the said coal and land are not accepted in writing on the date of this contract.

"It is further agreed, that, if the optionee in this agreement assigns his rights under this option, the said optionee herein shall be responsible that the assignee shall carry out his contract, and the said optionee covenants that the contract will be carried out by his assignee if he assigns over this option to some third party.

"It is further agreed, that, if the coal and lands are accepted under this contract at the prices named, the said optionee or his assignee will, upon the day the coal is accepted, place to the credit of the said Attorney J. N. Wilkinson, the optionor in this contract, the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), in the Traders' National Bank, of Clarksburg, W. Va., as a partial payment on the coal and lands so purchased or optioned in and by this contract, or, upon failure to do so, then this contract is absolutely null and void and is of no effect between the parties; but if said option is closed, and said coal accepted, then the parties making purchase of same, in addition to the prices herein named, shall pay the expenses of surveying the said coal and surface lands.

"It is furthermore stipulated and agreed to by the optionor, that, in event of the title to said three hundred acres more or less of front lands, and at least twenty-five hundred acres of coal, not being good, the optionor will return the ten thousand dollars above mentioned, to the optionee, on demand by the optionee.

"But only such part of the tract of coal and part of the surface owned by the Smokeless Coal Co., as was owned by W. W. Rainey, and by him assigned to the South Penn Coal Company, is to be included in this option.

"Witness the following signature and seal.

"South Penn Coal Company,

"By J. N. Wilkinson, Atty. in Fact.

"Witness: John L. Johnston."

"Clarksburg, W. Va., April 19th, 1902.

"Mr. J. N. Wilkinson, Atty. for South Penn Coal Co.—Dear Sir: I hereby accept the options on ten thousand (10,000) acres coal and three hundred and thirty-six (336) acres in fee in Barbour county, West Virginia, at Lillian Station on the B. & O. R. R.

"Wm. H. Allen."

That this agreement was the result of the negotiations between the plaintiff and the said Wilkinson, acting for and on behalf of the partners known as the South Penn Coal Company; that the $10,000 was paid by plaintiff to defendant under the agreement; that, on the 23d of May, 1902, upon the false and fraudulent representations made by said Wilkinson that an additional payment made by the plaintiff on account of the said options would expedite the securing of the field, plaintiff caused to be paid to him the further sum of $10,000 on account of said purchase price of said property, making the entire sum of $20,000 paid on account of said lands; that, on the 30th day of July, 1902, plaintiff having become convinced that the defendants had no title to, and could not get title to and deliver to him, at least 300 acres of surface and coal designated as front land, and did not and could not secure title to at least 2,500 acres of mineable and marketable coal, or Freeport and Kittanning or Kanawha River coal in a compact and contiguous body lying adjacent to said front lands and mineable therefrom, notified the defendants by letter to Wilkinson, attorney in fact, that he would decline to accept a tender of the field as then controlled by them, and demanded the return of his $20,000, which they declined to refund, and prayed that the defendants might be required to refund to him the $20,000, with interest from the dates of the two payments of $10,000 each, respectively, and that he have a personal decree against the defendants for the same, with interest, and that, on default of the payment thereof, he have a decree directing a sale of the options held by defendants, and also have sale of the abstracts, to secure to him the payment of said sum of money, and that he have an order, in default of the payment of said money, directed to the defendants, to deliver to plaintiff the deeds to all of said several tracts of coal, the title of which was taken by defendants in the name of plaintiff, as alleged in the bill, and for general relief.

To which bill the defendants, the firm of South Penn Coal Company, filed their demurrer, assigning the following grounds: "(1) There is no equity in the bill, the same setting up merely an alleged contract existing between the plaintiff and the defendant J. N. Wilkinson, member of the defendant company, and the breach thereof by said defendant, and accruing damages to the plaintiff by reason thereof, to the extent of $20,000. This is purely a legal demand, for which there is a complete and adequate remedy at law, as shown by 'Plaintiff's Exhibit, Option and Acceptance,' dated April 19, 1902, filed with the bill. (2) There is no averment in the bill that said defendant committed, or attempted to commit, any fraud upon the plaintiff, or that he acted within the scope of his authority as the attorney in fact of defendant company. (3) There is no averment that defendant company was advised of the alleged negotiations between said defendant and plaintiff, as to the object of plaintiff in contracting with said defendant, or of the extent and character of his negotiations, or that said defendant pretended or claimed to act for it in this respect. (4) There is no allegation that defendant himself even agreed to transfer any options to plaintiff, or to abstract and transfer to him the abstracts of titles thereunder, or to convey or cause to be conveyed to him any deeds therefor, or to make any particular application or appropriation of the money received by him of plaintiff, or to account for the same. (5) There is no allegation that said defendant, or any of the members of the said defendant company acting for it, or the company itself, drilled upon the land embraced in said options, or located the drilling, as any part of any contract made by plaintiff with said defendant, nor that plaintiff had any authority from defendant company, the said defendant Wilkinson, or any other member of defendant company, or had the consent of them, or either of them, to drill upon the land embraced in said options, or any of them. (6) There is no averment made or reason given in plaintiff's bill which imposed upon said defendant Wilkinson any obligation to transfer options to plaintiff, or take title to him for land embraced therein, and there is, therefore, no premise to predicate the prayer of the bill that the options be sold and the deed surrendered to plaintiff; neither is there any allegation upon which to predicate the prayer that said abstracts be sold. (7) The bill is multifarious, in that it avers that subsequent to the 9th of April, 1902, the date of the alleged contract between the plaintiff and said defendant, the plaintiff, on the 30th day of July, 1902, declined, in a letter to said defendant, to comply with said contract, and yet prays substantially, in default of the repayment of said $20,000, for a compliance therewith on the part of said defendant.

This prayer is inconsistent with said averment. (8) There is no imputation of fraud upon the part of said defendant company, no prayer for discovery, and no averment of the ground of equitable jurisdiction."

On the 10th of November, 1903, the plaintiff joined in said demurrer, and the same, being argued, was sustained, and the plaintiff given leave to amend his bill.

The plaintiff filed an amended bill, making parties thereto the same parties defendant as in the original bill, and also T. Moore Jackson, surviving partners of themselves, and C. Sprigg Sands, in his own right, and also as partners doing business under the firm name of South Penn Coal Company, and Lulu Sands, executrix of C. Sprigg Sands, deceased, and Edward H. Compton, clerk of the county court of Barbour county, alleging that the defendant J. Neuton Wilkinson represented himself to plaintiff as the agent and attorney in fact for all of the other defendants, including the said coal company, and having full power and authority to act for them in his representations and negotiations in respect to said coal and lands; that he falsely and fraudulently represented to the plaintiffs that the South Penn Coal Company owned, or had under its control by contract of purchase, the said lands and coal; that the land was underlaid throughout its extent with the Freeport and Kittanning or Kanawha River coal of a merchantable and marketable character, ranging in thickness to from four to six feet, with good title thereto, and free from incumbrances and litigations and other legal entanglements, which defendants could sell to the plaintiff and deliver to him speedily; that there were 300 acres of front land, at least, under the control of said defendants, which they could sell to the plaintiff in fee at \$35 an acre, and that, adjacent thereto and contiguous therewith, was not less than 2,500 acres of coal under their control, which could be made speedily available, and adjacent to that another large body of 8,000 acres of coal, which the company controlled and could deliver to plaintiff, underlaid with the said coals, without unreasonable delay, and free from litigation; that said Wilkinson, with a large plat which he had before him for the purpose, embracing all that section of Barbour county comprising the land which he pretended to be under the control of the South Penn Coal Company, and including those upon which the said company had contracts and for which he represented it had titles, pointed out to plaintiff upon said plat the 300 acres of front land, and pointed out the several tracts going to make up said 300 acres, and upon which he represented there was a side track, coal tippie, mine openings, and facilities already in use for marketing the coal; that Wilkinson was then the agent and attorney in fact, with full power and authority to act for all the defendants in respect to the said representations and proposal, and had full power to act for all the defendants, including the said coal company, of which representations all the defendants had notice; that the said 300 acres of front land was necessary and indispensable to such a mining and coking plant as plaintiff desired to establish, for mining and removing the coal thereunder and under the said 2,500 acres; that the defendants did not, nor did any of them, nor did the said coal company, own or control the 300 acres of front land, or any part thereof, except the O'Neal 8-acre lot, and the interest of said Rainey in the Snyder land, containing about 36 or 37 acres (which interest in fact, was only one-fifth thereof), which the said defendants, and all of them, and the said coal company, knew at the time of said representations to the plaintiff, and also knew on said 19th day of April, 1902; that after all the foregoing representations had been made to him, and when he supposed he was dealing with an honorable and trustworthy man, in whose representations for himself and all of the defendants, plaintiff had implicitly relied, the said South Penn Coal Company, through Wilkinson, its attorney in fact, made to plaintiff the proposition of the 19th day of April, 1902 (and which is hereinbefore copied); that plaintiff deposited the said \$10,000 in the bank as provided, and was received by the South Penn Coal Company upon the terms of said conditional acceptance through its agent, Wilkinson, who fraudulently withheld said options from plaintiff; that the coal, called in said proposition 2,500 acres, and the front land, called 300 acres, and the coal lands referred to therein as containing 8,000 or 10,000 acres, are the same pointed out on said plat by Wilkinson, and which he, for himself and other defendants, proposed to sell to plaintiff with good titles and free from litigation and entanglements; that the said coal company did not have the title or the options to all of the said lands or the coal at the time of said proposition, or since that time, nor did they have the 300 acres of front land, nor the options thereto, nor the control thereof, nor the 2,500 acres of coal as contemplated by the said proposition or the acceptance thereof, or as contended by the parties thereto, or as understood by the plaintiff, or as represented to him by the defendant Wilkinson, of which the defendants had notice; further alleging that the defendants, fraudulently and without plaintiff's knowledge used of the \$10,000 to the extent of \$7,000 thereof for the purpose of buying out and hushing up the claims of title held by George M. Price & Co. upon about 4,000 acres of the coal proposed to be sold to plaintiff; that defendants, without plaintiff's knowledge, after receiving said money from him, brought suit in Barbour circuit court and filed a bill against George M. Price & Co., seeking to enjoin and restrain them from taking title under their option to the said 4,000 acres upon which the South Penn Coal Company had afterwards taken option at \$10 an acre, and which alleged, among other things, that the contract of said Price & Co., the landowners, were invalid and of none effect as against the South Penn Coal Company, in which such proceedings were had that on the 15th of May, 1902, the court enjoined both the South Penn Company and the Price Company from taking title, until the further order of the court, to any of said coal in respect to which there was conflict and litigation between them, and filed with plaintiff's bill a copy of said bill and order, which proceeding was unknown to plaintiff; that said Price & Co. entered into a written agreement with the South Penn Company by which their differences were settled and the suit dismissed, which contract was in possession of defendants, or some of them, and the contents unknown to plaintiff, and the same was fraudulently concealed from him and had never been recorded; that on the 19th of May, 1902, George M. Price and the several persons composing the firm of Price & Co., executed a deed conveying to plaintiff, William H. Allen, four parcels of land, the N. M. Phillips 115-acre tract, the Ella V. Haller 85-acre tract, the Ida B. England 60-acre tract, and the Cordelia J. Boyles 20-acre tract, which said deed was signed, sealed, and acknowledged by George M. Price and his wife, W. F. Merrill and his wife, E. H. Hout and his wife, E. F. Hout and his wife, and Joseph McElfresh, who composed the firm of George M. Price & Co., and, being so acknowledged, was delivered by W. F. Merrill to J. N. Wilkinson; that, after said deed was so delivered by the grantors, the defendant J. N. Wilkinson fraudulently removed one sheet of the typewritten paper upon which the original deed was drafted, and inserted in lieu thereof another sheet of paper, in which J. N. Wilkinson was made the grantee, and also removed the wrapper from said deed and replaced it by a new wrapper, which was indorsed in the handwriting of Wilkinson, which deed was fraudulently concealed until after this suit was brought, and then, as so changed and altered, on the 23d day of October, 1903, was filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of Barbour county for recordation, of which all the defendants had notice; that the South Penn Coal Company on the 29th of April, 1902, took from Marietta Lance and her husband a deed for the coal under a tract of 113 acres of land owned by them, for the consideration of \$1,138, which was paid to Lance out of the money furnished by plaintiff; that said deed conveyed the land to plaintiff, Allen, and was delivered into the possession of J. N. Wilkinson, who fraudulently removed one of the typewritten pages of said deed and inserted another in the room thereof, and removed the cover with a typewritten indorsement, and caused another cover to be placed thereon, by which change the name of J. N. Wilkinson was made the grantee therein, which deed was also fraudulently concealed until the 23d of October, 1903, when it was recorded, all of which was well known to the defendants; that said deeds had been falsely and fraudulently changed for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff of his title to said coal, which, plaintiff charged, was paid for with the money so furnished by him; that said original deeds bear upon their face the unmistakable evidence of the said fraudulent alterations, and plaintiff called upon the said Wilkinson and other defendants to produce the said deeds, which were then in the custody of Compton, clerk of the county court of Barbour county, for the inspection of the court; that after the money of the plaintiff was so obtained said J. N. Wilkinson obtained from John F. Woodford a deed, on the 23d day of July, 1902, for 115 acres of land at the price of \$3,000, one-half of which was paid, and the residue in one and two years with interest, and on the 15th of March, 1903, he obtained a deed from John B. Pitman and wife for the coal under 25 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres of land at Lillian for \$221.62 paid, and on the 3d of April, 1903, he obtained a deed from Hayes Howel and wife for \$533.12 in hand paid for the coal under 59 acres of land, which deeds were filed for record by him on said 23d of October, and copies of the said five deeds were exhibited with the bill.

Plaintiff charges that all of the said lands so conveyed and pretended to be conveyed to said Wilkinson were paid for out of the money and property of plaintiff and were held in trust for him by the said Wilkinson, whether he took the title for the fraudulent purpose of deceiving the plaintiff by concealing his ownership, or whether he took the title in his own name in order to hold the same as trustee for himself and the other defendants composing the said South Penn Coal Company; that a large part of the money so furnished by plaintiff was in fact used and expended by the defendants in small payments upon options from landowners unknown to plaintiff, in making surveys of said coal lands, and in abstracting the titles thereof for the benefit of plaintiff, not at his request, but which were intended, as he was informed, to be delivered to him, that he might know the true state of the title of said several tracts and the location and boundaries of the several parcels of coal, which he charged were fraudulently concealed and withheld from him by the defendants. Plaintiff further alleged that at the request of defendants, and in order to facilitate their work in perfecting the titles to said lands and learn the quality of said coal, plaintiff sent out upon said land a competent and capable diamond driller, and directed the said driller and the defendants to begin on the land with the drilling near the front at Lillian and thence drill toward the turnpike on a line running S. 45° E., giving particular directions where the holes were to be put down; that the defendants, through the defendant Nixon, without plaintiff's knowledge, upon the arrival of the drillers, took charge of them and began to drill the land, contrary to plaintiff's instructions, on the eastern extremity of said coal field, upon lands under contract to George M. Price & Co., where they found but 18 inches of coal, and then drilled westward toward Lillian, and no place finding any coal that was marketable and merchantable, or four or six feet in thickness, and which drilling the defendants procured to be contrary to plaintiff's instructions, for the purpose of ascertaining what coal was lying below the level of Bill's creek and Sugar creek, in respect to which levels they had made some contracts for coal, with which plaintiff had nothing to do and in which he was in no wise interested, for which said drilling plaintiff was obliged to pay and did pay $3,600, which the defendants fraudulently expended and appropriated to serve their own ends and not for the benefit of plaintiff; that on the 30th of July, 1903, after being fully satisfied by unreasonable delays, defects of title, conflicts of claims, the fraudulent action of said drillers, the inability of defendants to obtain the titles proposed to be sold, etc., plaintiff notified the defendants, through their attorney in fact, Wilkinson, that he refused to accept said coal field, and demanded the return of the $20,000 and the $3,600, all of which the defendants and all of them fraudulently failed and refused to refund, and likewise refused to deliver to the plaintiff any of said contracts or evidences of title or of the title to any of the coal proposed to be sold; that the defendants, through J. N. Wilkinson and W. W. Rainey, who were acting for them and with their knowledge and approval, for the purpose of deceiving and cheating plaintiff and fraudulently procuring from him said moneys, and knowing their representations to be untrue, and knowing themselves to be unable to make good their representations or to deliver to plaintiff the property to be sold to him, falsely represented that the said front 300 acres at Lillian was underlaid with Kittanning Freeport coal of six feet in thickness, and that the said thickness extended through the said 300 acres and the land contiguous thereto; that the plaintiff relied upon the truth of said representations, and was cheated and deceived by the defendants, and so induced to part with his money, and, relying upon the truth of said representations, plaintiff had arranged to borrow and to have furnished to him and made immediately available, in order to pay for said lands and to install thereon a large mining and coking plant, the sum of $400,000, and made contracts to furnish coal and coke from said lands, and made traffic contracts for the shipping thereof, the truth being that the said coal did not underlie said lands as represented to plaintiff, and did not show three veins, from four to six feet in thickness, of merchantable and marketable coal, underlying all of the lands proposed to be sold to the plaintiff.

Plaintiff prayed for a rescission of the proposition and acceptance made on the 19th of April, 1902, and that defendants be required to answer and disclose the dispositions made by them of the $10,000 paid on the 19th day of April, 1902, and the $10,000 paid on the 24th of May, 1902, and the parts thereof paid upon options, to any of the landowners, and that they be required to disclose all purchases and payments made in the name of plaintiff, and all the titles to land or coal taken in the name of plaintiff, and to surrender all the contracts, deeds, and title papers in respect thereto; that they disclose their purchases and contracts for lands or coal taken in the name of Wilkinson, or any other defendants, and of the said several tracts purchased by the defendants, or any of them, in his name, or in the names of any of them, or in the name of plaintiff, from George M. Price & Co., and to disclose the said contract made with George M. Price & Co.; that the said Wilkinson might be required to disclose the said power of attorney shown by him to the plaintiff, and all the title papers in his possession, and to produce and disclose the said map and plat and the deeds and contract for coal or land purchased or in part paid for with the money of plaintiff, and to disclose and surrender all of the abstracts, surveys, plats, and options relating to the said land and coal under the control of the said defendants or any of them; that he have a decree against the defendants for the sum of $20,000 and for the $3,600, and that the same be decreed to be considered alien upon the said options, plats, abstracts, and liens in the possession of the defendants or any of them, paid for in whole or in part with the money so obtained from plaintiff; that the defendants be required to produce, and file in court with their answers, the contract in writing of George M. Price & Co., and the original deeds from George M. Price et al. and Marietta Lance and her husband to J. N. Wilkinson, dated on the 19th day of May, 1902, and on the 29th of April, 1902, respectively, for the inspection of the court, and that the defendant J. N. Wilkinson be required to answer and say who changed said deeds, and why the same were concealed and not recorded, instead of being held until the institution of this suit, and that the other defendants be required to answer and say whether they authorized or directed the said J. N. Wilkinson to take title to himself, or for any of the said coal, and who paid the purchase money therefor and what money was applied in payment therefor, and especially whether any of the defendants contributed any of the money paid to Price & Co., Marietta Lance, Hayes Howel and wife, Joseph Pitman and wife, or John F. Woodford and wife, for the coal so purchased from them; that Compton, clerk of the county court, be restrained from delivering to Wilkinson or any other person, until the further order of the court, the said original deeds of Price et al. to Wilkinson, dated May 19, 1902, and Marietta Lance to him, dated April 29, 1902, and for general relief.

The defendants, by counsel, entered their demurrer to the plaintiff's amended bill, assigning the same grounds assigned in writing to the plaintiff's original bill, in which the plaintiff joined, and same, being argued, was sustained by the court, and the plaintiff's bill and amended bill were dismissed, and decree for costs; the dismissal being without prejudice.

It is contended by appellees that there is no equity in the bill, the same setting up merely an alleged contract existing between the plaintiff and the defendant J. N. Wilkinson, a member of the firm, and that the same is purely a legal demand and there was complete and adequate remedy at law. This would be a proper legal proposition if plaintiff was suing alone to recover the $20,000 which he shows by his bill was fraudulently procured from him by the defendant J. N. Wilkinson, acting for himself and the other defendants, all of whom together constituted the firm or partnership of South Penn Coal Company, and which fraudulent acts on the part of defendant J. N. Wilkinson were on behalf of himself and the other members of the company, of which they all had notice, and it is distinctly alleged that the said Wilkinson, as agent and attorney in fact, had full power and authority to act for the other defendants in his representations and negotiations in respect to the coal and land properties mentioned. The bill, and especially the amended bill, is not brought to enforce the contract of April 19, 1902, but to rescind the same, and for a discovery as to the disposition made of the $20,000 so fraudulently obtained from the plaintiff, and to disclose all the purchases and payments made in the name of plaintiff with his money, and all the titles to all land or coal taken in his name, and to require them to surrender the contracts, deeds, and title papers in respect thereto, and for a discovery as to the purchase and contracts and deeds for coal lands, whether taken in plaintiff's name, or the name of the defendants, or any of them, and paid for wholly or in part with the money of plaintiff. The bill distinctly charges the fraudulent changing of deeds executed to plaintiff as vendee and delivered to Wilkinson, and changed to the name of Wilkinson, as grantee, with the knowledge of the defendants, for whom he was acting in such fraudulent transaction.

The demurrer interposed in the name of the South Penn Coal Company was the demurrer of all the defendants in their partnership capacity, and is an admission of the truth of the allegations of the amended bill. In Shaw v. Allen, 184 Ill. 77, 56 N. E. 403, it is held that: "On demurrer to a bill all the material facts well pleaded are taken as true." Grieg v. Russell, 115 Ill. 483, 4 N. E. 790; Clark v. Assurance Association, 14 App.

D. C. 154, 43 L. R. A. 390. The meaning of a demurrer is that, admitting the allegations of the bill or declaration to be true, they are not sufficient to sustain the action. It will hardly be contended that in an action at law for the recovery of money the plaintiff could recover the lands which were conveyed to him, nor the possession of the deeds for the same, which were fraudulently withheld from him; nor could it charge with plaintiff's debt the land purchased and paid for with the money of plaintiff, so fraudulently obtained from him by false representations of the defendants and their agent and attorney in fact, the title to some of which lands was claimed to be taken in the name of said Wilkinson. It is well settled that, if a bill in equity shows any cause for relief, the general demurrer thereto must be overruled. In Moore v. Harper, 27 W. Va. 362 (Syl., point 1), it is held: "A bill in equity, notwithstanding it contains many vague and irrelevant allegations, will not be held bad on demurrer, if, taken as a whole, it states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief." And in Miller v. Hare, 43 W. Va. 647 (Syl., point 1), 28 S. E. 722, 39 L. R. A. 491: "A general demurrer to a bill in equity is properly overruled, if the bill as a whole states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief." And in Whitlock v. Duffield, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 365: "If a right to any relief be shown by a bill, a demurrer will be overruled." Gay v. Skeen, 36 W. Va. 582, 15 S. E. 64. In Chrislip v. Teter, 43 W. Va. 366, 27 S. E. 288, it is held: "When fraud is sufficiently alleged, with proper parties to a bill, a demurrer will not lie." And "when a court of equity takes jurisdiction of a cause for one purpose, it will go on and dispose of the questions involved, to avoid a multiplicity of suits." Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 214, 19 S. E. 536; Yates v. Stuart, 39 W. Va. 124, 19 S. E. 423; Watson v. Watson, 45 W. Va. 290, 31 S. E. 939. "A court of equity in all cases of actual fraud has concurrent jurisdiction with a court of law in remedying the fraud," and, being more flexible, often gives a more certain and complete remedy "by means of its power to compel discovery and to cause fraudulent deeds and securities to be canceled, or conveyances to be made, thus effectually putting an end to further litigation. In those cases of actual fraud equity follows the law, and gives relief to the full extent to which a court of law could give relief." Garland v. Rives, 4 Rand. 282, 307, 15 Am. Dec. 756, citing Bennett v. Musgrove, 2 Ves. Sr. 51. In 1 Story's Eq. Juris. (13th Ed.), at section 191, it is said: "One of the largest classes of cases in which courts of equity are accustomed to grant relief is where there has been a misrepresentation or suggestio falsi. It is said, indeed, to be a very old head of equity that, if representation is made to another person, going to deal in a matter of interest upon the faith of that representation, the former shall make that representation good if he knows it to be false." And cases are there cited. Appellees contend that they are not required to answer the written proposition because it was not specifically filed with the amended bill; that it is not certain that it is the same paper called "Exhibit Option" and filed with the original bill. It is made sufficiently clear by the amended bill that the "written proposition and acceptance" is the same paper as that filed with the original bill, as large portions of it are quoted, including the written acceptance signed by the plaintiff; and, having been filed as an exhibit with the pleadings, it continued a part of the cause, and the reference to it in the amended bill is sufficient. The amended bill is good on demurrer, and the court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

The decree of the circuit court is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings to be had therein according to the rules governing courts of equity.

(58 W. Va. 340,

SIERS et al. v. WISEMAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 21, 1905.)

1. ESTOPPEL IN PAIS.

One who, assuming to act for another in respect to his property, performs an act necessarily detrimental to himself and beneficial to such other person, and not such in its nature as, under the law, can confer any right upon himself, is estopped from denying that, in performing such service, he acted for and on behalf of such other person.

2. TAXATION—PAYMENT OF TAXES BY VOLUNTEER.

Payment of taxes on land by one who has no color or claim of right to do so on his own behalf, inures to the benefit of the owner, if he elects to claim it.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—AGENCY—EVIDENCE.

Agency may be established in favor of the principal by the admissions of the agent, or by proof of acts of the alleged agent, from which no inference, other than that of the relationship of principal and agent, can be consistently deduced.

4. SAME.

Agency of one person for the purpose of paying taxes on the land of another is sufficiently shown by proof of his having paid the taxes on the land for a long period of time, without any claim of title or right in or to it in himself, allowed it to become delinquent for one year, purchased at the sale for such delinquency, failed to take a deed under such purchase, continued to pay taxes on the land in the name of the owner for another long period of time and until his death, and failed to take possession thereof at any time.

5. TAXATION—TAX DEED TO AGENT.

A deed taken by the heirs of such agent, after his death, under the purchase so made, vests no title in them as against the person for whom the taxes were so paid.

6. SAME—SUBSEQUENT PAYMENT OF TAXES.

If, in such case, the heirs of the agent take a deed under the tax purchase, and cause the land to be entered upon the landbooks for taxation in their own names, and to be dropped from said books in the name of the true owner, payment of the taxes on the land, as so entered and charged, will inure to the benefit of the true owner, and prevent forfeiture of his title to the state under section 39 of chapter 31 of the Code of 1899, for failure to keep his land charged with taxes.

7. SAME — SUIT TO CANCEL TAX DEED — LACHES.

An adverse claim of title under such tax deed for less than nine years before suit brought to cancel it, but without notice thereof, and possession under such deed and claim for less than three years before the institution of such suit, do not subject the plaintiffs to the bar of laches.

8. SAME—REIMBURSEMENT OF PURCHASER.

One who seeks cancellation of a tax deed must do equity by reimbursing the purchaser for his outlay in payment of taxes and proper charges.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.

Bill by Amanda D. Siers and others against W. A. Wiseman and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

Dillon & Nuckolls, Payne & Hamilton, and St. Clair, Walker & Summerfield, for appellants. A. N. Campbell, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. The decree appealed from in this cause dismissed two bills relating to a tract of land in Fayette county, containing 50 acres. The first suit was brought by Amanda D. Siers and others against W. A. Wiseman, administrator and heir at law of Amos K. Wiseman, and other heirs of said A. K. Wiseman, for the purpose of setting aside a deed made by the clerk of the county court of said county to the heirs of said A. K. Wiseman, on two grounds, the first of which was invalidity of said deed on its face, and the second, alleged relationship on the part of the said decedent which precluded his making, as to the complainants, a valid purchase of said land. The deed was made on the 5th day of April, 1891, under a purchase at a tax sale made in December, 1879. By reason of the long lapse of time, the clerk had no authority, under the law, to make said deed. The land had been conveyed to Amanda D. Siers, whose name was then Amanda D. Burgess, and her children by deed dated October 15, 1859. Thereafter for about four years she resided on the land. On leaving it in 1862, her uncle, A. K. Wiseman, paid the taxes until 1878, for which year it was returned delinquent for nonpayment of taxes, and sold in 1879 as aforesaid; but the purchaser took no deed. In 1890, he died, having paid all the taxes on the land until the date of his death, in the name of Amanda D. Burgess. For the year 1891, the land was taxed in the name of said Burgess, but, after that year, it was kept on the landbooks in the name of the widow and heirs of A. K. Wiseman, and the taxes thereon paid by them. After the year 1891, the land did not appear on the landbooks in the name of Amanda Burgess. Immediately after the death of A. K. Wiseman, Mrs. Siers wrote a letter to William A. Wiseman, one of the heirs of said decedent, concerning the land and the taxes thereon, to which he replied as follows, under date of July 27, 1890: "Well in regard to your land, it has been sold by the sheriff twice and bought in by father, but is still taxed in your name. I cannot tell the exact amount against the land without going up to mother's, but I think it is about ($40.00) forty dollars. If you want me to give you the exact amount, write back immediately, and I will go and examine the papers and get the amount." Under date of March 13, 1895, he wrote her again, saying: "In reply to your letter of the third of December in regard to that piece of land would say that it is in such a fix at this time that it would take 20 years to straighten out if the heirs are contrary, which some of them are. We have been paying taxes on the place for the last 30 years, and it has been sold by the state twice, and father bought it in both times, and at last we had to take a deed for it from the state to protect ourselves. I do not exactly know what we have spent on the land, but would suppose some $300 to $400. I come down to Charleston some times, but am most always busy. I will come and see you sometime if I can." On December 27, 1896, he wrote again in reply to a letter from Mrs. Siers, repeating what he had said in former letters about the payment of taxes, sale, and purchase and the taking of the deed and saying further: "You can see just what condition the land is in, the heirs are scattered from Missouri to Virginia, and I have nothing more to do with it than one of the other heirs. You can readily see that the land would not pay, if sold, what it has cost the heirs since the war (say for 35 years). I am very sorry for you, would help you if I could, but times are very dull here, and I cannot get money enough to keep my bills paid at maturity." On March 23, 1897, he wrote as follows: "I suppose you think it quite a while about me coming down, but I cannot leave home just when I want to. When the weather gets a little better, I will get all the papers together in the case and come down and spend a day or so, and see what we can do. I have been talking with the heirs, and I think that I probably can do something with them." A statement of agreed facts filed in the case shows that, in April, 1897, the month following that of the date of said last letter, the Wiseman heirs took possession of the tract of land. Prior to that time it had not been in the actual possession of any one, since Mrs. Siers left it in 1862. This suit was brought August 3, 1899.

The other suit was brought by the commissioner of school lands of said county to sell the land as forfeited for nonentry on the landbooks for taxation, on the theory that the Wiseman heirs had no title, and that the title of Mrs. Siers was forfeited, under section 39 of chapter 31 of the Code of 1899, which makes it the duty of the owner of land to keep it taxed in his name, and forfeits it to the state for failure to have the same taxed for a period of five successive years. Mrs. Siers and S. L. Walker, who claimed as grantee of her and of J. M. Richards, who had previously purchased the interests of the children of Mrs. Siers, were made defendants to said suit brought by the commissioner of school lands, and answered the bill, denying the forfeiture, but claiming the right to redeem in case the court should determine that there had been such forfeiture. After said suit was brought, the bill in the other one was amended so as to set forth the proceedings in the suit brought on behalf of the state, and a prayer added for leave to pay into court the amount of taxes and interest necessary to redeem the land, as ascertained by the commissioner to whom the suit brought on behalf of the state had been referred for that purpose.

For superiority of title, the defendants rely upon section 3 of article 13 of the Constitution, by which the title to land forfeited is, under certain conditions, transferred to and vested in any person (other than those for whose default the same may have been forfeited or returned delinquent, their heirs or devisees), for so much of said land as such person shall have had claim to, and actual, continuous possession of, under color of title for any five successive years after the year 1865, and have paid all taxes charged or chargeable thereon for said period. They do not rely upon the tax deed as a valid deed passing title, but they rely upon it as color of title and say that, at the time the decree was pronounced in these causes, they had had possession under said deed for the period of five years and had paid all taxes charged and chargeable thereon. They took possession in April, 1897, and the decree in these causes was made on the 16th day of October, 1903. They had not had five years' possession at the time of the institution of either of these suits, but they insist that the commencement of these suits did not stop the running of time under this constitutional provision, and that, upon the completion of said period of possession, the title of the plaintiffs, having been forfeited and taken up by the state, under section 39 of chapter 31 of the Code of 1899 was transferred to, and vested in, them, by force of this constitutional provision.

The question of agency on the part of A. K. Wiseman is of controlling importance. If, from the year 1862, until the time of his death, he was the agent of the owners for the purpose of paying taxes on the land, his purchase inured to their benefit, and though a purchaser, he was a trustee, holding the legal title, while the equitable title remained in the owners, and his heirs took no greater or other estate than he held, and their entry upon the land under the deed, founded upon the purchase of their ancestor, was likewise for the benefit of the owners.

It is asserted in the brief that the answers deny everything alleged, except that the defendants are the heirs of said A. K. Wiseman, that the deed under which they claim was executed by the clerk of the county court, and that the land had been conveyed to A. D. Burgess and to her children; but this is not strictly accurate. Neither of the answers denies payment of the taxes by A. K. Wiseman while they were charged in the name of A. D. Burgess, but they do deny that the payments were made for her benefit. They do not deny the fact of payment, but only the legal effect thereof. The answer to the original bill denies "that the said A. K. Wiseman as such agent did continue in charge of the said premises and did pay the taxes thereon for the said plaintiff until the time of his death which occurred in the year 18—." The answer to the amended bill says the allegation of payment of taxes is false and untrue, "so far as it states that A. K. Wiseman in his lifetime paid any taxes, or that W. A. Wiseman since his death paid any taxes that in any way could inure to the benefit of the plaintiffs or any of them." These answers further deny that A. D. Burgess or any of the defendants or any person under whom they or any of them claim, paid any taxes on the land. But all this falls short of denying that A. K. Wiseman paid the taxes while they were charged in the name of A. D. Burgess. On the whole, the denial is carefully and expressly qualified, so as not to extend to payment only by the appellees and their ancestor. Neither is the genuineness of the letters of W. A. Wiseman, copies of which are exhibited with the bill, denied. Nor is the correctness of the dates of the purchase and deed denied.

In paying these taxes from 1863 up to 1878, a period of 15 years, A. K. Wiseman undoubtedly acted for A. D. Burgess and her children. The land was theirs, and the taxes were charged in her name. No person on earth had the right to pay them except the owners. No person on earth could pay them without assuming to act for her, and it is well settled that where one person assumes to act and does act on behalf of another, he is estopped to deny the benefit of that act to such other person, and to claim the benefit thereof for himself as against such other person. Schedda v. Sawyer, 4 McLean (U. S.) 181. Fed. Cas. No. 12,443, holds that a person who assumes to act as agent in redeeming land sold for taxes, is held to have acted in that capacity; and if he so take advantage of such act as to obtain a title in his own name, he is responsible in the character assumed, and will be held to answer to those in whom the title was vested. In the opinion the court, said: "It is argued that the bill does not charge an agency in redeeming the land from the tax sale. The bill declares that he represented himself as agent for complainants. Unless he acted in that capacity, having no interest in the land, he had no right to redeem it. He is not only alleged in the bill to have acted as agent, but the act itself shows that he so acted." "Where a person assumes to act as agent for another, it will be presumed as against him that the relation existed, so as to cast upon him the burden of proving that it did not exist, if he afterwards takes such a position." Clark & Skyles on Agency, § 63. In treating of evidence and proof of agency, as shown by the acts of the agent, Mechem on Agency, at section 100, says: "His acts and statements cannot be made use of against the principal until the fact of the agency has been shown by other evidence. His statements and admissions would, however, in any proper case be admissible against himself." This principle was applied in Knupp v. Syms, 200 Pa. 489, 50 Atl. 210. Hodges claimed the land by purchase at a tax sale, and an old journal of the treasurer was produced, showing that Hodges had paid the taxes on the land from 1842 to 1849, and in 1849, had paid to the treasurer the taxes for the year for the delinquency of which the land had been sold and purchased by him. Upon this evidence alone, the court determined that he was the agent of the owner, and disqualified to take the benefit of delinquency by purchase. Proof of payment of the taxes made a prima facie case of agency which was not rebutted or overthrown in any manner. Gamble v. Hamilton, 31 Fla. 401, 12 South. 229, was a case similar to this in many respects. There was no evidence of prior agency on the part of Branch, the testator of the plaintiff, who claimed under a tax deed, but it did appear that he had previously paid taxes for the owner, the amount of which, however, had been repaid to him. Soon after this transaction, the land became delinquent, was sold, and Branch purchased it, and, under that purchase, he claimed title. After the purchase, he wrote the owner, in response to an inquiry about the land, saying he had purchased, but that it was all right and should not prejudice. Afterwards, there were negotiations between the parties looking to a sale of the land to Branch, but none was ever consummated. In the meantime, he had taken a tax deed under his purchase made in 1875, without the knowledge of the owner. Under these circumstances, the court held that his purchase was a fraud upon the owner, and that whatever title he took under the purchase inured to the owner's benefit.

But, for delinquency for the year 1878, Wiseman purchased the land in 1879. If nothing else appeared, this act would not necessarily be deemed an act on behalf, and for the benefit, of the owners. It was an act which any stranger might have done on his own behalf. It may be said here that payment of the taxes in the name of the owner for the preceding 15 years, though inconsistent with any other view than that of agency, as regards payment for those years, is not evidence of agency, binding Wiseman to pay taxes for future years, or disabling him from purchasing for delinquency, for subsequent years. This position may be sound. But he took no deed under that purchase and continued to pay the taxes for the years 1879 to 1889, inclusive, and his heirs or his administrator paid for the years 1890 and 1891, in the name of Amanda D. Burgess. After the expiration of five years from the date of the purchase there was no authority in the clerk to execute, nor right in Wiseman to demand, a deed under that purchase. Acts 1872-73, p. 320, c. 117, § 24; Acts 1882, p. 399, c. 180, § 24; Code 1890, c. 81, § 24. This Wiseman knew, yet he neglected to take a deed and continued to pay the taxes in the name of the owner, all of which is inconsistent with intent on his part to act for himself and not for the owners of the land. His conduct is irreconcilable with any theory other than that of intention to act for their benefit.

It was not necessary that there be an express formal appointment to create the relationship of principal and agent, nor that there be direct evidence of appointment of the agent, or of a contract of agency. It may sufficiently appear from circumstances and the conduct of the parties. If it be shown that one person continues to act for another and his action is acquiesced in by such other, the relationship or contract of agency is sufficiently sustained by evidence. "An agency may be created by express words or acts of the principal, or may be implied from his conduct and acquiescence. The nature and extent of an agency may be implied and inferred from the circumstances." Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585. In that case, the agency was established against the principal by implication arising from conduct shown. Here the question is the kind and quantum of evidence, sufficient to establish the contract or relation against the agent, and in favor of the principal; and, for that purpose, evidence of admissions and conduct of the agent is freely allowed everywhere. A person cannot, by his testimony and acts alone, prove his agency against his principal, nor can strangers do so, but it is universally admitted that he may thus prove it against himself, and in favor of his principal.

To the application of this principle it may be objected that the evidence falls short of showing, on the part of the owners, knowledge of the acts of Wiseman, or recognition thereof. If this position be conceded, the principle of estoppel applies. Wiseman's heirs claim under, and are bound by, his acts. They do not pretend to have title otherwise than by inheritance from him. They claim and have such right and title as he had and no more. In the attempt to repudiate his acts, clearly done for the benefit of Mrs. Siers and her children, they are met with the assertion, on the part of the owners, of a claim to the benefit of what was done for them. But is it apparent that the evidence is insufficient to afford a foundation for the finding as a matter of fact that Wiseman's acts in reference to this land were unknown, unrecognized, and unacquiesced in by the owners? Owners of property subject to taxation, as all private property is, are presumed to know that the taxes accrue thereon annually and that nonpayment thereof results in loss of the property. No great distance intervened between the residence of Mrs. Siers and the location of the land and she and Wiseman were close relatives. It is highly probable, to say the least, that she did know of his payments and acquiesced therein, for he continued to make them, and strong probabilities arising from admitted facts are everywhere held to have weight and force as evidence. It is sometimes asserted by the courts that owners of property will not be allowed to plead ignorance of the status and condition thereof or of the vicissitudes to which it is subject. Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 519, 22 L. Ed. 599; Lafferty v. Lafferty, 42 W. Va. 783, 26 S. E. 262. If they cannot absolve themselves from duty on the ground of such ignorance, will it be presumed, in order to defeat a right or title which must exist but for it?

So far as the competent evidence discloses, no money was ever furnished Wiseman with which to pay the taxes, and he was never reimbursed for payments made by him. But is the contrary to be assumed? For aught that appears in the evidence, or admissions by the pleadings, some money may have been furnished to him for that purpose. He is dead, and Mrs. Siers not permitted to testify. Does not the fact of payment of the taxes for 15 years argue that there may have been some money furnished for that purpose? But suppose none was furnished, and the payments, in view of the relation of the parties, should be deemed to have been gratuitous, is that fact inconsistent with the position that the payments were made for the benefit of the owners? By no means. The motive which prompted the payments is immaterial, for there was no right in Wiseman to pay the taxes, or in any way interfere with the property except on behalf, and for the benefit, of the owners, and neither he nor his heirs can be permitted to claim the benefit of such acts against the owner. He may have expected or intended to claim a lien upon the land for the amount of his expenditures, and having the power to do so, by taking the title in his own name, was willing to advance the money and charge it to the owners. This is not at all inconsistent with the relation of agency, nor with the existence of a perfect equitable title to the land in Mrs. Siers and her children. Failure to supply an agent with money for payment of taxes does not absolve him from duty to abstain from buying the land. Bowman v. Officer & Pusey, 53 Iowa, 640, 6 N. W. 28. It may be said, however, that, under this principle, every tortious act which a stranger may do upon the land of another or with reference to it will operate beneficially to the owner, if he sees fit to claim the benefit of it, and is therefore inconsistent with the principles of the law of adverse possession. Adverse possession is exceptional in its nature and principles, being founded upon the statute of limitations, and can only be predicated upon acts of such nature as are hostile, so openly and notoriously hostile, as to be inconsistent with any admission of right or title in any other person. Mere payment of taxes is not such an act. Title by adverse possession rests not upon common-law principles, but upon the statute of limitations, which professedly, and for reasons of public policy, gives the party the benefit of his own wrong in defiance of common-law justice and right. Ordinarily, the owner of property may found a right upon any tortious act of a stranger, respecting it. If beneficial, he may claim the whole of the benefit, and, if injurious, he may waive the tort, adopt the act and sue upon it, as upon a contract. But the whole course of the conduct of A. K. Wiseman in its nature and effect is detrimental to himself, and beneficial to the owners, necessarily and unequivocally so, and nothing to the contrary can be inferred from it.

Counsel for the appellees relies upon the case of Day v. Fay (decided Feb. 20, 1906) 51 S. E. 1013, and quotes at some length from the opinion therein; but it differs from this in material respects. The deed was taken as soon after the purchase as the law would permit, and the purchase itself was not made until after the death of the alleged principal. From what has been said here, the importance of these circumstances must be apparent.

Having concluded that agency in Wiseman is sufficiently shown, it follows that his heirs succeeded to only such right and title as he had. Their payment of taxes on the land in their own name from 1892 down to the present time inured to the benefit of the Siers title, and there has been no forfeiture of that title to the state. They held in privity with the Siers title, and, in such case, no other payment on the land is required. Double payment is required only in the case of hostile titles. Sturn v. Fleming, 26 W. Va. 54. The claim of forfeiture is predicated solely upon failure to keep the land on the landbooks and cause the same to be taxed as the property of Mrs. Siers and her children and those who claim under them. As the Wiseman heirs held the Siers title, if at all, in trust, having the legal title only, while the equitable title remained in the adverse parties, the payment of taxes in their names inures to the benefit of the appellants, and prevents forfeiture under the statute; and as there has been no forfeiture of that title to the state, there could have been no transfer of it under and by force of section 3 of article 13 of the Constitution. Forfeiture is a condition essential to such a transfer. It never can occur without a contemporaneous or precedent forfeiture. State v. Harman (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 828.

Agency on the part of the ancestor of the appellees renders it equally unnecessary to say whether the deed executed by the clerk is good or bad. Though it were absolutely free from defect, the appellees would hold the title under it as trustees for the appellants. Battin v. Wood, 27 W. Va. 58; Williamson v. Russell, 18 W. Va. 612; Curtis v. Boreland, 35 W. Va. 124, 12 S. E. 1113; State v. Eddy, 41 W. Va. 95, 23 S. E. 529. Upon showing their equitable title, they may demand conveyance of the legal title, and, in this view, the better it is the clearer their right to it, for, if it operates to strengthen the title of the cestuis qui trustent, they are entitled to the benefit of such additional strength.

Laches is relied upon as a defense, but the lapse of time from the date of notice of the adverse claim is too short. The appellees took possession of the land in April, 1897. This suit was commenced August 3, 1899, less than three years after notice of intent to deny the claim of the appellants. As late as March, 1897, W. A. Wiseman, the only one of the heirs who had any communication with Mrs. Siers, so far as the bill discloses, promised in writing to call upon her, and see what could be done. Within five years preceding that date, he had written her three letters, in response to inquiries about the land, and failed to give notice of an adverse claim, except for the purpose of securing the money due the estate, in any of them. He did tell her they had taken a deed to protect themselves, but in immediate connection with that statement he mentioned the money due them. He further said some of the heirs were contrary, but in what respect he did not indicate; and, in the last letter, he said he thought he could probably do something with them. This necessarily imported belief on his part in the possibility of an adjustment with her and acquiescence in her demand. His failure to disclose the amount of taxes paid, and intimation that it was large, and more than the value of the land might have excited suspicion, but he continued to assure her of his intention to come and see her, and evidently about the land, for, in his final letter, he apologized for his long delay and promised to get "all the papers together in the case, and come down and spend a day or so." This correspondence began immediately after the death of the ancestor, and several months before the acquisition of the tax deed; the first act signifying hostility, but not communicated for four years, and then with the assurance that it had been taken for protection as above stated. There is a dead witness, it is true, but if he were living, he would be estopped to deny the legal force and effect of admitted and incontrovertible facts, and his testimony, if consistent with them, would overthrow rather than sustain the position of claimants under him, in a controversy which they have brought on since his death. Under these circumstances, no such lack of diligence is perceived as amounts to laches. Less than nine years intervened between the date of the deed and the institution of this suit, and delay for that period, even if long enough to be prejudicial, is sufficiently excused.

Though entitled to the land, the appellants must do equity by reimbursing the estate of A. K. Wiseman and the appellees to the extent of their respective payments, on account of taxes on the land, together with costs and expenses properly incurred. Morris v. Roseberry, 46 W. Va. 24, 29, 32 S. E. 1019; McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 40 S. E. 509.

As the state had no title by forfeiture, its bill should have been dismissed, but without an adjudication in its favor, and, as the appellants had the equitable title to the land, the tax deed should have been set aside and annulled on reimbursement as aforesaid, as to the taxes paid.

Therefore these causes will be remanded to the circuit court of Fayette county with direction to ascertain the amount due the estate of A. K. Wiseman and his heirs for taxes paid on the land, with interest thereon, and other proper charges, and then to enter a decree in conformity with the conclusions above expressed.

(58 W. Va. 388)

BALTIMORE & O. R. CO. v. ALLEN,
Justice, et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. GARNISHMENT — FOREIGN RAILROAD CORPORATIONS.

Railroad corporations, chartered by other states, but owning and operating railroads in this state, have the status of residents of this state, although they are not citizens of it, within the meaning of clause 1 of section 2 of article 3 and clause 1 of section 2 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, nor domiciled in this state in the technical sense of that term.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 24, Cent. Dig. Garnishment, §§ 144, 146.]

2. SAME—SITUS OF DEBT.

Such corporations may be proceeded against as garnishees, without reference to the jurisdiction in which debts due from them were contracted or are payable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 24, Cent. Dig. Garnishment, §§ 144-147.]

3. SAME—DEBT FOLLOWS PERSON OF DEBTOR.

For the purposes of garnishment, a debt is annexed to the person of the debtor and subject to garnishment wherever he is found, unless expressly made payable elsewhere.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 24, Cent. Dig. Garnishment, §§ 143, 145-147.]

4. SAME—VENUE.

A debt may be attached by garnishment at the place of residence of the debtor, although it be expressly made payable elsewhere.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 24, Cent. Dig. Garnishment, §§ 143, 145-147.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Application by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company for writ of prohibition against James Allen, justice, and others. From an order denying the writ, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Robert White, J. B. Somerville, and D. C. Westenhaver, for plaintiff in error. Caldwell & Caldwell, for defendants in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. Upon a writ of error to a judgment discharging a rule in prohibition and dismissing plaintiff's petition, the inquiry is whether a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to proceed with an attachment against a railroad company, chartered by the Legislature of Maryland, and permitted by an act of the Legislature of Virginia, before the division of the state, to build and operate its railroad through what is now West Virginia, as garnishee, for the subjection of a debt contracted by the same railroad company in the state of Pennsylvania, and payable there, to the satisfaction of a demand due from the creditor of said company to a third party; such creditor being a nonresident and not having appeared in the action. The supposed lack of jurisdiction is predicated upon two grounds: First. That the situs of the debt sought to be subjected is in the state of Pennsylvania, where the creditor resides, where it was contracted, and where it is payable. Second. That, though the situs of the debt be not in the state of the residence of the creditor, it is not in this state, because the garnishee is domiciled in another state and found here only temporarily. H. F. Putnam, an employé of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company on part of its line in Pennsylvania, to whom said company was indebted for services, was himself indebted to J. D. Miller & Son, also residents of Pennsylvania. Miller & Son assigned their claim against Putnam to W. W. Rogers, of Wheeling, who brought an action on it before Allen, a justice of the peace of Ohio county, making the railroad company a garnishee. Thereupon the company presented its petition for a writ of prohibition to a judge of the circuit court of that county, who, after awarding a rule, discharged it on motion, and dismissed the petition. The petition alleged, in addition to the facts already stated, that the debt due Putnam was contracted and payable in Pennsylvania.

Great conflict and confusion characterize the decisions of the courts of the several states respecting the right to proceed by garnishment against debts due from corporations to nonresidents and made payable in a foreign jurisdiction. Many of them rest their decisions on the theory that the debt follows the person of the creditor, and can be subjected only in the jurisdiction in which he resides. Others take the opposite view, saying it follows the person of the debtor, and belongs to the jurisdiction of his residence. Still others give the idea of situs no peculiar force, holding that it may be subjected wherever the debtor may be sued. The adherents to the first proposition defend it upon the ground that the ownership of the debt is of necessity in the creditor, for no man can have property in a debt that he owes to another. Thus, in National Bank v. Furtick, 2 Marv. (Del.) 35, 42 Atl. 479, 44 L. R. A. 115, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99, the court says: "This inquiry could present no difficulty in respect to real estate, and little or none in regard to tangible personal property, having an actual situs. But, for the purpose of jurisdiction, the situs of a debt or chose in action is a question upon which there has been some diversity of opinion. There is, of course, no actual or visible, but only constructive, situs. Does the debt follow the creditor and his domicile, or the debtor and his domicile? The legal right and title are clearly in the creditor, and, by analogy to the principle that constructive possession is with the rightful owner, we should expect that the chose in action, particularly a debt, follows the person of the creditor for the purpose of attachment, as well as for many other purposes. And such seems to us to be the law, especially where there is no stipulation to the contrary." In his very able note to this case, in 69 Am. St. Rep., Mr. Freeman says, at page 117: "By the great weight of reason and authority debts are considered as the property of the persons to whom they are due, and their situs to be at the domicile of the creditor for the purpose of garnishment, as for all other purposes." Mr. Freeman does not mean to say, however, that the decisions in all the cases cited for the foregoing proposition were controlled by it. It is merely stated as a sort of basic principle, which has been modified in several ways. In the next subdivision of his note (page 118) he says many of the leading cases cited hold that the rule has been dispensed with by statutes. "In states whose courts recognize the authority of the general rule that the situs of a debt is at the domicile of the creditor, it is sometimes admitted that 'this fiction always yields to laws for attaching the property of a non-resident, because such laws necessarily assume that the property has a situs distinct from the owner's domicile.'" Wyeth Hardware, etc., Co. v. Lang, 54 Mo. App. 147, affirmed in 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 651, 48 Am. St. Rep. 628. Statutes and the custom of London may, and often do, for the purposes of attachment or garnishment at the suit of a third person, give the debt a situs at the domicile of the debtor. Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. Bleecker (May, 1898) 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Williams v. Ingersoll, 89 N. Y. 508; Douglass v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 209, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetts, 165 Ill. 592, 46 N. E. 631, 36 L. R. A. 640, 56 Am. St. Rep. 275. Compare Root v. Davis, 51 Ohio St. 29, 36 N. E. 669, 23 L. R. A. 445. "We conceive it to be well settled by authority," said the court in Reimers v. Seatco Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228, 30 L. R. A. 364, 37 U. S. App. 426, "that while, generally speaking, the situs of a debt is constructively with the creditor to whom it belongs, it is within the competence of the sovereign of the residence of the debtor by reason of its control over its own residents to pass laws subjecting the debt to seizure within its territorial sovereignty." See Pomeroy v. Rand, 157 Ill. 176, 41 N. E. 636; Bragg v. Gaynor, 85 Wis. 468, 55 N. W. 919, 21 L. R. A. 161; Newland v. Circuit Judge, 85 Mich. 151, 49 N. W. 544." National Bank v. Furtick, 69 Am. St. Rep. 118, 119, note. In a number of the cases referred to in these portions of the note the decisions stand upon the view that neither debtor nor creditor resided in the state in which it was attempted to subject the debt, and whether it was with the debtor or creditor was wholly immaterial. Swedish-American Bank v. Bleecker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Douglass v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 209, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448; Bank v. Furtick (Del.) 42 Atl. 479, 44 L. R. A. 115, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99; Railroad Co. v. Dooley, 78 Ala. 524; Railroad Co. v. Ohumley, 92 Ala. 317, 9 South. 286; Central Trust Co. v. Chattanooga, etc., Co. (C. C.) 68 Fed. 685.

Though a great deal is said in the reported cases in support of the doctrine that the debt follows the person of the creditor, few decisions in attachment cases stand upon it. It is usually referred to as a general principle having more or less bearing upon some other proposition which forms the basis of the final disposition of the case. Missouri Pacific Railway Co. v. Sharitt, 43 Kan. 375, 23 Pac. 430, 8 L. R. A. 385, 389, 19 Am. St. Rep. 143; Railway Co. v. Sturm and Railway Co. v. Campbell, reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144, however, adopt and apply that rule. It is manifestly at variance with a fundamental principle of the law of attachment, and the conception of the nature of the rights to be vindicated and wrongs to be redressed, which originally called the remedy by attachment into being and has made its use indispensable in modern jurisprudence. All courts characterize it as a special, anomalous, and harsh remedy, authorizing the seizure of the debtor's property in advance of an adjudication against him. It is based upon and deals with circumstances and conditions which put it beyond the power of the court to do justice and work out the substantial rights of the parties by the use of the ordinary legal remedies. Total want of remedy at law and inadequacy thereof, in view of the peculiar situation of the parties, respecting property and personal rights, necessitated the establishment of the system known as equity jurisprudence for the vindication of equitable rights of which the law courts could take no notice, and for relief against fraud and mistake. Under this system authority is generally exercised over the persons of the parties in respect to their rights, rather than over the property which is the subject-matter of their differences, although in many instances the property itself is the subject of the direct and immediate action of the court. But the circumstances are often such that the remedies in equity are not broad, flexible, and swift enough to prevent the impending wrong, or save the endangered right of the party. Hence the necessity for the special statutory remedy by attachment, substantially in the form in which it was exercised by the courts of London under a custom, as a jurisdiction peculiar to those courts, unknown throughout the balance of the kingdom, and giving relief under practically the same conditions and of the same kind as that afforded by attachment by the custom of London. The extraordinary circumstances calling for its exercise create a right which in fact, and in its nature, is equitable rather than legal, as tested by legal and equitable rules and principles, unaffected by any custom or statute. Fraud in some form, or nonresidence of the debtor, renders the ordinary common law remedies unavailing. Fraud, so far as they are concerned, may wholly deprive the creditor of his rights, and nonresidence of the defendant makes it impossible for the creditor to sue in his own state, and unjustly compels him to pursue the fleeing debtor into a foreign jurisdiction, although he has left property behind him, amply sufficient to pay the debt, against which the creditor cannot proceed by any form of action known to the common law. Instead awaiting such further development of equity jurisprudence as to enable it to give the creditor under these circumstances what he has a clear moral right to exact, the Legislature adopted as a legal remedy that which has existed for centuries by the custom of London, and allowed a legal proceeding against property of the defendant as well as against his person. If, by giving a remedy against the resident debtor of the nonresident creditor, who is the debtor of the plaintiff, the Legislature has impliedly said the plaintiff may, by a legal process, resort to the man in whose hands the money belonging to the absent defendant is, and thereby make him hold the fund as a trustee, or deliver it to an officer of the court, all the right which the defendant may have to that fund shall be deemed to be within the jurisdiction of the courts of this state for the purposes of the attachment, can the court say it shall not be so? The statute is founded upon a recognition of the plaintiff's moral right to treat him as a trustee, and declares that he shall be so treated in the law courts. But for the statute, the legal right and property in the debt would undoubtedly be with the absent creditor. As the statute exists, however, we must keep our eyes upon the conditions it has wrought out, and not wander into a field of speculation, from which we are fenced out by the plain intent and inevitable force and effect of the statute, in the ultimate achievement of the end for the accomplishment of which the statutory remedy is given, namely, seizure of the debt at the residence of the debtor, prevention of its withdrawal by either party from the territorial jurisdiction of the court, extinguishment of the creditor's interest in it by adjudication, and application of it to the payment of the plaintiff's debt.

To the anticipated suggestion that this line of argument assumes the determination of the very point in controversy, the reply is that one of the declared and primary objects of the remedy is to reach and subject the property and effects of nonresident debtors. Nonresidence is the basic fact of the jurisdiction and the remedy. Are we to assume that it was not the intention to subject debts due the defendant, but only tangible property? Is it possible that the lawmakers of all the states have stood by in silence and watched the courts for centuries misapply the remedy, to the detriment and injury of thousands of people, without inserting a simple exception in the statute? As already indicated, the attachment system of law had its origin in the custom of London. By that law it determined and announced that, for its purposes, the debt was annexed to the person of the debtor, and not to that of the creditor. "By this custom a debt contracted without the jurisdiction of the city may be attached, if the debtor is found within the jurisdiction, for every debt follows the person of the debtor." 3 Bac. Abr. 54. "Neither is it necessary to aver that the plaintiff in the principal case was indebted to the plaintiff below within the jurisdiction of the mayor's court, for it is not necessary that the debt should arise, or the defendant reside, within it, or that he should be actually summoned." Id. 56. The position here adopted was taken by the Supreme Court of the United States in Railway Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144. Mr. Justice McKenna, delivering the opinion, said: "Our attachment laws had their origin in the custom of London. Drake, § 1. Under it a debt was regarded as being where the debtor was, and questions of jurisdiction were settled on that regard. In Andrews v. Clerke, 1 Carth, 25, Lord Chief Justice Holt summarily decided such a question, and stated the practice under the custom of London. The report of the case is brief, and is as follows: 'Andrews levied a plaint in the sheriff's court in London, and, upon the usual suggestion that one T. S. [the garnishee] was debtor to the defendant, a foreign attachment was awarded to attach that debt in the hands of T. S., which was accordingly done; and then a diletur was entered, which is in nature of an imparlance in that court. Afterwards T. S. [the garnishee] pleaded to the jurisdiction, setting forth that the cause of debt due from him to the defendant, Sir Robert Clarke, and the contract on which it was founded, did arise and was made at H., in the county of Middlesex, extra jurisdictionem curiæ; and, this plea being overruled, it was now moved [in behalf of T. S., the garnishee] for a prohibition to the sheriff's court aforesaid, suggesting the said matter [viz.], that the cause of action did arise extra jurisdictionem, etc., but the prohibition was denied, because the debt always follows the person of the debtor, and it is not material where it was contracted, especially as to this purpose of foreign attachments; for it was always the custom in London to attach debts upon bills of exchange and goldsmith's notes, etc., if the goldsmith who gave the note or the person to whom the bill is directed liveth within the city, without any respect had to the place where the debt was contracted.' The idea of locality of things, which may be said to be intangible, is somewhat confusing, but, if it be kept up, the right of the creditor and the obligation of the debtor cannot have the same, unless debtor and creditor live in the same place. But we do not think it is necessary to resort to the idea at all or give it important distinction. The essential service of foreign attachment laws is to reach and arrest the payment of what is due and might be paid to a nonresident to the defeat of his creditors. To do it he must go to the domicile of his debtor, and can only do it under the laws and procedure in force there. This is a legal necessity, and considerations of situs are somewhat artificial. If not artificial, whatever of substance there is must be with the debtor. He and he only has something in his hands. That something is the res, and gives character to the action as one in the nature of a proceeding in rem. Mooney v. Buford & George Mfg. Co., 72 Fed. 82, 18 C. C. A. 421; Conflict of Laws, § 549, and notes."

Does the additional circumstance, that the debt is payable in the foreign state, vary the law in this respect? The affirmative of this proposition is predicated upon the supposition that a debt made payable to a person in the state in which he resides is thereby specially annexed to him, and withdrawn from the jurisdiction in which the debtor resides, if they are in different states. It is not pretended that it can have a situs irrespective of both debtor and creditor. If it can be said to have a situs at all, it must be with one or the other of them. It has no tangible existence. Hence the only conceivable effect that could result from making the debt payable at the residence of the creditor in this connection would be the more effectual binding of it to his person. Can it be said that the circumstance of the place at which a debt is made payable makes it more effectually or sacredly the property of the creditor? Suppose it did; is it not the very object and purpose of the attachment to extinguish his right and property in the debt so far as may be necessary to effectuate satisfaction of the plaintiff's debt? Does it depend upon whether the debt is bound to him tightly or not? If it were attached to his person at all, would it not defeat the jurisdiction? If this consideration could have any force, it would be necessary to give it some effect when the debt is payable at a place in which neither party resides. What possible effect could it have. Would it put the debt beyond reach through either debtor or creditor? This would be a bald absurdity, in which everything of substance would be sacrificed to a bare technicality. Place of payment has nothing to do with the place of enforcement. No action can be maintained for the debt by anybody until after default. Action does not produce payment at the place named. It exacts damages for the breach, payable in the jurisdiction of the forum. There can be no action until after breach of the contract, and then it may be maintained wherever the defendant can be sued. That the garnishment prevents compliance with all the terms of the contract is no valid objection, because its primary office is to break asunder the contractual relations between the debtor and creditor to the extent of substituting the plaintiff to the beneficial interest of the creditor in the debt.

Having no doubt about the untenableness of the position, that the proceeding must be at the place of residence of the defendant, the next inquiry is whether the garnishee is within the jurisdiction of the court. In the case of Pennsylvania, etc., Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450, 44 S. E. 300, 62 L. R. A. 178, this court held that a foreign railroad corporation, operating no line of road, nor carrying on its ordinary business, within the state, is not subject to garnishment in respect to a debt due from it to a nonresident, not agreed to be paid to him within the state. If, notwithstanding the different situation of the plaintiff, which built and operates its road within the state, under legislative authority specially conferred, its legal status is the same as that of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the conclusion will be the same. The difference in that respect, if any, is the only ground upon which the two cases can be distinguished, except as to service of process. This case differs from Mahany v. Kephart, 15 W. Va. 609, and Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450, in only one important particular, namely, that in each of those cases the defendant, creditor of the railroad company, appeared, but did not appear in this. As asserted in Pennsylvania, etc., Co. v. Rogers, by way of marking the distinction between it and Mahany v. Kephart, this court, in the latter, most assuredly decided the status of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company to be such as made it liable to the process of garnishment, at the instance of a resident assignee, of a debt contracted by the defendant in another state on account of wages due the defendant from the assignee for services rendered in such other state. In delivering the opinion of the court Haymond, J., said: "I am unable to see, if the said railroad company can be sued for debts contracted in this state, why it may not also be sued in this state for debts contracted in other states. It would be strange, indeed, if residents of this state could sue and enforce the payment of their debts contracted in this state against said railroad company and its property in this state, through the courts thereof, and nonresident creditors and resident creditors of said railroad company, where contracts are made in another state, should be denied the same rights and privileges, and thus be left without remedy in our courts. I do not feel at liberty to so hold under my convictions of the law with us touching the question. Certainly, if Kephart could have properly sued the railroad company for said $105 in the county of Harrison at the time this action was brought, the plaintiff in this suit had a right to sue Kephart there and garnishee the railroad company there as the debtor of Kephart." Following this is the assignment of the reasons for his conclusion. In this part of his opinion he makes no reference to the appearance of the defendant as having aided the jurisdiction of the court. It is alluded to only upon the inquiry as to the power of the court to render a personal judgment against him. However, it may have been in law a waiver of defects which would otherwise have been held fatal, in consequence of which it could now be relied upon as showing the decision to be sound in principle. Whether it would have made any difference in the opinion and conclusion of the court, no person can possibly know, since it cannot be ascertained from the report of the decision.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company is undoubtedly a foreign corporation, as tested by the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Baltimore, etc., Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 65, 20 L. Ed. 354; Marshall v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 16 How. 329, 14 L. Ed. 953; O. & M. R. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black, 297, 17 L. Ed. 130; Railway Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 20 L. Ed. 571. This court, in Rece v. N. N. M. & V. Co., 32 W. Va. 164, 9 S. E. 212, 3 L. R. A. 572, came to the same conclusion, under the federal authorities above cited and others. But the test of jurisdiction in the federal courts is not residence, but citizenship, under section 2 of article 3 of the federal Constitution, extending the judicial power to all cases "between citizens of different states." The distinction between citizenship and residence, as applied to corporations, is observed by the courts. "It should be observed that the corporation, although it may have a quasi habitat or residence in another state than that which created it, yet cannot be a citizen elsewhere, and therefore cannot claim the benefit of that clause of the United States Constitution (article 4, § 2) which declares that 'the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states.'" Upon applications for removal of causes from state to federal courts, as in Rece v. N. N. M. & V. Co., cited, and perhaps a few other instances, the state courts are called upon to notice and observe this distinction, but in the ordinary actions by and against corporations, jurisdiction is tested by the fact of residence, except when it is acquired under special statutes. Though a corporation is incapable of having a residence in the sense in which that term is applied to an individual, just as it is not in fact a citizen, it may be, and is often, deemed to have a residence or the equivalent thereof in a state other than that of which it is a citizen.

There is no conflict between this view and the conclusion expressed in Pennsylvania, etc., Co. v. Rogers. The garnishee in that case was only temporarily or casually in the state. It had an agent here for a special purpose. Its situation was analogous to that of a nonresident individual temporarily or casually in the state, having no usual place of abode at which service could be made in his physical absence therefrom. Here the case is radically different. The corporation actually operates its road through the state, having agents along its line permanently, upon whom service may be had at any time, owning property of immense value and carrying on a business of vast proportions, in view of which the statute contains special provisions applicable to such foreign corporations and to no other, as will be shown. By the great weight of judicial authority this gives it the equivalent of residence in the state, and as a resident it may be proceeded against as garnishee, just as a resident individual may. "Accordingly the doctrine of the court now is that several states may, by competent legislation, unite in creating the same corporation or in combining several pre-existing corporations into a single one; that one state may make a corporation of another state, as thus organized and conducted, a corporation of its own, as to any property within its territorial jurisdiction; and that a state may, by an enabling act, authorize a corporation created in another state to build and use a railroad within its own limits, without creating a new corporation. Illustrations of these conclusions are now seen every day in the passage by states of enactments making foreign corporations doing business within the domestic jurisdictions domestic corporations, and amenable in all respects to the domestic laws and police regulations, notwithstanding the provisions of their foreign charters. But it remains equally true that, for many purposes of legal procedure and practical convenience in the administration of justice, each one of the bodies so created remains a domestic corporation within the state under whose Legislature it has been called into existence. Clearly such a corporation is a domestic corporation within each of the states whose legislation has created it, for the purpose of local jurisdiction to the application of local police regulations. Such a corporation is a resident of each of such states for the purpose of the ordinary jurisdiction of its courts, and consequently may be subjected to garnishment in any one of them, provided the situs of the debt is there, although its principal office or place of business be not there." 10 Cyc. 170, 171. In Fire Ins. Co. v. Chambers, 53 N. J. Eq. 468, 32 Atl. 663, the court holds that "a corporation is capable of having several domiciles, and of being sued at the same time in more than one jurisdiction." The opinion in that case reviews many decisions, English and American, holding this doctrine. Though not accrediting the foreign corporations with a domicile in the state, the following cases hold it liable as garnishee: Mooney v. Buford, 72 Fed. 32, 18 C. C. A. 421; Pomeroy v. Rand, McNally & Co., 157 Ill. 176, 41 N. E. 636; Mooney v. Railroad Co., 60 Iowa, 346, 14 N. W. 343; Bank v. Insurance Co., 83 Iowa, 491, 50 N. W. 53, 32 Am. St. Rep. 316; Railroad Co. v. Thompson, 31 Kan. 180, 1 Pac. 622, 47 Am. Rep. 497; Harvy v. Railroad Co., 50 Minn. 405, 52 N. W. 905, 17 L. R. A. 84; Hardware Co. v. Lang, 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010. In some of them it is done on the theory of a quasi residence in the state by the corporation, thereby holding the situs of the debt to be in the state. In others the courts proceed upon the assumption that a debt has no situs, and that the debtor may be proceeded against wherever service upon him may be had, without regard to his residence. This doctrine is contrary to the principles underlying the decisions in Pennsylvania Co. v. Rogers, cited, which are believed to be sound, and supported by the great weight of judicial authority. A nonresident may be summoned as garnishee, but upon his showing that he has nothing in the state belonging to the defendant, and is not bound to deliver or pay him anything in the state, he must be discharged.

There are decisions, however, which hold foreign corporations, having the right to do business and consenting to be sued in the state, not liable as garnishees, unless they have property of the defendant in their possession within the state, or are bound to deliver property or pay him money in the state. Railroad Co. v. Dooley, 78 Ala. 524; Railroad Co. v. Chumley, 92 Ala. 317, 9 South. 236. In the last-named case the court held a judgment rendered in Tennessee against an Alabama railroad company, operating its road through the former state, as garnishee, for wages earned in the latter state, void on the ground that the Tennessee court had not acquired jurisdiction, saying: "Plaintiff being a resident of Alabama, and defendant an Alabama corporation, the debt, being contracted and payable in this state, could not be subjected by process of garnishment by a court of Tennessee." Similarly, in Douglass v. P. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 209, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 113, 34 Am. St. Rep. 443, it was held that "the right of a creditor of a corporation to prosecute an action to recover the debt in the courts of his own state cannot be defeated by the pendency of attachment proceedings against him in another state by a creditor there, when the only claim of jurisdiction by the foreign court rests upon authority given by the statutes of its state to seize the debt by and through process proceedings against an agent of the corporation in that state. (2) While a state may authorize the seizure and sale, by means of appropriate legal proceedings, of property of nonresidents in the jurisdiction for the payment of their debts, it cannot subject to its laws either their real or personal property out of the jurisdiction. (3) In attachment proceedings the res must be within the jurisdiction of the court issuing the process, in order to confer jurisdiction. (4) A domestic corporation has at all times its exclusive residence and domicile in the jurisdiction of origin, and it cannot be garnished in another jurisdiction for debts owing by it to home creditors, so as to make the attachment effectual against such a creditor in the absence of jurisdiction acquired over his person. (5) The law of a state cannot make a debtor, who is actually a nonresident, a resident by so declaring, at least so as to bind another jurisdiction by the declaration. (6) The legal proceedings or judgments of another state are recognized here only where jurisdiction has been acquired according to the course of the common law in the foreign forum; and this, although the statutes of that state purport to give its courts jurisdiction, in disregard of the principles and rules of general jurisprudence, which this state is bound to recognize." Bank v. Furtick (Del.) 42 Atl. 479, 44 L. R. A. 115, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99, holds that a foreign corporation cannot be summoned as garnishee in one state to reach a debt payable by it in another state. This proceeds upon the theory of situs at the residence of the creditor. Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. Bleecker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492, embodies the same conclusion, based upon a different ground, namely, nonresidence of the garnishee corporation, the same as that upon which we put the decision in Railroad Co. v. Rogers. The syllabus says: "Our statute requires a foreign insurance company, before doing business in this state, to file a stipulation agreeing that any legal process affecting such company, served on the insurance commissioner, shall have the same effect as if personally served on the company. Held, such a stipulation, filed by the garnishee, does not give it a domicile in this state for all purposes, or bring into this state the situs of a debt which it owes elsewhere by reason of business transacted elsewhere, and such a debt cannot be seized in an action in rem in this state."

Aside from the Alabama decisions, none of these were railroad cases. In Railroad Co. v. Chumley, the Alabama court says: "Several statutes of Tennessee, regulating proceedings of garnishment and service of process upon corporations, were introduced in evidence, but we fail to find among them any statute providing for service of process upon foreign corporations in garnishment suits. It may be that the language is comprehensive enough to include proceedings by garnishment when the property sought to be reached is in the jurisdiction of the state, though the garnishee may be a nonresident; but, in the absence of evidence of any construction by the courts of Tennessee, we cannot interpret the statutes as intending to place within the jurisdiction of the state property which has no locality there." Upon examination of the Tennessee statutes it discovered no purpose or intent to make the foreign corporation in any sense a resident of Tennessee, and therefore the situs of the debt could not be, upon either theory of that subject, within the state of Tennessee. As to the other cases, we might reach the same conclusion under our statutes, and be in perfect accord with Railroad Co. v. Rogers, for the statute confers upon foreign railroad corporations rights and powers materially different from those conferred upon other foreign corporations. As to the latter, section 30 of chapter 54 of the Code of 1899 says that, upon complying with certain requirements, they "shall have the same rights, powers and privileges, and be subject to the same regulations, restrictions and liabilities that are conferred and imposed" on corporations chartered under the laws of this state. In construing this language we must not lose sight of other provisions concerning and affecting the status of foreign corporations. A ground of attachment in this state is "that the defendant, or one of the defendants, is a foreign corporation, or a nonresident of this state." Code 1899, c. 106, § 1. This evinces an intent to deny to them residence within the state. The statute has been so construed, not only here, but in Virginia also. They are subject to the attachment laws. Quesenberry v. Building Association, 44 W. Va. 512, 30 S. E. 73; Savage v. Building Association, 45 W. Va. 275, 31 S. E. 991; Cowardin v. Life Ins. Co., 32 Grat. 445. These decisions are probably sound in principle. The provision of means of obtaining jurisdiction of the person may well be held to have been intended to give a cumulative remedy, and not to take away any of those already in existence.

But the language of that section applicable to railroads is much broader, indubitably subjecting them to the liabilities and according them all the rights of residents, except in so far as it has been qualified by the decision in Rece v. N. N. M. & V. Co., 32 W. Va. 164, 9 S. E. 212, 8 L. R. A. 572, namely, that it does not deprive them of their rights in respect to federal jurisdiction. The language is: "Every railroad corporation doing business in this state under the provisions of this section, or under charters granted or laws passed by the state of Virginia or this state, is hereby declared to be, as to its works, property, operations, transactions, and business in this state, a domestic corporation, and shall be so held and treated in all suits and legal proceedings which may be commenced or carried on by or against any such railroad corporation, as well as in all other matters relating to such corporation." In view of this, can it be treated as a nonresident, and its property made liable to attachment in every county through which it passes for every sort of attachable claim that might arise? No such unreasonable assumption seems ever to have entered the mind of any person. Legislative intent to the contrary is made too plainly manifest. That would violate rights plainly conferred by the express language of the statute. It would not be treated as to its property, business, operations, and transactions within the state as domestic corporations are. While conferring upon it all the privileges and immunities incident to residence, the Legislature endeavored to impose the liabilities incident thereto. Accordingly the statute says they shall be held to be, and treated as, domestic corporations in all suits and legal proceedings which may be commenced or carried on by or against them. Garnishment is a legal proceeding, though possibly not a suit directly against the garnishee, as to which we need not determine. Nor are such suits and proceedings limited by the place of origin of the cause of action. In Humphreys v. N. N. M. & V. Co., 33 W. Va. 135, 10 S. E. 39, the cause of action was damages for a personal injury, which occurred in another state. This court held that the action was maintainable because service of process could be had in this state, but it did not note any distinction between citizenship and residence. It was unnecessary to do so, since service of process alone gave the requisite jurisdiction. To hold a railroad to be a nonresident for one purpose and a resident for another would be, not only inconsistent with, but violative of, the manifest purpose and intent of the Legislature, disclosed by the statute above quoted.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and other corporations of its class, at the time of the decision of the case of Mahany v. Kephart were distinguished in their status from other foreign corporations by a statute passed December 27, 1873. Acts 1872-73, p. 724, c. 227, § 16. It declared that "All railroad companies doing business in this state under charters granted or laws passed by the state of Virginia or this state, are hereby declared to be domestic companies or corporations, and shall be treated as such in all cases." The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company was necessarily included among those doing business under laws passed by the state of Virginia. This provision, modified and combined with others enacted from time to time, finds a place now in section 30 of chapter 54 of the Code of 1899. In view of it and of the reasoning of Judge Haymond in that case, we cannot say the decision is wrong or would have been wrong, had there been no appearance on the part of the defendant. Nor can we say now, in view of the existing statutory provisions adverted to, that the status of a railroad company doing business in this state, within the meaning of those statutes, is not equivalent to that of a resident of the state. On the contrary, we think it is, and for that reason it may be proceeded against as a garnishee to the same extent, and in respect to the same classes of debts, as natural persons residing in this state. Just here it is proper to say the use of the word "domicile" in the case of Railroad Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450, 44 S. E. 300, 62 L. R. A. 178, is inaccurate, as it is in some other cases, discussed in the opinion in that case and in this, and is to be taken and applied in the sense of "residence." Nor can the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, upon the facts disclosed by the record in its case against Rogers, be consistently held to have the status of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, since it operates no line of road here, and has not put itself within the letter or spirit of the statute by merely having a soliciting agent in the state.

That this ruling may deprive the employees in other states of foreign railroad companies, doing business in this state, of the benefit of exemptions allowed them in such other states, cannot be permitted to alter the principles of law governing the case. Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450, presented that feature to this court without avail. It went up to the Supreme Court of the United States in Railroad

Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144, with the same result. The doctrine of Stevens v. Brown is too well settled by authority of the highest character to permit any disturbance of it. Should the garnishee be compelled to make a double payment on account of the services rendered it, the fault will be, as we think, with the court of some other state, which can only compel the second payment by refusing to give the judgments of the courts of this state the full faith and credit to which they are entitled under the federal Constitution. For that there is a plain remedy.

For the reasons aforesaid, the judgment will be affirmed.

On Rehearing.

The correctness of the conclusion, above stated, as to the status of a foreign railroad corporation doing business in this state, is vigorously resisted on the rehearing. As that is the pivotal question in the case, the argument demands attention. First, it is said the case of Mahany v. Kephart, 15 W. Va. 609, does not treat the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company as a domestic corporation, and that this view is precluded by certain expressions in the opinion, one of which is the reference to the E. & O. R. R. Co. v. Gallahue's Adm'rs, 12 Grat. 655, 65 Am. Dec. 254, saying: "However, it was not necessary to decide in that case whether the said railroad company could be sued or garnished upon contracts made in another state." That was because the contract sued on was a Virginia contract. But in Mahany v. Kephart the contract on which the main action was predicated was made in Baltimore, Md., and had come into the hands of a citizen of this state by assignment, and the labor, for the value of which the railroad company was garnished, was performed in Maryland. No matter, therefore, what the Virginia court had decided, this court did decide that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company could be sued here for a debt arising out of a contract made in another state, and could be held as garnishee as to wages due for labor performed in another state; and Judge Haymond said of the Gallahue Case: "But I think, on close examination of the opinion of the court, it was not intended to restrict the right to sue or garnishee the said railroad company to Virginia contracts." The other expression relied upon has no reference whatever to the question now under consideration, as will appear from the connection in which it was used. Judge Haymond did say: "But I do not now definitely pass upon that question, as it does not fairly arise in the case." The question referred to is whether, if the debt garnished had been expressly made payable in Maryland, this circumstance would have called for a different decision. The sentence immediately preceding the one last above quoted reads as follows: "Neither the facts agreed nor the answer of the gar-nishee shows or pretends that there was any express agreement that the said $105 due Kephart should be paid in the state of Maryland; and, if they did so show, I am not now prepared to decide that it would or should affect the case, or change my conclusion therein." What we decide here now is just what Judge Haymond then intimated as his opinion, namely, that such stipulation does not affect the case, and we say so because the garnishee is to be dealt with as a resident individual would be. The effect of such stipulation, when the garnishee is a resident, has been determined in the discussion of the question of situs, which need not be here repeated. In Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450, 44 S. E. 300, 62 L. R. A. 178, we said it did make a difference, because the garnishee was a nonresident. The contention here is that a railroad company doing business in this state is to be treated as a domestic corporation quoad only "its works, property, operations, transactions, and business in this state," and therefore cannot be sued on a contract or obligation arising out of, or pertaining to, its business in another state; and the contrary of this, we repeat, has been expressly decided in Mahany v. Kephart, as well as in other cases referred to in the opinion. Whether a resident may be discharged from garnishment by showing the debt to be payable in another state is an entirely different question now, and was such in Mahany v. Kephart.

A further contention is that by alteration of the statute governing foreign railroad corporations doing business in the state, since the decision in Mahany v. Kephart, the status of such corporations has been changed. The act of December 27, 1873, quoted in the opinion, was too broad. Its purpose went beyond the limits of legislative power, as was soon revealed by decisions of the federal Supreme Court. The Legislature could not deprive the federal courts of their jurisdiction by declaring a foreign corporation to be a domestic one. It probably occurred to our legislators that in some other respects such corporations could not be domesticated. We could not annul or alter the charter of a corporation of another state, or dissolve it. All we can do is to exclude it from the state or limit its powers and privileges here, and impose burdens and liabilities. We cannot have or exercise any extraterritorial power over them. Realizing this, and seeing the excessive and futile breadth of our statute, the Legislature modified it. For what purpose and to what extent? Simply for the purpose of reducing it within the limits of its legitimate powers over the subject-matter, and to no greater extent. The evil intended to be overcome by the change is perfectly apparent. That is the best measure or standard by which to determine the extent of the change intended, and it falls far short of the subject-matter of this discussion and contention. Surely it was never intended to deprive citizens of this state of the right to sue such corporations for debts due them, or for debts which they have the right to acquire by a legal proceeding, such as garnishment. Nothing in the language of the statute suggests this, and it is not within the reason for the alteration made. Such a debt or right, held by a citizen of this state, no matter where it arose, is a matter relating to such corporation, and the statute says it shall be held to be, and treated as, a domestic corporation in all suits and legal proceedings which may be commenced or carried on by or against it, "as well as in all other matters relating to such corporation."

Having carefully re-examined the case and considered the argument on the rehearing, we are convinced that the conclusions set forth in the opinion filed on the former hearing are correct, and the judgment then rendered will be now re-entered.

(53 W. Va. 281)

RAINEY v. FREEPORT SMOKELESS COAL & COKING CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 28, 1906.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—ACCOUNT AND AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

A substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute is all that is required in the account and affidavit filed for record, for the purpose of asserting a lien under section 7 of chapter 75 of the Code of 1899.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Mechanics' Liens, § 208.]

2. APPEAL—FINAL DECREE—REFERENCE.

A decree of reference founded upon the following expressed opinion: "The court is of opinion that the plaintiff and the defendant George Shanabarger have mechanics' liens against the real estate owned by the defendant corporation, the Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Company, as alleged in the plaintiff's bill"—but not otherwise adjudicating the principles of the cause, is not final or appealable.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS—ENFORCEMENT—APPEAL—REVERSAL.

Where, upon an appeal from a decree for the sale of real and personal property to satisfy liens, under section 7 of chapter 75 of the Code of 1899, the decree is reversed as to a lien which is in amount the larger part of all the liens decreed, and such lien held invalid, and the value of the property decreed to be sold does not appear, it is proper to reverse that part of the decree directing the sale, and to remand the cause with directions to ascertain the amount of property necessary to satisfy the lien or liens not held invalid, and, in default of payment, to order a sale of such amount necessary.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County. Bill by W. W. Rainey against the Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Company. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

Ice & Ice and Fred O. Blue, for appellant. J. Hop Woods, for appellee.

COX, J. W. W. Rainey filed his bill in equity in the circuit court of Barbour count-against the Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Company, a corporation, to enforce a lien, under section 7 of chapter 75 of the Code of 1899, against the property of said corporation. The account filed charges the said corporation with salary as its general manager for 15 months, from August 1, 1900, to November 1, 1901, at $75 per month, aggregating $1,125. Certain credits are allowed, bringing the aggregate down to $955.50. Of this latter sum only $675 is claimed to be a lien for services rendered within nine months preceding the recordation of the account. The bill also sets up a laborer's lien on the same property, in favor of George Shanabarger, for a balance of $160.72, and makes him a defendant thereto. The cause was referred to a commissioner to ascertain liens, set-offs, etc. Upon the hearing of the cause upon the commissioner's report, a decree was entered declaring liens in favor of plaintiff and defendant Shanabarger as alleged in the bill, and giving a recovery therefor and for the balance of the plaintiff's claim which was not a lien, and directing sale of the real and personal property of said corporation to satisfy the liens and debt. From this decree the said corporation appealed.

The appellant complains of the decree and of the report of the commissioner, and of the overruling of its exceptions thereto, for a number of reasons, among which is that the commissioner erred in finding, and that the court erred in decreeing, that appellant was indebted to either the plaintiff or Shanabarger. In other words, appellant contends that there was nothing due either of them for which a lien might be asserted. We have examined the evidence, and, while a decree based upon a commissioner's report should not be set aside unless plainly wrong, yet a consideration of the evidence and facts appearing compels us to say that this decree is plainly wrong so far as the plaintiff's claim is concerned. Before there can be a lien there must be a debt, a liability, something due or to become due, for which the lien may be asserted. It appears from the record that the appellant corporation was organized on the 16th day of August, 1900, by the plaintiff, living in Barbour county, and certain other persons living in Baltimore, Md. At the meeting for organization, plaintiff was elected a director and general manager. The other officers elected were Frank H. Sloan, president; J. P. Wade, vice president; George B. Wade, treasurer; George B. Clifton, secretary. All the officers except plaintiff resided in Baltimore, and all so elected were stockholders of the company. The appellant corporation began the development of certain coal lands conveyed to it, and continued to a limited extent the mining and shipping of coal until some time in May, 1901, when mining practically ceased; but little, if any, coal being shipped after that time until the following year. The mining and shipping of coal at no time was extensive; only about 100 cars being mined and shipped from the time of the organization of the corporation until May, 1901. Some of the witnesses for appellant, the majority of whom are the officers thereof, testified that the purpose of the corporation was to develop the property for sale and not to mine extensively, and that the shipping mentioned was principally to prospective purchasers of the property.

Plaintiff claimed an express contract for wages as general manager, at the rate of $75 per month. In one part of his testimony he says that the express contract was made with W. A. Wade as agent of the appellant; but Wade in his testimony denies this, and it is shown conclusively that Wade had no authority to make such contract. In another part of plaintiff's testimony, he says the express contract was made with W. A. Wade, George B. Wade, and Frank H. Sloan; but this is also denied, together with the authority of those persons to make such contract. In another part of his testimony, plaintiff says that the express contract was made with Frank H. Sloan, and this is likewise denied. No express contract is shown by the evidence. Plaintiff contends, however, that an implied contract is shown by proof of the performance of the services and the value thereof. This contention is fully refuted by the evidence. Three witnesses, W. A. Wade, attorney for the corporation, George B. Wade, its treasurer, and Frank H. Sloan, its president, testified positively and certainly that it was agreed on the day the corporation was organized, at a meeting of the board of directors at which plaintiff was present and when the general manager and other officers were elected, that they were to receive no compensation whatever for their services, and, especially, that it was understood and agreed with the plaintiff that he was to have no compensation as general manager of the corporation, and that a resolution was adopted by the board of directors in accordance with such agreement and understanding. See C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Deepwater Ry. Co. et al. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 890. Against this testimony, plaintiff testified that there was no such agreement or understanding as to him; and he also produced four monthly pay rolls made out and sent by him to the appellant, upon one of which the following appears: "I would like to have $50 on salary to pay board and room rent." Upon another appears the following item: "W. W. Rainey on time $100." Upon another appears: "I am almost compelled to have $50 this pay to meet some expenses. Do the best you can." Upon another the following item appears: "W. W. Rainey $75." With the return of one of these pay rolls to plaintiff, a letter was received by him, with a postscript signed by G. B. Clifton, in which he says: "We could only allow you $25 this month on account of scarcity of cash." Plaintiff testified that of these demands upon the pay rolls he received the $25 and $50 mentioned above. W. A. Wade testified that the payments of these sums were made pursuant to an arrangement between plaintiff and him to have Wade, Sloan & Co., a different company from the defendant corporation, advance to plaintiff small sums to meet his board, which he was to repay to Wade, Sloan & Co. when the property of appellant was sold. It is shown that these sums were advanced by checks of Wade, Sloan & Co. The plaintiff allowed certain credits on his account filed for the lien, amounting to $169.50, which he did not claim were payments knowingly made by appellant on his salary, but credits or set-offs evidenced by checks given on appellant's funds under his control, in payment of his individual liabilities. It was not shown that the $25 above mentioned was included in said credits. The $50 above mentioned was certainly not included, and no item of credit for that amount appears. The account of the plaintiff filed and recorded was sworn to, and the bill in this cause was sworn to, both of which say in effect that the defendant corporation is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $955.50 after allowing all credits. Now, if the $50 and $25 had been actually received by plaintiff from appellant as payments on his salary as general manager, the plaintiff should have known this when he filed his account and affidavit and when he filed his bill in this cause. The fact that plaintiff did not allow the $50 and $25 as payments or credits on his claim very strongly corroborates the theory that these items were not received by plaintiff from appellant on salary, but on some other account or for some other purpose. Plaintiff also testified to many demands for payment of salary, but this is denied by the testimony for appellant. Other facts and circumstances appear which in our judgment tend to corroborate the contention of the defendant that there was no indebtedness or liability to the plaintiff, but we deem it unnecessary to detail them. It seems plain to us that there was no implied contract, and no indebtedness or liability to the plaintiff from the appellant, by reason of the matters alleged in the bill, and therefore no lien to plaintiff.

What we have said does not dispose of the claim of defendant Shanabarger to a lien for work and labor. His account filed runs from June to November, 1901, including a small item in November. While it is true that plaintiff, being a stockholder and director of appellant, acted as its general manager without compensation, yet it is shown by all the testimony that he had power and authority to employ labor for the corporation. He testified that he employed Shanabarger for the corporation as pit boss and for other labor, at the prices charged in his account, and made the payments for the corporation therein credited. Shanabarger testified to the same effect. Some testimony was offered tending to show that Shanabarger had notice that the mines were ordered to be shut down in May, 1901, but this evidence does not show that he had notice that they were to be shut down permanently; and, if he had such notice, he did not have any notice that the authority of the general manager to employ labor had been revoked, and he had a right to rely upon his contract of employment in that regard. We think the account of defendant Shanabarger was proved.

Appellant objects to Shanabarger's claim for a lien because his account is not sufficiently specific. The account shows that it is in favor of Shanabarger and against appellant. It is composed of various items, specific in amount, and, when taken with the affidavit, we think that it reasonably appears that the necessary requirements of the statute have been complied with. Substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute is all that is required in the account and affidavit, and the account and affidavit are to be considered together. We think no one could be misled as to the nature, purpose, or amount of the account, although it could have been much more formal and full in its recitals. It would seem to us that it is sufficient to give notice, which is one of the principal purposes of requiring the account and affidavit to be recorded. U. S. Blow Pipe Co. v. Spencer, 40 W. Va. 698, 21 S. E. 769; Phll. Mech. Liens, § 350; Wilvert v. Sunbury, *81 Pa. 57, 27 Leg. Int. 357.

Appellant complains of the overruling of its exceptions to the commissioner's report. The first and second exceptions of appellant thereto are to the effect that the commissioner failed to report whether or not there were any credits or set-offs against said alleged liens, and failed to report whether or not there were any liens other than those to plaintiff and Shanabarger, as directed by the decree of reference. The commissioner reported the liens of plaintiff and Shanabarger, but reported no other liens and reported no credits or set-offs other than those stated in their respective accounts. Therefore we must presume that the commissioner found neither other liens nor other set-offs, or he would have reported them. The third and fourth exceptions of appellant to the commissioner's report are disposed of by what we have already said. The third exception should have been sustained as to plaintiff's alleged lien, and overruled as to Shanabarger's lien. The fourth exception should have been sustained.

The decree of reference to a commissioner contains the following expressed opinion of the court: "The court is of opinion that the plaintiff and defendant Shanabarger have mechanics' liens against the real estate owned by the defendant corporation, the Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Company, as alleged in the plaintiff's bill." The decree of reference to a commissioner is founded upon this expressed opinion, but the decree does not otherwise adjudicate the principles of the cause. It is claimed by plaintiff that the part of the decree quoted was a final adjudication of the rights of the plaintiff and Shanabarger, and that it should have been followed by a decree of sale, and not by a decree of reference. This part of the decree was not a final adjudication of the rights of plaintiff and Shanabarger, but a mere recital, after a prima facie case had made proper a decree of reference. This part of the decree was merely interlocutory, and not appealable. Cases in point are Hill v. Cronin, 56 W. Va. 174, 49 S. E. 132; Armstrong v. Ross, 56 W. Va. 16, 48 S. E. 745. The decree complained of directed the sale of the personal and real property of the appellant mentioned in the bill, without ascertaining its value or the kind or items of personal property. The statute provides that, after a lien is established in favor of any of the creditors whose claims are presented, the court shall order a sale of the property on which the lien is established, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy such claims, in like manner as other suits in chancery. In this case it is necessary to reverse the decree so far as the plaintiff's claim is concerned, which is by far greater in amount than the lien of Shanabarger, thus leaving the amount for which appellant's property is liable comparatively small. It would seem inequitable to permit the decree for sale of all the property to stand when it does not appear that a sale of all is necessary to satisfy the Shanabarger lien, especially when there has been no ascertainment of the kind and amount of the personal property or of the value of either the real or personal property. The personal property alone may be more than sufficient; we cannot say.

For the reasons stated, so much of the decree of the circuit court entered in this cause on the 31st day of May, 1904, as declared that plaintiff's claim alleged in his bill, or any part thereof, is a lien against the property of the appellant, or any part thereof, and as gave a recovery in favor of the plaintiff against appellant for the amount of the claim alleged in the bill or any part thereof and for costs, and as directed a sale of the property, real and personal, of the appellant, is reversed; and so much of the report of the commissioner as finds a lien or an indebtedness in favor of the plaintiff against appellant, is set aside; and this cause is remanded with directions to ascertain the amount of property of appellant mentioned in plaintiff's bill necessary to satisfy the lien of defendant Shanabarger and the costs to which he may be entitled, and, in case of default in payment thereof, to order a sale of the amount necessary, and to be further proceeded with according to the principles herein announced and the rules governing courts of equity.

(58 W. Va. 414)

STATE, to Use of ZELL GUANO CO., v. CHRISLIP et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 28, 1905.)

INJUNCTION—ACTION ON BOND—DECLARATION.

In an action on an injunction bond, where the sale of personal property levied on under execution alone was enjoined, the condition of the bond being that plaintiffs "shall pay all such costs as may be awarded against them and also such damages as shall be incurred and sustained by the persons enjoined in case the injunction be dissolved," a declaration alleging liability to pay the judgments upon which the executions issued, there being no condition to pay the judgments, is bad on demurrer.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Action by the state, for the use of the Zell Guano Company, against E. G. Chrislip and J. N. B. Crim. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

M. Peck and W. T. Ice, Jr., for plaintiffs in error. S. V. Woods, for defendant in error.

McWHORTER, J. This is an action of debt brought by the Zell Guano Company, a corporation, in the circuit court of Barbour county at February rules, 1892, against E. G. Chrislip and J. N. B. Crim, defendants, on an injunction bond executed on the 25th day of February, 1889, by E. G. Chrislip, Fannie J. Chrislip, and J. N. B. Crim, the said Fannie J. Chrislip being a married woman. The bond in question is as follows:

"Know all men by these presents, that we, Ervin G. Chrislip and Fannie J. Chrislip, principals, and Joseph N. B. Crim, security, are held and firmly bound to the state of West Virginia, in the sum of five hundred dollars, to the payment of which to the said state we bind ourselves, jointly and severally, and each of us binds his heirs, executors, and administrators. Witness our hands and seals this 25th day of February, 1889.

"The condition of the above obligation is such, that whereas, the above bound E. G. and F. J. Chrislip have obtained from J. M. Hagans, Judge of the 2d Judicial Circuit of West Virginia, an injunction against the Zell Guano Company and others, enjoining and restraining the defendants in said injunction and every other person under them from selling the goods in said bill mentioned, and compelling said defendant Simpson to turn over to said plaintiff, the key, storehouse and personal property in said bill mentioned, until further order of court. Now if the said E. G. and Fannie J. Chrislip shall pay all such costs as may be awarded against them, and also such damages as shall be incurred or sustained by the persons enjoined in case the injunction be dissolved, then this obligation shall be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

This bond was duly signed, sealed, and acknowledged. The defendants appeared on the 3d day of June, 1893, and demurred to the declaration, which demurrer was overruled by the court. After the overruling of the demurrer, the pleadings were made up and a jury impaneled, and after all the evidence was in the plaintiff demurred to the evidence of the defendants, in which the defendants joined, and the jury returned a conditional verdict in favor of the plaintiffs against the defendants, E. G. Chrislip and J. N. B. Crim, for the sum of $975.28, the amount ascertained as damages by the said special verdict. The defendants moved to set aside the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court rendered thereon, which motion was overruled, and the defendants objected and excepted to such ruling and obtained from this court a writ of error to such judgment, and assigned as error the overruling of defendants' demurrer to the plaintiffs' declaration, and in sustaining plaintiffs' motion to reject and strike out defendants' plea of nil debet, and in overruling the motion made by the defendants to set aside the verdict of the jury, and in sustaining the plaintiffs' demurrer to the defendants' evidence.

The first question to be disposed of is that of the demurrer to the declaration, and, if the declaration is insufficient, it will not be necessary to look into the further assignments of error. The pleader in preparing his declaration seems to have misconceived the scope of the conditions of the bond sued upon. Section 10, c. 133, Code 1899, provides that: "An injunction (except * * *) shall not take effect until bond be given in such penalty as the court or judge awarding it may direct, with condition to pay the judgment or decree (proceedings on which are enjoined) and all such costs as may be awarded against the party obtaining the injunction and also such damages as shall be incurred or sustained by the person enjoined in case the injunction be dissolved," etc.

It will be observed from the language of the bond itself that the purpose of the injunction was not to stay proceedings on the judgments set forth in the declaration, but was for the purpose of restraining the Zell Guano Company and others from selling the goods in the bill of injunction mentioned, and compelling the defendant Simpson, who was constable and had the goods in charge under executions, "to turn over to said plaintiffs the key, storehouse, and personal property in said bill mentioned until the further order of court." The condition of the bond was not that the obligors therein should pay the judgments alleged in the declaration to have been lost by reason of the injunction awarded to prevent the selling of the goods mentioned in the bill. It is not made to appear from the declaration what goods were inhibited by said injunction from being sold, or the value thereof, and no bill of particulars describing the property and its value is filed with the declaration, nor does it appear how the judgments were lost by reason of the injunction, the judgments were not destroyed thereby, nor any liens on real estate which attached by virtue of the judgments. Upon the dissolution of the injunction, the measure of damages sustained by the plaintiffs which might be recovered on the bond, and only to the extent of the penalty thereof, would be the value of the property threatened to be sold by the defendant constable, Simpson, and the sale of which was enjoined, and the possession required, by order in the injunction case, to be turned over to the plaintiffs in said injunction bill. The declaration alleges the dissolution of the injunction "by the order of said court entered in said cause on the 28th day of October, 1889, sitting as a court of chancery, and that costs against the said E. G. Chrislip and Fannie J. Chrislip have been awarded the said Zell Guano Co. therein to a small amount, to wit, the sum of $19.25, as taxed by the clerk of said court according to law." The declaration fails to show in any manner, or anywhere, in what court the said injunction suit was pending, and neither does it appear from the bond sued upon. The allegation in regard to the liability of E. G. Chrislip and Fannie J. Chrislip, plaintiffs in said injunction suit, for damages in the amount paid by the plaintiffs, Zell Guano Company, for moneys paid, laid out, and expended for attorney fees by reason of said injunction and defense of the same, fails to particularize the sums paid and to whom paid for that purpose. It is not a condition of the bond that plaintiffs should pay the judgments set out in the declaration, as provided in section 10, c. 133, Code 1899, in case of dissolution of the injunction.

The declaration of the plaintiffs being fatally defective, the demurrer should have been sustained. Therefore the verdict is set aside, the judgment reversed, and the case remanded to the circuit court of Barbour county, with leave to plaintiffs to amend their declaration, if they be so advised, and for a new trial of the case.

(58 W. Va. 431)

MILLER et al. v. MITCHELL et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 5, 1905.)1. APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION—CONTINUANCE.

A trial court has a wide judicial discretion in passing upon a motion for a continuance; and, unless its action appears to be plainly wrong, it will not be reversed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 3837.]

2. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—WHEN ALLOWED.

"Before a court should allow an amended answer to be filed, it ought to be satisfied that the reasons for it are cogent and satisfactory, that the mistakes to be corrected or facts to be added are made highly probable, if not certain, that they are material, that the party has not been guilty of negligence, and that the mistakes have been ascertained and the new facts have come to the knowledge of the party since the original answer was filed." Foutty v. Poar, 12 S. E. 1096, 35 W. Va. 70.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, §§ 783, 803.]

3. MORTGAGES—TRUST DEED—PAYMENT TO TRUSTEE.

The powers of a trustee are limited by the instrument creating the trust; and, where a deed of trust is given to secure a debt, the trustee, as such, has no power to receive payment of the debt and discharge the debtor, where the deed has not expressly conferred such power.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 35, Cent. Dig. Mortgages, § 837.]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—APPLICATION OF PERSONALTY.

Where, after the death of the grantor, it is necessary to invoke equity jurisdiction to foreclose a deed of trust upon specific real estate given to secure a debt, the court ought to require the personal estate in the hands of the administrator to be first ascertained, and determine how much of it is applicable to the payment of the trust debt, and should require it to be so applied before it decrees a sale of the land in satisfaction thereof.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Roane County.

Bill by Warren Miller and others against S. E. Mitchell and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. A. A. Vandale, for appellants. Walter Pendleton, for appellees.

SANDERS, J. This is a suit in equity, brought by Warren Miller and others, executors of R. S. Brown, deceased, against the estate of C. T. Mitchell, deceased, B. M. Hensley, and others, to enforce the lien of a trust deed. In the bill it is alleged that on the 28th day of January, 1888, C. T. Mitchell executed to Thomas Ferrell and R. S. Brown five notes, four of which were for $100 each, payable at one, two, three, and four years respectively, and the other for $97.50, payable at five years; that Ferrell assigned his interest in the notes to Brown; that afterwards, on the 4th day of June, 1888, Mitchell and wife executed to A. B. Wells, trustee, a deed of trust on 49½ acres of land, in Roane county, to secure the payment of said notes; that Mitchell, in his lifetime, and subsequent to the execution of the deed of trust, conveyed 10 acres of said land to B. M. Hensley, and the residue thereof to J. C. Dillard; that both Brown and Mitchell had died before the institution of the suit. Mitchell left surviving him his widow, and four children, infants, who, together with Wells, trustee, W. B. Mathews, sheriff of Roane county, and as such administrator of C. T. Mitchell, deceased, J. C. Dillard, and B. M. Hensley, are made defendants to the bill. Jurisdiction is predicated upon the fact of the removal of Wells, the trustee, to the city of Washington, and that he declines to act as such trustee, the death of C. T. Mitchell, and the unsettled condition of the accounts. The bill was filed at July rules, 1900, and at the August term following Dillard and Hensley tendered their joint demurrer, and Wells, trustee, and Mathews, sheriff, and as such administrator, tendered their separate demurrers to the bill, all of which demurrers were overruled. Thereupon Dillard and Hensley tendered their joint answer, in which it is alleged that the trustee, Wells, was the attorney for Brown, and that Mitchell had, at various times, paid him sums of money, and, in addition thereto, had turned over to him several notes as collateral security, to be applied on said trust debt, which notes were collected by Wells, and the proceeds turned over to Brown, but the amounts thereof were never accounted for to Mitchell, and the answer further alleged that the payments and collections aforesaid were sufficient to pay off and discharge the lien of the trust deed, and that, in fact, a greater amount than necessary for that purpose was paid. There were filed with said answer several receipts, given by Wells to Mitchell, for money which, it is stated therein, was to be applied on the trust debt. At the same term the administrator, Mathews, filed his answer, setting up substantially the same facts. The trustee, Wells, filed no answer. A. E. Kenney was appointed guardian ad litem for the infant defendants, and by another order, entered at said term, was appointed a commissioner, to take and state an account between the parties. Kenney being guardian ad litem for the infants, and therefore incompetent to act as commissioner, on November 26, 1902, a decree was entered appointing S. E. Boggess commissioner in his stead. The commissioner gave notice that on the 18th day of February, 1903, he would proceed to execute the decree of reference, which notice was accepted by all the parties to the suit. After several continuances the report was closed on the 9th day of March, the commissioner allowing credits of $60, and reported a balance due on the trust debt of $681.82. Said report was returned and filed on the 24th day of March, 1903, and on the 7th day of April following the defendants Dillard and Hensley tendered and asked leave to file their amended answer, to which plaintiffs objected, which objection was sustained. Thereupon said defendants moved for a continuance of the cause, and tendered in support of their motion the affidavit and supplemental affidavit of J. A. A. Vandale, their attorney, which motion was resisted by plaintiffs, who filed in opposition thereto the affidavit of the commissioner, Boggess. The court refused to continue the cause, and entered the decree complained of.

The first assignment of error is to the action of the court in refusing to continue the cause. In the affidavit filed in support of said motion it is stated that on the 15th day of March, 1903, the affiant prepared a notice to take the deposition of A. B. Wells in the General Land Office at Washington on the 23d day of March, and that said notice was accepted by plaintiffs; that on the 20th day of March he received a letter from Wells, stating that his deposition could not be taken in the General Land Office, inasmuch as he had no office therein, and that he knew of no special place where it could be taken, and that, as J. G. Schilling was his attorney, he would not take any steps in the matter without his advice; that not being acquainted in the city of Washington the time was too short since receiving the letter from Wells for affiant to ascertain a suitable place for taking his deposition, and give notice thereof as required by law. The affidavit further stated that affiant was informed and believed that the defendants would be able to prove by Wells that he was the agent and attorney for R. S. Brown, and was acting as such when the payments were made to him on the trust debt, and that Wells paid over the same to Brown and his personal representatives, and took receipts therefor, and that affiant and the defendants did not know of any one else by whom said facts could be proven until the 21st day of March, 1903, when affiant was first informed, and believed, that the fact of the said A. B. Wells being the attorney and agent of the said R. S. Brown at the time aforesaid could be proven by several other witnesses, named, who reside in said Roane county, some 15 miles from the courthouse, whose depositions could not be taken in time to be read as evidence in behalf of the defendants at the term at which the affidavit was filed. The affidavit sets forth the materiality of the evidence, and states that, if the parties are given time, the affiant has no doubt but that it will be obtained. As has been noted, Wells entered his demurrer to the bill at the August term, 1900, and while the affidavit for continuance sets forth the reasons why it was impossible to take his deposition between the 15th day of March, 1903, the time at which notice was given, and the time at which the motion for a continuance was made, yet it does not offer, or attempt to offer, any reason or excuse why his deposition was not taken within the period which elapsed between the time of filing his demurrer and the time of giving such notice. It nowhere appears in the affidavit that any diligence whatever was used to secure the deposition of Wells during the time the cause was pending. From the very nature of the pleadings filed by the defendants, they were bound to know that his evidence was material to their defense—in fact, of the most vital importance to them. And, while the affidavit states that the other parties named therein will testify that Wells was the agent and attorney of Brown, yet it omits to state that they will testify that he was such agent as to the matter in controversy here. "Upon any ground, and under all the circumstances surrounding the case, the matter of continuance rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and, unless it clearly appears that such discretion has been abused, the action of the court in overruling a motion for a continuance will not be disturbed." Coal Co. v. Railroad Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 606. In the light of all the circumstances, we cannot say that the court erred in overruling the motion; the affidavit, taken altogether, not showing that the defendants had used that degree of diligence in preparing their defense which entitled them to a continuance.

The second assignment of error is to the action of the court in refusing to permit the amended answer of the defendants Dillard and Hensley to be filed. This answer was tendered after the report of the commissioner had been returned, and at the same term at which it was filed. In this answer it is alleged that Wells was the attorney for R. S. Brown, and received the payments made to him by Mitchell in that capacity, and that, after the death of Brown, said Wells was the attorney for his executors. The only new matter in the amended answer, which was not contained in the original answer, is that Wells was the attorney for the executors of Brown. "Before a court should allow an amended answer to be filed, it ought to be satisfied that the reasons for it are cogent and satisfactory, that the mistakes to be corrected, or facts to be added, are made highly probable, if not certain, that they are material, that the party has not been guilty of negligence, and that the mistakes have been ascertained, and the new facts have come to the knowledge of the party, since the original answer was filed." Foutty v. Poar, 35 W. Va. 70, 12 S. E. 1096. There is no apparent reason why the fact of Wells being attorney for the executors, if such were the fact, could not as well have been known to the defendants at the time of the filing of the original as at the time of filing the amended answer. Brown died on February 16, 1891, and some of the receipts filed with the original answer are dated before, and some after, his death. The defendants certainly knew in what capacity all of these receipts from Wells were given at the time they were filed, and, knowing this, it should have been alleged in the original answer.

The defendants excepted to the commissioner's report, on the ground that the commissioner, in making the same, refused to hear or consider the evidence offered by the defendants to show the payment of the debt reported therein. In returning his report, the commissioner, speaking in regard to said exceptions, says it is not true, as stated, that he refused to consider any evidence offered by the defendants to prove the credits claimed, but that he refused to allow credits claimed as set forth in the exhibits filed with the answer of the defendants Dillard and Hensley, "for the reasons that said exhibits was the only evidence offered by any of the defendants to prove said payments, and your commissioner was of the opinion that said exhibits, considered alone, was improper, incompetent, and insufficient evidence to prove the payments and credits claimed by the answers filed in this cause." We do not think that the court erred in confirming the report of the commissioner. The burden of proof was upon the defendants to show that Wells was the attorney for Brown, and that in receiving the payments he was acting as such attorney. This they nowhere attempt to show, but content themselves by filing, as exhibits with their answer, the several receipts from Wells. As trustee, he had only such powers as are conferred upon him by statute and by the terms of the instrument creating the trust, and the power to receive payment of the trust debt is not included in them. "As a general rule a trustee's authority over the trust property is defined and limited by the instrument creating the trust, and he should be guided strictly by its provisions." Atkinson v. Beckett, 34 W. Va. 584, 12 S. E. 717.

And it is claimed as error that the commissioner calculated the interest on all four of the notes from their date to October 26, 1899, and to that added the principal of the notes, and then deducted the $60 payment therefrom. The defendants claim that the commissioner should have applied the $60 credits on the note on which they were indorsed, and not upon all of them. This contention is correct, and it was error to calculate the interest in the manner in which it was done, but for this error we cannot reverse, because the erroneous amount is only $22.58, and not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction; but, as the case must be reversed for other errors, it should be corrected by the lower court in the future progress of the case.

It is also assigned as error that the commissioner failed to give credit for the item of $5, stated on the back of the first note as having been paid to Rohr for printing notice of sale. This amount does not affirmatively appear to be a payment on the indebtedness.

Before the commissioner should allow it, it must so appear. The burden is upon the defendants to show payments. We cannot say that this amount should have been credited, and therefore cannot hold that it was error for the commissioner to disallow it.

Counsel for the defendants make the further claim that the administration accounts of the decedent, Mitchell, should have been settled, and the personal assets first applied to the discharge of the indebtedness. Where the grantor is dead, and it is necessary to invoke equity jurisdiction to enforce a deed of trust upon specific real estate given to secure a debt, it is necessary, before decreeing a sale of the real estate, to have settlement of the administration accounts, and first apply the personal assets to the discharge of the debt secured by such deed of trust. It is held in Bierne v. Brown's Adm'r et al., 10 W. Va. 748, that in a suit brought to enforce a vendor's lien against the estate of a vendee, after his death, the court ought to require the personal estate in the hands of the administrator to be first ascertained, and to determine how much of it is applicable to the payment of the purchase money, and should require it to be so applied before it decrees a sale of the land to pay the lien. And Judge Green, in delivering the opinion of the court in that case, said: "And, though a debt so contracted be a lien on particular real estate by a mortgage, or a vendor's lien, this general rule would still be applicable, because the debt was originally a personal obligation on the intestate and the lien on the particular real estate should be regarded merely as a collateral security." Laidley v. Kline, Adm'r, 8 W. Va. 218; Williams v. Buster, 5 W. Va. 342; Sommerville v. Sommerville, 26 W. Va. 484.

The decree being erroneous, it is reversed, and the cause remanded.

(38 W. Va. 438)

McNEELY et al. v. SOUTH PENN OIL CO.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. TENANCY IN COMMON—WASTE—ACCOUNTING—EXTRACTION OF OIL.

The basis of accounting, between tenants in common, joint tenants, and coparceners, for waste effected by the extraction of petroleum oil from the common property under circumstances which make it reasonably certain that the party so taking oil acted without fraud and under the belief of good title in himself to the whole of the property, though not without notice of defect of title, is the value of all the oil produced from the land, less the whole cost of its production, including the cost of drilling producing wells.

2. OIL LEASE BY CO-TENANT.

If one co-tenant execute an oil lease purporting to cover the whole of the common property, under which the lessee produces oil, delivering to the lessor part thereof as royalty, it is proper to require the lessor and lessee jointly to make reparation to the injured co-tenant, and to order satisfaction of the decree against them to be made out of proceeds of the oil in the hands of the special receiver in the cause.

3. SAME—DAMAGES—ELEMENTS.

In such case, rentals received by the co-tenant in possession for delay in drilling, under a provision of the lease, constitute no part of the damages and should not be included in the decree; nor are they to be accounted for as rents and profits, unless the lease is ratified or acquiesced in by the other co-tenant.

4. SAME—RATIFICATION OF LEASE.

A mere demand for discovery as to and accounting for such rentals, in a bill expressly denying the title of the lessor and validity of the lease, does not amount to a ratification or adoption of the lease.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wetzel County.

Bill by G. B. McNeely and others against the South Penn Oil Company and others. From the decree defendant oil company appeals, and plaintiffs file cross-appeal. Modified and affirmed.

See 46 S. E. 499.

Thos. P. Jacobs, Edward A. Brannon, Frank V. Iams, and T. R. Horner, for plaintiffs. A. B. & R. F. Fleming, Erskine & Allison, C. Powell, J. W. Newman, and R. W. McCoy, for defendants.

POFFENBARGER, J. In this, the second appeal in McNeely v. South Penn Oil Company, the disposition of the first appeal in which is reported in 52 W. Va. 616, 44 S. E. 508, 62 L. R. A. 562, where all the facts out of which the questions then presented arose, are fully stated, the principal question is the basis on which the accounting for the oil produced shall be made. After the case went back to the circuit court, the South Penn Oil Company filed its second amended and supplemental answer, claiming the right to account on the basis of the value of the oil in place, which, it was averred, was the value of one-eighth of all the oil produced. Upon exception to the answer, so much of it as set up this claim was stricken out by the court. Then the cause was recommitted to commissioner Basil T. Bowers to take further testimony and to ascertain and report the amount and value of all the oil obtained from the land occupied by said company with its oil operations, the amount and value of such part thereof as had been received by John W. Starkey, the lessor, and the amount of money expended by said oil company in operating for and producing the oil so obtained by it. The special receiver in the case and the Eureka Pipe Line Company were required to report the amounts of oil received by them, respectively, and the disposition made thereof, and the prices at which any of it had been sold. The commissioner reported that the South Penn Oil Company had taken, from the 74 acres of land occupied by it, oil amounting in value to $47,800.75, of which amount $3,592.11 had been paid by it to J. W. Starkey, the lessor, as royalty, and that the cost of producing the whole amount of oil thus obtained had been $35,698.24, making the sum of $12,102.51 the value of the production from said land, less the cost thereof. To this report both the plaintiffs and the South Penn Oil Company excepted, the former because the commissioner had allowed the cost of production to be taken out of the value of the oil, and the latter because the commissioner had refused to find and report, as the amount due the plaintiffs, the one-half of one-eighth of all the oil produced. The court overruled all the exceptions and decreed to the plaintiffs, on account of oil produced, the sum of $8,051.25, and, in addition thereto, $138.67, one-half of the cash rentals which had been paid to Starkey, making a total of $8,189.92. From this decree, the South Penn Oil Company appealed, assigning numerous errors in the decree, and McNeely and others, the plaintiffs, obtained a cross-appeal, on which they complain of the allowance out of the fund of the cost of production.

The court adopted the rule and principle declared and applied in Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 27 South. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891. On both sides, the equity and legality of that rule is denied, and, for McNeely and others, it is asserted that the court never intended to prescribe in that case a general rule for the government of ordinary cases of this kind. In this connection, they point to the language used by the court in the syllabus, which is: "Under the circumstances, a party taking petroleum oil unlawfully is allowed all costs of production, including costs of boring productive wells, as a set-off against rents and profits." The phrase "under the circumstances" is made the basis of the argument, and the character of the sale, magnitude of the production, and the cost thereof, are relied upon as the circumstances which, in the opinion of the court, justified the formulation of the proposition above stated as a rule for the special case. As, in this case, the lessor and his tenant were not purchasers at a judicial sale, as in the case of Jones, and the production is not large, and the defect in the title of the lessor was disclosed by the records, it is insisted that this case cannot be assimilated to that of Williamson v. Jones, and that therefore the law of that case, on the subject of the basis of accounting, has no application here. Counsel for the South Penn Oil Company declare that the basis of settlement adopted is contrary to the great weight of authority, which is to the effect that when one co-tenant, acting in good faith, not fraudulently, but under a mistake, either of law or fact, commits waste in extracting oil or removing coal or other minerals, or timber, he is held responsible, not for the value of the finished product less the cost of production, but only for the value of the property in its natural state.

Aside from the difference in the volume of production and magnitude of cost, but one circumstance is pointed out in this case as distinguishing it from the one in which the rule complained of was declared. That is the charge of fraud against Starkey. The court expressly held, in Williamson v. Jones, that Jones was not a purchaser without notice. He was declared to be a purchaser with notice, whom ignorance of law did not excuse. But it is said that Starkey not only had notice, but participated in a fraud perpetrated upon Mary Higgins by her husband. The only evidence of this is that he took possession of the tract of land, one-half of which was owned by her and the residue by her husband, under a deed executed by the husband alone. As it is not perceived how the quantity and value of the oil produced can have any material bearing upon the equity of the case, the charge of fraud is the only matter urged, as ground for distinction between the two cases, that need be considered. Mary Higgins was an invalid at the time the agreement for the exchange of land was executed by her husband and Starkey, in 1873, and died of consumption on the 12th day of February, 1875. Some testimony was taken for the purpose of showing her attitude toward the exchange, and an effort was made to prove that she was satisfied with it. One witness testified that she had said she was glad it had been effected. She did not sign the executory contract providing for the exchange, and the deed was not made until after her death. From these facts it is argued that she was unwilling to convey the land, that her husband clandestinely entered into the agreement with Starkey and had evil designs in postponing the execution of the deed. At that time, the land was probably regarded as not very valuable. No one then dreamed of its mineral wealth. The transaction took place probably 20 years before that section of the country developed into oil-producing territory. At variance with the charge of secrecy, circumvention, and fraud, is the fact that Starkey took possession of the land immediately after the signing of the agreement, and while Mary Higgins was yet alive. Another circumstance which indicates that negligence, and not fraud, was the origin of these troubles, is that the land was not the homestead, for Higgins and his wife had obtained it in that same year from Edgell, by deed dated April 4, 1873. In view of these facts and circumstances we do not think the charge of actual fraud is sustained, and therefore no substantial ground of distinction between this case and that of Williamson v. Jones is perceived.

Counsel for the South Penn Oil Company, in insisting upon the application of the common-law principles governing the relation of co-tenants, seem to overlook the important fact that our statute has altered that law in this respect. By section 2 of chapter 92 of the Code of 1891, tenants in common, joint tenants, and coparceners are made liable to one another for waste. At common law there is no such liability. Reference is made to the statute which gives an action of account against a co-tenant for receiving more than his share of rents and profits—section 14 of chapter 100 of the Code of 1899, supplying a defect in the common law, and corresponding to a similar statute passed by practically all the states—but none to the statute which creates liability for waste. It was this statute which gave the court its serious trouble in Williamson v. Jones and prevented the adoption of the common-law basis of settlement contended for here. In view of it, the court, in order to allow any off-set whatever, was forced to adopt another principle, namely, that he who asks equity must do equity. In delivering the opinion of the court, Judge Brannon said: "We are in a court of equity, which often departs from dry legal rules in the interest of substantial, even-handed justice. It does not seem that there is any inflexible, ironclad rule in equity in this matter, unless our statute imposes it. This is not the case of a suit to impose upon the co-owner a personal liability, or a liability on his land, for improvements, nor to continue in possession till future profits shall reimburse them; but it is a case where the plaintiffs ask an account to charge Jones with rents and profits, and he seeks to set off improvements. Yea, more, it is a case where the plaintiffs ask to receive the benefit of the property in its improved condition—to have the benefit of those improvements; that is, they ask pay for oil flowing through these very wells, without which wells there would not be a gallon of oil for them or for Jones. The law is well settled that in account of rents and profits you must charge the party for the property in its condition before his improvements, and not with the profits of his improvements. Hall v. Hall, 30 W. Va. 789, 5 S. E. 265; Freem. Co-Ten. § 262; Code 1899, c. 91, § 2; Moore v. Ligon, 30 W. Va. 155, 3 S. E. 576; White v. Stuart, 76 Va. 566; Early v. Friend, 16 Grat. 21, 78 Am. Dec. 649; Fishack v. Ball, 34 W. Va. 644, 12 S. E. 856. This is a strong factor in the solution of this question. The plaintiffs demand their oil, solely the fruit of the pluck and courage and energy of Jones, in hazardous enterprises, which might have involved him in ruin. They come into a court of equity, asking that we accord them their legal rights, and they are given unto them, but it is an adage that he who asks equity must himself do equity. He cannot, in every instance, eat the fruitage without sharing in the burden of the planting. I repeat that no immovable rule binds a court of equity in this matter. * * * If we give Jones his expenditures, still a large amount goes to the plaintiffs; otherwise Jones loses them, and this would violate a rule of equity which, translated from the Latin, says that 'by the natural law it is not right that any one should grow rich by the detriment and injury of another.'

Much authority can be shown to support this doctrine in addition to that given above. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1236, note; Corcoran v. Corcoran (Ind. Sup.) 21 N. E. 468, 4 L. R. A. 782, 12 Am. St. Rep. 390; Stewart v. Stewart (Wis.) 63 N. W. 886, 48 Am. St. Rep. 949; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1107. But for Jones' acts, this oil would not have been produced, so far as we can see; but for him perhaps this oil now enriching the plaintiffs would have been lost to them by being drained off by wells on adjoining lands. Under these circumstances, equity cannot be blind to the argument that Jones' acts have been to the plaintiffs a blessing, not even in disguise, but plain and apparent. We cannot be deaf to the argument that the labor, enterprise, and business ability of this man, though technically in the wrong, appeal to a court of equity with strong call for liberality so far as to repay him by set-off all outlay in producing oil, including cost of productive wells, and we resolve any doubt by so holding. A debt for such improvement could not be made against the plaintiffs, nor would we say that all their oil could be thus absorbed; but here is a large surplus."

But for the equitable principle thus declared, it is difficult to see how, in view of our statute, anything at all could be allowed by way of offset, against the value of the oil produced. It is not a question of accounting for rents and profits, but one of making reparation for a wrong, however innocently it may have been done, and the court seems to have gone to the utmost limit of equity jurisdiction to relieve from the rigors of the common, and statutory, law in allowing expenses incurred in the performance of a wrongful act to be set off against the benefits derived therefrom. To go further and limit recovery to the mere value of the oil in place would put the wrongdoer in the exact situation of one who enters upon land and takes the mineral therefrom rightfully. Courts of equity cannot ignore all property rights and fully exonerate from the consequences of legally wrongful acts.

An effort is made to obtain the same result, namely, an accounting on the basis of one-eighth of the oil produced as its value in place, by the contention that the plaintiffs, by the allegations of their bill, ratified and adopted the lease which provided for the payment of one-eighth of the oil as royalty. It does allege the receipt by Starkey of money as rental and bonus, sets up title in the plaintiffs to such money, prays a discovery as to the amount thereof and an accounting for, and payment of, the same by the lessors to the plaintiffs. But it attacks the lease on the ground of invalidity, and declares that the extraction of the oil is wrongful, unlawful, and wasteful, and denies that the lease confers upon the lessees any right or title to the oil, or justifies any entry upon the land, and denies any title or right in Starkey authorizing him to execute the same. Its allegations are directly to the point that the lease is void, and that Starkey has no title to one-half the land, and its principal aim and object are to establish such invalidity and want of title. Although it sets up a demand derived from rents and bonus, which is apparently inconsistent with renunciation of the lease, all parts of the bill must be considered in seeking its true intent and purpose, and, if it appears that this demand rests upon some other ground than that of a ratification of the lease, it must be so regarded. There are no express words of adoption or ratification in the bill. On the contrary, the lease is repudiated and its validity denied most directly and emphatically. This is plainly sufficient to overthrow any mere inference of adoption arising simply from a demand for an accounting as to rentals and money paid as a bonus. The theory of the bill, as regards this demand, seems to be that this money, like the oil, has been derived from the land, and may be exacted notwithstanding the invalidity of the lease and want of title under it, as profit derived from the waste committed, and not as money obtained by virtue of the contract. Hence, our conclusion is that the bill does not ratify and claim under the lease.

The inclusion in the decree of the sum of $138.67, one-half of the rentals paid to Starkey by the South Penn Oil Company, under the terms of the lease, is assigned as error. As to the appellant, it is clearly an improper charge. It is no part of the proceeds of the oil extracted, nor does it represent any element of injury to the land. It accrued to Starkey under a covenant in the lease, and arose wholly out of contract between Starkey and the South Penn Oil Company, and is in no sense connected with any waste or injury to the land. With this contract the plaintiffs have no connection whatever. It never was their contract, and they have emphatically refused to accept it or be bound by it. As they do not claim under the contract, and could not do so, without ratifying the same as a whole, and the money was received by Starkey on the contract and not out of the land, and was, as to the South Penn Oil Company, money paid out and not money received from the land, the inclusion of this sum in the decree was clearly erroneous.

Another contention is that it was error to render a decree against Starkey and the South Penn Oil Company, jointly, for the value of the entire one-half of the net sum realized from the oil, for the reason that Starkey had received $3,592.11, and the contention is that this should have been deducted and the decree rendered for the balance, and a separate decree entered against Starkey for the amount which he had received. This position is untenable. As the South Penn Oil Company actually took from the earth the oil in question, retaining seven-eighths thereof and delivering the residue to Starkey, or to the pipe line company for him, it was responsible for the whole amount thereof and could not discharge itself by payment or delivery to anybody except the rightful owners. It was the actual despoiler of the property. Its drills, machinery, appliances, agents, and employees actually pierced the soil of the plaintiffs and severed and brought up their oil unlawfully and wrongfully. Starkey's unauthorized and void contract did not do that. But for the acts done under it by the lessee, it would have been harmless. Having done this injury, the oil company cannot discharge itself by making reparation to any one but the injured party. It cannot say to him: "You must look to my partner in wrongdoing, because some of the benefits thereof accrued to him." The decree is therefore not erroneous in this respect.

On the 3d day of October, 1903, the court decreed that partition of the land be made, and appointed commissioners for that purpose, after having ascertained that C. H. Ice and G. B. McNeely were entitled to 45 acres of the tract, Waitman, Ida, and Martha Higgins to five acres, John W. Starkey to 24 acres, and Hezekiah Hood to 26 acres, but no actual partition appears to have been reported or decreed. In this state of the record, it is said the court erred in decreeing partition of the land. To this it suffices to say the decree is not appealable. It makes no partition, and does not settle the principles of the cause. Evidently this ascertainment was made merely for the purpose of determining the basis for a division of the proceeds of the oil produced. Only to that extent does it seem to have been made effective or fruitful. An actual partition would not ordinarily be by the acre without regard to value. In this we see no error.

In pronouncing its decree, however, the court erred in one other respect. Three infant children of Louis Higgins, a son of Mary Higgins, are defendants in the cause and are entitled to $\frac{5}{74}$ of the amount ascertained to be due from Starkey and the South Penn Oil Company. Their interest was overlooked and the whole amount decreed to the plaintiffs. Of this the South Penn Oil Company justly complains, because these infants may hereafter demand payment of their share, and in that case there would be a double recovery to that extent. Deducting from the amount of the decree the sum of \$138.67, the money arising from rentals paid, the whole amount due is ascertained to be \$6,051.25. Of this, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for the sum of \$5,642.38, $\frac{69}{74}$ thereof, with interest thereon from the 23d day of September, 1904, the date of the decree appealed from.

It is said the court erred in directing the receiver to pay, out of the proceeds of oil in his hands, the amount decreed to the plaintiffs. The ground of this suggestion is not stated. It seems to have been put in by way of precaution, to broaden the objection to the personal decree so as to make it reach specifically that part which requires satisfaction out of the fund in the hands of the receiver. No independent ground of exception is perceived. The fund arose from the oil unauthorizedly taken from the land and sold. Plaintiffs had the right to follow it up and assert a lien upon it. But the amount to be so paid should have been limited to the sum of $5,642.38, with interest as aforesaid.

The Corning Oil Company, operating upon 26 acres, the residue of the 100-acre tract in controversy, did not appeal from the decree against it, but the plaintiffs did, and it filed a brief in which error might have been cross-assigned, but seems not to have been. The same proceedings were had against this company as against the South Penn Company, and the same defenses were interposed, up to the point of taking the decree. There, the court made a distinction. Instead of allowing, against it, one-half of the value of the production after deducting the cost, the court decreed one-half of the value of one-eighth of all the oil produced. The production amounted in value to $26,646.60, and the cost to $24,095.66, making the difference $2,550.94. The one-eighth of the value of the entire production was $3,330.82, and the decree was for $1,704.41, one-half of $3,330.82, plus one-half of $78, the amount received from rentals by Hezekiah Hood, the lessor. Under the principles hereinbefore applied, on the appeal of the South Penn Oil Company, the amount that would have been decreed is $1,275.47, one-half of $2,550.94. But counsel for the Corning Oil Company do not, in their brief, complain of this. Their sole contention is that the basis of the accounting adopted in their case is correct and is the proper rule for the government of all similar cases. They do not ask to have the amount decreed reduced, and the only ground of complaint against it by the plaintiffs is that it is too small. They claim from this company the value of the entire production, $26,646.60, without any deduction on any account. Nobody asks that the amount of the decree be cut down. The Corning Oil Company is satisfied with it, apparently willing to pay it, and the plaintiffs only ask that it be increased. Under such circumstances, the court is clearly not bound to disturb it. Errors of this kind may always be waived. If the decree is erroneous in allowing more than the said sum of $1,275.47, the question would be whether the court, on its own motion, could, and, under the circumstances, ought to, correct it. But is it clearly erroneous? The sum of $1,275.47 is less than the value of the oil in place. The allowance of cost of production proceeds not upon a legal right, but an equitable one, as has been shown. It may be taken off of the profits derived, but may it be deducted from the value of the property taken? Does not the value of the oil in place stand upon a different footing from that of the added value, consequent upon its removal? Did not the trial court distinguish between the two cases upon this ground, and is it not a substantial ground for such discrimination? This question has not been discussed or raised in this court. Conceding that the court might, on its own motion, correct a palpable error of this kind, in the absence of any request for such action, it does not follow that it should, or could, do so, when the question of error is doubtful. For this reason, the decree against the Corning Oil Company will not be disturbed.

For the reasons above stated, the decree complained of will be so modified and corrected as to require the appellant, the South Penn Oil Company, and J. W. Starkey to pay the plaintiffs the said sum of $5,842.38, with interest thereon from the 23d day of September, 1904, to be paid by H. B. Furbree, special receiver, out of the funds in his hands, instead of the sum of $6,189.92, and, as so modified and corrected, the same will be affirmed; but costs in this court will be allowed the appellant, the South Penn Oil Company.

(53 W. Va. 449)

WALLACE v. ELM GROVE COAL CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS—CONVEYANCE OF UNDERLYING COAL—EFFECT.

A conveyance of the underlying coal, with the privilege of its removal from under the land of the grantor, effects a severance of the right to the surface from the right to the underlying coal, and makes them distinct corporeal hereditaments. The presumption that the party having the possession of the surface has the possession of the subsoil also does not exist when these rights are severed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Mines and Minerals, §§ 158, 161.]

2. SAME—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

The owner of the surface, when the underlying coal has been so conveyed, can acquire no title to the coal by his exclusive and continued possession of the surface; nor does the owner of the coal lose his right or his possession by any length of nonusage. To lose his right he must be disseised, and there can be no disseisin by an act which does not actually take the coal out of his possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Mines and Minerals, § 185.]

3. QUIETING TITLE—POSSESSION.

A bill in equity to remove a cloud over title to land cannot be maintained, unless the plaintiff have both good title and actual possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Quieting Title, §§ 8, 36.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Bill by James Y. Wallace against the Elm

Grove Coal Company. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

Hubbard & Hubbard, for appellant. Handlan & Wiedenbusch, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. John Blayney and John McCoy were the owners of two contiguous tracts of land making together 165 acres. On the 17th day of June, 1859, they conveyed to Joseph Connelly, Joseph Ford, Otho W. Heiskell, and John Handlan, all the coal underlying the two tracts of land. By regular conveyances the title to both tracts became vested in John Blayney, who conveyed the same to Samuel Roney on October 4, 1870; Samuel Roney and wife conveyed the same by deed of trust to L. F. Jones, trustee, who, by deed dated August 22, 1877, conveyed the same 165 acres to James Y. Wallace. It seems that the conveyances made after the coal deeds of June 17, 1859, purported to convey the whole property without reference to the said conveyances of the coal underlying the said tracts of land. By deed dated the 6th day of February, 1902 the heirs at law of the said Connelly, Ford, Heiskell, and Handlan, the grantees of the coal in the deeds of June 17, 1859, conveyed the said coal and mining privileges to the Elm Grove Coal Company, a corporation. On the 1st Monday in August, 1903, the said James Y. Wallace filed his bill in equity in the circuit court of Ohio county against the Elm Grove Coal Company, alleging the various deeds of conveyance of said property, and also the said deeds conveying the underlying coal to the said Connelly and others; that the said coal interest had become forfeited to the state by reason of nonentry on the land books for purposes of taxation, that the title of the grantees to said coal had become vested in the state by reason of such forfeiture, and that up to the year 1902 no redemption of said property, nor was any release or other disposition of said property or of any part thereof, made by said state of West Virginia; that the conveyance made by John McCoy to John Blayney in the year 1864, and by John Blayney and wife to Samuel Roney in 1870, created in the said Roney a title to said coal, which was adverse to that of the said Connelly, Ford, Heiskell, and Handlan, and that after the said year, 1870, no payment, by the said Roney or his successors in title, of any taxes, assessed upon said coal or which should have been assessed thereon, could inure to the benefit of said Connelly, Ford, Heiskell, and Handlan as privies in title to the said Samuel Roney; that the conveyance of said property by Roney to Jones, trustee, in 1870, and the conveyance thereof to plaintiff by said Jones, trustee, in the year 1877, were also conveyances adverse to the said Connelly and his co-vendees; that no payment of taxes by the said Jones or by the plaintiff could inure to the benefit of the said Connelly and his co-vendees as privies in title to the said Jones, or to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff had actual, adverse, exclusive, and constructive possession of said property under claim of title from 1877 to the present time, and had paid the said taxes thereon from year to year for each year after the year 1877, and that those under whom the plaintiff claimed had like possession and claim and had paid taxes for more than 20 years next previous to the conveyance to plaintiff; that since the 9th of April, 1873, no person excepting the plaintiff had had actual continuous possession of the said coal property under color or claim of title for 10 years, and no person except plaintiff and said Jones, under whom plaintiff claimed, had paid the state taxes on said property or any part thereof for any five years since the last-mentioned date; and alleging that by operation of law and in pursuance of the Constitution of the state the title to said coal so forfeited to the state and not having been redeemed, released, or otherwise disposed of had been transferred to and vested in the plaintiff; that the defendant at the time the said conveyance was made to it by the heirs at law of the decedent vendees of the coal, on the 6th day of February, 1902, had full and actual, as well as constructive, knowledge, that the title to the said coal privileges vested in its grantors had become forfeited, and had become vested in plaintiff; that the deed constitutes a cloud upon plaintiff's title to his said property, that he ought to have a clear and undisputed title thereto, that defendants took by its said deed no estate or interest whatever in any of the coal underlying plaintiff's farm; that the said deed so far as it undertakes as purported to convey any interest in said coal ought to be set aside and annulled; that plaintiff had no adequate remedy at law in the premises; that the defendant be required to answer the bill, and that upon the final hearing of the cause the said deed to the defendant might be declared to be absolutely void and of no effect, so far as it undertakes to convey any interest in the coal underlying plaintiff's farm, and for general relief.

Defendant filed its demurrer in writing to plaintiff's bill, in which demurrer the plaintiff joined and on the 21st day of April, 1905, the following order was entered: "The defendant, Elm Grove Coal Company, at a former term of this court, filed its demurrer in writing to the plaintiff's bill, and the said demurrer having at said term been argued and submitted to the court (it being admitted in the oral argument that there had been no actual possession of the underlying coal as distinguished from the constructive possession resulting from the conveyance of the land to the plaintiff and his grantors and from the occupancy of the surface by the plaintiff and his grantors, and a willingness was expressed that the matters arising should be passed upon as if the averments were modified accordingly), the court now adjudges the law upon said demurrer to be with the defendant, and the plaintiff's bill to be insufficient in law. The demurrer is sustained. And the plaintiff not desiring to amend, it is adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the bill of complaint be dismissed, and that the defendant recover from the plaintiff its costs in this suit expended to be taxed by the clerk." From which decree plaintiff appealed and in his petition says: "The main question presented to this court is, has the title of the defendant been forfeited to the state?" and, second, "the remaining question is, has the forfeited title vested in the plaintiff?"

Counsel for plaintiff in their petition say: "In arguing the demurrer the plaintiff's counsel conceded that there had never been any actual possession of these veins of coal by any one. That the averments of the bill with respect to the plaintiff's possession must be modified in accordance with this admission is shown by the decree complained of. Since that time it has been learned that this concession should not have been made, but, for the purposes of this appeal, it is to be considered as binding." We are unable to see how this concession is prejudicial to the plaintiff, under the great weight of authority he could acquire no title to the coal underlying the farm by his actual and exclusive possession of the surface. In 1 Cyc. 994, it is said: "It is a general presumption that one who has the possession of the surface of the land has possession of the subsoil also. But when, by conveyance or reservation, a separation has been made of the ownership of the surface of the land from that of the underground minerals, the owner of the former can acquire no title to the latter by his exclusive and continued enjoyment of the surface; nor does the owner of the minerals lose his right or his possession by any length of nonusage. He must be disseised to lose his right, and there can be no disseisin by an act which does not actually take the minerals out of his possession." A conveyance of the underlying coal with the privilege of its removal from under the land of the grantor "effects a severance of the right to the surface from the right to the underlying coal, and makes them distinct corporeal hereditaments. The presumption that the party having the possession of the surface has the possession of the subsoil also, does not exist when these rights are severed." Armstrong v. Caldwell, 53 Pa. 284. And in Caldwell v. Copeland, 37 Pa. 427, 78 Am. Dec. 436, it is held: "Possession of the surface for more than 21 years does not carry with it the possession of coal below it, where the title to the mineral rights had been severed from that of the surface, by deed." And it is there further held: "When the owner of the surface seeks to establish title to a mine, by adverse possession under the statute, in opposition to his deed, he must prove possession of the mine as such, independent of the surface, or there can be no question of adverse holding to submit to the jury." 1 A. & E. E. L. 875 (2d Ed.); 2 Snyder on Mines, §§ 971, 972, and authorities cited. See, also, Coal Co. v. Kelly (Va.) 24 S. E. 1020; Preston v. White (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 236; Peterson v. Hall (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 603; 5 Cur. Law, 57, note 11; Huss v. Jacobs, 210 Pa. 145, 59 Atl. 991.

It is claimed by appellee that this case is governed by the case of State v. Low, 46 W. Va. 451, 33 S. E. 271. In that case the title of Low and others was a defeasible title, the vendees could at their option under their contract omit to pay within a given time the sum of $800, when upon such failure to pay their title was to become and be "as absolutely null and void as though it had never been made," and the title would thus revert to the grantor in whose name the whole property was charged for purposes of taxation. While in case at bar Roney in 1870 took a title hostile to that of the vendees of the coal, and as we have seen under the authorities he, nor those holding under him, never could have possession of the coal under his deed without entering into the coal in the way of mining the same or reducing the coal itself to physical possession, and that in an open manner so as to give notice to the world that he was claiming it as his own and hostile and adverse to all others.

Appellant claims that by reason of nonentry of the coal on the assessor's books, the title thereto became forfeited to the state and by virtue of section 3, art. 13, of the Constitution, and section 40 of chapter 31 of the Code, the title so forfeited passed to the appellant as a person of the second class described in said sections of the Constitution and statute. The appellant could not take by transfer under the second class mentioned in said sections, because, when he purchased the land, the coal had been severed by deed, and was distinct and apart from the surface; that held by appellant, and it is immaterial whether the title to the coal conveyed in 1859 was forfeited to the state or not for nonentry or otherwise; appellant had no claim to it because he had no title conveying it, and it is only he who has good title can maintain a suit to remove a cloud from his title. He certainly did not take good title to the coal when he purchased from the trustee, Jones, and he had no possession of the coal thereafter, the only thing that could ripen a mere color of title into a good title. In Hitchcox v. Morrison, 47 W. Va. 206, 34 S. E. 993 (Syl., point 2), it is held: "Those only who have a clear legal and equitable title to the land, connected with actual possession, have a right to claim the interference of a court of equity to give them peace, or dissipate a cloud on their title." Orton v. Smith, 8 How. (U. S.) 263, 15 L. Ed. 393; U. S. v. Wilson, 118 U. S. 86, 6 Sup. Ct. 991, 30 L. Ed. 110; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 7 Sup. Ct. 1129, 30 L. Ed. 1010. And in Mills v. Oil Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 157 (Syl., point 4), it is held: "A bill in equity to remove a cloud over title to land cannot be sustained unless the plaintiff have both good title and actual possession. The weakness of the adversary's title will not sustain the bill." We deem it unnecessary to decide in this cause whether the title to the coal was or was not forfeited to the state for nonentry, or otherwise, inasmuch as such title, if forfeited, did not pass to the appellant; hence do not pass upon that question.

For the reasons here stated the circuit court did not err in sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's bill, and the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(53 W. Va. 455)

KING v. THOMPSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION—CONVEYANCE OF INTERLOCK.

Rader made a bond for the conveyance of land to White. Afterwards Rader made a deed conveying land to King, said to take in part of the land included in the title bond. Possession under the title bond of the interlock would not be adverse to Rader while holding the legal title, but would be adverse to King from the date of Rader's deed to him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 1, Cent. Dig. Adverse Possession, § 344.]

2. EVIDENCE—PAROL TO EXPLAIN DEED.

Parol evidence cannot be admitted, in an action of ejectment, to prove that by mistake land was included in the deed not intended to be included in it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, §§ 1993, 1994.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Roane County.

Action by William R. King against Jeff Thompson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Thos. P. Ryan and J. M. Harper, for plaintiff in error. Walter Pendleton, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, P. W. R. King brought ejectment against Jeff Thompson in Roane county, and the case resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant. Rader, it seems, made a bond in 1890, providing for the future conveyance to White of a tract of land. Derivatively under that title bond the defendant claims. A deed was made in execution of that title bond, 4th April, 1893, to Runner, its assignee. The plaintiff claims a tract under a deed from Rader and wife to him, 14th December, 1892. We suppose that Rader designed the tract sold to White and that sold to King to be coterminous. A parcel of land containing 23 acres and 23 poles is in dispute. King claims that his deed takes it in. Thompson claims that King's deed does not take it in, but that his deed does take it in. The case involves the true location of the lines of King's deed. Thompson claims that, if King's deed does take in this disputed land,

It is owing to a mistake in including within the deed from Rader to King land not intended to be included, and that owing to this mistake the land in dispute was included within the bounds of King's deed.

King claims that the court erred against him in giving an instruction to the effect that, if White purchased from Rader a tract including the land in dispute, and that if the deed from Rader to King included the land in dispute, and if White and others under him, including the defendant Thompson, had been in actual possession of any part of the land in dispute, or included in the interlock, claiming the same under said title bond or deed for more than 10 years, the jury should find for the defendant, although the plaintiff's deed was older and although the plaintiff might have had actual possession of his land outside the interlock. This instruction told the jury that all the possession under the title bond from Rader to White was adverse and would count under the statute of limitation; that possession before deed to Runner was not adverse and could not be counted under the statute of limitations in favor of Thompson. The reason is, that one in possession under an executory contract of purchase does not hold adversely to his vendor. Why? Because, at common law, the purchaser has no title. He has only an equity under courts of equity, but the law court knows only legal title. The purchaser enters under the vendor. He is a tenant. The purchaser may sue for nonconveyance to get damages, but the law court knows him not as to title. So much is this so before section 20, c. 90, Code 1899, that the vendor could, by ejectment or unlawful detainer, even if the purchaser has paid purchase money and were entitled to possession, turn him out. Williamson v. Paxton, 18 Grat. 475. Therefore, at law, possession of the vendee is possession of his vendor, not adverse until after deed. McNeely v. Oil Co., 52 W. Va. 616, 44 S. E. 508, 62 L. R. A. 562; State v. Harman, 57 W. Va. 448, 50 S. E. 828. It is not adverse in a court of equity. In its eye the vendor holds the legal title in trust for the vendee, and the vendee holds the equitable title in trust for his vendor to pay purchase money. The vendee recognizes the still subsisting right of the vendor; the vendor is trustee, the vendee beneficiary of the trust. Their relation is mutual and friendly, and forbids adversary possession. They claim under the same title, both at law and in equity. Therefore, while Rader held legal title, possession under the title bond was not adverse to Rader. But how after Rader conveyed legal title to King? The legal title was no longer in Rader in trust for White. There was no contractual relation between King and White or those claiming under White. King claimed for himself. His claim was adverse to everybody. He did not recognize White's right, but claimed solely for himself. He was White's enemy. Having legal title, he is held to claim only in his own right against White, even against Rader. Ketchum v. Spurlock, 34 W. Va. 597, 12 S. E. 832. Hence any possession under the title bond would be adverse to King from the date of his deed from Rader. Said instruction 8 was erroneous in declaring the whole time of possession under the title bond adverse, instead of from the date of King's deed. And plaintiff's instructions 1 and 5 are erroneous in running adverse possession only from the deed to Runner under the title bond to White. If there was possession under the title bond within the interlock, it ran from the deed from Rader to King, and was not postponed to the date of the deed from Rader to Runner.

The court gave the defendant's instruction 3, saying that, if the part of the call in the deed from Rader to King running from the dogwood in the original long line to the ash and white oak pointers was put in the deed by mistake, and that the dogwood was intended to be the end of said long line in said deed instead of said points at the ash and white oak pointers, and that the line on the surveyor's plat running from the white oak N. 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ ° W. 22.29 poles, to three B. J. O. (now cut down), thence N. 7° E. 27.60 poles, to a dogwood, was the true line intended to be given in said deed, then they must find for the defendant. King's counsel complains of this instruction, because, as they claim, there was no evidence of such mistake. We need not discuss that matter for the reason that the instruction is plainly erroneous on another ground taken by King's counsel; that is, that even if such mistake was made, it could not be considered in an action of ejectment. How often is it necessary to reiterate that a solemn deed is the repository of what the parties intended, and so convincing and conclusive of what they intended that at law no evidence would be received to contradict it, except for fraud? Western Mining Co. v. Peytona Coal Co., 8 W. Va. 406; Long v. Perine, 41 W. Va. 314, 23 S. E. 611. As a general rule, however plain the mistake in a deed, it cannot be reformed or disobeyed by court or jury in a court of common law. It speaks for itself, and its words must be literally followed, because: "Parol evidence cannot be admitted to vary or add to a deed, as a general rule." Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567; Richardson v. McCaughy, 55 W. Va. 546, 47 S. E. 287. It passes legal title to the land regardless of the mistake. If a deed, by mistake, includes land within its bounds not intended to go into it, the only remedy is in equity to reform the deed. A court of common law cannot reform a deed. If it were to attempt it, it could not be told afterwards that it had been reformed. All that could be done would be to introduce the law decision as res judicata; but it would not show the reformation. Equity does this. Baxter v. Tanner, 35 W. Va. 60, 12 S. E. 1094; 13 Cyc. 576; 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 648. There are some instances where a line evidently mistaken has been taken as corrected at law. Smith v. Davis, 4 Grat. 50. But this instruction would let a jury correct several corners and lines, in effect make another deed. Our cases would not allow this. If the jury find that the ash and white oak pointers are a corner in King's deed, and its calls follow the line represented on the surveyor's plat from that corner, passing the small B. O., 3 B. O.'s (gone) to the W. O. (gone), hickory pointers, then the land in controversy is within that deed, and it passed to King legal title thereto, notwithstanding any such mistake.

Plaintiff's instruction 2 was properly rejected. It said that, if the defendant's deed did not cover the land in dispute, they should find for the plaintiff, unless the defendant had adverse possession for 10 years, under color of title. It omitted to say the jury must believe that the plaintiff's deed covered the land in dispute, and gave recovery solely on the fact that defendant's deed did not cover the land. A plaintiff must himself show title, and cannot recover on the weakness of defendant's title. With such modification, the instruction would be good.

We are of opinion that there was no error in allowing the field notes of Ross to be given in evidence as tending to show, in the absence of the title bond from Rader to White, its boundaries, to be considered by the jury.

For these reasons we reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and grant a new trial.

(53 W. Va. 464)

JOHNSON et al. v. LUDWICK et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. EQUITY—PETITION FOR REHEARING—WANT OF PROCESS.

Where a defendant has not been served with process in this state, and has not appeared in the cause, he has the right to file a petition for a rehearing, as provided in section 14, c. 124, Code 1890, and as a prerequisite to such right it is not required that he return to and appear openly in this state. This is only required in attachment proceedings, where a defendant is proceeded against by order of publication, and where he did not appear and make defense.

2. PROCESS—SERVICE—RETURN.

A return of service of process, which shows that it was served by posting at the usual place of abode of the defendant, the defendant not being found, is defective in not stating that the wife, or some member of the family of the defendant over 16 years of age, was not found at such usual place of abode.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 40, Cent. Dig. Process, §§ 169-171.]

3. EQUITY—DECREE—WANT OF PROCESS—REVERSAL.

A personal decree, taken against one who was not served with process and who did not appear in the cause, is void, and upon a proper bill of review, filed for that purpose, the decree will be reversed.

4. TRUSTS—RESULTING TRUST—CONVEYANCE TO WIFE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where land is purchased and paid for by the husband, and the conveyance taken in the name of the wife, the prima facie presumption is that a gift was intended, and in such case no resulting trust will arise, unless the presumption as to intention, which in such case is one of fact, and not of law, is repelled by competent evidence; and the evidence required to rebut such presumption must be clear and convincing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trusts, §§ 116, 119.]

5. SAME—EXPRESS TRUST.

But, where land is purchased and paid for by the husband, and the conveyance taken in the name of the wife, pursuant to an understanding and agreement between them at the time of the purchase and conveyance that the land is to be held by the wife for the benefit of the husband, this creates an express trust, which will be enforced in favor of the husband.

6. EQUITY—BILL OF REVIEW—JOINT DECREE—REVERSAL AS TO ONE DEFENDANT—EFFECT.

A wife, holding the legal title to a tract of land, died, leaving surviving her husband and her heirs at law, a brother and two sisters. After her death the husband, claiming to have purchased the land and to have paid the purchase money therefor, and to have had the same conveyed to the wife, pursuant to an agreement between himself and wife that she would take the conveyance in her name and hold the land in trust for him, filed his bill in equity against the heirs for the enforcement of the trust. There was no legal service of process upon one of the defendants. The defendants being cotenants, and the decree against them being joint, a reversal of such decree, upon bill of review, as to the one not served with process, operates as a reversal as to all of them.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Bill by John W. Johnson and others against Jacob M. Ludwick and others. Decree for defendants, and complainants appeal. Reversed.

Dent & Dent, C. M. Murphy, and W. R. D. Dent, for appellants. J. Hop Woods, for appellees.

SANDERS, J. On the 20th day of September, 1901, Mary E. Ludwick died, seised and possessed of a certain tract of land of about 100 acres lying in Barbour county, which was conveyed to her on the 25th day of June, 1887, by Morris W. Mauler and others. She left surviving her a husband, Jacob M. Ludwick, and her heirs at law, two sisters, Hannah Bryan and Susan Johnson, and one brother, John W. Johnson. In 1893 Jacob M. Ludwick instituted in the circuit court of said county a chancery suit against the heirs of his deceased wife, claiming to be entitled to hold in fee simple the said tract of land by reason of an understanding and agreement had between himself and wife at the time of the conveyance of the land to her by Mauler and others in 1887, to the effect that he was to pay the purchase money, and she was to take the conveyance in her name and hold the land for him, thereby asking for the establishment and enforcement of a secret, express trust between himself and wife. Hannah Bryan was proceeded against by order of publication, and John W. and Susan Johnson were served by leaving the process at their usual places of abode. Neither of the defendants appeared, and a decree on the bill taken for confessed as to the resident defendants and order of publication as to Hannah Bryan was pronounced, holding that Mary E. Ludwick, the wife of the plaintiff, at the time of her death held the said land in trust for the plaintiff as her husband, and enforcing the trust by decreeing a conveyance of the land to plaintiff. As provided by the decree, the land was conveyed to the plaintiff Jacob M. Ludwick, by a commissioner appointed for that purpose, on the 23d day of November, 1903, and in May, 1904, Ludwick, for the consideration of $1,338, one-third cash and the residue in one and two years, conveyed the coal underlying said land to James M. Guffey. The appellants, learning of said decree and the deed made in pursuance thereof, in April, 1905, filed their petition for rehearing, and bill in equity in the nature of a bill of review, and motion to correct for errors apparent on the face of the record, and filed with said petition a bond for costs as required by statute, and in May following Jacob M. Ludwick, by his counsel, moved the court to dismiss plaintiffs' bill and petition for want of equity, which motion was sustained and the bill dismissed, and this decree is now here, on appeal, for review.

In disposing of the questions arising herein, it will be first proper to determine whether or not Hannah Bryan, who was proceeded against as a nonresident by order of publication, and who did not appear in the cause, had the right, upon filing her petition and executing bond, to have a rehearing of the cause. "Any unknown party or other defendant, who was not served with process in this state, and did not appear in the case before the date of such judgment, decree or order, * * * may file his petition to have the proceedings reheard in the manner and form provided by section twenty-five of chapter one hundred and six of this Code, and not otherwise; and all the provisions of that section are hereby made applicable to proceedings under this section." Section 14, c. 124, Code 1899. "If a defendant against whom, on publication, judgment or decree has been or shall hereafter be rendered, * * * shall return to or appear openly in this state, he may, * * * petition to have the proceeding reheard. On giving security for the costs which have accrued and shall hereafter accrue, such defendants shall be admitted to make defense against such judgment or decree," etc. Section 25, c. 106, Code 1899.

It is submitted by counsel for the appellees that before the plaintiff Hannah Bryan would be entitled to such relief under section 14, c. 124, she must proceed in the manner provided by that section—that is, file her petition to have the proceedings reheard in the manner and form provided by section 25, c. 106, and not otherwise—as all of the provisions of section 25 are made applicable to section 14, and by section 25 it is required that the person filing such petition shall return to or appear openly in this state, so that before she would be entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the courts of this state in her behalf, or for the purpose of correcting an error against her, she must first place herself within its jurisdiction, in order that the court, if granting or refusing her relief, may have jurisdiction of her person and her property. Therefore, in dealing with this question, we are called upon to construe the meaning of the words "and not otherwise," found in said section 14, and the words "shall return to or appear openly in this state," in section 25, c. 106. It nowhere appears from the record that this petitioner has or has not returned to or appeared openly in this state, and therefore it is presumed that appellees' counsel claims that it should affirmatively appear in the petition filed for such rehearing that petitioner has returned to or appeared openly in the state, and that the petition not so stating it was proper for the court to refuse the rehearing and dismiss the petition. Under section 14, c. 124, it is provided that any unknown party or other defendant who was not served with process in this state and did not appear, etc., within a certain time, can file a petition to have the proceedings reheard. How? In the manner and form provided by section 25, c. 106, and not otherwise. The right to this class of persons is given to file the petition, but it must be done in a certain manner. This relates to the manner of proceeding. The absolute right is given to the party to file the petition, but it must be done under that section, and proceeded with as therein provided, as, for instance, before the defendant shall be admitted to make defense, he shall give bond for costs which have accrued and which shall hereafter accrue, but when this is done he has the right to make defense against the judgment or decree in the same manner as if he had appeared before the same was rendered. Under section 25, c. 106, it is not said that any unknown party or other defendant not served with process may file a petition to rehear, but it says: "If a defendant against whom, on order of publication, judgment or decree has been or shall hereafter be rendered * * * shall return to or appear openly in this state," he may, within a certain time, file such petition. The words "return to or appear openly in this state" are to classify the persons who can, under section 25, have rehearsings, and do not limit the persons referred to in section 14 to such persons thereby classified, but any unknown party or other defendant, who was not served with process in this state, and who did not appear, may file such petition, but must do so in the manner provided in said section 25. Therefore Hannah Bryan was entitled, upon the filing of her petition and the execution of bond, to make defense against the decree, and to deny her this right was error.

Then as to Susan Johnson, there was no legal service of process upon her. It purports to have been served by leaving a copy posted at her usual place of abode, but the return of service fails to show a compliance with the statute. It is in the following words: "On the 27th day of July, 1903, I executed the within summons on Susan Johnson by posting and leaving posted at the front door at her usual place of abode a copy, in Taylor county, West Virginia; she not being there or elsewhere found. J. W. Selvy, Deputy for B. F. Sayre, S. T. C." The statute provides that process may be served by delivering a copy to the person sought to be served, or, if he be not found, by delivering such copy at his usual place of abode, to his wife, or to any other person found there, who is a member of his family, and above the age of 16 years, and giving information of the purport of such copy to the person to whom it is delivered, or, if neither his wife nor any such other person be found there, and he be not found, by leaving such copy posted at the front door of such place of abode. So it will be seen that to make service process must be served upon the person, if found, and, if not found, upon his wife or some member of his family over the age of 16 years, and then, if neither be found, it can be served by posting. The return does not show that the wife, or some member of the family over the age of 16 years, was not found there. The return must show these facts, in order to constitute a valid return of service. This is substitutive service, and the statute must be complied with. It must be given to the wife or member of the family, if found at the usual place of abode, before the right exists to serve by posting. Service of process is necessary to a valid judgment or decree, and, when the service is substitutional, the statute must be strictly complied with. The process may have been regularly served, but the only evidence we have as to such service is the return of the officer, and, if it fails to disclose that the requirements of the statute have been complied with, the service is so defective that we must hold that it is equivalent to no service, and any decree rendered against the petitioner is therefore a nullity. Adkins v. Insurance Co., 45 W. Va. 384, 82 S. E. 194. Therefore the petitioner Susan Johnson not having been served with process and the decree, for that reason, being void, she not only had the right to file her petition, under section 14 of chapter 124 of the Code of 1899, for a rehearing, but she was entitled to have it treated as a bill of review, which was asked by her to be done, and the action of the court in refusing to so treat it was erroneous. A decree taken without the service of process, or where the return of process is so defective as not to show that the party was properly before the court, is such as should be reversed, upon a proper bill of review filed for that purpose. Therefore the court not only erred in dismissing her bill of review, but also erred in refusing to entertain her bill and reverse the final decree entered in the cause of Jacob M. Ludwick against the appellants. McCoy v. Allen, 16 W. Va. 724.

The summons upon John W. Johnson, as has been noted, was served by leaving a copy at his usual place of abode with his wife; he not being found. This service conforms to the statute, and is, therefore, good. But counsel presents that inasmuch as it is substitutive service, under section 14, c. 124, Code 1899, he should be accorded the privilege of a rehearing. It is true that the service is substituted for actual service, but, at the same time, it is, under our statute, regarded as personal service, and such as forms the basis for a personal decree or judgment. It may, in some instances, work hardships, but nevertheless our statute, said section 14, has provided for it, and only such persons as are unknown, or other defendants who were not served with process in this state, or who did not appear in the case, can file such petition for a rehearing under that section. This does not apply to one who was served with process in this state, although the service may be substitutional, and to so construe this section would be giving it a very elastic construction indeed. Not being entitled to have the pleading treated as a petition for rehearing, it is claimed on behalf of the petitioner John W. Johnson that it should be treated as a bill of review, for errors apparent. This, of course, is correct, as it sets forth all the requirements of a bill of review, and when this is done, as this court has repeatedly held, it is immaterial what the pleading is denominated, if it contains the necessary allegations to give the plaintiff relief. Then, treating it as such, the question arises, is there error in the decree or proceedings sought to be reviewed?

It is urged that the court below should have dismissed the original bill, on its own motion, because it showed, upon its face, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief asked. This contention cannot be sustained. The bill was taken for confessed as to the petitioner, and it contains allegations to the effect that the land which was conveyed to Mary E. Ludwick was purchased and paid for by Jacob M. Ludwick, with an express understanding and agreement between him and his wife, at the time, that she would take the conveyance in her own name, and hold the title in trust for him. This court has held that where land is purchased and paid for by one person, and a conveyance taken to another, with the understanding and agreement that it will be held in trust for the purchaser, there arises an express trust, which will be enforced in equity; but it is also held that, if the person in whose name the conveyance is taken is the wife of the person who paid the purchase money, the prima facie presumption is that a gift was intended, and, in such case, a resulting trust will not arise. But this is only a prima facie presumption, and where the bill alleges, as it does here, that it was the express understanding and agreement between the one who purchased and the one in whose name the conveyance was taken that the land should be held in trust for the purchaser, there is a sufficient allegation upon which to compel its enforcement. But, if the allegations of the bill in this regard were denied, it would devolve upon the husband to show that it was not a gift, but that the land was to be held by the wife for his benefit. Deck v. Tabler, 41 W. Va. 332, 23 S. E. 721, 56 Am. St. Rep. 837. Therefore, if the allegations of the bill are true, and, as the bill was taken for confessed, they are taken to be true, we see no error in this respect which calls for a reversal of the decree.

But it may be claimed by the plaintiff John W. Johnson that it was error to take the decree upon the original bill without having Susan Johnson before the court, she being a co-tenant with him and Hannah Bryan, and sued jointly with them, but whether this is such error as he could take advantage of it is not necessary to determine, because the reversal of the decree upon the part of Susan Johnson operates as a reversal of the entire decree. Upon the death of Mary E. Ludwick this land descended to the plaintiffs, and is held by them as co-tenants. Jacob M. Ludwick, under the allegations of his bill, is entitled to the whole tract, or no part of it, and any defense advanced by one of the heirs will redound to the benefit of the others. It cannot be a trust as to the interest of one, and not as to the interest of the others. It is not so claimed. The estate is joint, and the decree is likewise joint, and when reversed as to one it is reversed as to all. Vandiver v. Roberts, 4 W. Va. 493; Lyman v. Thompson, 11 W. Va. 427; Vance Shoe Co. v. Haught, 41 W. Va. 275, 23 S. E. 553; Holderby v. Hagan, 57 W. Va. —, 50 S. E. 437; Dickenson v. Davis, 2 Leigh, 401; Lenow v. Lenow, 8 Grat. 349; Walker's Ex'r v. Page, 21 Grat. 636; Hogg's Eq. Pro. 607.

For the reasons given, the decree dismissing the plaintiffs' petition and bill of review, and the decree rendered on the 31st day of October, 1903, upon the original bill filed by Jacob M. Ludwick against the plaintiffs, holding that the land conveyed to Mary E. Ludwick, his wife, was held in trust by her for Jacob M. Ludwick, are reversed, and this cause is remanded.

(58 W. Va. 482)

TOWN OF HARPER'S FERRY v. V. KAPLON & BRO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. DEDICATION—PUBLIC STREET—EVIDENCE.

A dedication of land by the owner, for the purpose of a public street, may be established by evidence contained in a deed made by such owner to a private person, in which the rights of the public are recognized.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Dedication, §§ 33-38.]

2. SAME—ACCEPTANCE.

As between the owner so dedicating, or his alienees, and the public authority claiming the dedication, the acceptance thereof may be implied from the actual appropriation and use of the land, by such public authority, for the purpose of the dedication.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Dedication, §§ 73-76.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County.

Bill by the town of Harper's Ferry against V. Kaplon & Bro. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. M. Mason, Jr., for appellant F. W. Brown, for appellees.

COX, J. The town of Harper's Ferry filed its bill in the circuit court of Jefferson county against Victor Kaplon and Abraham Kaplon, partners, etc., for the purpose of enjoining them from constructing a building upon a strip of land alleged to be a part of a public street, called "Church Street," in said town, and thereby constituting a nuisance upon such street. The defendants demurred to the bill, and moved to dissolve the injunction before answering. Upon hearing a decree was entered by said circuit court sustaining the demurrer, dissolving the injunction, and dismissing the bill. From this decree, plaintiff appeals.

The question to be determined is the sufficiency of the bill. The plaintiff claims a dedication of the strip of land in controversy to public use. The material allegations to be considered on the question of dedication, other than the description of the strip of land, are as follows: "Plaintiff complains and says that by virtue of the dedication made by J. C. McGraw and Katie A. McGraw the town of Harper's Ferry had become the owner and possessor of a strip of land in Harper's Ferry, W. Va., lying on the south side of what is known as Church street, described as follows: * * * This strip of land was in a measure claimed by J. C. and Katie A. McGraw as part of lot 48, which was inherited by them from their father, Jas. McGraw, but it was always doubtful whether said strip of land was owned by said J. C. and Katie A. McGraw, as heirs of Jas. McGraw, their father, under the deed from Noah H. Swayne to the said Jas. McGraw, dated the 1st day of August, 1865, and recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court of Jefferson county, in Deed Book 1, page 182, inasmuch as the deed from the said Noah H. Swayne to the said Jas. McGraw did not fully describe the said lot No. 48, and inasmuch as the town of Harper's Ferry had through its authorities occupied said strip of land as a part of said Church street for years, and so the said J. C. McGraw and Katie A. McGraw, as had their father, permitted the town authorities of Harper's Ferry to use said strip of land as a part of Church street and to improve the same by making a road or sidewalk along said strip of land. And to set at rest the matter and remove all possibility of doubt about the dedication as a matter of record on the 23d day of September, 1897, J. C. McGraw and Katie A. McGraw made a complete dedication of the whole of said strip of land by so bargaining and covenanting and agreeing with the Right Reverend A. Van de Vyver, the Bishop of Richmond, Va., by a deed dated the 22d day of September, 1897, and recorded in the said county clerk's office in Deed Book 83, page 513, and thereupon, as the corporation authorities had done before, the corporation proceeded to construct a wall, grade and improve it by putting stone upon said strip of land, and otherwise working and keeping it in order as part of said street, thereby accepting the said strip of land as dedicated to the town as a part of said Church street. The said McGraws made said dedication so complete partially because they were members of the Catholic Church, whereof the Right Reverend A. Van de Vyver was the bishop, and said McGraws knew that their Catholic Church, which was situated in Harper's Ferry, on Church street, at the point where said strip of land abuts on said street, would be greatly improved by said street being widened at that place, and without said street being made the wider to the extent of said strip of land that the approach to said church would have been greatly disfigured. J. C. and Katie A. McGraw, as had their father before them, had contributed heavily to the building of said church and to its improvement after it was built. Moreover, said lot 48 when so owned by Jas. McGraw, and when owned by J. C. McGraw and Katie A. McGraw, was a vacant lot, and owing to its configuration was enhanced in value by reason of the said Church street being made the wider; the said irregular strip (so dedicated) being totally useless as a part of said lot. Said lot fronts on Shenandoah street and runs back to Church street, and its frontage on Church street is 50 feet higher than its Shenandoah street frontage. J. C. and Katie A. McGraw, 12 days after they had executed said deed of dedication, made an assignment for the benefit of the creditors, and conveyed their title to lot 48, and in due course said lot 48 was sold under proceedings of the court, and V. Kaplon and Abraham Kaplon, partners as aforesaid, bought said lot in 1898, and a year or two later built a large building on said lot, after having blasted—dug out—said lot back to the southern edge of said strip."

To constitute a dedication of land by the owner to public use, his acts and declarations must be deliberate, unequivocal, and decided, manifesting a positive and unmistakable intention to abandon his property to the specific public use claimed. Pierpoint v. Harrisville, 9 W. Va. 215; Boughner v. Clarksburg, 15 W. Va. 394; Miller v. Aracoma, 30 W. Va. 606, 5 S. E. 148; Yates v. West Grafton, 33 W. Va. 507, 11 S. E. 8; Hast v. Railroad Co., 52 W. Va. 396, 44 S. E. 155. Plaintiff alleges an express and positive dedication of the strip of land in controversy for the purpose of a public street by deed of record from J. C. and Katie A. McGraw to the Right Reverend A. Van de Vyver, dated the 22d day of September, 1897. This deed was made to an individual, and the appellant is not a party to it by name. It is contended that this deed is not a sufficient dedication to the public. A dedication of land by the owner to the public, for the purpose of a public street, may be established by evidence contained in a deed made by such owner to a private person, in which the rights of the public are recognized. Riddle v. Town of Charlestown, 43 W. Va. 796, 28 S. E. 831; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyc. Law, 33 & 37; 13 Cyc. 463. Elliott on Roads & Streets, § 123, says: "The authorities show that dedications have been established in every conceivable way by which the intention of the party could be manifested. If the donor's acts are such as indicate an intention to appropriate the land to public use, then upon acceptance by the public the dedication becomes complete." See, also, Id. §§ 124, 163. This seems to us to be a complete answer to the contention that this is not a dedication to the public. We think the bill sufficiently alleges an express and positive dedication, on the part of the owners, of the strip of land in controversy, to the public for the purpose of a public street. There are some allegations relating to an implied dedication, but it is not necessary to pass upon their sufficiency, holding, as we do, that an express dedication is alleged.

As to the acceptance by the appellant of such dedication, the bill says: "And thereupon, as the corporation authorities had done before, the corporation proceeded to construct a wall, grade and improve it by putting stone upon said strip of land, and otherwise working and keeping it in order as part of said street, thereby accepting the said strip of land as dedicated to the town as a part of said Church street." No question of the right to charge the town with the duty of keeping the street in repair, or of making it liable for injuries occasioned thereon, is involved. As between the owner dedicating the strip, or his alienees, and the public authority claiming the dedication, the acceptance thereof may be implied from the actual appropriation and use of the land by such public authority for the purpose of the dedication. Taylor v. Philippi, 35 W. Va. 554, 14 S. E. 130; Sturmer v. County Court, 42 W. Va. 724, 26 S. E. 532, 36 L. R. A. 300; Riddle v. Town of Charlestown, supra; Yates v. West Grafton, supra; Jarvis v. Town of Grafton, 44 W. Va. 453, 30 S. E. 178; Hast v. Railroad Co., supra; Pence v. Bryant, 54 W. Va. 263, 46 S. E. 275.

It is contended that the assignment and conveyance by J. O. and Katie A. McGraw for the benefit of creditors was recorded before the deed to Van de Vyver; but this, if true, does not appear upon demurrer. The bill alleges that 12 days after the McGraws had executed the deed of dedication they made an assignment and conveyance for the benefit of creditors; but it does not allege that such assignment or conveyance was ever recorded. No paper or exhibit is made a part of the bill which shows whether or not this assignment and conveyance was recorded, or, if recorded, when it was recorded. We do not now decide whether or not the date of the recordation of this assignment and conveyance, if recorded, is material in the final determination of the case, but only that it does not appear upon demurrer.

The bill is also objected to because it does not specifically allege that the plaintiff is a municipal corporation. The courts will take judicial notice of that fact. Beasley v. Town of Beckley, 28 W. Va. 81. The corporate name of the plaintiff is set forth in full, and that is sufficient. Snyder v. Phila. Co., 54 W. Va. 149, 46 S. E. 366, 63 L. R. A. 896, 102 Am. St. Rep. 941. The matter complained of by the bill, viz., the threatened construction of a building by a private person upon a public street, is a proper matter for relief by injunction. Ralston v. Weston, 46 W. Va. 544, 33 S. E. 326, 76 Am. St. Rep. 834; Pence v. Bryant, 54 W. Va. 263, 46 S. E. 275. It appears to us that the bill is sufficient in law, and that the demurrer should have been overruled.

The decree complained of is reversed, the demurrer to the bill is overruled, and the motion to dissolve the temporary injunction is overruled, and the injunction continued until the further hearing thereof in the circuit court; and this cause is remanded, to be further proceeded with in accordance with the principles herein announced and the rules governing courts of equity.

(53 W. Va. 559)

OLD NAT. BANK OF MARTINSBURG et al.
v. BERKELEY COUNTY COURT et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 15, 1905.)

TAXATION—EXEMPTIONS—BONDS OF UNITED STATES—NATIONAL BANKS.

Bonds of the United States held by a national bank as part of its capital cannot be taxed by the state or under its authority. Stocks in such bank may be taxed to its owner (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Berkeley County.

Action by the Old National Bank of Martinsburg and others against the county court of Berkeley county and others. Judgments for plaintiffs, and certain defendants bring error. Affirmed.

C. W. Dillon and C. W. May, Atty. Gen., for plaintiffs in error. Faulkner, Walker & Woods, for defendants in error.

BRANNON, P. The Old National Bank or Martinsburg and the Citizens' National Bank of Martinsburg rendered to an assessor of Berkeley county for taxation in 1903, separate statements of the value of all their personal property, including money, credits and investments, in pursuance of the tax assessment law of West Virginia, showing the total of their property, but deducting therefrom the bonds of the United States held by them as securities in which their capital stock had been invested. The assessor denied their right to deduct such bonds, and assessed them with their entire personal property including such bonds. The said banks filed before the county court their joint petition asking that they be relieved from such assessment of United States bonds and their assessments diminished by the amount of such bonds, and the county court having refused them relief, they carried the case by writ of certiorari to the circuit court, and that court reversed the action of the county court, and exonerated the banks from such assessment to the extent of said national bonds, and the state and county have brought the case to this court by writ of error.

In the year 1819, that great decision was pronounced by the Supreme Court of the United States, through Chief Justice Marshall, which has ever since exerted so much influence upon the powers of the federal government. I refer to the historical case of McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. Ed. 579. It holds that "the state governments have no right to tax any of the constitutional means employed by the government of the Union to execute its constitutional powers. The states have no power, by taxation, or otherwise, to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control, the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress, to carry into effect the powers vested in the national government." This doctrine has been ever since maintained, and has been frequently said to be axiomatic. Owensboro National Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 19 Sup. Ct. 537, 43 L. Ed. 850. Under this principle falls a national bank, since it has been held frequently to be an agency or instrumentality created for public national purpose, and as such, necessarily subject to the paramount authority of the nation, and beyond the power or control or regulation of any state, save only so far as Congress may confer upon the state that power. Davis v. Elmira Savings Bank, 161 U. S. 283, 16 Sup. Ct. 502, 40 L. Ed. 700. Therefore, as held in Owensboro Nat. Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 19 Sup. Ct. 537, 43 L. Ed. 850: "A state is wholly without power to levy any tax, either direct or indirect, upon national banks, their property, assets and franchises, except when permitted so to do by the legislation of Congress." The opinion says (page 668 of 173 U. S., page 538 of 19 Sup. Ct. [43 L. Ed. 850]): "It follows then necessarily from these conclusions that the respective states would be wholly without power to levy any tax, either direct or indirect, upon the national banks, their property, assets, or franchises, were it not for the permissive legislation of Congress."

Seeing that the state cannot tax a national bank, either as a corporation, or by its property of any sort, except as Congress has allowed it, we must look at the federal statute. The national banking act provided that "nothing herein shall prevent all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the state within which the association is located; but the Legislature of each state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the state, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any state shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either state, county, or municipal taxes, to the same extent, according to its value as other real property is taxed." Rev. St. U. S. § 5219 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3502]. On this section the Supreme Court in said case held: "Section 5219 of the Revised Statutes is the measure of the power of the states to tax national banks, their property, or their franchises, that power being confined to a taxation of the shares of stock in the names of the shareholders, and to an assessment of the real estate of the bank."

We find in that section no power given a state to tax the bank as a corporation, its franchise, its property or investments—any personal property—owned by it. It does empower a state, county, or municipality to tax a bank's real property, but not any other property owned by the bank itself. Thus not only are national bonds held by the bank exempt by force of this section, but also all other personalty is exempt, and this by force of that section, without looking at other law, for the simple reason that it is a national bank, and no power to tax such personalty is conceded by national law. The section quoted above expressly concedes to a state power to tax shares of stock owned by individual stockholders. Under that section the state, to repeat, can tax stockholders in their own names, with their shares of stock in a national bank, but cannot tax the bank, as such, with any of its personal property. Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229; Owensboro Nat. Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 19 Sup. Ct. 537, 43 L. Ed. 850. In Louisville v. Third Nat. Bank, 174 U. S. 435, 19 Sup. Ct. 874, 43 L. Ed. 1037, it was held that taxes were illegal because levied upon the property and franchise of a national bank, and not upon the shares of stock in the names of the stockholders. Section 5219, Rev. St. U. S., alone rendered void the taxes in this case levied on the bank's capital for the reason alone above stated that the state cannot tax property of any kind, personal property of a national bank. But it is argued that, as the act of Congress allows taxation against stockholders on their shares, the taxation of the bonds to the banks is equivalent to taxation of the shares of the stockholders themselves. In the first place, the letter of section 5219 does not justify us in sustaining such equivalency. It says the stock shall be charged to its holder. And in the second place, we say that this particular point has been several times made before the Supreme Court of the United States, and it has uniformly been held that no such equivalency exists, and that the charge of the capital of a national bank to the bank is not the equivalent of a charge of the stock to its owners, and that a charge to the bank of its capital is void, and not justified on the theory that it amounts to the same as would a charge of the stock to its holders. That court has several times held that the bank in its corporate capacity or personality is one thing, and the shares in its stock another and different thing. Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229; Bradley v. People, 4 Wall. 459, 18 L. Ed. 433; Bank v. Commonwealth, 9 Wall. 358, 19 L. Ed. 701; Owensboro Nat. Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 19 Sup. Ct. 537, 43 L. Ed. 850; Third Nat. Bank of Louisville v. Stone, 174 U. S. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. 759, 43 L. Ed. 1035. I have said that section 5219 alone forbids, or rather does not grant, the states the right to tax personality of a national bank, including therein national bonds. The very failure of that section to concede that right denies it. That consideration invalidates the tax imposed in this case. But I add that section 3701, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2480], says: "All stocks, bonds, treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under state or municipal or local authority." Why should national bonds be taxable simply because held by a national bank? They would not be taxable to an individual. Would not that section also forbid it, there being no grant by Congress to the states of power to tax such bonds? The claim of the state that circulating notes of the bank based on national bonds can be taxed is not sound. They are debts against the bank. The promissory notes given by borrowers for those notes are property of the bank not taxable. There must be national law to tax bank capital, bonds, or notes. Where is the national law to tax bonds or notes?

Such is the federal law, and be the state law what it may, if inconsistent with the federal law, the state law must yield. The federal law is supreme in some cases; the state law is supreme in some cases. In this case, we must follow the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, even if we have to disregard state law. But I do not think that our state statutes are repugnant to federal law. Consistently with the rule which requires a court to so construe a statute, if possible, as to make it harmonize with the Constitution, so we ought to construe the statute law of the state so as to harmonize with national statutes and decisions in matters where the national authority is supreme. The state Code of 1899 (chapter 29, § 41) requires that "every person of full age and sound mind shall list for taxation the property belonging to him, including the shares held by him in any national or other bank in this or any other state, except where the same is listed under the provisions of section 64 of this chapter." Section 64, c. 29, provides, as to incorporated companies, that the assessor "shall ascertain from the proper officers or agents of all incorporated companies . . . the actual value of the capital employed or invested by them in their trade or business [exclusive of real estate and property exempt by law from taxation]." Now, observe that section 41 does in terms require a taxpayer to list his shares in a national bank. This is consistent with the federal law. Section 43 declares that there shall be exempt from listing by the taxpayer property "belonging to the United States, or which, by the laws of the United States, is exempt from taxation by or under state authority." By this provision bonds of the United States are taken out of the taxation imposed by section 41, because by federal law such bonds are exempt. The law of this state is composed of both federal and state law, and property exempt from state taxation by federal law is to be regarded as exempt from taxation under the state assessment law. When section 64 says that exempt property shall not be reported, property exempt by federal law is meant, as well as that exempt by state law. Thus sections 41 and 43 harmonize with federal law, taken together. Section 41 requires persons to list property, including shares in national or other banks, except where the same is listed under the provisions of section 64. And section 64 requires incorporated companies to return for taxation the value of the capital employed or invested by them. This provision means that shares of stock may be charged either to the holder or to the banks; but reading it with section 41 and the provision of section 64 requiring them to report "the actual value of the capital employed or invested by them in their trade or business [exclusive of real estate and property exempt by law from taxation]," we say that the provision giving power to tax bank stock either to the individual or to the bank can apply only to shares in state banks, because the federal statute requires the shares in national banks to be taxed to the holders, and not to the banks, and the state law in section 64 releases the banks from reporting any property or investment of a bank that is exempt by law. In other words, the said provisions of the Code exempting a corporation from reporting property exempt by law operates to release them from reporting for taxation in their name shares of stock or investments, exempt by state or national law. We do not think that the state law, properly construed, justifies the assessment in the name of the banks of any personal property, and does not justify the assessment to a national bank of its investments in United States bonds. Section 51 saying that when stock is charged to a company, its owner need not report it, and section 47 making the word "investments" include securities of the United States, taken alone, would argue against this construction; but we must read all sections coming into the question together. Section 51 cannot apply when federal law forbids an assessment of a national bank. Section 47 does not, under "investments," tax those things exempt. It only means to define "investments" by saying what it covers. It does not per se assess taxes. It means that a national bond is an investment, and if law should tax it, it would cover it, as it would cover national bank stock; but it does not itself tax. It does not tax investments exempt by other sections. In other words, national bonds are not taxed by West Virginia statutes, held by individuals or banks, national or state. I will add that under section 69 the stock can be back taxed to its owners. Therefore we affirm the judgment of the circuit court of Berkeley county.

(58 W. Va. 523)

PARR v. CURRENCE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1905.)

WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW—RECORD—EVIDENCE.

Syllabus in Dudley v. Barrett, 52 S. E. 100, 58 W. Va., —, and points 1, 2, and 3. Syl., Tracy's Adm'r v. Coal Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 825, and point 1, Syl., McKendree v. Shelton, 41 S. E. 909, 51 W. Va. 516, approved. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Randolph County.
Action by Genevive B. Parr against Jonathan Currence and William Currence. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. B. Maxwell, C. H. Scott, and Harding & Harding, for plaintiff in error. J. F. Strader and C. W. Dalley, for defendants in error.

McWHORTER, J. Genevive B. Parr brought her action of ejectment in the circuit court of Randolph county against Jonathan Currence and William Currence for a tract of 790 acres of land. The case was tried and the verdict of the jury and judgment were in favor of the defendants. Plaintiff brought it here upon writ of error, and the judgment was reversed and a new trial awarded. The case is reported in 53 W. Va. 524, 44 S. E. 184. A jury was impaneled for another trial on the 18th day of May, 1904, and returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for an undivided five-sixths interest in fee simple to the land in controversy. The defendants moved to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant them a new trial, which motion was overruled, and judgment entered upon said verdict.

In the course of the trial the defendants took bills of exceptions numbered 1 to 6, inclusive; the sixth purporting to include a certificate of all the evidence given in the case by both parties. Bills of exceptions Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 5 go to the ruling of the court in refusing to allow certain questions to be answered by witness, Peter Scott, introduced on behalf of the defendants, which it is contended by defendants should have been admitted. Bill of exceptions No. 2 is to the ruling of the court in admitting certain documentary evidence on behalf of the plaintiff over the objections of the defendants, which they insist should not have been admitted in evidence. The original bill of exceptions No. 6, which was brought up on writ of certiorari, together with the certificate of the clerk of the circuit court making return thereof, is as follows:

"Genevive Parr, Plff. Below, Deft. in Error, v. Jonathan and William Currence, Defts. Below, Piffs. in Error. In Ejectment.

"In the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.

"I, G. Nelson Wilson, clerk of the circuit court of Randolph county, and who made up the record in the above entitled action, do certify that 'defendants' bill of exceptions No. 6,' which begins on page 17 of the second printed record in the case, came to me in skeleton form, exactly as follows:

" 'Defendants' Bill of Exceptions No. 6.

" 'Genevive Parr, Plaintiff, v. Jonathan and William Currence. In Ejectment.

" 'Be it remembered that upon the trial of the above-entitled cause the plaintiff and defendants to maintain the issue involved upon said trial introduced the following evidence: [Clerk here insert all the evidence introduced by both the plaintiff and the defendants as shown by the certificate thereof made by the official court stenographer.]

" 'And the court certifies under the hand and seal of the judge thereof that the foregoing evidence is all of the evidence that was introduced upon the trial of said action, and this certificate of the evidence, for the purpose of identification, is marked defendants' bill of exceptions No. 6.

" 'Jno. Homer Holt [Seal]

" 'Judge of Third Judicial Circuit.'

"Along with said bill of exceptions there came to me the vacation order in the case, which is found on page II, of the second printed record. When I came to make up the transcript upon the order of the defendants, preparatory to their applying to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, for a writ of error, I inserted as part of said bill of exceptions, the statement of evidence found in said second printed record beginning on page 17 and ending with the form of stenographer's certificate on page 48. This statement was contained in a typewritten paper filed in my office on June 10, 1904:

" 'Parr v. Currence. In Ejectment.

" 'Evidence.'

"No name was signed to the form of stenographer's certificate, ending on page 48, and there was no certificate of said paper made by the Judge of said Court, and no mark of identification of any kind made by him.

"Given under my hand this 12th day of September, 1905.

"G. Nelson Wilson,

"Clerk Circuit Court of Randolph County."

There is copied into the record what purports to be the evidence given before the jury in the trial of the case at the end of which is found the following certificate in blank:

"I, Howard H. Holt, the official stenographer of this court, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct transcript of the shorthand notes taken by me of the testimony in this case.

"_____, Stenographer."

There is nothing to identify this matter inserted as the evidence given in the case as being such evidence. The bill of exceptions No. 6 directs the clerk to "insert all the evidence introduced by both the plaintiff and the defendants as shown by the certificate thereof made by the official court stenographer." It nowhere appears in the record that the court had an official stenographer, or a stenographer appointed to take the evidence in this case. The only reference in the whole record to such official is the direction of the judge to the clerk to insert the evidence in the bill of exceptions, and that contained in the statement at the close of what is inserted in the record as the evidence in the case, but that statement is signed by no one, and it does not appear from anything in the record that the said paper purporting to be such evidence was before the judge at the time he signed the said bill of exceptions, nor is it in any manner described or identified by mark, letter, number, or any other means of identification, nor was it annexed or attached to said bill of exceptions. It is insisted by counsel for plaintiffs in error that without bill of exceptions No. 6 it is clear from the nature of the questions asked of witness Scott, and the information expected to be elicited from the witness in reply thereto, that the court erred in refusing to permit the questions to be answered. Without the evidence before this court, we are unable to see that the admission of the evidence excluded could have changed the result or produced a different verdict. "In reviewing a judgment in an action at law, upon a writ of error, when the evidence is not made a part of the record, this court will not consider assignments of error involving a consideration of the evidence, but will affirm the judgment." Dudley v. Barrett (decided at this term) 52 S. E. 100. In that case there was copied at length into the record what purported to be the testimony of witnesses in the case for the respective parties upon the trial, to which was appended what purported to be the certificate of John T. Harris official stenographer of the court to the effect that he made a report in shorthand writing of the testimony adduced and proceedings had at the trial of the action, and that the transcription thereof was a faithful and true translation of said report, but the record failing to show that Harris was appointed by the court stenographer to report the proceedings had and the testimony given in the case under the statute the paper thus copied into the record had no greater value than a fugitive paper made by any other person which might have been found amongst the papers in the case. In case at bar the paper copied by the clerk as the evidence was not certified by any one. See Tracy's Adm'x v. Coal Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 825; McKendree v. Shelton, 51 W. Va. 516, 41 S. E. 909; Williamson v. Hays, 35 W. Va. 52, 12 S. E. 1092.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the circuit court of Randolph county is affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 544)

COAL & COKE RY. CO. v. JOYCE et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 15, 1905.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—SUFFICIENCY.

The skeleton bill of exceptions relied on in this case for the purpose of making the evidence a part of it does not do so, and the evidence is not a part of the record, under the authority of the cases of Parr v. Currence, 52 S. E. 496, 58 W. Va. —, Dudley v. Barrett et al., 52 S. E. 100, 58 W. Va. —, Tracy's Adm'x v. Coal Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 825, and McKendree v. Shelton, 41 S. E. 909, 51 W. Va. 516.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Randolph County.
Action by the Coal & Coke Railway Company against Thomas W. Joyce and others. Judgment for plaintiff, defendants bring error. Affirmed.

W. B. Maxwell, for plaintiffs in error.
C. W. Dalley and E. D. Talbott, for defendant in error.

COX, J. Thomas W. Joyce, Margaret Caveney, and Ann Joyce complain of an order of the circuit court of Randolph county, made in a proceeding to condemn land for railroad purposes, in which they are defendants, sustaining the motion of the applicant, Coal & Coke Railway Company, to set aside the verdict of the jury therein and granting it a new trial.

The question whether or not there is error in this order involves a consideration of the evidence. This record presents another case of a fatal skeleton bill of exceptions, whereby the evidence is not made a part of it, and therefore not a part of the record. The original bill of exceptions, which is claimed to make the evidence a part of it, was brought here by certiorari. It is a skeleton bill. The parenthetical direction to the clerk therein contained is as follows: "(Here insert the evidence as certified by the official stenographer, which evidence is now here referred to and directed to be here inserted.)" It does not appear that the evidence was annexed to the bill or so marked by letter, number, or other means of identification mentioned in the bill, or so described in the bill as to leave no doubt, when found in the record, that it is the evidence referred to in the bill. The bill of exceptions is therefore insufficient to make the evidence a part of it, or of the record. The statement copied in the record, purporting to be questions and answers of witnesses on the trial, has appended to it the following certificate:

"Grafton, W. Va., Jan. 29, 1904. I, W. H. Pilson, former stenographer of the 3d judicial circuit hereby certify that the foregoing evidence is a true copy of my shorthand notes taken at the trial of the above-styled cause. Given under my hand this the 29th day of January, 1904. W. H. Pilson."

The record discloses no appointment of an official stenographer, and, if it did, we do not think that the statement copied in the record, purporting to be the questions and answers of witnesses on the trial, is sufficiently identified by the bill of exceptions as the evidence directed to be therein inserted. This case is governed by the cases of Parr v. Currence, 58 W. Va. —, 52 S. E. 496, Dudley v. Barrett, 58 W. Va. —, 52 S. E. 100, Tracy's Adm'x v. Coal Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 825, and McKendree v. Shelton, 51 W. Va. 516, 41 S. E. 909.

This court can examine no question presented, but must affirm the order complained of, and remand the case.

(58 W. Va. 487)

WHEELING & E. G. R. CO. v. TOWN OF TRIADELPHIA et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1905.)1. STREET RAILROADS—GRANT BY MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES—EFFECT.

An ordinance, passed by the council of a town, granting to a street railway company the right to lay its track and operate its railway in the streets of the town, and accepted by the railway company, constitutes a contract between the town and such company, vesting title to such right or easement in it, unless the ordinance contains conditions precedent compliance with which is requisite to the vesting of title.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 44, Cent. Dig. Street Railroads, §§ 64-70.]

2. SAME—FORFEITURE OF RIGHT.

Such right may be forfeited and lost by failure to comply with subsequent conditions, and, if the ordinance expressly provides for forfeiture as the penalty of noncompliance with conditions specified in it, substantial performance of the contract as a whole constitutes no answer to a proceeding to forfeit for failure to comply with such conditions, however slight their relative importance may be. The question of materiality is, in such case, withdrawn from the courts by the stipulations of the contract.

3. SAME—CONDITIONS—NONPERFORMANCE.

A street railway license or privilege in a street may be forfeited for failure to lay planks of prescribed dimensions along the rails of its track in front of improved property, if the ordinance expressly gives the right to forfeit it for such cause.

4. EQUITY—RELIEF AGAINST FORFEITURE.

Equity will relieve from forfeitures for nonperformance of covenants other than those for the payment of money, arising out of accident, mistake, or surprise, and in the absence of willful and deliberate refusal to perform, when no pecuniary injury has resulted to the covenantee and the wrong done is easily remediable; but such power of relief is discretionary, and will not be exercised unless the delinquent covenantor is able and willing to immediately perform the covenant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, §§ 69-71.]

5. SAME—ENFORCEMENT OF FORFEITURE.

Equity will not permit the enforcement of a forfeiture in an inequitable and oppressive manner, nor a perversion thereof to purposes other than those for which the power of forfeiture has been reserved.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, §§ 69-75.]

6. SAME—OPPRESSIVE CONDUCT.

In the exercise of such power, under an ordinance of a municipal corporation prescribing notice and specification of cause as a necessary preliminary step, the officers of such corporation must deal fairly, openly, and frankly with the party whose rights they attempt to take away, and abstain from such conduct as will work a surprise upon him. Their conduct is governed by substantially the same rules and principles as apply to proceedings by private persons under similar circumstances. In order to be inequitable and oppressive, their conduct need not be actually fraudulent. If in equity and conscience it is oppressive or lacking in fairness, equity will relieve, however honest and sincere the parties attempting to forfeit may have been.

7. APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The discretion of the court in such case is a sound legal discretion, subject to review, and the appellate court will reverse the action of the trial court when, in its opinion, relief has been improperly denied.

8. STREET RAILROADS—USE OF STREETS—FORFEITURE OF RIGHT—RELIEF.

A declaration of forfeiture of a street railway privilege in a street by the council of a town, effected by repeal of the ordinance by which the privilege was granted, pursuant to a reservation of power so to do, for cause and after notice, has not the force and effect of a judicial determination of the existence of cause for forfeiture, and does not preclude a resort to the courts by the railway company for vindication of its rights. After such repeal, pursuant to notice, the railway company may, by injunction, prevent the town authorities from removing or disturbing its track, if no cause of forfeiture existed, or the circumstances shown are such as to call for the exercise of equity jurisdiction to relieve from forfeiture. In so far as the decision in Town of Davis v. Davis, 21 S. E. 906, 40 W. Va. 464, imports the contrary of the foregoing proposition, it is re-examined and disapproved.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—PRIVILEGES IN HIGHWAYS—POLICE POWER.

The action of municipal authorities in granting and revoking privileges and licenses in highways is the exercise of delegated police power, and is not judicial in character.

10. CERTIORARI—ACTIONS REVIEWABLE.

Only judicial action is reviewable by the writ of certiorari under sections 2 and 3 of chapter 110 of the Code of 1899. The scope of the writ is not altered by the statute in respect to the nature of the proceedings for the review of which it may be had. In this respect it remains as it was by the common law.

11. STREET RAILROADS—CONSTRUCTION—CONSENT OF MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES.

Consent of the board of commissioners of Ohio county to the operation of a street railway on and over the Cumberland Road in said county of Ohio does not confer authority upon the railway company holding such permit to construct and operate its railway on and over such portion of said road as lies within the limits of the town of Triadelphia, in said county, without the consent of the authorities of said town.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Bill by the Wheeling & Elm Grove Railroad Company against the town of Triadelphia and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

Henry M. Russell and Howard & Handlan, for appellant. Alfred Caldwell and Nelson C. Hubbard, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. The council of the town of Triadelphia, in Ohio county, having repealed the ordinance under which the Wheeling & Elm Grove Railroad Company had been operating its street railway in said town, and caused a part of its track to be taken up, said railroad company obtained a temporary injunction, inhibiting the town, its officers, and agents from interfering with its road. Thereupon the town answered the bill, alleging forfeiture of the privileges granted by the ordinance, because of failure and refusal to observe and perform conditions, and praying, by way of affirmative relief, that the railroad company be enjoined and restrained from further operating its road in said town and compelled to remove from the streets thereof its poles, wires, rails, ties, etc., and restore the street and a certain bridge, mentioned in the bill, to the condition in which they were before the construction of the road, unless the consent of the town to the further occupation and use of the street for the purpose aforesaid should be obtained. On the hearing, the injunction was dissolved and the cross-relief asked for by the town granted. From this decree said company has appealed.

The ordinance was passed on the 31st day of March, 1896, granting to the Wheeling Suburban Railway Company, its successors and assigns, the privileges now in question, and that company subsequently assigned the same to said Wheeling & Elm Grove Railway Company. Under it, the road was constructed within the time required. The forfeiture is not for nonuser of the franchise or privilege, but for failure to comply with certain conditions imposed by section 4 of the ordinance in the following clauses thereof: "Said railway company shall so construct its tracks upon the roads or streets hereinbefore mentioned that at any place any of its tracks may cross any road or street within said town, the said railway company shall at every such place lay its track or tracks on a level with the surface or plane of said road or street at the place of such crossing and shall pave with white oak planks not less than two inches thick between all its rails crossing such road or street and shall at all times hereafter keep and maintain the said paving or planking in good order and repair to the satisfaction of the council of said town. Said company shall also lay and maintain a white oak plank two inches thick and eight inches wide on each side of each rail along its track in front of all improved property." To enforce compliance with these conditions and others inserted in the ordinance, section 15 of that instrument provided as follows: "Should the Wheeling Suburban Railway Company fail to fulfill and perform the conditions of this ordinance or comply with the requirements thereof upon them, or do those things they are by this ordinance prohibited from doing, the said town may give said Wheeling Suburban Railway Company notice of its intention to repeal this ordinance and revoke and annul all the rights, powers and privileges by this ordinance given by said town to said Wheeling Suburban Railway Company, and stating in such notice in what respect said Wheeling Suburban Railway Company have failed to fulfill and perform the conditions of this ordinance or to comply with the requirements thereof upon them, or wherein they have done any of those things they are by this ordinance prohibited from doing. At any time after three months from the service of such notice upon the president or secretary of said Wheeling Suburban Railway Company the council of said town may repeal this ordinance and revoke and annul the rights, powers and privileges by this ordinance given by said town to said Wheeling Suburban Railway Company; provided, however, that if the said Wheeling Suburban Railway Company before such repeal and revocation and annulling shall fulfill and perform the condition or conditions of this ordinance said notice alleges they have failed to fulfill and perform, and shall comply with the requirement or requirements of this ordinance said notice alleges they have failed to comply with, and shall cease at once on receipt of said notice to do any of those things that they are prohibited from doing by this ordinance which said notice states they have been doing, said council shall not have the power to repeal and revoke and annul the rights, powers and privileges thereby given by said town to said Wheeling Suburban Railway Company." Notice dated August 28, 1901, specifying, as breaches of conditions, elevation of the tracks above the level of the streets at the crossings of Monroe street and Clay street, failure in part to pave the crossing at Clay street, and failure to lay planks along the rails in front of lots 24 to 33, inclusive, except a short strip at the corner of lot 30, was served upon the railway company. Just a few days before the expiration of three months from the date of service of said notice, said company caused its track to be lowered at the crossings and some plank to be put down at the places specified in the notice, but the plank pavement at the street crossing did not extend entirely across the street, and the planks laid along the tracks in front of improved property were not of the width required by the ordinance. Many of them were only five inches wide and, in one place, for a distance of about 90 feet none at all was put down, and the crossing at Monroe street was left too high by about five inches. On the 7th day of December, 1901, more than three months after the date of the service of the notice, the council of the town repealed the ordinance, reciting in the repealing ordinance the giving of the notice and noncompliance with its requirements. The failure to comply strictly with the requirements of the ordinance is not denied by the railway company, but it claims to have substantially complied with them, and also that, prior to the repealing of the ordinance, its agents applied to officials of the town to know whether there was any objection to the manner in which the work had been done, and expressed a willingness to remedy any defects in it which might be suggested, and no objection was made. But this seems to have occurred after the repeal of the ordinance. The railway company's own witness says it was afterward.

In addition to its defense of substantial compliance, the railway company relies upon certain ordinances adopted by the commissioners of Ohio county, granting to it the privilege of operating its railway on and over certain portions of what is known as the Cumberland Road, including that portion thereof which runs through the town of Triadelphia, and on which said railway is located through said town. This road was originally constructed and owned by the government of the United States. In 1835, the government ceded to the several states through which said road was located the care and control of the portions thereof lying respectively within said states, reserving to itself certain rights in them. By this compact it relieved itself of the burden of maintaining said road and cast it upon the states, but it retained the right to use the same free of charge for any governmental purpose. Searight v. Stokes, 3 How. 151, 11 L. Ed. 537; Neil v. Ohio, 3 How. 720, 11 L. Ed. 800; Achison v. Huddleson, 12 How. 293, 13 L. Ed. 993. Upon the formation of the state of West Virginia, that portion of said road lying within this state passed under its control, and, by statute, the management thereof was intrusted to the board of public works of the state. By an act of the Legislature, passed on the 13th day of February, 1890, the care and control of so much of said road as lies within the county of Ohio, together with all the rights, powers, and duties in relation thereto, belonging to the board of public works of this state under existing laws, including power to collect tolls on said road, was committed to the board of commissioners of said county, as soon as said board should pass an ordinance agreeing to accept the trust. Soon afterwards, such ordinance was passed. It is contended now that the town of Triadelphia has no control of that part of said road which lies within its limits, and that the railway company is entitled to the use and occupation thereof, for the purposes of its road, under the ordinances passed by said board of commissioners. On the other hand, it is urged that the act of the Legislature of Virginia, passed on the 4th day of February, 1840, incorporating the town of Triadelphia, lying on both sides of said road, and conferring upon it, among other things, the power "to regulate and graduate the streets and alleys, and to pave the same if deemed necessary," vested in said town all the right and title to, and power over, so much of said road as lies within its territory that the state of Virginia then had. Counsel for the appellees rely also upon section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution of this state, which provides that: "No law shall be passed by the Legislature granting the right to construct and operate a street railroad within any city, town or incorporated village, without requiring the consent of the local authorities having the control of the street and highway proposed to be occupied by such street railroad." The status of so much of the national road as lies within the territory of the town of Triadelphia depends upon the statutory provisions. Chapter 56 of the Code, concerning the board of public works and tolls on the Cumberland Road and other turnpikes, provides for the maintenance of said road and turnpikes, by means of the exaction of tolls, and this, as to said Cumberland Road, was done by the board of public works of the state, until its care and control were transferred to Ohio county by the act hereinbefore mentioned. Section 21 of chapter 39 of the Code provides that the interest which belonged to the state on the 1st day of July, 1868, in any road or bridge or public landing lying wholly or in part within the limits of any county is transferred to and shall continue vested in such county, so far as such road, bridge, or public landing is within the said county. But the Cumberland Road is expressly excepted from the operation of said section. Section 31 of chapter 43 of the Code of 1899 says: "The roads, bridges and public landings transferred by the state to the several counties in which they are situated shall hereafter be regarded as county roads, bridges and landings." Section 28 of chapter 47, relating to cities, towns, or villages, says: "The council of such city, town or village shall have power therein to lay off, vacate, close, open, alter, curb, pave and keep in good repair, roads, streets, alleys, sidewalks, crosswalks, drains and gutters, for the use of the public, or any of the citizens thereof, and to improve and light the same, and have them kept free from obstructions on or over them." Section 33 of chapter 43 of the Code of 1899, provides that no road or landing shall be established by the county court of a county upon or through any lot in any incorporated village, town, or city without the consent of the council thereof.

Aside from the question of title to the fee in public roads lying within incorporated cities and towns, courts everywhere incline to the view that such corporations have certain rights and powers respecting such public roads. When there are no express statutory provisions limiting the powers of the county authorities over such portions of the public roads, and the General Statute or the charters of cities and towns confer power to lay out, open, and regulate streets, alleys, and walks, portions of the road lying within the city or town are generally held to be under the control of the authorities thereof so far as to enable them to keep the same free from obstruction and in good condition and order by improving them. State v. City of New Brunswick, 30 N. J. Law, 395; Quinn v. Patterson, 27 N. J. Law, 35; State v. Pas-saic Turnpike Co., 27 N. J. Law, 217; State

v. Jersey City, 26 N. J. Law, 444. These are cases of turnpikes and plank roads owned by private corporations. Dillon on Municipal Corporations (4th Ed.) par. 676, says: "Throughout the United States, township, county, or other local authorities have the general control and supervision over the ordinary public highway, while in incorporated towns and cities this power, as respects streets, is usually conferred upon the corporate authorities. When the jurisdiction and power in the one is excluded by the charters of the others has given rise to nice and difficult questions of construction, depending upon the supposed intention of the Legislature, to be gathered from the whole course of legislation on the subject in the particular state, and with reference to the particular municipality." At section 677 the same work says: "So, by statute in Texas, the counties had a general authority to keep in repair the public highways therein, and an incorporated town, by its charter, had the right to improve its streets and alleys; and the question arose whether the county or town authorities had power to keep in repair streets or highways within the corporate limits of the town. The court, to prevent conflict of jurisdiction, held that the town had exclusive control of the streets and highways therein. So it is held in Indiana, that the General Statutes of the state in relation to 'public highways' do not apply to the streets and alleys of an incorporated town or city." In Norwich v. Story, 25 Conn. 44, such provisions in the charter of a city, read in connection with the general laws conferring powers upon the county authorities, were held to give concurrent jurisdiction over the highway within the city to city and county authorities.

The status of the Cumberland Road seems to be somewhat different from that of the ordinary county road. The Legislature has dealt with it in a manner different from that in which it has dealt with other roads. Whether the law contemplated its maintenance throughout from tolls, until its transfer to the authorities of Ohio county, is not clearly indicated. It would seem, however, that in order to effectuate the purpose of its maintenance, the Legislature must have necessarily retained the power of maintenance through the corporations situated on it. No express authority is conferred upon them to close or alter it, nor is any duty laid upon them to maintain it according to any particular standard. Hence, if the state did not retain the power to keep it up, the portions lying within the town might have become, or might yet become, so dilapidated and out of repair as to render the whole road practically useless. Before the cession of the road to the state, the government expended upon it large amounts of money, and stipulated for the use of the road for governmental purposes, without liability for future expenses or cost of keeping it in repair. By allowing the road or any part of it to fall into decay, the state might become guilty of recreancy to the trust confided in it by the national government. On the other hand, as the towns have the power to make, construct, and keep in repair their roads and streets, it seems reasonable to say they might improve, repair, and maintain such portions of said road as lie within their territories. This is not at all inconsistent with the rights of the state or county. Though not having full and complete control so as to enable them to impair the efficiency of the road as a state road, they might well have the right and power, consistently with the interests of the state, to aid in keeping it in repair and to add to the work done by the state such additional work and expense as their authorities might deem expedient in order to put such portions of it in a higher and better state of repair and condition than other portions thereof. As to additional burdens upon the road, a reasonable view would be that the state, without the consent of the authorities of the town, would have no right or power to place upon that portion of it lying within the town anything in the nature of an obstruction or additional burden. The town, when incorporated, accepted the road as a part of its territory without any such burden, and the Constitution withholds from the Legislature power to grant the right to construct a street railroad within any city or incorporated village, without the consent of its authorities. And the state may have the power to say, on the other hand, that the town shall not impair the efficiency and usefulness of its road by authorizing the construction of a street railway upon it. The statutes and constitutional provisions must be harmonized, if possible, so that all may have effect. By giving this community of interest in so much of the road as lies within the town, repugnancy is avoided, and the rights of both the state and the town protected. Part of the Cumberland Road was taken into the town by express legislative authority. The town accepted it as a part of its territory in its then condition. No change occurred in it prior to the adoption of the present Constitution, and that instrument denies to the Legislature the power to authorize the invasion of any town by a street railroad without its consent. As the Legislature has no power to do this in any case, it could not authorize the board of commissioners of Ohio county to grant such a privilege within the town. In view of this situation, the respective rights of the town, and of the state or Ohio county, the Wheeling Suburban Railway Company took the precaution to obtain grants of privileges in that part of the road lying within the town of Triadelphia from both the board of commissioners and the council of said town. Whether, as to that portion of the road, it was necessary to have authority from said board of commissioners, it is not necessary to decide, but we are clearly of the opinion that it was necessary to have authority to use it from the council of the town of Triadelphia. The grant from the town of permission to use said Cumberland Road and continuance thereof being conditions precedent to its rights to use it, two questions arise: First. Assuming that there has been no forfeiture of the franchise granted, has the railway company sought the proper remedy for the vindication of its rights? The council of the town, by repealing the ordinance, has declared a forfeiture. What is the effect of that action? What is the character of the function performed in declaring the forfeiture? Is it legislative, executive, or judicial? Second. Does the admitted failure of the railway company to comply with the conditions mentioned operate a forfeiture, independently of the force and effect of the repeal of the ordinance?

No objection to the jurisdiction in equity or the remedy invoked has been raised by counsel. Both sides ask an adjudication upon the merits. But it has been suggested here, in consultation, that the action of the council in repealing the ordinance is judicial and is binding upon the parties until reversed by some appellate procedure, in consequence of which resort cannot be had to a court of equity as to any matter involved in, or governed by, this action of the council. If this be true, the remedy is certiorari, under the statute. Section 2, c. 110, Code 1899. But is it true? This depends upon the nature of the proceeding, as well as the nature and scope of the remedy by certiorari. That writ is an extraordinary common-law remedy, except in so far as it has been altered by statute. Originally, it could be invoked only to review judicial proceedings, and to correct errors of law apparent on admitted and established facts. 4 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 11. "The office of a writ of certiorari is to bring to a superior court for review the record and proceedings of an inferior court, an officer, or a tribunal exercising judicial functions, to the end that the validity of the proceedings may be determined, excesses of jurisdiction restrained, and errors, if any, corrected. It is not essential, however, that the proceedings should be strictly and technically judicial in the sense in which that word is used when applied to courts of justice, but it is sufficient if they are quasi judicial. It is enough if they act judicially in making their decision, whatever may be their public character." 6 Cyc. 750; Poe v. Machine Works, 24 W. Va. 517. Our statute (sections 2, 3, c. 110, Code 1899) concerning the remedy by certiorari is broad in its language, and, upon a hasty reading thereof, would seem to import that the writ is applicable to all proceedings before county courts, municipal councils, justices, and other tribunals; but a careful examination of it leads to the conclusion that it does not broaden the scope of the writ as to the class of cases to which it applies. It says the writ shall lie in every case, matter, or proceeding before a county court, council, a city, town, or village, justice, or other inferior tribunal, in which there has been a judgment or final order, or a judgment or order abridging the freedom of a person. What is the meaning of the words "every case, matter or proceeding"? Are they to be taken literally? Why did the Legislature use these terms? A very good reason is that proceedings reviewable by writ of certiorari are such in their very nature as can be described only by the use of general terms. They are proceedings not according to the course of the common law, but anomalous proceedings, various in number and unusual in kind. Common-law proceedings are embraced under the designations of the forms of action, such as assumpsit, debt, covenant, trespass, trespass on the case, ejectment, and others. For all these, the writ of error is the process for review. In chancery causes the remedy is by appeal. But proceedings which do not fall within these classes of cases are indefinable by nature and must be referred to in general terms. This difficulty was experienced by the Legislature, and the section under consideration bears evidence of it on its face, in the description of the classes of cases to which certiorari was applicable before the passage of that statute. It says: "In every case, matter or proceeding in which certiorari might be issued as the law heretofore has been." Those were cases to which common-law certiorari was applicable, and they are described in the exact language of the new statute. Prior to the passage of chapter 153, pp. 487, 488, §§ 2, 3, Acts 1882, the present statute, we had no similar one on the subject, and the writ had only its common-law force. This statute had other purposes than an increase in the classes to which the writ might apply. Prior to its enactment this mode of review was exercised before final judgment. This, the statute cut off by saying the judgment or order must be final, unless it is one abridging the freedom of a person. It limited the right to review in civil cases before justices to those in which the amount in controversy, exclusive of interest and costs, exceed $15. Prior to the passage of any statute on the subject, the reviewing court could only consider questions of law, such as want of jurisdiction in the inferior court and deviations from the law in pronouncing judgment upon admitted or established facts disclosed by the record. It would not determine questions of fact nor consider the evidence. This statute provides that, upon the hearing, the circuit court, in addition to determining such questions as might have been determined as the law was before its passage, shall review the judgment, order, or proceeding of the inferior court or tribunal upon the merits, determine all questions arising on the law and evidence, and render such judgment or make such order upon the whole matter as law and justice may require. No decision of this court has ever construed the statute as giving the right to review by certiorari as to cases, matters, or proceedings nonjudicial in their nature. It goes to a county court in cases of election contests. Cunningham v. Squires, 2 W. Va. 422, 98 Am. Dec. 770; Burke v. Supervisors, 4 W. Va. 371; Dryden v. Swinburn, 15 W. Va. 234; State ex rel. v. McAllister, 38 W. Va. 485, 18 S. E. 770, 24 L. R. A. 343. But these are all adversary proceedings involving the exercise of judicial functions. They involve the rights of parties in respect to matters distinct from the exercise of legislative or police power. In Brazie v. Commissioners, 25 W. Va. 213, the duties of election canvassing boards are declared to be quasi judicial. Tested by that decision, the use of certiorari to review such proceedings is within the limits of judicial powers. In Board of Education v. Hopkins, 19 W. Va. 84, this writ was given to review the action of a county court upon a sheriff's settlement respecting an allowance of commissions to him. It was a matter of controversy between the sheriff and a board of education of the county, and the county court had jurisdiction to the extent of power to adjudge a settlement prima facie correct, but not conclusive. This also, as to the sheriff, was a matter of private right, the determination whereof required the exercise of judicial power. The judgment of the county court, for the time being, gave or withheld commissions claimed by him. It also made evidence for or against him, to be used in any other proceeding for the final and ultimate determination of his rights. The line of discrimination between judicial and nonjudicial functions is sometimes difficult to trace; but it is not difficult to see that the matters above mentioned stand upon a very different footing from many others, in which a municipal board or other tribunal, in the exercise of its legislative or police power, deals with the rights of the citizen who has no official connection with that body, such as a claim to office or a right to commissions. There is no suggestion by the court in any of these cases that the action reviewed is not judicial or that the writ lies to review nonjudicial actions. Town of Davis v. Davis, 40 W. Va. 464, 21 S. E. 906, presents a different and anomalous illustration of the writ, holding it to be appropriate to review the action of a town council in declaring a certain thing a nuisance and abating it as such; but the court was careful there to say the act was judicial. Whether this was a correct determination does not affect the question now under consideration. Consistently with the view here advanced, the court treated the act as a judicial one and proceeded accordingly.

Whether the council of a municipal corporation acts judicially in ascertaining whether there is cause of forfeiture of a right in a street granted by it to a railway company is a more difficult question. As above stated, the distinction between legislative or ministerial functions and judicial functions is difficult to point out. What is a judicial function does not depend solely upon the mental operation by which it is performed or the importance of the act. In solving this question, due regard must be had to the organic law of the state and the division of powers of government. In the discharge of executive and legislative duties, the exercise of discretion and judgment of the highest order is necessary, and matters of the greatest weight and importance are dealt with. It is not enough to make a function judicial that it requires discretion, deliberation, thought, and judgment. It must be the exercise of discretion and judgment within that subdivision of the sovereign power which belongs to the judiciary, or, at least, which does not belong to the legislative or executive department. If the matter, in respect to which it is exercised, belongs to either of the two last-named departments of government, it is not judicial. As to what is judicial and what is not seems to be better indicated by the nature of a thing, than its definition. It is necessary to the proper and effective exercise of the police power of a state or community that it be free from restraint by the judiciary. It is at variance with the very nature of such power that the officers and tribunals intrusted with its exercise must stop at every step and take those proceedings which are requisite to the due exercise of judicial power. The health of the people, the good order of the community, and the due exercise of the power demand that the officers and tribunals intrusted with its exercise be free from such restraint. It may remove, destroy, and abate, without waiting for any judicial determination, and leave the party to his right of appeal to the courts, by an action for damages, for a determination of the question as to whether the thing abated was a nuisance, or protected by a contract, unless the abatement will result in irreparable injury and thereby give equity jurisdiction by injunction. In the case of a contested election, or the settlement of the accounts of an officer and allowance of his commission, no such public necessity exists. Pending these controversies, the public service goes on unaffected by them and unimpeded. Not so in the case of obstructions to streets and highways and the existence of offensive, unwholesome, and dangerous things constituting nuisances. The public service cannot wait upon tedious long drawn out judicial investigations.

It would be difficult to enumerate all of the subjects belonging to the police power of a state or municipality, but that it does include the abatement of nuisances, the opening, construction, and repair of roads and bridges, and the lighting of streets is beyond question. 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 927, 29, 30. That the establishment, control, and regulation of roads, bridges, and streets belong to the police power of the state is nowhere asserted more emphatically and plainly than by this court. In County Court v. Boreman, 34 W. Va. 87, 11 S. E. 747, it decided that private citizens, having no special property or interest to be affected, could not by certiorari review the trial or action of the county court in proceeding to alter the location of and rebuild a county bridge. Up until that time, these citizens had not made themselves parties to the proceeding. Afterwards, they did attempt to make themselves parties, and to appeal from the action of the county court, and this court prohibited the circuit court from entertaining the appeal by its writ of prohibition, for want of jurisdiction. County Court v. Armstrong, 34 W. Va. 326, 12 S. E. 488. Judge Brannon, in delivering the opinion, said: "We think it essential to the public interests, as involved in the execution by county courts of the important functions assigned them by law touching roads and bridges, that we should decide, as we now do, that citizens and taxpayers, merely because they are such, who have no special property or interests affected thereby, cannot become parties to proceedings by county courts for the establishment, location, or alteration or construction of county roads and bridges, and cannot appeal from the action of the county court therein. Under any other rule, it would be impossible to say when litigation would occur, when it would end, what would be the public cost, or what would be the delay and obstruction in these matters so essential to the public welfare." The Supreme Court of Virginia announced the same doctrine in Supervisors v. Gorrell, 20 Grat. 484. Of course, the citizen may object to the taking of his property for public uses without compensation, and interfere. But how does he interfere? Not by making himself a party to the unauthorized proceeding. He is not bound to subject himself and his rights to the assumed jurisdiction of a county court or a municipal council and review its action by certiorari in order to obtain relief. He appeals to a judicial tribunal having the power to settle and determine questions affecting his rights. He is entitled to have such important matters determined in the first instance, as well as finally by a court, by a judge or judge and jury, upon regular proceedings, according to the course of the common law, and not in an irregular, haphazard proceeding by mere agents of the state, unlearned in the law, and charged with mere ministerial or legislative powers. Although the citizen may have a special interest in the sense of being damaged by the exercise of the sovereign power to establish roads, if his property is not actually taken, but only injured, he still has no power to interfere, and must resort to his action at law for damages. Spencer v. Railroad Co., 23 W. Va. 406; Arbendz v. Railroad, 33 W. Va. 1, 10 S. E. 14, 5 L. R. A. 371; Watson v. Railroad Co., 49 W. Va. 528, 39 S. E. 198. A work of internal improvement authorized by law, whether carried on by a private or a municipal corporation, is an exercise of police power delegated by the Legislature, and is not subject to judicial control and is not itself judicial action. Corporations exercising such power are, so long as they confine themselves within the authority conferred, beyond any restraint at the hands of the judiciary. If, in the exercise of such power, they transcend the authority conferred upon them by the Legislature, they are, in some form of action, amenable to the power of the courts, at the instance of any individual injured thereby, and their decision or mere declaration that they have power, when they have not, affords them no protection.

The granting of a license, privilege, or franchise to a street railway in the streets of a city, town, or village is so manifestly an act affecting the street itself, the care and custody of which is, by law, intrusted to the council, by way of exercising part of the police power of the state, as to preclude the idea that such grant can be anything other than an exercise of such power. This is not disputed. Nor can it be denied that the repeal of the ordinance granting such privilege, or a declaration of forfeiture in any other form, is a function of the same kind. But it is suggested that inquiry and determination as to the cause or ground of forfeiture is judicial. If so, it is only incidentally performed in the exercise of police power. It is not the thing done, the function performed, but a mere incident thereof. It is not the whole, including the exercise of police power as one of its parts, but is itself a mere part, governed, overshadowed, controlled, and limited by something larger — a matter or function in government which, for reasons of public policy, is not required to wait on the slow process of judicial determination of private rights which are incidentally and occasionally affected, but not extinguished by it, and, if injured, may be vindicated by proper remedies in the courts, in which the necessary judicial power for that purpose is lodged. It is an inclusive, subsidiary, or incidental power, which in the nature of things can be no broader than the thing to which it is incidental. Like the stream which can rise no higher than its source, or the blood which cannot circulate beyond the body to which it belongs, this function, be it quasi judicial or not, cannot operate or be effective beyond the limits of the act or proceeding in which it is performed. It does not determine the character of the proceeding in which it is performed, or alter or enlarge its nature. That is determined by the division of governmental powers, effected by the organic law of the state. The very nature of the police power and the necessity for its free and prompt exercise forbid any such restriction upon it as judicial supervision and control. To make it effective, those charged with its enforcement must be as free from restraint, as long as they confine themselves within their authority, as individuals are. Must there be citation and hearing before the city authorities may tear down a building as a means of stopping a disastrous conflagration? If a man erect a house or barn in the center of the principal street of a populous city, is he entitled to demand notice and a full judicial hearing before it can be removed? If, instead of so proceeding, the authorities abate it immediately, are they trespassers simply for lack of such judicial proceeding, to be punished with costs and nominal damages in a case in which they have violated no right, and done no wrong, other than that of failing to obtain an adjudication of the right to do what they have done? Are municipal corporations to be mulcted in costs attendant upon judgments for nominal damages for mere technical invasions of the rights of the citizen, as well as delayed in the exercise of the important powers conferred upon them for the promotion of the health and comfort of the people, the maintenance of order, and the prosperity and general welfare of the community? If we say the function is judicial in the full sense of the term, all these questions must be answered affirmatively, and such results attained as would paralyze the police power of the state. It is not a question of due protection of the rights of the citizen. It is not enough to say he may, by his writ of certiorari, accompanied by bond, supersede the action taken against him, pending the determination of the rightfulness of his claim. That covers but one side of the question. What about the public? Is it duly protected and vindicated, or is it hampered, clogged, and paralyzed? If we say the function is judicial, we allow the citizen, in obtaining vindication of his rights, to stop the machinery of government. If we say it is not judicial, he still has his remedy in the courts for any injury done him, as in the case of injury done him by a private individual, and the machinery of government goes on performing its functions, while he prosecutes his rights in the courts. He is no more entitled to stop, impede, or delay the operations of government, except to prevent irreparable injury, than to stop an individual. Are not the interests of the general public as great and as justly entitled to protection and freedom as those of his fellow man? The only exception to this is the case of irreparable injury, which may be prevented by injunction, as in cases of irreparable injury at the hands of individuals. If we say it is not judicial, there is no adjudication against the citizen. He still has his remedy. There is therefore no want of process. The Legislature of the state, in declaring a forfeiture, performs exactly the same function that the council performed in this case. It necessarily ascertains the existence of cause of forfeiture. An individual, in declaring the forfeiture of a contract right, does the same thing. But no court has ever regarded such declaration in either case as an adjudication. Nor do they so regard such declarations made by municipal councils.

This court, in Railroad Co. v. Town of Alston, 54 W. Va. 597, 46 S. E. 612, said: "If the council improperly annulled its orders or ordinances assenting to the plaintiff's occupancy of its streets, the plaintiff could treat such annulment as void, or it could have the same reviewed and reversed by proper judicial method of review." In Street Railway Co. v. Asheville, 109 N. C. 688, 14 S. E. 316, the court held as follows: "Where a city, by authority of its charter, granted a street railway company the right to construct a branch road over a certain street, it cannot, by a subsequent ordinance, arbitrarily annul its license; and when, under such latter ordinance, it attempts by force to prevent the completion of the road then in process of construction, injunction will issue restraining the city from such interference." In Railway Co. v. Easton, 133 Pa. 505, 19 Atl. 486, 19 Am. St. Rep. 658, this declaration of principles was announced: "A railway track, laid upon a city street in good faith, under a corporate charter granted for the purpose, but not endangering the health or safety of the inhabitants, cannot be classed among the nuisances which the city authorities may abate summarily without resort to the processes of the law, even though, by reason of the manner of its construction, it may obstruct the street to such a degree as to amount to a nuisance. When the authorities of a city have declared such a track to be in violation of a municipal ordinance and a public nuisance, and have summarily undertaken to remove it by force, and the railway company prays for an injunction against such removal, the city not applying, by cross-bill or otherwise, for a legal adjustment of the differences between the company and itself, the injunction will be granted without regard to the merits of the controversy." In Bond v. Newark, 19 N. J. Eq. 376, 384, the court said, speaking of municipal corporations: "All legislative acts or exercise of discretionary powers, within their authority, are beyond the control of the courts, however unwise or impolitic, or even when done from corrupt motives, or unworthy purposes. * * * But when the corporations have fulfilled their legislative functions, and have exercised their legislative discretion, and are about to fulfill a contract by paying for its performance with the money of the lot owners, they are not acting in a legislative capacity, but as agents." In Railroad Co. v.

Cape May, 35 N. J. Eq. 419, Van Fleet, V. C., after quoting part of the above language, said, when the corporation "are about carrying their legislation into execution, then, if the effect of their act is to violate vested rights or inflict irreparable wrong, the courts may properly intervene." That case decides that injunction does not lie to prevent the repeal of an ordinance, but does lie to prevent the tearing up of a railroad pursuant to such repeal, and thereby, in effect, denies judicial effect to the action of the council. In Railroad Co. v. Paterson, 24 N. J. Eq. 158, 168, the court said: "The ordinance complained of is manifestly intended as a means to an unlawful end, as a basis of operations for removing the track in Colt street. There is no good reason for the course of procedure on which the city have entered in this matter. They cannot be permitted, under such circumstances, to pursue it."

In Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. Ed. 496, Chief Justice Waite, in speaking of the reserved power to amend or repeal the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, said: "All agree that it cannot be used to take away property already acquired under the operation of the charter, or to deprive the corporation of the fruits, actually reduced to possession, of contracts lawfully made." In People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 18 N. E. 692, 2 L. R. A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, Ruger, C. J., said: "It is also to be observed that in none of the provisions for repeal in this state is there anything contained which purports to confer power to take away or destroy property or annul contracts, and the contention that the property of a dissolved corporation is forfeited rests wholly upon what is claimed to be the necessary consequences of the extinction of corporate life. We do not think the dissolution of a corporation works any such effect. It would not naturally seem to have any other operation upon its contracts or property rights than the death of a natural person upon his. The power to repeal the charter of a corporation cannot, upon any legal principle, include the power to repeal what is in its nature irreparable, or to undo what has been lawfully done under power lawfully conferred." The same judge, in speaking of the grant by the city of New York to the Broadway Surface Railway Company of the right to use the streets, said: "Grants similar in all material respects to the one in question have heretofore been before the courts of this state for construction, and it has been quite uniformly held that they are grants in fee, vesting the grantee with an interest in the street in perpetuity to the extent necessary for the purpose of a street railroad." Both on reason and authority, a charter, lawfully granted and duly accepted and acted upon, has all the elements of a contract and is binding upon all the parties to it, and enforceable, if not always in the same manner yet to the same extent, as an ordinary agreement between natural persons."

Booth on Street Railways, § 8. In Street Railway Co. v. Circuit Judge, 118 Mich. 694, 71 N. W. 1073, the court held it competent for a city council to declare a forfeiture upon a conceded and undisputed breach of a condition. Plainly this means that the forfeiture is effective only in such case, just as such a declaration by an individual is effective when he has the right to make it, and therefore has none of the efficacy of a judicial determination.

The decision of Town of Davis v. Davis, 40 W. Va. 464, 21 S. E. 906, may seem to be inconsistent with this position, but it does not clearly propound a different doctrine. Whether it was intended there to give to the resolution of a municipal council the dignity and force and effect of a judicial decision, binding upon the citizen and denying to him any remedy except by way of appeal from it, is not at all clear. In the paragraph of the opinion which seems to countenance this view, it is admitted that the proceeding for abatement of a nuisance is an exercise of delegated police power, and no authority is cited for the position that a judicial function is involved. The question of its conclusiveness is propounded and not answered except by the holding that there is a right of review by certiorari, and possibly of action for damages. If, after such abatement, a right of action exists, it is plain there has been no adjudication of the fact of nuisance. There cannot be two adjudications of the same right. One precludes the possibility of another, if pleaded. The trouble with the decision in the Town of Davis v. Davis is its failure to distinguish between the function of abating a nuisance and that of determining what is a nuisance. Abatement is the exercise of police power. That power the Legislature has conferred upon the councils of cities, towns, and villages, but does not confer upon them the general judicial power necessary to determine what is a nuisance. They may determine it in a qualified manner, just as an individual, in the exercise of his common-law right of abatement, may determine for himself what is a nuisance. His determination of that question is binding upon nobody. In like manner, the determination of the same question by a municipal council is a determination for the sole purpose of coming to a decision as to whether it will exercise its power of abatement. After having done that, as in the case of an individual, it acts at its peril. If, assuming that to be a nuisance which is not, it destroys it, the preliminary declaration affords it no protection and is not binding upon the citizen. When a court of competent jurisdiction determines that a thing is a nuisance, its decision, until reversed, is final and conclusive. Whether the thing be in fact a nuisance or not, it becomes in law a nuisance by force of the decision. The courts everywhere say no such power is vested in a municipal corpora tion or in the Legislature of the state itself.

In Hutton v. City of Camden, 39 N. J. Law, 122, 23 Am. Rep. 208, the court said: "The right to abate public nuisances, whether we regard it as existing in the municipalities, or in the community, or in the hands of the individual, is a common-law right, and is derived in every instance of its exercise, from the same source—that of necessity. It is akin to the right of destroying property for the public safety in case of the prevalence of a devastating fire or other controlling exigency. But the necessity must be present to justify the exercise of the right, and whether present or not, must be submitted to a jury under the guidance of a court. The finding of a sanitary committee, or of a municipal council, or of any other body of a similar kind, can have no effect whatever, for any purpose, upon the ultimate disposition of a matter of this kind."

Dillon on Municipal Corporations (4th Ed.) at section 374, says: "This authority and its summary exercise may be constitutionally conferred on the incorporated place, and it authorizes its council to act against that which comes within the legal notion of a nuisance; but such power, conferred in general terms, cannot be taken to authorize the extra-judicial condemnation and destruction of that as a nuisance which, in its nature, situation, or use, is not such." In Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. Ed. 984, Mr. Justice Miller said: "But the mere declaration by the city council that a certain structure was an encroachment or obstruction did not make it so, nor could such declaration make it a nuisance unless it in fact had that character. It is a doctrine not to be tolerated in this country that a municipal corporation, without any general laws either of the city or of the state within which a given structure can be shown to be a nuisance, can, by the mere declaration that it is one, subject it to removal by any person supposed to be aggrieved, or even by the city itself. This would place every house, every business, and all the property in the city, at the uncontrolled will of the temporary local authorities."

All this argues lack of judicial power in such tribunals. It is because of want of such power and authority that their resolutions, declarations, or determinations, respecting personal and property rights, are ignored by the courts. Being nonjudicial, the authority must be ministerial, legislative, or executive. It may be that the court, in Town of Davis v. Davis, entertained the view that, in the exercise of police power, there is a right of review by certiorari, although the proceeding is not an adjudication, precluding a resort to the courts for damages. Whether, so viewed, the decision is sound, there is no occasion to say; and, but for the close analogy between that case and this, it would be unnecessary to re-examine it. It is not a case exactly in point, but many of the general principles involved in it are, to say the least, very similar to those governing this case. Being firmly of the opinion that the council of a municipal corporation is not clothed with the requisite judicial power to finally determine questions of property rights, in such cases as this, we cannot recognize it as authority binding upon us in this class of cases, and we leave its exact status and effect in nuisance cases to be determined whenever the necessity therefor shall arise. Nor are we to be understood as saying or intimating that the Legislature cannot confer, or has not conferred, limited judicial power upon municipal corporations for the punishment of offenses and violation of ordinances.

Having reached the conclusion that jurisdiction in equity is not precluded by the action of the council, the next question is whether there has been such nonperformance of covenants as give power to forfeit by proper proceedings. Authorities already cited, to which many more might be added, show that, by acceptance, the ordinance became a contract. Can it have effect otherwise than according to its terms? To say that it can would be to deny to parties the power to determine their respective rights by contract, or, to say, after a contract has been made, its terms may be disregarded. Courts cannot do that, the power to do which is denied to the Legislature by both the state and federal Constitutions, namely, deny, relieve from, or refuse to enforce, the obligations of contracts. Noncompliance with the terms and conditions of the ordinance is frankly admitted, and the prayer for relief stands upon the allegation of substantial compliance. This argument is addressed to the court, concerning, not implied conditions, which the law reads into a contract in order to work out equity and justice between the parties as to matters not provided for by express stipulation, or express conditions, violation of which is not, by express stipulation, made cause of forfeiture, but conditions and covenants plainly written in the contract and the penalty for violation of which is expressly made a cause of forfeiture. Courts of equity have large powers for the vindication of equitable rights, and, under peculiar circumstances, for the amelioration of the rigidity of the law, but they cannot, any more than courts of law, ignore or violate contract rights fairly and properly acquired. There is here no suggestion of fraud or mistake in the procurement of the contract. It was deliberately and fairly entered into. Substantial compliance with the terms of an express contract never excuses the party in fault or supports a prayer for equitable relief against its obligation. The party not in default may hold the other to the performance of so much as he is able to do. He has a right of election to take that, rescind the contract, or, standing upon it, sue for damages for the breach. But no instance is recalled in which one party to a contract has been permitted to compel the other to accept less than full performance.

The authorities relied upon to sustain the position that substantial compliance with conditions, the violation of which is expressly made ground of forfeiture, do not support that view. They are all cases in which the ordinances did not say failure to comply with certain specific conditions, the conditions there in question, should result in forfeiture of the privilege granted. There was no such stipulation in the act construed by the Court of Appeals of New York in People v. Broadway, etc., Co., 26 N. E. 961. The propositions asserted in Booth, St. Rys. § 45, are inapplicable for the same reason. At section 46 of the same work it is said: "But if the statute provides that upon such failure the franchise shall be terminated or shall cease, the default will put an end to the franchise without judicial proceedings, and the Legislature may confer the franchise upon any other company or person." And this is fully sustained by the following decisions cited in support of it. In re Brooklyn, etc., Ry. Co., 72 N. Y. 245; In re Brooklyn, etc., Ry. Co., 75 N. Y. 335; Brooklyn, etc., Ry. Co. v. City of Brooklyn, 78 N. Y. 524; Oakland R. R. Co. v. Oakland, etc., R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 13 Am. Rep. 181. Continuing, the author says, in the same section: "The same rule applies to a grant made by ordinance. Accordingly, if the company fails to build within the time fixed by the local authorities, the privilege no longer exists. Such consent is a mere license, and until the grantee avails itself of the privilege, no obligation or relation arises which requires a judicial declaration of forfeiture. After the time expires, a renewal of the privilege is necessary to entitle the company to occupy the streets and build its road." This is sustained by Ft. Worth Ry. Co. v. Rosedale Ry. Co., 68 Tex. 169, 4 S. W. 534, and Grand Rapids St. Railways, 48 Mich. 433, 12 N. W. 643. For similar applications of the same principle, see Ward v. Sea Ins. Co., 7 Paige (N. Y.) 294; Matter of Jackson, etc., Ins. Co., 4 Sandf. Ch. 559. "Slight deviations from the provisions of a charter would not necessarily be either an abuse or a misuser of it, and would therefore be no ground for its annulment, although it would be competent for the crown, by apt words, to make the continuance of the charter conditional upon the strict and literal performance of them." Eastern, etc., Co. v. Regina, 2 El. & B. 856, 870. As to railway franchises and privileges, see, also, Railway Co. v. Railway Co., 45 Cal. 373, 13 Am. Rep. 181; Myrick v. Brawley, 33 Minn. 377, 23 N. W. 549. In the absence of the stipulation for forfeiture as to the conditions not complied with here, it could be held, consistently with all authority, that there has been a substantial compliance with the contract as a whole, and, therefore, no cause of forfeiture. But it is competent for the parties to make any condition a material and essential part of the contract. As these parties have done so, how can the court deny to one of them the benefit of the contract, or relieve the other from its obligation? A distinction between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent is made by the courts. The condition in this case belongs to the latter class, but the distinction does not seem to relieve the company. In the former class, no declaration or adjudication of forfeiture is necessary, but in the latter it is, since noncompliance may be waived. Hovelman v. Railroad Co., 79 Mo. 682; Chicago v. Railway Co., 105 Ill. 73, 78.

Having thus determined that there was, on the face of the contract, cause for forfeiture, it remains to be determined whether such steps were taken by the council as to work, in law, a forfeiture; and, if so, whether the circumstances under which it has been done, and the conduct of the municipal authorities in accomplishing it, have been such as to call upon a court of equity to ignore it or to relieve against it. In dealing with this situation the court must keep its eye upon both sides of this contract and both parties to it. It is not a one-sided affair. It places duties upon both. Under the strict letter of the contract mere failure to comply with conditions works no forfeiture. However great the cause of forfeiture, it does not occur until it has been legally and properly declared by the corporation. The mode of effecting it is prescribed by the ordinance. It requires three months' notice of intent to declare it, accompanied by specification of the cause. The ordinance was passed in 1896. Within a short time after that, the road was built and was then operated until August, 1901, without any steps having been taken by the town, in the manner prescribed by the ordinance, to require compliance with these conditions. For four or five years the town acquiesced in absolute noncompliance on the part of the railway company. There is no proof or evidence showing that any notice was ever served upon the company specifying these instances of noncompliance. There is some evidence tending to show that officers of the town had been directed to serve notice on the company, and that one member of the council did verbally make a demand upon, or request of, the president; but it does not appear that any such notice as is prescribed by the ordinance was ever given. But if such notice had been given, and not followed by any further action, it would simply tend to prove acquiescence and waiver. In August, 1901, after four or five years of acquiescence, the council took steps to forfeit by service of notice. Then before the expiration of the time allowed there was a partial compliance with the requirements of the notice—a substantial compliance with its requirements. In view of the long acquiescence of the authorities of the town, the railway company may well have supposed, and no doubt did suppose, that no action to forfeit the franchise would be taken under these circumstances. If the testimony of the manager is entitled to credit, and there seems to be no reason for believing otherwise, the failure to comply fully was due, in part, to disappointment in obtaining the lumber from the place, and within the time, contemplated by the company. He says the order was given to mills in the country, but, as time went on and it did not arrive, they were compelled hastily to obtain it from somebody in the city. They gave the order for first class lumber, and under that order lumber was furnished and put down by the company's employes. It did not prove to be of the requisite dimensions and some portions of it were unsound and it had the appearance of being old, but it had never been used. This repealing ordinance was passed immediately after the timber was put down and possibly before it was all down, and without any intimation of dissatisfaction with the work. Immediately afterwards, the manager of the railway company applied to members of the council for information as to their objection to the work and offered to remedy the defects, but was informed that the ordinance had been repealed and all rights of the company forfeited.

While the town has the right to require full and complete performance of all covenants on the part of the railway company, and is not bound to accept a mere substantial performance, its authorities, in proceeding to take away the rights of the company, pursuant to the terms of the ordinance, must deal frankly and fairly with it. They must act in good faith and not endeavor to pervert this forfeiture clause to a purpose for which it was never intended. Neither party ever supposed it would be used for any purpose except to compel performance of the covenant entered into by the railway company. The public interests required the construction and operation of the railway. That was the inducement or consideration moving the town to the passage of the ordinance. It was also of interest to the public that the streets be kept in good condition. Hence, the provisions in reference to them, and the right of forfeiture to enforce performance thereof. That clause was never inserted for the purpose of ousting the railway company from the occupancy of the streets merely to get rid of it or to compel it to seek a new franchise with conditions more favorable to the town, nor at all, unless it refused to perform its covenants. Nothing in the answer of the defendant suggests a desire to get rid of the railway. On the contrary, it evinces a desire to keep it, but to impose conditions more favorable to the town than those contained in the present ordinance. On the whole, the evidence evinces a purpose, not merely to enforce compliance with the conditions of the ordinance under which the railway company had been operated, but to force that company to apply for a new franchise with new conditions, a purpose wholly foreign to the forfeiture clause. This motive apparent on the face of the answer and in the evidence, taken in connection with the circumstances and conduct hereinbefore adverted to, tends to prove that the declaration of forfeiture was not made in the utmost good faith, that the failure on the part of the railway company to comply with conditions was not willful, in the sense of obstinacy, but, at the worst, negligent, and that the previous acquiescence and delay on the part of the town, followed by the sudden and speedy repeal of the ordinance operated as a surprise upon it. By this, actual fraud is not imputed to the authorities of the town. Nor is it intended to impute any dishonest motive or purpose to them. It is an error of judgment, a misconception of legal rights and duties, working inequitable results. The answer shows a frank avowal of sincere belief on their part in their right to use this power of forfeiture to coerce a more liberal proposition from the railroad company, and shows an utter lack of appreciation of the force and effect in equity of their long acquiescence in nonperformance and the suddenness of the blow they have attempted to deliver by repealing the ordinance. Not being chancellors, conversant with the principles of equity, they could, as many others have done, easily fall into errors of grave character without being guilty of the least dishonesty or fraud in the ordinary sense of the terms, and it is perfectly apparent that they have done so. Such circumstances warrant intervention by a court of equity to relieve from forfeiture, when no pecuniary or substantial injury has resulted and full performance of the covenant can, and will, be effected. Willingness and desire to comply strictly with all its covenants is plainly expressed by the railway company in its bill, and was verbally communicated to the town authorities immediately after the forfeiture was declared, when the ink on the repealing ordinance was hardly dry. As to the ability of the company to make full compliance, there is no question. Under these circumstances, is it equitable and just to the company, or promotive of the public interests, to destroy this railway? It represents an investment of thousands of dollars and affords means of convenient and rapid travel and transportation for the people of the town and the general public. Why so great a punishment for such slight cause? It is unprecedented so far as the authorities examined disclose. If the injury could not be remedied, or the railway company stood defiant, refusing to perform, the case would wear a different aspect, but it does not. It is willing to perform to the letter—to pay to the last farthing.

In Hukill v. Myers, 36 W. Va. 639, 15 S. E. 151, this court applied the principle of relief against forfeiture, and declared as follows in respect to forfeiture of an oil lease: "In case of such a lease, if the lessor by his conduct clearly indicates that payment will not be demanded when due, and thus lulls the lessee into a feeling of security and throws him off his guard, and because of this he does not make payments when due, the landlord cannot suddenly without demand or notice declare a forfeiture, and there is no forfeiture which equity would recognize, and, if there is in such case technically a forfeiture at law, equity would relieve against it." It may be objected that because the covenant violated here is not a pecuniary one, jurisdiction in equity to relieve it does not exist. It is said that in the English courts equity will only relieve in such cases. But this is not strictly accurate. Where the covenant is pecuniary, and there is default and consequent forfeiture, equity will relieve independently of the circumstances of fraud, accident, mistake, and surprise. But, where fraud, mistake, accident, or surprise enters into the matter, or the forfeiture has resulted from only negligent conduct on the part of the covenantee, equity will interfere, although the covenant be for the performance of some collateral matter and not for the payment of money. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1323. In section 1324 of said work it is said that in America the narrow doctrine of the English courts and the restricted application of jurisdiction to relieve from forfeitures would be received with hesitation, and, substantially, that the jurisdiction is broader in this country. In cases of forfeiture for nonperformance of pecuniary covenants, relief in equity goes as a matter of course, where compensation may be made, but in other cases, unless the delinquency is willful, the court has discretionary power to relieve. "A court of equity has power to relieve a party against forfeiture or penalty incurred by the breach of a condition subsequent, when no willful neglect on his part is shown, upon the principle that a party having a legal right shall not be permitted to avail himself of it for the purpose of injustice and oppression." Noyes v. Anderson, 124 N. Y. 175, 26 N. E. 316, 21 Am. St. Rep. 657. The forfeiture in this case was for failure to pay an assessment for a sewer. "When a mortgagor, without his fault or neglect, is prevented by accident from paying an installment on the day named in a decree of foreclosure, on a bill brought to redeem, equity will grant relief; and he will be reinstated, but on terms that he satisfy the equitable rights of the other party." Kopper v. Dyer, 59 Vt. 477, 9 Atl. 4, 59 Am. Rep. 742. "Equity will relieve against a forfeiture incurred by the breach of a covenant to insure in a lease of real estate, caused by accident or mistake, if no actual damage has been sustained by the lessor." Mactier v. Osborn, 146 Mass. 399, 15 N. E. 641, 4 Am. St. Rep. 323. "A court of equity may grant relief from the forfeiture of an estate conditioned for the maintenance and support of the grantee, where the forfeiture was accidental and unintentional, and not attended with irreparable injury. But it rests in the sound discretion of the court when relief shall be granted in this class of cases." Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358. This is a leading case, and the opinion was written by Chief Justice Redfield, who, in the course of his opinion, said: "That relief might be granted in equity, even where the condition was for the performance of collateral acts seems to be admitted in most of the cases upon this subject. Webber v. Smith, 2 Vernon, 103; Hack v. Leonard, 9 Mod. 90; Cox v. Higford, 2 Vernon, 664; Saunders v. Pope, 12 Vesey, 282. These are cases of nonrepair of premises leased; and the chancellor, Lord Erskine, says in the last case: 'I cannot agree it is necessary the nonperformance of the covenant should have arisen from mere accident or ignorance.' The cases are abundant where relief has been granted against forfeiture of title by nonperformance of other collateral acts, as for not renewing a lease (Rowstone v. Bentley, 4 Br. C. C. 415), or for cutting down timber when covenanted against, on pain of forfeiture (Northcote v. Duke, Ambler, 511; Thomas v. Porter, 1 Oh. Cas. 95). But it has been held relief will not be granted where the forfeiture arises from an act incapable of compensation, although of no essential damage to the other party, as the breach of a condition not to assign. Wafes v. Mocato, 9 Mod. 112. The same rule obtains where the forfeiture arises from an omission to insure. Rolfe v. Harris, 2 Price, 206. * * * It seems, however, to be pretty well established in England that relief for nonrepair of premises will not be granted as matter of course, and especially when there was a willful default (Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price, 200; Hill v. Barclay, 16 Vesey, 403 and 18 Vesey, 56); but where the failure is from 'accident, fraud, surprise, or ignorance not willful,' relief will be granted (2 Lead. O. in Equity, 464, 465; Baton v. Lyon, 3 Vesey, 698)—the result of all which seems to be that there is no well-settled rule upon the subject, or none which is not liable to considerable variation, and to be affected by the circumstances of the particular case. * * * But we must all feel that cases of the character before the court should be received with something more of distrust, and relief afforded with more reserve and circumspection, than in ordinary cases of collateral duties. And although we are not prepared to say that it must appear that, in all cases, the failure arises from surprise, accident, or mistake, we certainly should not grant relief when the omission was willful and wanton, or attended with suffering or serious inconvenience to the grantee, or there was any good ground to apprehend a recurrence of the failure to perform, as was held in Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 421, 50 Am. Dec. 44."

It may be objected here that this position is in violation of the rule that equity will not relieve against a statutory forfeiture. Pom. Eq. Jur. 458; Railway Co. v. Fitler, 60 Pa. 124, 100 Am. Dec. 546. But this ordinance partakes of the nature of a contract. It is generally held, in such cases, that the relation of the parties is contractual. The power of municipal corporations to contract cannot be denied. This ordinance is not a statute. By its very terms it establishes a relation of contract. It does not provide for forfeiture without action on the part of the council. Unlike a statute granting a privilege or franchise and declaring forfeiture as the penalty of noncompliance with conditions, it provides for notice and active steps on the part of the council to bring about forfeiture. It was agreed that, in order to effect a forfeiture, the town authorities should adopt just such methods as one individual resorts to, to bring about the forfeiture of the rights of another individual under a contract existing between them. Municipal authorities are agents as well as legislators, and are, in great measure, subject to the legal principles governing transactions between private persons. Many cases hold that municipal corporations are precluded by their conduct from enforcing forfeitures. "A court of equity will not enforce a forfeiture of the rights and privileges of the grantees in a contract for their failure to complete their performance of it in time, where the party seeking the forfeiture was guilty of the first breach of the agreement." Power Co. v. Colorado Springs, 105 Fed. 1, 44 C. C. A. 333. In that case, the party seeking forfeiture was a municipal corporation. "Where a street railway company has expended large sums of money and exercised due diligence in building and operating its road, so as to comply with an ordinance of permission, but unforeseen circumstances have caused a delay, which has occasioned no pecuniary injury to the township or its inhabitants, equity will interfere to restrain the adoption of an ordinance by the township declaring a forfeiture of the franchise of the corporation because it did not comply with the statute of permission, which provided that cars should be running at a certain headway, on a continuous line of double track, within a specified time." Railway Co. v. South Orange, 58 N. J. Eq. 83, 43 Atl. 53. In Chicago v. Railroad Co., 105 Ill. 73, the court enjoined the city from interfering with the laying of the track of a railway company after the expiration of the time limited by the ordinance, because the company had been prevented by injunctions, and by the police officers of the city, acting under the direction of the mayor, from prosecuting its work, in consequence of which the limit expired before it was completed. In this respect municipal corporations seem to stand upon the same footing as individuals. They are subject to the law of estoppel by acts in pais. "But of late years, much more than formerly, the doctrine of estoppel, most wholesome and just in its operation when properly applied, has been extended to these municipal corporations, so as to bind and conclude them by their own acts and acquiescence, and the acts and acquiescence of their officers, whenever an estoppel would exist in the case of natural persons." Kneeland v. Gilman, 24 Wis. 39. See, also, Martel v. East St. Louis, 94 Ill. 67; Railroad Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 25; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, Syl. point 12, 42 Am. Rep. 780. This is subject to the limitation that the subject-matter must not be ultra vires—must be within their authority. Here the town had undoubted right and power to waive nonperformance of covenants, or extend time.

As above indicated, however, there must be full performance of the covenant as a condition of relief. The relief is against the forfeiture, on the ground of inequitable conduct, working surprise, not against the contract or from its obligation. We do not take away either the right to have the delinquency made good or the power to forfeit for future delinquencies. The covenants for the non-performance of which forfeiture has been declared must be performed, and that fully and promptly. In the event of refusal to perform, another question would arise, namely, whether the bill should be dismissed or retained and affirmative relief granted the defendant by way of enforcement of the forfeiture. As we cannot say such contingency will not arise, though there is hardly any probability of it, we must now give direction as to the course to be pursued in that event, else the principles of the cause will not be fully settled, and another appeal might result, involving a question already presented on this appeal. Cross-relief has been given by the decree. Never to declare or enforce a forfeiture, or divest an estate or title for violation of a condition subsequent, is an invariable rule of equity, if there is a legal remedy. Under such circumstances, a court of equity utterly declines to touch the case and leaves the party to his legal remedies. In the language of a former able judge of this court, now deceased, equity abhors a forfeiture. Our leading case on the subject is Craig v. Hukill, 37 W. Va. 520, 16 S. E. 363. See, also, Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 415, 8 Am. Dec. 598; Horsberg v. Baker, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 232, 7 L. Ed. 125; Marshall v. Vicksburg, 15 Wall. 146, 21 L. Ed. 121. This is different from an appeal to equity for aid in the abatement of a nuisance. In such case there is no forfeiture, and no vested title or right as against the public. The thing proceeded against is wrongful. Here, a title vested by contract, and the effort is to take it away by forfeiture. To do this the town must resort to its legal remedies, if any are available. Besides the right of abatement without judicial proceedings, if it can be done peaceably, there are remedies in the law courts. There is much authority for the position that a municipal corporation has its possessory action for a street against a railway having no right to occupy it. Dillon, Munic. Cor. §§ 662, 723. What others it may have it is unnecessary to inquire. To prevent equity jurisdiction for this purpose, it suffices that there is one.

Agreeably to the principles and conclusions above stated, the decree appealed from will be wholly reversed, with costs, and the cause remanded to the circuit court of Ohio county, with directions to perpetuate the injunction, if the covenants in question shall be fully and properly performed by the appellant within a reasonable time to be allowed for the purpose, if they have not already been so performed, but without prejudice to the right and power of the town of Triadelphia to forfeit the privileges of the appellant under the said ordinance for any future failures to comply with the conditions thereof, and to dismiss the bill if the appellant shall refuse to perform said covenants within the time to be allowed therefor, as aforesaid.

BRANNON, P. If equity has jurisdiction, I find no fault with the actual decision of this case. If the decision of the town council is a nullity, injunction lies; but, if it has a legal force, I am not clear that injunction lies. The grant of the franchise vested the council with jurisdiction or power to examine the facts and determine whether the town ordinance had been complied with, or whether the franchise had been forfeited. Is not the repeal, declaring forfeiture, a judicial act? The council was a public body exercising legal function in this matter, and it has been difficult for me to see that its judgment repealing the charter is mere wind, without legal force. If erroneous on the facts, still it has force until reversed. To reverse the writ of certiorari is the process, not injunction, because certiorari is, and injunction is not, a process to correct error. By the Code of 1899, c. 110, § 2, certiorari applies not only as it was by common law, but it is enlarged so as to apply to "every case, matter or proceeding before a county court, council of a city, town or village, justice or other inferior tribunal." I do not therefore consent to the overruling of the case of Town of Davis v. Davis, 40 W. Va. 464, 21 S. E. 906, Syl., point 7. The common-law principles stated in Cunningham v. Squires, 2 W. Va. 422, 98 Am. Dec. 770, and Poe v. Machine Works, 24 W. Va. 517, would likely justify certiorari in this case, but if not, that statute would seem to do so. In this case there was a notice that the ordinance had not been complied with by the company, warning it that, if it did not comply within a given time, its franchise would be repealed; but there was no notice giving time and place of the hearing of the question whether such warning had been heeded and the conditions of the grant complied with. Now, it may be that, as the repeal was ex parte, without hearing the company, the order of repeal is not one between parties, and that for that reason an injunction lies, as the injury is irreparable. If the company had been summoned, or had been heard, I think certiorari, not injunction, would lie. I think that the statute enlarges the scope of the writ, since that is imported by its words, and this court has several times so looked at the statute. Fouse v. Vandervort, 30 W. Va. 330, 4 S. E. 298; Chenoweth v. Commissioners, 26 W. Va. 233; Morgan v. Railroad, 39 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. 588. In the Chenoweth Case Judge Snyder said that the statute gives review by certiorari, "and makes no exception as to whether the matters to be reviewed are judicial or merely ministerial." Judge Dent has said as to this statute: "The Legislature has seen fit to recognize town councils as inferior judicial tribunals in the determination of questions involving the rights of individuals and property, and has made their decision subject to review by the higher judicial tribunals of the state. It has thereby rendered unnecessary the appeal to equity in such cases, unless irreparable injury is threatened, or it is necessary to preserve the property in statu quo until the right thereto can be properly determined." Clifton v. Town of Weston, 54 W. Va. 255, 46 S. E. 360. If a town council's order is good in any case until reversed, I do not see how injunction lies. In this case right to property of great value was involved, making the case one adversary in character. My idea is that the statute aimed to give certiorari in every case where rights of parties are involved, in the instances indicated by the statute, where no appeal or writ of error lies to the proceedings before the tribunals referred to in the statute. In cases where writ of error or appeal lies, they are the remedies. The Legislature knew that in cases before inferior tribunals rights of property of great importance are sometimes involved, and I think it designed to make certiorari, in such cases, commensurate for relief with appeal and writ of error.

(38 W. Va. 159)

HEFNER et al. v. FIDLER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. DETINUE—WHEN LIES.

The action of detinue will lie to recover a promissory note.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 16, Cent. Dig. Detinue, § 1.]

2. SAME—ELEMENTS.

In order to ground the action of detinue, these points are necessary: (1) The plaintiff must have property in the thing sought to be recovered; (2) he must have the right to its immediate possession; (3) it must be capable of identification; (4) it is essential that the property be of some value; and (5) the defendant must have had possession at some time prior to the institution of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 16, Cent. Dig. Detinue, §§ 1-11.]

3. SAME—FRAUD.

One who purchases property, and gives his notes for the purchase price thereof, cannot maintain detinue to recover such notes, upon the discovery of such fraud as would entitle him to a rescission of the contract.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Gilmer County.

Action by G. W. Hefner and others against Emmett Fidler. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

R. F. Kidd and A. L. Holt, for plaintiff in error. R. G. Linn and L. H. Barnett, for defendants in error.

SANDERS, J. This is an action of detinue, instituted before a justice of the peace of Gilmer county, for the recovery of the possession of two certain promissory notes of $62.50 each. Upon the trial of the case, both before the justice and upon appeal to the circuit court, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, and to this judgment a writ of error and supersedeas has been allowed. The defendants sold to the plaintiffs one four-horse power engine and boiler, for the sum of $125, to be paid in two equal payments of $62.50 each, for which they executed the said two notes. The plaintiffs claim that shortly after the consummation of the trade, by the execution of the notes and delivery of the engine and boiler, they discovered that the defendant had knowingly made false and fraudulent representations to them in regard to said engine and boiler, for the purpose of misleading and deceiving them, and which did mislead and deceive them, to their prejudice, and for which they claim they are entitled to rescind the contract, and to this end they offered to return the engine and boiler to defendant, and demanded possession of the notes, and defendant claimed that he had assigned the notes away, and could not comply with their offer.

The first question that confronts us is, does the action of detinue lie? In order to ground the action, these points are necessary: (1) The plaintiff must have property in the thing sought to be recovered; (2) he must have the right to its immediate possession; (3) it must be capable of identification; (4) it is essential that the property be of some value; and (5) the defendant must have had possession at some time before the institution of the action. The authorities universally hold that the action of detinue will lie to recover the possession of a promissory note. Some of these are 1 Barton's Law Pr. 214; 1 Chitty, Pl. (11th Ed.) 121; Cooper v. Watson, 73 Ala. 252; Robb v. Cherry, 98 Tenn. 72, 38 S. W. 412; Lewis v. Hoover, 24 Ky. 500, 19 Am. Dec. 120; Robinson v. Peterson, 40 Ill. App. 132; Carter v. Turner, 37 Tenn. 178. But while this action will lie to recover the possession of a promissory note, yet one, to maintain it, must bring himself within the rule herein stated. As we have seen, the plaintiff must have property in the thing sought to be recovered, and it must be of some value. Then, the pertinent inquiry is, what property have the plaintiffs in the notes sought to be recovered, and what is their value? When recovered by the plaintiffs, they are of no value to them. It could only be the possession by them of evidence of outstanding indebtedness. If the theory of the plaintiffs is correct, that they have the right to rescind, and have rescinded, the contract, the notes are also of no value to the defendant; he having lost the right to recover on them. If, however, he has not lost the right to recover, he would be in the lawful possession of them, and the plaintiffs' action could not, for that reason, be maintained.

The plaintiffs are deprived of nothing of value to them by reason of the detention of the notes. It may be claimed that the defendant may sue upon them. If so, the plaintiffs can make any defense which they may have. If they have the right to rescind the contract, they can set this up as a defense. Then, again, the notes should have an alternative value. A judgment in detinue should be for the specific property of a specified value, so that, if the property cannot be had, its value may be recovered. Certainly a judgment could not be given for the plaintiffs for the face value of these notes, for they have no such value in them. Would they be of that value to the plaintiffs, if recovered? This question must be answered in the negative. Then, if not, how could they have a judgment for the value of a thing which is valueless? In the case of Todd v. Crookshanks, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 432, the plaintiff brought an action to recover the possession of a note which he had paid, and had taken a receipt showing payment in full, and the court, speaking in this case, says: "There was no foundation for the action below. After the note was paid, a receipt in full given by one of the payees, it was completely discharged, so as to be of no value."

For these reasons, the judgment of the circuit court is reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the action dismissed.

(58 W. Va. 189)

PHILIP CAREY MFG. CO. v. WATSON.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1905.)1. JUDGMENT—INQUIRY OF DAMAGES—RIGHT TO PLEAD.

In an action of assumpsit, where an order for inquiry of damages is required, the office judgment entered at rules does not become final on the last day of the next succeeding term of court, not having been previously set aside, so as to bar a defense thereafter; but the defendant may plead to issue at any time before the order for inquiry of damages is executed.

2. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS—EFFECT.

If a written agreement, not under seal, be altered by the party claiming under it in a material part, heid, he can never recover upon the agreement so altered, nor can he avail himself of the contract in its original and true form. Newell v. Mayberry, 8 Leigh, 250, 23 Am. Dec. 261.

3. SAME—MATERIALITY OF ALTERATION.

The materiality of the alteration is a question of law for the court upon the admissibility of the altered agreement in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Alteration of Instruments, § 266.]

4. SAME—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a material alteration is shown to have been made after the execution of the agreement, the burden is on the party producing and relying upon the agreement to explain the alteration by showing that it was made under circumstances rendering it lawful.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Alteration of Instruments, §§ 242, 245.]

5. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of such explanation, the alteration will be presumed to have been made by the party producing the agreement, or with his privity, and fraudulently, so far as legal fraud attaches to a willful change of an agreement by a party thereto.

6. SAME—FRAUD.

If such material alteration appears to have been made fraudulently by the party producing and relying on the agreement, or with his privity, such party cannot recover on the original consideration or demand.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Action by the Philip Carey Manufacturing Company against Andrew J. Watson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

E. G. Smith, for plaintiff in error. Davis & Davis and E. Bryan Templeman, for defendant in error.

COX, J. In an action of assumpsit by the Philip Carey Manufacturing Company against Andrew J. Watson in the circuit court of Harrison county, there was a trial by jury, and motion by defendant to exclude plaintiff's evidence and to direct a verdict for defendant, which was sustained, and a verdict accordingly and judgment of dismissal thereon; and plaintiff brings error.

The first question raised is: Did the office judgment in this action become final on the last day of the next term of court after it was entered at rules, it not being previously set aside, and there being no plea to issue at that term? This question involves the consideration of parts of sections 44, 45, 46, and 47 of chapter 125 of the Code of 1899. The declaration is in the usual form, and contains only the common counts. The plaintiff's bill of particulars, accompanied by affidavit, charging the defendant with a balance of $640.75 on an open account, after allowing certain credits, was filed in court at the next term after office judgment. The action was brought on the 26th day of July to August rules, following. At August rules the clerk made an entry of summons executed, declaration filed, and conditional judgment. At September rules, the clerk made an entry of conditional judgment confirmed and order for inquiry of damages. The September term of court, 1902, followed. The action was twice continued by consent of both parties, once at that term, and once at the January term, following. On February 5, 1903, in term, the defendant tendered his plea of the general issue, accompanied by affidavit, to which plea plaintiff objected as coming too late, but the objection was overruled and the plea filed. In this action the order for inquiry of damages was proper, under sections 44 and 45. This was not an action for debt on bond or other writing for the payment of money, or against the drawer or indorser of a bill of exchange or negotiable note. Nor was it an action of debt or scire facias upon judgment or recognizance, but an action on an open account, and was not exempted, by the provisions of section 45, from the necessity of an order for inquiry of damages. As to the finality of office judgment at the next term, this action does not fall under the provisions of section 46, because its provisions apply to cases wherein there is no order for inquiry of damages. We are, then, left to the provisions of section 47 to give finality to this office judgment on the last day of the next term of court, if it is to have such finality. We confess that the language of section 47 appears to be somewhat doubtful, but in construing it we must consider all the provisions of the statute relating to the same subject-matter, in order that we may determine the scope and intent of this section. Does this section, standing alone, provide for the finality of office judgment in any case on the last day of the next term of court? It does not seem to do so. We read it in vain for any positive declaration that an office judgment shall become final in any action at any term of court. The general object of this section seems to be to provide a way of setting aside an office judgment, which otherwise would become final under some other provision of law. If this be true, we look for that other provision, and find it in section 46, which provides for finality in a case where there is no order for an inquiry of damages. The element of doubt as to this construction is the clause therein, "whether an order for an inquiry of damages has been made therein or not"; but this clause does not purport to make finality. It is found in the provision made to enable the defendant to prevent finality. We think it an unwarranted inference to say that this clause, or any language in section 47, gives finality to an office judgment, if not previously set aside, on the last day of the next term in any action where an order of inquiry of damages is required. The common-law right to plead should not be taken away by such an inference, nor by mere construction. The construction we now give section 47 is the same given to it by this court in the case of Marstiller v. Ward, 52 W. Va. 74, 48 S. E. 178, in which Judge Brannon, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In any action for (not of) debt on any of the writings specified in section 45, and in an action of debt on a judgment, or scire facias on a judgment, there must be an issuable plea at the first term after office judgment. In all other actions, on contract or for tort, the plea may come later. I would say that in an action on a bond with collateral condition there could be a plea at any time before trial, as it would require an inquiry of damages; otherwise in an action on a single bill for money." Under this construction the admission of defendant's plea was not error.

The next question raised by the record is: Did the circuit court err in sustaining the defendant's motion to exclude plaintiff's evidence and direct a verdict for defendant? The consideration of this question makes necessary a further statement of the facts appearing in the record. The balance claimed by plaintiff in its bill of particulars was for a car load of cement roofing, which it claimed to have sold and delivered to defendant. To sustain its case it offered only one witness, its agent who made the contract with defendant upon which it relies. During the direct examination of this witness a paper, purporting to be the written order or contract between the parties for the sale and delivery of the car load of roofing, was produced, and the witness testified to the genuineness of the signatures of the parties thereto, and the paper was admitted in evidence. The essential part of this paper is as follows:

"Aug. 6, 1901.

"To the Philip Carey Mfg. Co.—Gentlemen: You will please enter our order and ship at once 1 car load cement roofing, and same to be settled for Dec. 28, 1901, to be settled for as sold. * * * 300 squares cement roofing "Standard" complete @ 275 per sq. All prices f. o. b. Salem. Ship to A. J. Watson, City, Salem, County, Harrison, State, W. Va. Via B. & O. R. R.

"Yours respectfully, A. J. Watson.

"Accepted by the Philip Carey Mfg. Co., per H. Clayton."

Near the right-hand margin of this paper there appeared in writing the following: "I agree to help sell this car load," and signed "H. C.," the initials of the name of plaintiff's agent. The witness further testified to the shipment and delivery of the car load of roofing to defendant, accompanied by a bill of sale therefor, and that on December 2, 1901, plaintiff received a payment of $140.75 from defendant, and on the same date gave a credit for freight of $43.50, leaving a balance due plaintiff of $640.75. Witness also produced a letter from defendant bearing date December 17, 1901, which was read to the jury, the contents of which is as follows: "Your letter received this morning, and will say in reply that my store and all my stock was burned, including roofing. 56 houses were burned, and most all business houses. I want you to come as soon as possible. I am yours respt., A. J. Watson." On cross-examination of this witness it appeared that the original contract or order for the car load of roofing was executed in duplicate; that the duplicates were prepared by the witness, plaintiff's agent, by placing a carbon paper between a white and a yellow sheet of paper, so that, when the contract or order was written on the white sheet, an exact copy was produced on the yellow sheet, and, owing to the character of the paper used, a copy, or rather a reversed copy, at least in part, also appeared on the reverse side of the white sheet. The white sheet was the one retained and offered in evidence by plaintiff, and the yellow sheet was kept by defendant. Two alterations appeared in the one offered by plaintiff, when compared with the one kept by defendant. The one kept by defendant was produced and offered in evidence on the cross-examination of this witness. On redirect examination of this witness by plaintiff's attorney, the question, "Have you any explanation to offer as to the discrepancy between these two papers?" was asked, to which witness replied, "Nothing at all. As I stated before, I went back afterwards and went over the matter. I don't deny that that is a copy of the original order." And when asked, "Then you are willing to accept as the true order the one for which Mr. Watson contends, are you?" he replied, "Yes, sir." The two alterations in the duplicate offered by plaintiff were as follows: First, the change of the words, "I agree to sell this car load," so as to read, "I agree to help sell this car load"; and, second, the change of the words, "to be settled for Dec. 28, 1901, of what sold," so as to read, "to be settled for Dec. 28, 1901, as sold."

It is not necessary for us to trace the doctrine relating to the alteration of written agreements, in England and in this country, from its origin in Pigot's Case, 11 Coke, 27, to the present time. This is ably and exhaustively done by Judge Dillon in 2 Cyc. 137, and by Mr. Freeman and his associates in a note to the case of Burgess v. Blake, 86 Am. St. Rep. 80, to which note we shall hereafter refer in this opinion as Freeman's note. We shall content ourselves with a brief statement of the principles deducible from the authorities, which we deem applicable to this case. Freeman's note says the general rule is that "any change in a material part of a written instrument, after such instrument has been fully executed, by a party to such instrument or one claiming under him, and without the consent of the party sought to be charged, renders such instrument void." The authority is universal in this country, except in the states of Missouri and New Jersey, that no alteration vitiates an instrument unless it is material. 2 Cyc. 190; Freeman's note, 84, 85; Yeager v. Musgrave, 28 W. Va. 90. We must therefore see if the alterations here shown were material. Plaintiff contended that it was entitled to recover the price of the goods sold and delivered under the contract. The defendant contended that the goods were merely consigned, and not sold, to him by plaintiff. Upon this question the alterations were material. The mere statement of the changes made seems to be a sufficient answer as to their materiality. There is a material difference, in legal effect, between agreeing to sell a car load of roofing and in agreeing to help sell it; and there is a material difference in the legal effect of an agreement for settlement as to a car load of roofing on a certain date, for that part which had been sold and an agreement for settlement as sold, especially upon the question as to whether or not the car load was actually sold or only consigned. The expression "as sold" may imply that the whole car load was to be settled for ultimately, while the expression "of what sold" may imply that defendant would not at any time be compelled to settle for more than the part which had been sold. The alterations were material.

It is contended that the question of whether or not they were material alterations should have been left to the jury. We think not. The question of the materiality of the alterations is a question of law for the court upon the admissibility of the altered agreement in evidence. Newell v. Mayberry, 3 Leigh, 250, 23 Am. Dec. 281; 2 Cyc. 258; and Freeman's note, 84. There was no denial that the alterations had been made. There was nothing for the jury to pass on as to that question. The fact of alteration was plainly shown by plaintiff's evidence. In this respect this case differs from the case of Conner v. Fleshman, 4 W. Va. 693, where it was said that under the circumstances of that case the question whether the instrument had been mutilated was for the jury. We are relieved of the necessity of examining the many conflicting rules and authorities as to the presumption or want of presumption as to the time when the alterations were made—that is, whether they were made before, at the time of, or after the execution of the agreement—because it clearly appears by the plaintiff's evidence that they were made after the execution of the contract. This witness said in effect that the duplicate produced by defendant, which was without alterations, was a true copy of the original contract. If this is correct, there was no time other than after the execution of the contract when the alterations could have been made. When a material alteration, made after the execution of an agreement, is made to appear, the party producing the agreement has the burden of explaining the alteration. He must show that the change was made under circumstances rendering it lawful, and, unless he does so, it will be presumed to have been made by the party producing it, or with his privity, and fraudulently, in so far as legal fraud attaches to a willful change of an agreement by one of the parties thereto. Piercy v. Piercy, 5 W. Va. 199; 2 Cyc. 234, 235.

It is further contended that, notwithstanding that the contract was destroyed as evidence by the alterations, the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the case made by it. The goods were shown to have been delivered to the defendant, and the defendant's duplicate of the contract, in an unaltered condition, was before the jury. Must plaintiff, simply because the duplicate produced by it was destroyed by fraudulent alterations, lose the benefit which the law would give to it upon the facts, if there had been no fraudulent alteration? In other words, does the fraudulent alteration prevent recovery on the original consideration? It is said, in 2 Cyc. 183, that "it has been considered in some cases that where a party, by his own act, alters an instrument so that it cannot be the foundation of any legal remedy, he will not be permitted to prove the promise contained in it by any other evidence, and this principle prevents a resort to the common counts or a recovery on the original consideration." Among the cases cited to sustain this view is the case of Newell v. Mayberry, supra, and that case is binding authority on this court. Judge Tucker, delivering the opinion in that case, said: "The materiality of the alteration is, I take it, matter for the decision of the court; and, moreover, if it had appeared that the alteration was made by Mayberry, or any other by his procurement, then he could never recover upon this contract, nor could he be permitted to establish it by any other evidence, or even to avail himself of the contract according to its original and true character." See, also, Freeman's note, 119, 122. There seems to be no authority allowing recovery on the original consideration, where there has been a material and fraudulent alteration by the plaintiff or with his privity. 2 Cyc. 183-185; Freeman's note, 122, 123. Nor is the plaintiff permitted to establish the contract by any other evidence, such as the duplicate retained by defendant. Newell v. Mayberry, supra; Freeman's note, 118. This rule may seem harsh, but the reasons for it are said to be that a written agreement in the hands of an adverse party is easily susceptible of alteration, to the injury of the party charged thereby. Many written contracts are negotiable, and perform important functions in commercial transactions. It is of the highest importance to the commercial world that they be preserved in their original state or condition. Public policy demands this for the prevention of frauds upon innocent persons. The most effective means of preserving the integrity of such agreements is the rule that a material alteration destroys the agreement, so that no recovery can be had upon it, either in its original or its altered condition. The object of the rule is to enjoin the highest care upon the holder of the agreement, and to punish him with loss for his negligent and fraudulent conduct.

Applying this rule to this case, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, either upon proof of the true original contract, or to recover upon the original consideration. Therefore there is no error in the action of the court sustaining the motion to exclude the evidence and to direct a verdict for defendant, nor in the action of the court in refusing to set aside the verdict and in entering the judgment of dismissal.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 477)

FEDERATION WINDOW GLASS CO. v. CAMERON GLASS CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. DAMAGES—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—WRIT OF INQUIRY.

Where the declaration, in an action of assumpsit, contains the common counts, and one or more special counts upon promissory notes in writing for the payment of money, and office judgment by default is entered at rules, the necessity of an order for inquiry of damages in the action is not avoided by section 45, c. 125, Code 1899.

2. JUDGMENT—OFFICE DEFAULT—FINALITY.

Such office judgment does not become final on the last day of the next succeeding term of court, not having been previously set aside, so as to bar a defense thereafter; but the defendants may plead to issue at any time before the order for inquiry of damages is executed.

3. ASSUMPSIT—ACCOUNT OF ITEMS—FILING.

The plaintiff, in an action of assumpsit, does not waive the common counts of his declaration by failing to file the account required by section 11, c. 125, Code 1899, at the time the declaration is filed. He may file the account afterwards, and rely upon the common counts.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marshall County.

Action by the Federation Window Glass Company against the Cameron Glass Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant M. L. Benedum appeals. Reversed.

Riley & Ritz, for appellant. J. C. Simpson, for appellee.

COX, J. This action of assumpsit for $15,000 damages was commenced in the circuit court of Marshall county on the 17th day of October, 1903, by the Federation Window Glass Company, a corporation, against the Cameron Glass Company, a corporation, M. L. Benedum, A. E. Fox, and D. C. Harkins. Process was served on the defendants on the 27th day of October, 1903. The plaintiff filed an original and two amended declarations. The original was filed at November rules, 1903. The first amended declaration was filed in open court on the 26th of January, 1904, and was remanded to rules for proceedings thereon; the defendants not having appeared. The second amended declaration was filed at May rules, 1904. Each of these declarations contained the common counts in assumpsit, and one or more special counts upon two promissory notes in writing for the payment of money, alleged to have been made by the Cameron Glass Company on the 21st of July, 1903, payable to its order 60 days after date, each calling for $6,000, and indorsed by said corporation, M. L. Benedum, A. E. Fox, and D. C. Harkins. No bill of particulars was filed with either of the declarations. The record discloses no appearance by defendants at May rules, 1904, when the second amended declaration was filed, but the clerk entered a rule to plead against them. At June rules, 1904, the clerk made the following entry: "Affidavit filed by plaintiff, and, defendant failing to plead to declaration, judgment entered for plaintiff against defendant for damages mentioned in declaration, as shown by affidavit." At the June term of court, 1904, following, nothing was done in the case. By an order entered in term on December 2, 1904, it appears, in substance, as follows: Defendant Benedum moved for a nunc pro tunc order showing a demurrer to the first amended declaration and joinder therein by plaintiff, and moved to quash the plaintiff's affidavit filed, and to set aside the office judgment entered at June rules, 1904, and asked leave to demur and file his plea of non assumpsit to the second amended declaration. The court refused the nunc pro tunc order, refused to permit Benedum to demur and to file the plea of non assumpsit to the second amended declaration, quashed plaintiff's affidavit filed at June rules, 1904, permitted plaintiff to file another affidavit, under section 46, c. 125, Code 1899, refused to give Benedum time to file a counter affidavit, and proceeded to treat the office judgment as final, and to ascertain plaintiff's damages in accordance with the last affidavit, and entered judgment in favor of plaintiff against defendants for the sum of $10,037.45 and costs. Benedum excepted to the several rulings of the court against him, and afterwards obtained from a judge of this court a writ of error to, and supersedeas from, the judgment.

The vital question in this case is: Did the office judgment entered at June rules 1904, become final on the last day of the June term, 1904, of the circuit court of Marshall county, it not having been previously set aside, so as to bar a defense thereafter? The second amended declaration, upon which this office judgment was entered, contained the common counts, and a special count upon the two promissory notes mentioned. Plaintiff claims that this office judgment became final on the last day of the June term, 1904, so as to bar a defense thereafter, and relies upon the cases of Hutton v. Holt, 52 W. Va. 672, 44 S. E. 164, Marstiller v. Ward, 52 W. Va. 74, 43 S. E. 178, and Bradley v. Long (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 746. Those cases involved the finality of office judgment in actions where no order for inquiry of damages was proper or necessary. The authority of those cases does not apply to actions in which such order is necessary. The recent case of Phillip Carey Mfg. Co. v. Watson (decided by this court at this term) 52 S. E. 515, involved the question of the finality of office judgment in an action of assumpsit, where the declaration contained only the common counts. In that case it was held: "In an action of assumpsit, where an order for inquiry of damages is required, the office judgment entered at rules does not become final on the last day of the next succeeding term of court, if not previously set aside, so as to bar a defense thereafter; but the defendant may plead to issue at any time before the order for inquiry of damages is executed." The only material difference between that case and the case here presented is that the declaration here contained, in addition to the common counts, the special count upon the two promissory notes; but this fact did not take the common counts out of the declaration. We do not deem it necessary to repeat what we have said in the case last mentioned. Section 45, c. 125, Code 1899, only makes an order for inquiry of damages unnecessary in an action for debt upon any bond or other writing for the payment of money, or against the drawer or indorser of a bill of exchange or negotiable note, or in an action of debt or scire facias upon a judgment or recognition. It may be argued that this action, while not an action of debt, is an action for debt on writings for the payment of money, and therefore exempted by said section from the necessity of an order for inquiry of damages. This argument might come with much force, if it were not for the common counts. The common counts were as much a part of the declaration as the special count. The common counts stood as parts of the plaintiff's demand against the defendants at the time this office judgment was entered at rules.

The plaintiff insists that the common counts must be deemed to have been waived, because no bill of particulars was filed under them, and that the office judgment, therefore, could only have been upon the special count. The statute (section 11, c. 125, Code 1899) provides that in every action of assumpsit the plaintiff shall file with his declaration an account distinctly stating the several items of his claim, unless it be plainly described in the declaration, and, if he fail to do so, he shall not be permitted to prove any item not stated in such account on the trial of the case. The object of a bill of particulars is to specify the claim and prevent surprise on the trial. 3 Encyc. Pl. & Prac. 519. The bill of particulars under the statute is no part of the declaration. Riley v. Jarvis, 43 W. Va. 43, 28 S. E. 366. The failure to file a bill of particulars in an action of assumpsit is not ground for demurrer (Sheppard v. Peabody, 21 W. Va. 368); nor is the fact that the bill is too vague (Abell v. Penn. Ins. Co., 18 W. Va. 412). Where the bill is too vague, advantage may be taken of the defect by excluding the plaintiff's evidence. The bill of particulars not being a part of the declaration, no rules could have been taken upon it if it had been filed. We do not think, under our decisions and practice, that the plaintiff waived the common counts by not filing the bill of particulars at the time the declaration was filed. Plaintiff might file the bill later, and rely upon the common counts. We do not understand that it is absolutely necessary that the plaintiff file the bill at the time the declaration is filed. The statute does not say so. It seems to us that the statute means that he shall file the bill in support of, and to amplify and supplement, his declaration, but not necessarily at the same time the declaration is filed. If the plaintiff fails to file the bill, the penalty is the exclusion of his evidence as to any item not plainly described in the declaration. The defendant, before trial, may demand such bill. Transportation Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 50 W. Va. 611, 40 S. E. 591, 56 L. R. A. 804, 88 Am. St. Rep. 895.

In this case the plaintiff has chosen to bring an action of assumpsit sounding in damages, combining the common counts, which require an order for inquiry of damages, with a special count on promissory notes. It is said, in 6 Encyc. Pl. & Prac. 132, that, where the damages are unliquidated, a judgment by default can never be rendered without reference to a jury, unless by express provision of the statute. See, also, James River, etc., Co. v. Lee, 16 Grat. 422; Smithson v. Briggs, 33 Grat. 180. The common counts are not relieved from the necessity of an order for inquiry of damages by section 45, c. 125, Code 1899. That being true, the action is not relieved from such order, although the declaration contains the special count in addition to the common counts. If such order is necessary, then the office judgment entered at June rules, 1904, did not become final, either under section 46 or section 47, c. 125, Code 1899, on the last day of the next succeeding term of court; it not having been previously set aside, so as to bar a defense thereafter. We so held in the case of Phillip Carey Mfg. Co. v. Watson, supra. Therefore we now hold that where a declaration in an action of assumpsit contains the common counts, and one or more special counts upon promissory notes in writing for the payment of money, and office judgment by default is entered at rules, the necessity of an order for inquiry of damages is not avoided by section 45, c. 125, Code 1899, and that such judgment does not become final, so as to bar a defense on the last day of the next succeeding term of court, not having been previously set aside, so as to bar a defense thereafter; but the defendants may plead to issue at any time before the order for inquiry of damages is executed.

It is unnecessary for us to say whether or not the judgment in this case is erroneous because the office judgment was entered after a rule to plead, when there had been no appearance by defendants. We do not desire to be understood by this decision as holding that an order for inquiry of damages would be necessary in an action of assumpsit, where the declaration contained only counts upon a writing or writings for the payment of money, or that in such case an office judgment by default would not become final on the last day of the next succeeding term of court. That case is not before us, and we decide nothing in relation to it. It follows from what we have said that the lower court erred in refusing to permit the defendant Benedum to demur and plead on the 2d day of December, 1904.

For this error, the judgment must be reversed as to all of the defendants. State ex rel. Klok Bros. v. Corvin, 51 W. Va. 19, 41 S. E. 211. This action is remanded, with directions to admit, under the rules of law, any proper defense which the defendants, or either of them, shall offer before an order for inquiry of damages is executed, and to be further proceeded with according to law.

(58 W. Va. 216)

KELLEY v. OHIO RIVER R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, Oct. 31, 1905. On Rehearing, Jan. 9, 1906.)

1. TRIAL—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

Upon demurrer to evidence by defendant, if the plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to sustain his case, oral evidence of the demurrant conflicting with that of the demurree is ignored, and the demurrer overruled, unless the oral evidence of the demurrant be so clearly preponderant over that of the demurree that a verdict for the demurree would be set aside.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 354-356.]

2. DEATH—WRONGFUL ACT—DAMAGES.

In an action in behalf of a father for killing his son by wrongful act or negligence, the jury is not confined to compensative damages for mere pecuniary injury, but may consider the sorrow, the mental distress, and bereavement of the father.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Death, § 118.]

3. RAILROADS—INJURY TO PERSON ON TRACK—SIGNALS.

When the trainmen see a person walking on a railroad track, they must give him an alarm signal at such distance before reaching him as will enable him to hear it and get off the track. Until such alarm is given, they cannot act on the assumption that he will get off the track.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Wayne County.

Action by John Kelley against the Ohio River Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Vinson & Thompson, for plaintiff in error. Marcum, Marcum & Shepherd and W. W. Marcum, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, P. This is an action by John Kelley, as administrator of James Kelley, against the Ohio River Railroad Company to recover damages for killing James Kelley by running a passenger train against him. The defendant entered a demurrer to the evidence, and upon it the court rendered judgment against the defendant for $5,000, the damages assessed by a jury. James Kelley and one O'Conner were walking along the railroad track, using it for a footway, and were struck by a passenger train running at the speed of 35 or 40 miles an hour, and both were killed. The case does not involve the question of the liability of a railroad company for failure to keep a lookout for persons on its tracks; for it is without question that the trainmen could see Kelley and O'Conner on the July day on a straight track for more than half a mile, and did see them for a long distance before they were struck. The single question is a question of fact; that is, whether the trainmen, after discovering Kelley and O'Conner on the track, were guilty of negligence in failing to sound an alarm at the proper distance before striking them.

It is undeniable law that one walking upon a railroad track, using it as a footway, is a trespasser, and in that very act is guilty of great negligence. Spicer v. Railroad Co., 34 W. Va. 514, 12 S. E. 553, 11 L. R. A. 385. But whilst such is the law, it is also settled law that after the trainmen have discovered one so walking upon the track they owe to him a duty under the law. They cannot injure him by willful or gross or wanton negligence. Spicer v. Railroad Co., 34 W. Va. 514, 12 S. E. 553, 11 L. R. A. 385. Whatever be the duty of a railroad company's agent to keep a lookout to discover persons on the track, certain it is that when the trainmen have discovered a human being on the track, and in danger, they must give him warning of the train's approach, such a warning, by whistle or bell, at such a distance, before reaching the trespasser, that he will be able to hear, take a thought for his safety, and get off the track. Common humanity demands this. True he is a trespasser and in the wrong; but, though every man who uses the railroad track as a footway is committing a trespass has placed himself within the precinct of danger where he has no right to be, and is guilty of gross negligence, yet people do walk upon railroad tracks, and the law, from sheer necessity, has established the rule, applicable not only to railroads, but generally applicable, that it is the duty of one from whom the injury comes that he shall, when he sees a man in danger, use reasonable care, take reasonable steps, reasonable under the circumstances of the particular case, to save the man in danger. He cannot punish the trespasser for his wrong. It is a condition, not a theory. He cannot thus himself be guilty of a great wrong. He must help his perishing brother by doing what he reasonably can to warn and save him. These men were absent-minded in conversation. Some become listless and abstracted in mind. They are entitled to warning. At any rate, so the law is. Under this principle it is the duty of a railroad company, it was the duty of the defendant in this case, to blow an alarm with its locomotive at a point far enough from Kelley to reach his ears, allowing him to realize his danger, and take steps to save himself from the rushing deadly locomotive. Raines v. Railroad, 39 W. Va. 50, 19 S. E. 585, 24 L. R. A. 226; Teel v. Railroad, 49 W. Va. 85, 38 S. E. 518; Ray v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 57 W. Va. —, 50 S. E. 413; 3 Elliot on Railroad, §§ 1253-1257. In that late great work, Thompson's Commentaries on Negligence (volume 1, § 238), we find this: "The courts are almost universally agreed that, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff or the person injured has been guilty of some negligence in exposing his person or property to an injury at the hands of the defendant, yet, if the defendant discovered the exposed situation of the person or the property in time, by the exercise of ordinary or reasonable care after so discovering it, to have avoided injuring it, and nevertheless failed to do so, the contributory negligence of the plaintiff or of the person injured does not bar a recovery of damages from the defendant. The rule is aptly illustrated by taking the case where a person negligently walks upon a railroad track, and fails to keep out of the way of a passing train. If the engineer, after noticing his exposed situation, fails to stop his engine, or give the proper signals, or otherwise act willfully and recklessly, in consequence of which the person is killed or injured, the company shall be liable to pay damages."

These unfortunate men were on the railroad track, seen by the engineer and fireman, as they themselves say, for a very considerable distance before they were struck, in open daylight. They say that, when the train struck the straight track, they saw the men. They saw them before blowing a crossing signal, at least 1,000 feet before the men were struck. Furthermore, the engineer swore that, after blowing the whistle, he saw that the men were making no effort to get off the track. The facts fully establish beyond dispute that the trainmen saw these men, and saw, and had occasion to realize, plain reason to realize, that they were in imminent danger, and did realize it. Everybody must know that an engineer who sees two men walking in front of his engine, flying at the rate of 40 miles an hour, only a few feet away, sees that they are in imminent danger. True the engineer may assume that the trespasser will get off the track; but, when he sees for several hundred feet that he makes no effort to get off the track, it must inevitably arouse a reasonable apprehension that the man does not realize his danger, and that the case calls for prompt alarm signals. If it be true, as the engineer says, that he blew a crossing signal 1,000 feet away from the men, the very fact and the fact that the men still kept walking the track were enough to tell the engineer that the men were listless, and to watch them closely, and to alarm them at the proper point. But the engineer and fireman let these men walk on, according to the plaintiff's evidence, without any sound of alarm until the moment before the engine struck them and hurled them into eternity. Three witnesses swear pointedly that they heard no whistle at the crossing even. Three witnesses swear that the locomotive gave two toots for alarm, but did not do so until just as the engine struck the men. One of the witnesses says it struck them just as the second toot was sounded. If this be so, if this is a fact, then the liability of the company is infallibly fixed under the law of the land, and really here the case ends. Remember that we are upon a demurrer to the evidence, and under principles applicable to a demurrer to the evidence we cannot get away from accepting as a fact that no kind of alarm signal was given until just as the locomotive struck Kelley and O'Conner. There is conflicting evidence, or conflicting in tendency and effect, disputing the theory that no alarm was given until just as the engine struck the men. Two witnesses say that the train was nearly opposite the residence of Bowe, that the engine had passed the house, but that some of its cars were opposite it, when the alarm was sounded, and Bowe measured from the point where the train was when it gave the alarm to the point where it struck Kelley and O'Conner, and found it to be 345 feet. Now, can Bowe be certain as to the point at which the train was? The train was flying. Is this evidence as certain as that of the three men who saw the men struck and heard the whistle at the same time? One of these three witnesses, when cross-examined, was asked if he had an idea how far the engine was from the man when it blew the first whistle, and answered that he did not know. When asked if it was as much as 100 yards, he said he did not know. This somewhat weakens his evidence; but the fact remains that he said: "She whistled twice about the time she hit them." Besides, two other men swear the same thing. He was a boy 13 years of age, and we all know that under cross-examination children are not always consistent in all their statements. It is said that Bowe's measurement of the distance was with a tape line, whereas the three witnesses who said that the whistles were just as the men were struck merely guessed distance with the eye. There was no distance for them to measure, because they say pointedly that the train struck the men just as it whistled two short toots, one after another. The engineer and fireman say that they discovered that the men were making no effort to get off the track about the train's length before the men were struck, and that the alarms were given that distance before the men were struck; that is, 320 feet. Now, these versions conflict upon a most material controlling point; that is, as to where the train was, with reference to Kelley and O'Conner, when the alarm was blown? What must the court do under a demurrer to evidence? Can it reject as mistaken or untrue the definite statements of three witnesses that no alarm was given until just as the men were struck, and accept as correct and true the adverse evidence? That adverse evidence may be the truth. It may be that injustice is done in this case.

After patient examination by the court of this case, we feel some reluctance in rendering the judgment which we render. It may do injustice, but we feel that we cannot, under principles governing demurrers to evidence, throw away the case plainly made by the plaintiff's evidence, and take that made by the defendant's. The law forbids this. We cannot say that there is a decided, plain preponderance of evidence in behalf of the defendant. Neither in number nor weight is there preponderance for the defendant. Two witnesses swear that the train was 320 feet from the men when the whistle was blown. Three witnesses flatly deny this. We have no reason to say that those three are false. The evidence of the two witnesses who say that the engine had just passed Bowe's house has not that degree of certainty as to just where it was to enable us to say that it was distant from Kelley and O'Conner. They might be mistaken as to the exact place of the engine. Our cases relative to the treatment of demurrers to evidence say that when the evidence of the two sides directly or in effect conflicts the oral evidence of the demurrant conflicting with that of the demurree is disregarded, and the evidence of the demurree is held to prove all that it can be fairly be regarded as proving, and the demurrer is decided against the demurrant, unless the evidence of the demurrant clearly and decidedly preponderates against the demurree's case, or his case is without sufficient evidence to sustain it. Still, if the preponderance in favor of the demurrant is so clear and decided that the court ought to set aside a verdict against him, his demurrer ought to be sustained. But the demurrant by his demurrer takes the case from the jury, and, if the evidence is such that a verdict for the demurree would stand, the demurrer to the evidence must be overruled. To sustain the demurrer the evidence must plainly preponderate, decidedly preponderate, not be merely doubtful, so that different persons might come to different conclusions. Barrett v. Coal Co., 55 W. Va. 395, 47 S. E. 154; Mannon v. Railroad, 56 W. Va. 554, 49 S. E. 450; Shaver v. Edgell, 48 W. Va. 502, 37 S. E. 664; Gunn v. Railroad, 42 W. Va. 681, 26 S. E. 546, 36 L. R. A. 575. Now, suppose there had been no demurrer to evidence, and the jury had found for the plaintiff: could we set it aside, if we followed old and well-settled principles governing motions for new trial under conflicting evidence? We could not do so. That is the test. As the party takes from his adversary the right to lay his evidence before a jury, should his adversary not have right to have it weighed as it would be after verdict? We are bound to sustain the circuit court in its judgment on demurrer to evidence. We cannot escape from it. The engineer and fireman say that crossing signals were blown for a road 1,000 feet away. This is claimed to be a compliance with all the duty of the defendant. There are several answers why it was not. It was not that short, sharp distress whistle for alarm. Again, after that whistle, the engineer says he noticed that the men were not going to get off the track. This called for an alarm whistle. Anyhow, the fact that the men still kept on the track called for the alarm whistle.

The defendant complains of the refusal of instructions. One was that if the plaintiff failed to show that he had suffered any pecuniary or actual loss by the death of his son, and that he received nothing for his labor, and was not dependent upon him, only nominal damages should be found. Code 1899, c. 103, §§ 5, 6, gives an action for death in case of wrong to the administrator of the decedent for the benefit of his kin, wherever he would himself be entitled to recover damages, if death had not ensued. Can it be thought that the statute contemplates only one cent damages? The deceased was 37 years of age, in good health, unmarried. His father, his sole distributee, to whom the damages go under the statute, was 75 years of age, and might the next week after his son's death be stricken with infirmity and disability to labor. Also, he was bereaved of his son, and cast into sorrow, gloom, and disconsolation of soul. Can it be supposed for a moment that, although the old father was still able to labor for self-support, he would continue so, and that the Legislature intended to give him only one cent damages? We cannot realize that the statute designed only nominal damages in such a case. Moreover, the statute expressly says that "in every such action the jury may give such damages as they shall deem fair and just, not exceeding $10,000, and the amount so recovered shall not be subject to any debts or liabilities of the deceased." This does not make the recovery dependent on the fact that the person should be dependent on the deceased. No such exception is incorporated in the statute, and the very fact that the recovery is not liable to the debts of the dead man shows that it was designed for the comfort and support of the next of kin, not merely in his condition to-day, but for his future need. Searle v. Railway, 32 W. Va. 370, 9 S. E. 248; 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 923.

Another instruction refused told the jury that they could not consider sorrow, grief, and sentimental feelings that the father may have felt, occasioned by the death of his son, unaccompanied by any pecuniary loss, actual or prospective. The statute makes no such limitation. We think the jury had the right to consider these matters, because they enter into the loss, and because the statute gives unlimited discretion as to the amount of the damages to the jury within the limit of $10,000. The statute gives to those closely related to the person killed by tort a recovery, and we do not see why the jury may not consider the father's grief, bereavement, and anguish of soul under the loss of his son in his old age. Much law will be found in the books saying that the jury cannot consider mental suffering and sorrow in fixing damages; but the most of the decisions propounding this doctrine are based on statutes which limit the damages with reference to "pecuniary injury." The Virginia statute does not contain those words, but says that "the jury may award such damages as to it may seem fair and just." Three times has the Supreme Court of Virginia decided that the recovery is not limited to pecuniary or merely compensatory damages, but that they may be punitive or exemplary, expressly holding that mental anguish and sorrow of the bereaved father may be taken into consideration by the jury in fixing the amount of their verdict, and the damages may be given for solatium, solace, consolation. Matthews v. Warner's Adm'r, 29 Grat. 570, 28 Am. Rep. 396; B. & O. Railroad Co. v. Noell's Adm'r, 32 Grat. 394; Anderson v. Hygeia Hotel, 92 Va. 692, 24 S. E. 269. This court has explicitly approved the construction of that act as given by the Virginia court holding that the damages are not limited to pecuniary or compensative damages, but may be punitive or exemplary. Turner v. Railroad, 40 W. Va. 676, 22 S. E. 83; Thomas v. Electrical Co., 54 W. Va. 395, 46 S. E. 217. Now, if damages may be exemplary under these decisions, why cannot the mental distress of the bereaved father be considered? It enters into punitive damages. The Virginia court departs from many other decisions in other states because their statutes, either expressly or by construction, were limited to "pecuniary injury," whereas the Virginia statute was not. But this is not all. The case is clearer in West Virginia still. And why? Because our first act giving action for death caused by wrongful act expressly limited the jury to damages "with reference to the pecuniary injury resulting from such death." So it reads in Acts 1863, p. 113, c. 98. But when the Legislature made Code 1863, c. 103, § 6, it left out those words and broadly declared that "in every such action the jury shall give such damages as they shall deem fair and just, not exceeding five thousand dollars," and in re-enacting section 6, by chapter 105, p. 309, Acts 1882, it reads, "In every such action the jury may give such damages as they shall deem fair and just, not exceeding ten thousand dollars," still leaving out the provision that the damages should be limited to "pecuniary injury." Now, this change from the acts of 1863, in this material feature, clearly means something. We are bound to take the act as it reads. We are bound to strike out the words "with reference to the pecuniary injury," because the Legislature has twice approved the change from the act of 1863 by leaving those words out. This ought to be the construction of the act, or else the willful murderer will pay only uncertain compensatory damages, which will not atone for the grief and anguish of the bereaved mother and father. His money ought to pay for their consolation, as far as money can give consolation. Why shall he not do so when he has brought the gray hairs of a father or mother in sorrow to the grave? He has caused the grievous loss from which heart or soul suffers more than from pecuniary loss.

A third instruction was refused. It says that in fixing damages the jury should not fix punitive or exemplary damages, but must be limited to such as would compensate the father for actual loss sustained by reason of the death of his son. We think this instruction was properly rejected under principles stated in Turner v. Railroad, 40 W. Va. 675, 22 S. E. 83, and Thomas v. Electrical Co., 54 W. Va. 395, 46 S. E. 217. It is useless to re-discuss the subject of the discretion of the jury under said act.

For these reasons, we affirm the judgment.

On Rehearing.

BRANNON, J. A petition for rehearing asserts that in the decision announced in the above opinion we have run counter to the cases of Raines v. Railroad, 39 W. Va. 50, 19 S. E. 565, 24 L. R. A. 226, and Teel v. Railroad, 49 W. Va. 85, 38 S. E. 518. We do not so see it. Plainly the Raines Case says that, "if those running a train discover a trespasser in immediate danger, they must use all reasonable exertions to avoid inflicting injury; otherwise, the company will be liable." The argument for the company in this case is that the engineer had the right to assume that the trespasser would get off the track. So he may, so far as not to require him, after alarm signal, to stop the train or lessen speed; but he cannot so assume as to dispense with such warning. After discovery he must give the track walker the benefit or chance of a warning. The Raines Case says that the trainmen, "having given such signals as are required, have a right to act on the presumption that such person will step aside in time to remove himself from danger." This pointedly demands the signal before the right to act on that presumption begins. The law cited in the two opinions in the Raines Case shows this. Thompson, Com. on Negligence, vol. 2, § 1736, says that "after having given sufficient warning by whistle or bell he [the engineer] has a right to act on the assumption that the trespasser will quit the track." Who can dispute that the decisions demand that warning after discovery? The very fact that the law demands such warning denies that it can be dispensed with on the theory that the engineer may assume that the track walker will get off the track. Why call for warning, if this is not so? The Teel Case supports our decision. It says that the engineer who discovers a person on the track is not bound to stop the train, unless he sees that the person is helpless; "but the engineer's only duty toward such obstructor is to give the alarm signals necessary to warn a person of sound mind and good hearing in time to allow such person to vacate the right of way." Now, what do we say in the above opinion contrary to these cases?

Complaint is made against the above opinion that it calls for a warning "at such a distance before reaching the trespasser that he will be able to hear, take a thought for his safety, and get off the track." Of what use would the warning be unless it gives time to "take a thought" for safety? It must be in time to reach the mind. "If the engineer sees the trespasser and waits until the warning by whistle will do no good, when by whistling sooner he could have enabled him to escape, the company is liable." Lake Shore v. Bodemer (Ill.) 29 N. E. 692, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218. It is said that the Raines Case accepted station and crossing signals 500 feet away from the person as a sufficient signal. The fact was only mentioned. There were alarm whistles. Even if we say that the station whistle was held enough, it does not follow that a whistle 1,000 feet away would be the same as one 500 feet away. It is said that the Raines Case held an alarm 20 feet off sufficient. It must be admitted that was close; but the court said it was 20 to 30 feet. In that case the train was going 15 miles an hour; in this 40 miles. That would call for a distance of 50 feet in this case. But why so measure, when three witnesses say that there was no alarm until just as the engine struck Kelley?

(53 W. Va. 267)

UNITED STATES OIL & GAS WELL SUPPLY CO. v. GARTLAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1906.)

1. ACTION—COMMENCEMENT.

It is well settled in this state that the date of the original summons is the date of the commencement of a suit or action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 1, Cent Dig. Action, §§ 725-734.]

2. PROCESS—ALIAS SUMMONS.

In case a summons is returned not executed, an alias writ may issue; and if that be similarly returned it may be followed by further writs until service is made upon the defendant.

3. SAME—ISSUE OF ALIAS SUMMONS—EFFECT.

An alias or pluries writ or summons, regularly issued, is the continuation of an original valid process, and not the inception of a new suit or action.

4. ABATEMENT—NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT.

In order that a suit or action may abate under the provisions of section 8, c. 125, Code 1899, the return on the writ must show that the defendant is a nonresident. The fact alone, that he is "Not found" is not sufficient to abate the suit or action.

5. DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO FILE DECLARATION.

A suit or action may not be dismissed at rules in the office by the clerk for want of declaration, where the process has not been executed, unless defendant appears and enters a rule for bill or declaration.

6. SAME.

Where the original summons has been regularly returned by the sheriff "Not found," and alias writs have thereafter issued and been likewise returned, and continuances have been entered at rules by the clerk regularly each month until the declaration is filed, the suit or action does not abate.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Wood County.

Action by the United States Oil & Gas Well Supply Company against J. A. Gartlan and others. Judgment for defendants, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

E. McSweeney, Chas. A. Smith, and Dave D. Johnson, for plaintiff in error. Van Winkle & Ambler and A. G. Patton, for defendants in error.

McWHORTER, J. On December 31, 1903, United States Oil & Gas Well Supply Company sued out of the circuit clerk's office of Wood county its summons against J. A. Gartlan and W. H. Ahner returnable to January rules, 1904, to answer plaintiff of a plea of trespass on the case in assumpsit damages $10,000, which writ was returned by the sheriff of Wood county, "Not found." On the 9th day of January, an alias summons was issued returnable to February rules, which was returned by said sheriff, "Not found in my bailiwick." On the 23d day of February, 1904, still another summons was issued returnable to April rules and likewise returned, "Not found in my bailiwick." On the 25th day of February the plaintiff filed in the said clerk's office an affidavit of Henry

M. Miller, secretary of the plaintiff company, for an attachment against the said defendants and on the 27th day of February the clerk of said court issued an order of attachment against said defendants, which order was sent to the sheriffs of Wood, Marion, and Wetzel counties, respectively, to be served on South Penn Oil Company and Thomas Gartlan who had been designated by the plaintiff as being indebted to or having in their possession the effects of the defendants requiring them to answer said garnishment in the circuit court of Wood county, and on the 29th of March, 1904, the plaintiff gave bond in the penalty of $15,000 when the sheriff of Wetzel county was directed to take possession of the personal property which had been by him levied upon in his county, which he did. And at the March term, 1904, of the circuit court of Wood county the attachments were docketed on motion of plaintiff. On the 22d of March, the South Penn Oil Company tendered and filed its answer as garnishee. On the 26th day of March, 1904, A. G. Patton appeared for defendants solely for that purpose, and moved the court to quash plaintiff's affidavit for attachment, of which the court took time to consider and on the 13th of April, the court overruled the motion to quash, to which ruling of the court defendants excepted.

At the May rules, 1904, plaintiff filed an affidavit for an order of publication under the provisions of section 8, c. 124, Code 1899, in case of process having been twice returned, not found against the defendant in the county in which he resides, which order of publication was duly published and posted; the clerk of the court at each of the subsequent rules entered an order continuing for declaration until the November rules, 1904, when the declaration was filed. On the 21st of November, 1904, the defendant W. H. Ahner by his attorney appeared "for the following purpose only, and not otherwise, and moved the court to dismiss the attachment docketed in this cause at a former term, on the ground that the same was not issued in a pending suit, and there is no suit now pending to support such attachment at this time. And the questions arising upon such motion are set down for argument." Which motion was afterwards on the 27th day of December, 1904, sustained, and the attachment theretofore issued and levied in the action was quashed, released, and discharged, and judgment for costs rendered against the plaintiff. To the opinion of the court in sustaining said motion and dismissing said attachment, releasing the property levied on and discharging the garnishee, the plaintiff by its counsel excepted. The plaintiff obtained from this court a writ of error and supersedeas and says, that the circuit court erred in sustaining the motion to dismiss the attachment, and in dismissing and quashing the same, and in releasing and discharging the levy made under said attachment, and rendering judgment for costs against plaintiff in favor of defendant Ahner. The defendants, by counsel, assign as cross-error, that the court erred in overruling defendants' first motion, made April 13, 1904, to quash the attachment.

It is contended by defendants' counsel that the statement in the affidavit for attachment giving the nature of plaintiff's claim is not sufficient. The statement shows that the first item was a note of $2,000 made by the defendants to the plaintiff, that the note was not paid when it became due and payable by the said defendants, and that the same was protested for nonpayment, giving the amount of the protest fees, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff had suffered the loss of said debt and interest, and was obliged to pay said protest fees, and that there was due and payable to plaintiff from said defendants the full amount of said note $2,000 with interest from the 2d day of September, 1903, and the protest fees; and stating further that the said defendants were indebted to plaintiff for goods, wares, and merchandise, sold and delivered by plaintiff to the defendants, at their request, in the sum of $5,080.77, with interest on said last-named sum from May 1, 1903, and, "that the amount at the least, which the affiant believes the said plaintiff is justly entitled to recover in the above-entitled action at law instituted by the said United States Oil & Gas Well Supply Company against the said J. A. Gartlan and W. H. Ahner, is the sum of seven thousand and eighty-two dollars and fifteen cents ($7,082.15), together with the interest on two thousand and one dollars and thirty-eight cents ($2,001.88) thereof from September 2d, 1903, and interest on five thousand and eighty dollars and seventy-seven cents ($5,080.77) thereof from May 1, 1903." It is objected that the affidavit states "that an itemized account of plaintiff's claim both for the amount due upon said promissory note and said merchandise account will be filed in the above-styled action, the same being designated as "Exhibit A," with plaintiff's declaration, which this affiant prays may be considered and treated as an exhibit accompanying this affidavit," is a concession that the affidavit is incomplete and insufficient without said exhibit, and the same not being filed therewith, the affidavit must fail. The affidavit without the exhibit sets out sufficiently the nature of plaintiff's claim to give notice to the defendants thereof, and this reference to the exhibit may be treated as surplusage. The affidavit sets out two grounds as existing for the attachment. The first is that the defendants Gartlan and Ahner had concealed themselves so that a summons could not be served upon them, and had avoided the service of process upon them in said action after they had learned by report, publication, and news items published in the newspapers of the city of Parkersburg of the pendency of said action at law, that in consequence of their avoiding service of process in said action plaintiff had been unable to obtain service of the summons upon the defendants in said Wood county, that the defendants had purposely kept away from said Wood county, and out of the reach and sight of the sheriff thereof in order to avoid the service of summons upon them by the sheriff and by reason of said defendants avoiding service, absenting themselves from said county, and keeping out of reach and sight, and away from the sheriff, while in said county, had avoided the service of summons upon them by the sheriff of said Wood county. It is not stated in this ground for attachment that said defendants were residents of Wood county, and no reason is given in the affidavit, what obligation they or either of them were under to be in Wood county or why they should at any time be found therein, nor is it shown with sufficient particularity what they did to prevent service of process upon them in said action. It does not even allege that the sheriff made any effort to find them, that he went to the place or places where they were in the habit of staying and failed to find them there, or that he sought to find them at all. From all that appears in the affidavit the sheriff, on receiving the process, from his seat in his office may have returned the process "Not found." Even if residents, the defendants may have been absent from the county on legitimate business. No act is shown at intentional concealment or effort to dodge the officer to prevent service. Sandheger v. Hosey, 26 W. Va. 221-224; Delaplaine v. Armstrong, 21 W. Va. 211, Syl., point 2.

The second ground stated is that the defendants had assigned or disposed of all their property with intent to defraud their creditors, and especially the plaintiff, that the defendants were insolvent and since the institution of said action at law and on or about the ——— day of January, 1904, made a pretended assignment, disposition, or sale of all their drilling tools and also their contracts with the South Penn Oil Company, for drilling oil wells in West Virginia to one Thomas Gartlan; that the said pretended sale, disposition, and assignment, was false and fictitious, without any intention on defendants' part to sell such property to said Thomas Gartlan, but for the purpose of placing the same beyond the reach of the creditors of defendants and especially the plaintiff, that they had not delivered possession to said Thomas Gartlan of the said property, and that since the said pretended sale and assignment defendants had been and still were in possession of, using, and controlling said property, and averred that the said defendants since their pretended assignment had made repeated statements to their creditors that they intended to use, possess, and occupy their said property for the drilling of oil wells for the South Penn Oil Company and others, and especially to complete their contracts for the drilling of oil wells for the said South Penn Oil Company, which contracts the defendants had made a pretended disposition of to Thomas Gartlan, and further stated that Thomas Gartlan would settle the indebtedness of defendants; that Thomas Gartlan was a brother of the said J. A. Gartlan, the defendant, and was also a stockholder in and a director of the said plaintiff company, and at the time of said pretended assignment and disposition of said property, had knowledge of defendants' insolvency, defendants' indebtedness to said company, and the pendency of said action at law. This distinctly alleges a false and fraudulent sale by the defendants of all of their property to the brother of one of the defendants for the purpose of placing their property beyond the reach of their creditors; that they retained possession of the property using and controlling the same as their own, the pretended purchaser having knowledge of the insolvency of the defendants, of their indebtedness to plaintiff and of the pendency of this action. The material facts under the second ground for attachment are sufficiently set out in the affidavit.

Was there a suit pending at the time the judgment was rendered quashing and dismissing the attachment by the court in November, 1904? "The process to commence a suit, shall be a writ commanding the officer to whom it is directed, to summons the defendant to answer the bill or action." Section 5, c. 124, Code 1899. "It is a general rule, except where it has been otherwise provided by statute, that an action is deemed commenced, so far as the parties to it are concerned, from the time that the writ or summons is sued out." 1 Cyc. 747. It is well settled in this state that the date of the original summons fixes the date of the commencement of the suit or action. Ferrell v. Ferrell, 53 W. Va. 515, 44 S. E. 187; Blowpipe Co. v. Spencer, 46 W. Va. 590, 33 S. E. 342; Lambert v. Ensign, 42 W. Va. 813, 26 S. E. 431; Abney v. Ohio Lumber Co., 45 W. Va. 448, 32 S. E. 256. See, also, Justis' Annotations to Code, 756. And section 3, c. 124, Code 1899, provides for alias and other proper processes when the original summons has been returned not executed. And in 20 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1178, it is said: "When a summons is returned not executed, the plaintiff may have an alias summons issued, and upon failure to obtain service of the latter, pluries writs may issue successively until the defendant is served." And 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (1st Ed.) 524: "In case a summons is returned not executed, an alias writ may issue; and if that be similarly returned, it may be followed by pluries writs until service is made upon defendant." Railroad Co. v. Brown, 90 Va. 340, 18 S. E. 276: "Where previous writs of summons have failed for ineffectual service or other irregularities, plaintiff is entitled to an alias writ." 1 Bar. Chan. Pr. pp. 251, 252. "Ad alias writ or summons regularly issued is the continuation of an original valid process, and not the inception of a new suit." 1 Cyc. 748, citing Insurance Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Va. 832, 14 S. E. 754, and many other authorities. Defendant in error contends that upon the return of the first summons "Not found" the action abated under section 8, c. 125, Code 1899. This could not have been the result because the officer receiving the process not knowing the defendants resided out of his county nor that they resided out of the state, could not and did not return them "Nonresidents," and such return was necessary to effect an abatement of the action under said section.

It is contended there was no suit pending because no declaration was filed within three months from the issuing of the writ. Section 6, c. 125, Code 1899, provides that the defendant may appear at the rule day at which the summons is returnable, and enter a rule for declaration, in case the same is not filed, and if plaintiff fail to file his declaration at the succeeding rule day, or shall at any time after the defendant's appearance fail to prosecute his suit he should be nonsuited, etc. Section 7 provides that "if three months elapse after the process is returned executed as to any one or more of the defendants, without the declaration or bill being filed, the clerk shall enter the suit dismissed, although none of the defendants may have appeared." There is no provision in the statute for the dismissal of a case for want of declaration where the process has not been executed. The clerk in the case at bar entered his continuances at rules for declaration, from January rules, 1904, for every month to November rules, when the declaration was filed. In some states it is held that an alias should be tested at the time of the return of the former summons, and the same to be continued from term to term until service is secured. It is so held in Tennessee; also in Kentucky. In Slatton v. Jonson, 4 Hayw. 197, it is held that "when process has been commenced, it must be pursued without any chasm, and every subsequent process must be dated on the day of the preceding process." So in Dougherty v. Shown, 1 Helsk. 302. In Parker v. Grayson, 1 Nott & McC. 171, it is held that "an alias ought to be tested at the return of the original capias and made returnable to the next ensuing term. A case is out of court when the proceedings have been suspended more than a year"—clearly implying that there might be a suspension of less time than a year. In McClurg v. Fryer 15 Pa. 293, it is held: "A summons in a case on a guaranty in writing, issued above four years after the right of action on the guaranty arose, was returned nihil, and an alias summons issued above five years from the issuing of the first. Held, that the original and alias were so connected as to prevent the running of the statute of limitations from the time of the issuing of the original summons." In that case, at page 295, it is said in the opinion: "The alias suit was instituted within six years of the first, that is to say, about five years after the first summons. The first summons was not served; the second was. The second suit was for the same cause, was entitled an alias, and so marked on the record; and this, as it has been held, is so connected and linked with the first as to be a continuation or reiteration of the original, and so indissolubly connected as to be one, and that, so far as the statute is concerned, it stops running from the institution of the first process." Lynn v. McMillen 8 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 170; Schlosser v. Leshner, 1 Dall. 411, 1 L. Ed. 200. In Magaw v. Clark, 6 Watts (Pa.) 529, it is said: "To save the bar of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff may reply a writ issued within six years, but he must show that it has been continued down to the time of declaring. These continuances are mere matters of form, and may be entered at any time, Schlosser v. Leshner, 1 Dall. 411, 1 L. Ed. 200; United States v. Parker, 2 Dall. 378, Fed. Cas. No. 15,992, 1 L. Ed. 421; Pennock v. Hart, 8 Serg. & R. 380; Jones v. Orum, 5 Rawle, 254; 2 Salk. 240, provided there be a ground laid for entering them by having a return of the first writ."

Counsel for defendants in error cite Simmons v. Simmons (W. Va.) 48 S. E. 833, where it is said: "Summons commencing the action must be followed by the filing of a declaration within a specified time, else the entire proceeding fails. The attachment is process out of the main suit, and depends upon the main action. It must stand upon it, and as a declaration brings into the record the true nature of the plaintiff's claim, the defect in the proceeding which quashes the attachment appears in an instrument that is vital to the existence of that writ." The specified time within which the summons commencing a suit must be followed by the filing of a declaration, only applies when the summons has been executed or when there is an appearance by the defendant, and a rule given the plaintiff to file his declaration. In the case at bar there is no variance between the affidavit for the attachment and the declaration when it was filed; and, as the defendants had neither been served with process nor had appeared in the action, the same had not abated or been dismissed. Objection is made to the affidavit for and the order of publication, but as the circuit court took no action as to that, it cannot arise here.

For the reasons herein stated the judgment of the circuit court in quashing the attachment and releasing the same, and dismissing the action, is reversed and the case remanded to the circuit court of Wood county for further proceedings to be had therein.

(58 W. Va. 424)

RAINEY v. FREEPORT SMOKELESS COAL & COKING CO. et al.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. CORPORATIONS—DISSOLUTION—PROCEDURE.

In a proceeding brought under section 57, c. 53, Code 1899, for the purpose of dissolving and winding up the affairs of a corporation, it is a condition precedent to the maintenance of the suit that it be alleged and proved that the persons seeking such dissolution comprise not less than one-third in interest of the stockholders of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 12, Cent. Dig. Corporations, § 2439.]

2. SAME—JURISDICTION.

Equity has jurisdiction, at the suit of not less than one-third in interest of the stockholders of a corporation, to dissolve and wind up the affairs of the corporation upon a bill filed for that purpose, setting forth such facts as show good cause why it should be done. But, where the proof fails to sustain the material allegations of the bill, it will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 12, Cent. Dig. Corporations, §§ 2439, 2440.]

3. SAME—RECEIVERS—APPOINTMENT.

A stockholder, or creditor, under section 58, c. 53, Code 1899, may file a bill in equity asking for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of and administer the assets of a corporation, and upon sufficient cause being shown therefor, a court should appoint such receiver; but, when so appointed, he should be discharged and the bill dismissed, unless the allegations of the bill are supported by the evidence.

4. RECEIVERS—JURISDICTION—SPECIAL RECEIVER.

In order to give a court of equity jurisdiction for the appointment of a special receiver under section 23, c. 133, Code 1899, there must be a suit pending in such court involving the property of a corporation, firm, or person, and it must be made to appear in the case that there is danger of the loss or misappropriation of the property, or a material part thereof. Such suit cannot be maintained where the basis of equity jurisdiction alone is the appointment of such receiver, but there must be equity jurisdiction, independent of the application therefor.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Bill by W. W. Rainey against the Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Company and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Hop Woods, for appellant. Ice & Ice and Fred O. Blue, for appellees.

SANDERS, J. In a bill filed on the 21st day of June, 1902, in vacation, before the judge of the circuit court of Barbour county, the plaintiff, W. W. Rainey, claimed that the defendant, Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Company, was organized on the 21st day of June, 1900, with a capital stock of $25,000, divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 each, of which stock Frank H. Sloan had 61 shares, George B. Wade 60 shares, George B. Clifton 5 shares, plaintiff 42 shares, and David H. Poling and Columbus Kelley, each, 41 shares. All of these parties, together with Alman Poling, W. T. Ice, Jr., John Murdock, and Anthony Marteney, were made defendants to the bill. It was further alleged that prior to the organization of the company, the plaintiff was the equitable owner of certain tracts of land and coal in Barbour county; that, being such owner, he was solicited by the defendants Frank H. Sloan and George B. Wade, to join with them and the defendants J. P. Wade and George B. Clifton, and incorporate themselves into a coal and mine operating company. That, in pursuance to said solicitation, the defendant company was organized, the plaintiff transferring to it his interest in the land and coal before mentioned; that the Wades and Sloan were to advance $2,500, necessary to consummate the purchase of the property, and that the plaintiff was to receive for his interest therein, $2,500, which was to be represented by 124 shares of stock in the company, which stock was to be full paid and nonassessable. That of this stock there was issued, at plaintiff's instance, 41 shares to Poling and a like number of shares to Kelley, of which plaintiff had since become the owner, making him the owner of 124 shares. It was further alleged that the plaintiff had been, since the organization of the company, its general manager and superintendent, and that it was indebted to him in a large sum on account of his services. The bill charged that the company's affairs were being mismanaged and its property wasted, and prayed that a receiver might be appointed to take charge of its affairs, that an injunction might be awarded restraining the persons in possession from disposing of the property, that the affairs of the company might be wound up, its debts paid, and the residue of the property, if any, divided among the stockholders. The court awarded the injunction, as prayed, and appointed the plaintiff receiver. The defendant company filed its answer, in which it denied that the stock of the plaintiff, Poling and Kelley, was to be full paid and nonassessable; denied that the plaintiff was the owner of 124 shares of stock, or that he was the owner of any stock, but claimed that his stock had been forfeited for the nonpayment of assessments; and denied that it owed the defendant anything on account of his services as manager, but said that he had been paid all that such services were reasonably worth. In reference to the allegation in the bill that the affairs of the company were being mismanaged, and its property wasted, it was stated in the answer that not only was such a state of affairs nonexistent, but that, on the contrary, after the plaintiff ceased to work for the company, its property was properly and carefully taken care of and used for its sole benefit; that the plant was in a better condition for mining purposes than ever before; that the same was not in a ruined or damaged condition, but was in an improved condition, and more valuable than it had ever been. On the 24th day of June, 1902, notice having theretofore been given, the court dissolved the injunction, and removed Rainey as receiver. On the 11th day of November, 1903, a decree was entered, dismissing the plaintiff's bill, and from this decree he has appealed.

*Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

The plaintiff's suit is brought under section 57 of chapter 53 of the Code of 1899, which gives to stockholders of a corporation not less than one-third in interest, the right to wind up its affairs, for cause shown. His suit being predicated upon the ownership of not less than one-third of the stock, if he has failed to establish the fact that he owns such interest, his right to maintain his suit fails, unless it can be maintained upon some other ground, which he now claims can be done. The plaintiff claims that he is the owner of 124 shares of stock in the defendant company. In order to own this number of shares, he must establish the fact that he is the owner of the 82 shares owned by David H. Poling and Columbus Kelley. The evidence shows that these shares were issued to Poling and Kelley at Rainey's instance, and he says the consideration therefor was that they had rendered him some assistance in getting up the options on the property which he transferred to the company. On September 18, 1900, Poling and Kelley made written assignments of their stock to Frank H. Sloan, one of the defendants. Rainey claims that these assignments, while made to Sloan, were for his benefit; that Sloan was to hold the stock in trust for him, and that the payment therefor was to be taken out of his salary as general manager. The transfer was made through William A. Wade. Is Rainey's contention supported by the evidence? The burden is upon him to establish this fact. The assignments speak strongly against him, and require clear evidence to overthrow them. It is true that Poling says that Rainey negotiated the trade with him, and that he would not have assigned his stock had he known it was to be used against Rainey, and that Kelley says he does not think, after acquiring the stock in the way in which he did, that he could have sold it to any one who would have used it against Rainey, yet the assignments are plain and unambiguous, the plaintiff is nowhere mentioned or referred to in them, and both Wade and Sloan deny that there was any agreement or understanding by which the stock was to be held for Rainey. It is not claimed by Rainey that he ever paid one cent on the stock, and what the consideration for it was, and why it was to be assigned for his benefit, does not appear. There is copied into the record a letter written by Rainey to Wm. A. Wade, in which he says: "I have finally got Poling and Kelley to agree to accept your offer of $150 each for their stock and interest in the F.

S. O. & C. Co." This letter, if it shows anything, certainly does not tend to bear out the plaintiff's contention that the stock was being acquired for his benefit, but it goes strongly to show that the stock was not purchased for plaintiff, nor by him. We think it clearly appears that the plaintiff has not shown himself to be the owner of the Poling and Kelley stock.

It is claimed on behalf of the company that the stock of the appellant has been, by a by-law adopted by the stockholders, and resolutions passed by the board of directors in pursuance thereto, forfeited for nonpayment of assessments due thereon, while the appellant claims that from the inception of the company it was agreed and understood, by all the parties in interest, that his stock, and that of Poling and Kelley, was to be full paid and nonassessable. This contention is not borne out by the evidence. At the first meeting of the stockholders, held in Philippi, a resolution was passed, authorizing the board of directors to make an assessment on the stock. Rainey was not present at this meeting, but his proxy was held by Wm. A. Wade, who voted Rainey's stock in favor of this resolution. Besides, in the assignments made by Poling and Kelley to Sloan, it is provided that the "shares of stock are sold, transferred, and assigned absolutely, and the said Frank H. Sloan, or his assigns, is to pay any and all of the installments, or assessments, that may now be due or may hereafter be assessed on the said 41 shares of stock by the board of directors of the said Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Company." If the stock was full paid and nonassessable, why provide, in making assignments of it, that the assignee should pay installments and assessments? Kelley and Poling were present at the first meeting of the stockholders, at which the resolution providing for assessments was passed, but they do not claim that they made any objection to its passage. Again, the plaintiff, in his testimony, claims that there was a written agreement to the effect that the stock of himself, Poling and Kelley, was to be nonassessable, and that such agreement was left with the attorney for the company. He states, in his examination in chief, that the parties to the agreement were himself, Poling, Kelley, Wm. A. Wade, and possibly, Sloan. On cross-examination, he states that the parties to the agreement were Wm. A. Wade, Frank H. Sloan, and himself. Wm. A. Wade and Frank H. Sloan, in their testimony, deny positively that any such agreement was ever made and signed, and these witnesses, and George B. Wade and George B. Clifton, state that there was no agreement, either before the organization of the company, or afterwards, that the stock was to be nonassessable. The allegation as to the nonassessability of this stock being denied by the answer, the burden was upon the plaintiff to establish it, and not only has he failed to do so, but the preponderance of the testimony, on this point, is clearly against him. As to whether or not the provisions of sections 31-33, c. 52, of the Code, providing for the forfeiture of stock for the nonpayment of assessments thereon, have been, in this instance, complied with, it is not necessary to determine, inasmuch as we hold that Rainey is not the owner of one-third of the stock, and therefore not entitled to maintain his suit under the theory first advanced and relied upon, unless we should hold that, under another section, he is entitled to relief.

It is insisted on behalf of the appellant that even if it should be held that he is not entitled, under section 57 of chapter 53 of the Code, to maintain his suit, that he is entitled under section 28 of chapter 133, as a stockholder, owning 42 shares, to an accounting, under the allegations of his bill to the effect that the corporation is being mismanaged, and that its property is being purloined, wasted, lost, and mislaid by the negligence and passive permission of the company. It is true that the bill alleges these facts, and the further fact that the plaintiff had made application, through the officers of the company, to institute, if necessary, such legal proceedings as were proper for the payment of its debts, winding up its affairs, dissolving its corporate existence, and dividing its surplus, if any, after the payment of its debts, among its stockholders, but that the company and its officers had refused to do so. Section 28 of chapter 133 provides that a court of equity may, in any proper case pending therein, in which the property of a corporation is involved, and there is danger of the loss or misappropriation of the same, or a material part thereof, appoint a special receiver of such property, or of the rents, issues and profits, or both. This section is designed to give to a court of equity power to appoint a receiver in any case pending in such court, in order to preserve the subject-matter of the litigation until the suit is determined. In order to have the appointment of a receiver under its provisions, there must be a separate and distinct ground of equity jurisdiction—a pending suit. Grantham v. Lucas, Trustee, et al., 15 W. Va. 425; Beard v. Arbuckle, 19 W. Va. 145; McCandless v. Warner, 28 W. Va. 754. In this case, the plaintiff is not entitled to the appointment of a receiver, on the ground that he is a creditor of the corporation, because he has an adequate remedy at law for the collection of his debt. A receiver should never be appointed until the legal remedy is exhausted. "Having already shown that the aid of a receiver is extended only in behalf of creditors who have fully exhausted their remedy at law, it follows, necessarily, that the jurisdiction will not be exercised in favor of mere general creditors whose rights rest only in contract, and are not yet reduced to judgment, and who have acquired no lien upon the property of the debtor." High on Receivers, § 406.

In this case the appointment of a receiver is not sought as an incident to the main object of the litigation, for the purpose of protecting the property of the corporation, but is sought for the purpose of winding up its affairs, and is the basis for equity jurisdiction. If, under the allegations of his bill, the plaintiff sets forth such good cause required by statute as to entitle him to relief, his case would come within the provisions of section 58 of chapter 53 of the Code: "When a corporation expires or is dissolved or before its expiration or dissolution, upon sufficient cause being shown therefor, such court as is mentioned in the preceding section, may on application of a creditor or stockholder, appoint one or more persons to be receivers to take charge of and administer its assets," etc. Swing v. Bentley & Gerwig Furniture Co., 45 W. Va. 283, 31 S. E. 925; Rathbone v. Gas Co., 31 W. Va. 798, 8 S. E. 570; Crumlish v. Railroad Co., 28 W. Va. 624. But even if the allegations of the bill show such good cause as is contemplated by the provisions of this section, still, in order to entitle the plaintiff to relief, the allegations must be proved. These allegations are denied by the answer, and the proof taken wholly fails to substantiate them. On the contrary, it is shown, by a clear preponderance of the testimony, that the affairs of the company, since the appellant ceased to work for it, have been managed in a successful, businesslike manner; that the output of the plant has been increased, and that it is now a solvent and going concern. Inasmuch as we hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to relief under the provisions of section 58 of chapter 53, we deem it unnecessary to decide, whether or not the 42 shares of stock, claimed to be owned by him, have been legally declared forfeited by the corporation.

The appellant excepted to that part of the depositions taken on behalf of the appellee company which purports to state what the proceedings of the stockholders and directors meetings of the defendant company were, for the reason that the official record, properly certified, is the only proper evidence thereof, and the contents thereof cannot be testified to by witnesses, and cites the case of Roe v. Town of Philippi, 45 W. Va. 785, 32 S. E. 224, in support of his exception. That case has reference to the manner of proving the records of a municipal, and not of a private, corporation, and is not applicable here. In this case, the records of the defendant company were introduced by the secretary of the defendant, who had charge of them, and who wrote the minutes of the meetings. The secretary does not attempt to state what the proceedings of the meetings were, but he identifies and examines the resolutions introduced as being the ones which appear upon the records of the defendant company, kept by him. This was entirely proper. In the case of C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Deepwater Ry. Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 890, it is said. "When the controversy is between stockholders, concerning their interests in the corporation, and involves the consideration of the acts of the corporation, as affecting directly its status, and indirectly their interests, the records and books are admissible, if authenticated by showing that they are the records and books of the corporation and have been regularly kept as such. This is done by calling as a witness the secretary or other recording officer, if he can be had."

For the foregoing reasons, we see no error in the decree of the circuit court, and the same is affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 473)

DUERR et al. v. SNODGRASS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. TAXATION—ASSESSMENT—TOWN LOTS—IRREGULARITIES.

Under section 36, c. 29, Code 1899, town lots should be assessed separately. But, when this is not done, and several lots lying contiguous are assessed as a whole, this is such an irregularity as is cured, after deed, by section 25, c. 31, Code 1899.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Taxation, § 574.]

2. SAME—TAX DEED—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

It is not necessary to a valid tax deed that the same description of the land used in the delinquent list should be used in the return of sales. All that is required in either is such description as is sufficient to identify the land and give notice to the owner of the assessment or sale.

3. SAME—RETURN OF SALES.

The word "Do." is used as an abbreviation for "ditto," and means the same as that which appears immediately above, and, when it is used in a return of sales of land sold for taxes to designate the purchaser, it will serve to do so if the name of the purchaser appears in the same column and immediately above such word.

4. SAME—SALE.

A sheriff, selling lands for taxes, is required to sell only so much thereof as will be sufficient to satisfy the whole of the taxes, interest, and commissions; but he is not required to certify in the return of sales that it was necessary to sell the whole, or that he offered for sale a quantity less than the whole. And, when the whole tract or lot has been sold, it will be presumed that a sale of it was necessary.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wetzel County.

Bill by A. C. Duerr and others against R. E. L. Snodgrass. Decree for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

Thos. P. Jacobs, for appellants. W. G. Snodgrass, for appellee.

SANDERS, J. Complaint is made that the circuit court of Wetzel county erred in dismissing the plaintiffs' bill, which was brought for the purpose of setting aside and declaring void a tax deed made by the clerk of the county court of said county to the defendant, R. E. L. Snodgrass. On the 20th day of March, 1903, Fannie M. Rogers and her husband conveyed to the plaintiffs two lots, designated as lying on the east side of Maple avenue, in McEldowney addition, in the town of New Martinsville, W. Va., and known on the recorded plat of said addition as lots "CB" and "H"; the plat being of record in the clerk's office of the county court of said county. The taxes on these lots for the year of 1901, and while owned by Fannie M. Rogers, were not paid, and they were returned delinquent for the nonpayment thereof, and on the 4th day of December, 1903, sold by the sheriff, and the defendant became the purchaser.

One of the reasons advanced for avoiding the tax deed is that the lots were improperly assessed as one parcel; it being contended that they should have been entered and assessed separately. This is not an open question in this state. In the cases of Boggess v. Scott, 48 W. Va. 316, 37 S. E. 661, and Winning v. Eakin, 44 W. Va. 19, 28 S. E. 757, it has been decided against the contention of the plaintiffs. Section 25, c. 31, of the Code of 1899, by providing that "if more than one tract of land be charged as one * * * all such right, title, interest and estate therein, as is hereinbefore mentioned, shall nevertheless pass to and be vested in the grantee in such deed," passes good title to the purchaser, notwithstanding such irregularity. If section 36, c. 29, Code 1899, requires that the lots should have been assessed and valued separately, the deed could not be avoided, although this was not done because of this provision in section 25, c. 31, Code 1899. This statute should not be evaded, but should be met squarely, and given the force which it was intended it should have, and when this is done, the sale must be upheld.

And, secondly, it is assigned as error that the delinquent list described the lots as in "McEldowney Add."; while the return of sales described them as being in "Mc. Add., N. M." The delinquent list shows that these lots are situated in Magnolia district, in the county of Wetzel, and were returned in the name of Fannie M. Rogers for the year of 1901, and designated as "New Martinsville town lots CB and H, McEldowney Add." And they are described in the return of sales in exactly the same manner, except that under the heading "Local Description," instead of saying "McEldowney Add., New Martinsville," these words are abbreviated, by using for McEldowney "Mc.," and for New Martinsville "N. M." Surely no one could be misled by this variance between the delinquent list and the return of sales. The lots were returned and sold in the name of Fannie M. Rogers for the year of 1901, and described as "lots CB and H," in Magnolia district, Wetzel county. These facts appear from both the delinquent list and return of sales, and in the delinquent list they are further described as being in the "McEldowney Add.," in the town of New Martinsville, and while the return of sales does not literally follow the delinquent list in the manner of description, as above stated, yet certainly no one could be mistaken that the lots referred to in the list of sales, and sold, were the same which were returned delinquent in the name of Fannie M. Rogers for the taxes of 1901. It is not necessary to a valid tax deed that the same description of the lots used in the delinquent list should be used in the return of sales. All that is required in either is such description as is sufficient to identify the lots and give notice to the owner of the assessment or sale. And there is no doubt but what the description in both the delinquent list and notice of sales was clearly sufficient to give to the owner such notice. There is nothing here which would prejudice and mislead the owner of the lots so sold as to what portion of the same was sold, and when and for what year they were sold, or the name of the purchaser thereof. Unless this is so, under said section 25, c. 31, Code 1899, the title passes to and is vested in the grantee in the deed, notwithstanding any irregularity in the proceedings. Then, again, in the same section, it is said that "no irregularity, error or mistake in the delinquent list, or the return thereof, or in the affidavit thereto, or in the list of sales filed with the clerk of the county court, * * * shall, after the deed is made, invalidate or affect the sale or deed." The variance between the delinquent list and the return of sales, if it can be denominated a variance, is, at most, only an error or irregularity such as is cured by the curative provisions of said section of the statute. This is the plain command of the statute, which should be obeyed. It needs no construction to arrive at this conclusion and to determine the intention of the Legislature, and all the court should do is to apply it as it is found, without trying to avoid its force by strained construction.

And it is said that the deed should be canceled because the return of sales fails to show the name of the purchaser. From an examination of the list of sales, we are forced to conclude that this contention of the plaintiff is not supported. The return of sales shows that the defendant, R. E. L. Snodgrass, was the purchaser of another lot, sold in the name of Samuel Karnes, and under the heading "Name of Purchaser" R. E. L. Snodgrass, by name, is referred to as having purchased the Karnes lot, and immediately following, showing the sale of the lots returned in the name of Fannie M. Rogers, under the same heading, the purchaser is designated by the use of the abbreviation for ditto, "Do." The name of the purchaser appearing immediately above the letters "Do.," it cannot be mistaken as to what was intended by the abbreviation.

In the case of Hughes v. Powers, 42 S. W. 1, 99 Tenn. 480, the court held that ditto marks are to be held as repetitions of what appears on the line above, and are as much a part of the English language as are punctuation marks, and they are often given an important, and sometimes a controlling, part in the construction of general writings, and in the interpretation of legal documents and statutes and constitutions, and, being regarded as a part of the language, the courts will, of course, take judicial notice of their meaning. And, also, in the case of New England Loan & Trust Co. v. Avery (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 673, the court held that ditto marks are generally understood to mean the "same as above," and that a statute requiring the index to a judgment record to contain the names of the plaintiff and defendant is satisfied, where the same party has been defendant in several actions, by the writing of his name once as defendant in the action first indexed, and the use of ditto marks in the place of his name in the title to the other actions. "Ditto marks. Marks which are generally understood to mean, 'the same as above.'" 14 Cyc. 552. See, also, Miller v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co., 52 Ind. 51; Steinmetz v. Turnpike Co., 57 Ind. 457. Therefore the letters "Do." being an abbreviation for "ditto," and meaning "the same as above," it is clear that the return of sales shows the name of the purchaser of the lots in question.

It is urged that the sheriff made no effort to sell less than the whole of these lots, and for that reason the deed should be set aside. Section 8, c. 31, Code 1899, provides that the sale shall be of such undivided interest therein as shall be sufficient to satisfy the whole of the taxes and commissions. This is a plain statutory requirement, and should, in all cases, be complied with. The sheriff should make an honest effort to sell as small interest as possible. But did he do so in this case? We cannot presume that he did not. An officer is presumed to do his duty, and in this case the presumption is that the sheriff offered the lots for sale as required by law; and to set aside the tax deed on this ground the plaintiffs must overthrow this presumption. Then the question is, have the plaintiffs done so? It is true that it is shown that a much less quantity than the whole of the lots would sell for a sufficient amount to pay the taxes and charges. It appears that a one-eighth interest would easily sell for sufficient to do so. But taking all this to be true, and if nothing else appeared, the deed could not be overthrown on this ground. If so, it would be an easy matter to set aside most, if not at all, tax deeds. No purchaser at a tax sale could know, nor could he, by any means, ascertain, when he is getting a good title. This showing, however, of the plaintiffs has been rebutted. It abundantly appears from the evidence that the sheriff did offer less than the whole, but received no bids, and no one says that he did not do so. Therefore, not only is the presumption here in favor of the sheriff doing his duty, but this presumption is supported by the uncontradicted testimony. Our statute does not require the sheriff to certify that it was necessary to sell the whole in order to pay the taxes and charges, or that he offered for sale a less quantity than the whole.

The decree of the circuit court is affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 459)

HERSHMAN et al. v. STAFFORD.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. EASEMENTS — OBSTRUCTION — MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

A mandatory injunction will lie to cause an obstructed or closed private way to be cleared and opened for the use of the owner. Boyd v. Woolwine, 21 S. E. 1020, 40 W. Va. 282.

2. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS—EFFECT.

Where an agreement is prepared between adjoining landowners for a private way through their lands, and signed by all but one of the parties, and, in order to obtain his signature, one who had signed the agreement procured the same to be materially changed as to the route of the proposed road through the lands of the party not signing, the agreement is of no effect as to one who had signed it, but did not know of or consent to the change.

3. EASEMENTS—OBSTRUCTION—INJUNCTION—PARTIES.

Where the bill alleges separate and independent obstructions to a private way by the defendant, it is not error to omit to make another party, who also obstructed the way, a party to the suit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County.

Bill by James Hershman and others against William H. Stafford. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied January 9, 1906.

Wm. G. Conley and R. W. Monroe, for appellant. P. J. Crogan, for appellees.

SANDERS, J. This is an appeal from and supersedeas to a decree of the circuit court of Preston county, perpetuating an injunction sued out from said court by James Hershman and Rebecca Huffman, inhibiting and restraining the appellant, Stafford, his agents, servants, etc., from interfering with the plaintiffs in the use of a private way or road through Stafford's land. The right to the use of the way is based upon an agreement entered into between the plaintiffs, Stafford, and other landowners. The appellant, Stafford, filed a special plea, and also answered the bill, setting up two defenses—one that the contract filed with the bill is not the contract which he signed, but that, after the same was signed by him and all the parties thereto, except one E. W. Lee, the contract was altered, whereby the route of the proposed road through the lands of said Lee was materially changed without the knowledge or consent of appellant; the other that, after the road was opened through the land of appellant, Isaiah Bolyard, who owned the adjoining land, placed his line fence in such a way as to include the road, which constitutes the obstruction complained of by the plaintiffs, and that their remedy is against Bolyard, and not against appellant.

The appellant assigns as error the refusal of the court to sustain the demurrer to the bill, and claims that, even though all the allegations of the bill be taken as true, they amount to simply a repetition of trespasses on the part of appellant, and that the plaintiffs have a complete remedy at law. But this theory cannot be sustained. "A mandatory injunction will lie to cause an obstructed or closed private way to be cleared and opened for the use of the owner." Boyd v. Woolwine, 40 W. Va. 282, 21 S. E. 1020. Judge Holt, speaking in this case in regard to the remedy by injunction, after the right to the way has been established, says: "If such is the right of the plaintiffs, no question is made that this is their proper remedy; in fact, their only plain, adequate, and complete remedy, seeing that it is the unobstructed use of the road they are after, and not damages for the obstruction of it."

It is claimed that the court erred in holding that the agreement filed with the bill was of any binding force upon the appellant, or that it conferred any rights upon the appellee to the easement in question. This claim is based upon the fact that the contract was changed after it was signed by the appellant. That there was a change made in the contract is not denied, but the appellee claims that the change was agreed to by all the parties. The road provided for in the written agreement was to pass through the lands of one E. W. Lee. At the time of the preparation of the agreement, Lee was not living upon this land, but in another community, and John W. Davis was engaged by the parties to see him and procure his signature to the agreement. Davis, in his testimony, states that he made two trips to see Lee. When he returned the first time, he reported to all the parties that Lee said he would not sign the agreement unless it was changed so as to provide that, instead of running through his lands, the road should run "along the line" of his lands. After he went to see Lee the second time, he reported to John Hershman, the appellee, and Hershman proposed to make the change providing that the road should run with the line of Lee's land, and Davis, inasmuch as Lee had given him authority to sign his name to the contract if the change was made, changed the contract in accordance with Lee's instructions and signed his name thereto. Davis states that, so far as he knows, no one of the parties, except Hershman, was aware of the change, and that Hershman paid him for his services. The appellee contends that Stafford agreed to the change, and he and his son, in their testimony, state that Stafford said the parties to the agreement "would better have it along the line than not to have it at all." Admitting this to be true, it does not show that Stafford gave his consent that the agreement should be changed, and in his testimony he states that he never knew of any change in it until a year after the contract was put to record, and we think the evidence fails to establish the fact that he did agree. As to whether or not the change was material, Stafford testifies that he would not have signed the contract, had it provided that the road was to run with the line of Lee's land, as that route was rocky and steep, no road existed there, and one could not be made, except at great expense and on an undesirable grade. The testimony of other witnesses as to the character of this route corroborates Stafford, and that it was a material change is borne out by the fact that in the final order entered in the cause, it is recited that the plaintiff Hershman, having become the owner of the Lee land, agreed that the road might run through that land as provided in the original contract.

Having determined that the contract was changed without the knowledge or consent of Stafford, and before it was signed by all the parties, it must be considered as to whether the change constituted the alteration of a completed contract, or whether there ever was, in fact, any contract between the parties. In 2 Cyc. 145, it is said: "But, on the other hand, where one party subscribes a paper which binds him on the one part, the terms of the paper cannot be changed by the other party before signing or accepting it. This, however, seems not within the contemplation of the usual conception of the term 'alteration,' as dealing with the effect of a material change of a completed instrument, or contract, but rather falls within other general rules pertinent to the elements of a binding contract." It is not denied that the instrument was changed before the name of Lee was affixed thereto. This being so, under the authorities there was no consummated contract between the parties. "A concurrence of minds is essential to the creation of a contract, unless in cases of estoppel. Therefore a written instrument signed by one party, with the intention that the other shall later sign it, which is changed in any manner altering its legal effect, and by that other signed in its altered condition, does not become binding on the former, unless he learn of and ratify the change; and this, although the alteration be made by a stranger." McGavock v. Morton, 57 Neb. 385, 77 N. W. 785. See, also, Sherwood v. Merritt, 83 Wis. 233, 53 N. W. 512; Pew v. Laughlin (D. C.) 3 Fed. 39; The Hero (D. C.) 6 Fed. 528. Hershman having procured the contract to be changed in order to coincide with the wishes of Lee, after Stafford's signature had been affixed thereto, the contract never took effect as to Stafford. There was no meeting of minds, no reality of consent—elements essential to a binding contract.

The appellant claims that upon the filing of his answer the court should have made Isalah Bolyard a defendant to the suit; it being alleged that he, and not the defendant, had obstructed the road by building a fence in the private way, of which the plaintiff had full knowledge. The bill, however, alleges that the appellant obstructed the way by building fences across it at his line, so as to prevent the plaintiffs from going over and upon the roadway, through the lands of appellant; that the appellee removed said fences and the appellant replaced them, and finally built them of wire, and that appellant threatened bodily injury to appellee if he removed the fences. The fact that appellant placed these obstructions in the road is testified to by several witnesses, and is not denied by him. Therefore, even though Bolyard had obstructed the road, inasmuch as it is distinctly alleged in the bill that the appellant himself obstructed it, and the prayer of the bill is that he be restrained from further doing so, it was not error in the court to omit to have Bolyard made a party, as the appellee would be entitled to maintain a separate suit against him for any obstruction.

In the final decree it is recited that the appellee Hershman, having become the owner of the land formerly owned by Lee, agreed in open court that the road should run through his land as agreed upon and stipulated in the contract as originally prepared. The contract having never become effective as to appellant by reason of the change made therein, this agreement upon the part of appellee could not operate to make it effective. As to appellant, there not being any agreement, this stipulation could not make valid an invalid instrument.

The decree of the circuit court is reversed, the injunction dissolved, and the bill dismissed.

(124 Ga. 408)

PATTERSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL.

The remarks of counsel for the state were not of such a character as to require the granting of a mistrial or a rebuke from the judge.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

In the absence of a written request it is not error requiring a reversal for the judge to fail to instruct the jury upon the law of confessions.

3. SAME—INSANITY—INSTRUCTIONS.

When, in a criminal case, there is evidence introduced in behalf of the accused which raises an issue as to the mental capacity of the accused to commit the crime, it is not erroneous for the judge to instruct the jury as to the law applicable to such an issue; and, if the defense apparently set up by the evidence is not relied on, the attention of the judge must be called to this fact.

4. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply warranted the verdict, and there was no error requiring the granting of a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Heard County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Burrell Patterson was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Burrell Patterson was indicted and tried for the crime of murder. The evidence disclosed that on the day of the killing the accused quarreled with Stewart, the deceased, and that subsequently Mac Patterson, father of the accused, gave Burrell Patterson a pistol and directed him to kill Stewart. Immediately afterwards, Burrell Patterson walked across the courthouse yard to within 10 steps of Stewart, first threw a brickbat at him, then shot him, and after Stewart had fallen to the ground shot him again; either of the pistol wounds being such as would have resulted in death. The defense introduced by the accused was that he acted under duress, that he stood in fear of his father, that his father had threatened to kill him if he did not kill Stewart, and that he was acting under this fear when he shot Stewart. There was testimony of several witnesses who heard Mac Patterson instruct the accused to kill Stewart, but there was no evidence that these instructions were accompanied by threats against the accused. There was evidence to the effect that the accused was subject to epileptic fits, but there was no evidence to show that he had suffered from this complaint within a period of some years from the date of the killing, and there was much evidence from acquaintances that the accused had never betrayed any symptoms of mental weakness. The jury found a verdict of guilty, without a recommendation to life imprisonment. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and to this judgment the accused excepted.

S. Holderness, D. B. Whitaker, and M. N. Moity, for plaintiff in error. J. R. Terrell, Sol. Gen., and Jno. Q. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

COBB, P. J. Error was assigned upon the failure of the court to declare a mistrial because the solicitor general in his argument used the following language: "The blood of this dead man calls upon you to punish this man and protect his family and relatives, and, unless you have the manhood to write it in your verdict, you should be exiled from the good county of Heard." We do not think this language called for a mistrial, or a rebuke from the judge. It introduced no fact, but was merely a forcible, and possibly an extravagant, method adopted by counsel of impressing upon the jury the enormity of the offense, and the solemnity of their duty in relation thereto. In the case of Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 354, 49 S. E. 806, Mr. Justice

Evans said: "It is quite natural, and by no means unusual, for an advocate, in discussing the facts of a case before a jury, to indulge to some extent in imagery and illustration. Sometimes a simile may be inapt, or the metaphor mixed, or the expression may be hyperbolic. What the law forbids is the introduction into a case, by way of argument, of facts not in the record and calculated to prejudice the accused. The language of the solicitor was somewhat extravagant; but figurative speech has always been regarded as a legitimate weapon in forensic warfare, if there be evidence before the jury on which it may be founded." We desire to emphasize what is said in the foregoing quotation. Flight of oratory and false logic do not call for mistrials or rebuke. It is the introduction of facts not in evidence that require the application of such remedies.

2. Complaint is made of the failure of the court to charge upon the law governing confessions; the state having brought out on cross-examination evidence from one Loftin that the accused had told him that he had killed Stewart because the latter owed him $4. There was no request to the court to charge the law relating to confessions; and in the absence of such a request the failure to so charge is not error. Walker v. State, 118 Ga. 34, 44 S. E. 850; Malone v. State, 77 Ga. 768 (5); Sellers v. State, 99 Ga. 212, 25 S. E. 178.

3. Complaint is made that the court charged the jury on the law of insanity as a defense, when it is alleged such was not the defense relied on by the accused, but duress, and a charge on insanity tended to confuse the minds of the jury and becloud the real issue they were called upon to determine. The testimony of the mother of the accused tended to establish the mental imbecility of her son. The court properly looked to the evidence to determine what subjects of law should be given in charge to the jury, and the evidence justified the charge upon the law of insanity. It is now claimed that the defense of insanity was not relied on, but the judge in a note to the motion for a new trial states that, if this defense was not relied on, his attention was not called to that fact.

4. The accused sought to introduce the testimony of Mrs. Patterson to the effect that on the night of the killing Mac Patterson told her that Burrell Patterson had killed Stewart at his (Mac Patterson's) direction, and that he (Mac Patterson) had forced Burrell to commit the murder by threatening his life. This evidence was offered to support the accused's statement that he acted under duress. It would have tended to prove the fact that Mac Patterson had threatened Burrell Patterson's life if he would not kill Stewart. But it was only hearsay, and was properly excluded as evidence to establish the fact stated; and, as Mac Patterson was the witness for the accused, it was not admissible for the purpose of impeachment. Complaint is made that the court failed to charge fully the law of duress, and did not set out the accused's theory of defense to the jury. The court charged the jury on the law of duress, and this charge correctly sets forth the law upon that subject. It is not obligatory upon the court to give in detail the theory of the defense relied on by accused, in the absence of an appropriate and timely written request. The exceptions to the charge on duress were without merit. The verdict is amply supported by the evidence, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 379)

AMERICAN ASSURANCE ASS'N OF ATLANTA v. HARDIMAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

INSURANCE—FORFEITURE—FAILURE TO PAY PREMIUMS—WAIVER.

Where a certificate of life insurance provided that all benefits thereunder should be forfeited upon failure of the insured to pay the premiums as therein stipulated, and that no agent was authorized to alter or discharge contracts, waive forfeitures, or receive premiums in arrears beyond the time provided in the conditions and provisions of the policy, the custom of a mere collecting agent of the insurer with reference to the collection and payment of the premiums, if contrary to the terms of the policy, would not prevent a forfeiture thereof for a failure by the insured to comply with its conditions as to the payment of premiums, where such custom was neither authorized nor ratified by the insurer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Insurance, § 952.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Susie Hardiman against the American Assurance Association of Atlanta. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Susie Hardiman sued the American Assurance Association of Atlanta, Ga., in a justice's court of Richmond county, for $50, on a life insurance certificate issued by the association to C. M. Hardiman, in which she was named as the beneficiary. The case was appealed to a jury in the justice's court, and a verdict was rendered therein for the plaintiff for $50, which, upon review by the judge of the superior court on certiorari, was sustained, and the association excepted. On the jury trial it was admitted that the insured died on December 31, 1904; and the plaintiff put in evidence the certificate, which bound the association to pay her $50 upon the death of the insured. The weekly premium on the certificate was 15 cents.

The policy contained the following stipulations: "Premiums must be paid on or before Monday of each week to the association at its office during office hours, or to its authorized representative on demand." "When premiums for three weeks are due and unpaid, all benefits under this policy cease; but the policy may be restored by the payment, during the third week, of all arrearages and premiums for the next two following weeks, provided that the insured is at that time in good health and has not suffered disease or injury during the arrearage period." "Nonobservance of any of the written conditions or requirements of this policy, * * * without the written indorsement of approval of the association through its president or secretary, voids and immediately terminates the policy, and all payments thereon become forfeited to the association." "Agents are not allowed to alter or discharge contracts or waive forfeitures or receive premiums in arrearage beyond the time provided in the conditions and provisions above set forth." "Receipt of this policy and payment of the premiums thereon is acceptance in full of the policy terms, conditions, and provisions."

T. J. Tudor testified, in behalf of the defendant, that he was its collecting agent in November and December, 1904; that the last premium paid by the insured was paid November 14, 1904, which was on Monday; that the insured failed to pay the premiums due on Monday, November 21, and on Monday, November 28, 1904; that on December 6, 1904, the witness called on the mother of the insured, the plaintiff in the case, who had been accustomed to pay the premiums, and she refused to pay anything more; that during that week Mr. Franklin, her attorney, came to the witness' office and tendered him $5, which witness refused to accept, because the insured was in arrears and in bad health. The witness further testified that the insured did not pay his premiums on Monday of each week, but generally paid twice a month, after the city council paid off, and witness received the premiums after they were past due; that the witness on one occasion called after the premiums for two weeks were due, and accepted payment of them. "Witness' custom was to wait on the insured until after council had paid off, and not call for the premiums on Mondays. Insured did not come to witness' office to pay, but witness always called on him, or his mother, at the latter's house, for payment of the premiums."

A physician testified, in behalf of the defendant, that he had professionally attended the insured during November, 1904, and prepared a sick benefit claim (which the evidence shows was presented to the defendant by the insured on the 29th of that month); that the insured was sick in bed on November 28th from tuberculosis, and suffered from that disease until he died.

The error assigned in the petition for certiorari was that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence and without evidence to support it.

M. P. Carroll, for plaintiff in error.
Austin Branch and A. L. Franklin, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. (after stating the facts). Under the express stipulations of the policy, it was forfeited upon the failure of the insured to pay the three weekly premiums due, respectively, November 21, November 28, and December 5, 1904. The policy could have been restored by the payment, during the third week, of all arrearages and the premiums for the next two following weeks, if the insured had been at that time in good health and had not suffered from disease or injury during the arrearage period. The evidence that the insured was, at the time a tender was made of a sufficient amount to cover the premiums due on November 21st, November 28th, and December 5th, and the premiums for the two next succeeding weeks, in bad health and suffering from the disease from which he subsequently died, was uncontradicted. So by the terms of the policy it was not only forfeited, but the right to restore it by the payment of these five premiums did not exist.

It is contended, however, that the requirement of the policy with reference to the payment of premiums on Monday of each week had been changed or waived by the course of dealing between the local agent of the insurer at Augusta, Ga., and the insured, by which a custom had been established of fortnightly instead of weekly premiums, and that therefore there was an arrearage of only one premium, instead of three, when the tender was made by the attorney of the beneficiary. We do not think there was any merit in this contention. It is, to say the least, very doubtful whether the mere habit of collecting the premiums every two weeks, instead of every week, could have the effect of changing or waiving the conditions of the policy with reference to its forfeiture upon failure to pay three weekly premiums; for, while the policy provided that the premiums should be paid upon Monday of each week, no penalty or forfeiture was incurred by a mere failure to pay one weekly premium, nor for a failure to pay two weekly premiums. So, if the premiums were paid every two weeks, there could be no forfeiture of the policy. But admitting, for the sake of the argument, that an established custom on the part of the association of not insisting upon the payment of each weekly premium as it fell due, but of collecting the premiums at intervals of two weeks, would nullify the provision of the policy providing for its forfeiture whenever premiums for three weeks should be due and unpaid, the evidence fails to show that there was such a custom of the association. The alleged custom, if it existed at all, was between the local collecting agent of the insurer and the insured.

From the evidence it appears that this agent was a special agent, whose authority, so far as the record discloses, was limited to the collection of the premiums upon the certificate of insurance. It does not affirmatively appear that he had even this limited authority, except during the months of November and December, 1904, as the evidence did not disclose that he acted as agent for a longer period. The policy put the insured upon express notice that agents of the insurer had no authority to discharge contracts, waive forfeitures, or receive premiums in arrears beyond the time specified in the policy. It is obvious, therefore, that the insurance association could not be bound by any acts of its agent in contravention of the terms of the policy, unless it subsequently ratified them. It is not contended that it expressly ratified the acts of the agent in reference to the collection of the premiums. Whether, in view of the provision of the contract that "nonobservance of any of the written conditions or requirements of this policy, * * * without the written indorsement of approval by the association through its president or secretary," should render the policy void, the requirements and conditions of the policy in reference to the payments of premiums could be altered or waived by a mere implied ratification by the association of a course of dealing between its local agent and the insured contrary to the terms of the policy, it is not necessary to inquire; for the evidence wholly fails to show such implied ratification.

Before ratification by a principal of unauthorized acts of its agent could be implied, there would have to be knowledge of the principal of such acts, and then conduct on its part in reference thereto inconsistent with its repudiation of them. It is clear, therefore, that there could be no implied ratification by the insurance association of a previously unauthorized custom of its local agent in reference to the payment of premiums upon this policy, until the association had notice of such custom. The record wholly fails to show such notice or facts from which it can be legitimately inferred. The home office of the association was in Atlanta, Fulton county, and the special agent collected the premiums on the policy in Richmond county. It does not appear how often he made returns or remittances to the association of his collections, nor does it even appear when he made any return or remittance to it of a premium or premiums collected on this policy. As we have said, so far as the evidence disclosed, he was acting as the agent of the association only during the months of November and December, 1904. Perhaps it may be inferred from his testimony that he was acting as such agent somewhat longer than that, but, if so, there is nothing to show how long he collected premiums due on this policy.

Granting that the evidence in this case is sufficient to show a course of dealing between the local and special agent of the insurance association and the insured, with respect to the payment of premiums on the policy, which was not only inconsistent with the terms of the policy, but had existed for a sufficient length of time to establish a custom between them as to the payment of the premiums, still the evidence fails to show that the acts of such agent in this particular were either authorized at the time or subsequently ratified by the association. Under the evidence, the association had the right to treat the policy as forfeited for the non-payment of the premiums due, respectively, November 21, November 28, and December 5, 1904; and, as the insured was in bad health when a tender sufficient to pay these three premiums and premiums for the two following weeks was made, the policy could not be revived without the consent of the insurer. See Hutson v. Prudential Ins. Co., 122 Ga. 847, 50 S. E. 1000. It follows that the judge of the superior court erred in overruling the petition for certiorari.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 318)

EVANS v. JOSEPHINE MILLS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—FELLOW SERVANTS.

The law governing this case having heretofore been settled by this court (46 S. E. 674, 119 Ga. 448), and the facts developed on the last trial affirmatively showing that the defendant was not chargeable with any negligence, it follows that the court below rightly granted a new trial on the ground that the finding in favor of the plaintiff was wholly unwarranted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 973-976.]

2. EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE.

On the trial of a suit for damages on account of personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff (a little girl) by reason of having her arm caught in a machine, it was error to allow nonexpert witnesses to testify that the machine "was very dangerous and not at all safe for a child of tender years to be around." The facts should have been stated, and the jury allowed to form their own opinion as to whether the machine was dangerous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, §§ 2149, 2150.]

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

It was also error, in such a case, to charge the jury that the only question for them to consider in determining the liability of the defendant was whether the machine by which the plaintiff was injured was running or standing still at the time she touched it, just prior to receiving her injuries. Such a charge was tantamount to instructing the jury that a given state of facts would constitute negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 1147.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Polk County;
F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Action by Bettie Evans, by her next friend, against the Josephine Mills. Verdict for plaintiff. From an order granting a new trial, both parties bring error. Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed. On cross-bill reversed.

Seaborn & Barry and Wright, Janes & Hunt, for plaintiff in error. Bunn & Trawick, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. This was an action for damages on account of personal injuries, brought by Bettie Evans, a minor, by her next friend, against the Josephine Mills. The jury found for the plaintiff for $5,000, the full amount sued for, and the defendant moved for a new trial on numerous grounds. A new trial was granted on the grounds, as stated in the judge's order, "that it appears from the undisputed evidence that the plaintiff was, at the time of the accident, out of the line of her duty where she was employed to be; and it further failing to appear from any evidence that the co-employé [who set in motion the machine through the operation of which the plaintiff was injured] knew of her presence at the time the machine was started." The remaining grounds of the motion were expressly overruled. The plaintiff excepted to the grant of a new trial, and the defendant filed a cross-bill of exceptions in which it complained, in effect, that the court erred in not sustaining its motion for a new trial in its entirety.

1. A substantial statement of the essential facts of this case will be found in the report preceding the opinion of Mr. Justice Lamar, delivered when the case was here before. Evans v. Josephine Mills, 119 Ga. 448, 46 S. E. 674. We have no hesitation in affirming the judgment on the main bill of exceptions; for, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, it does not appear that the defendant was chargeable with any act of negligence. The plaintiff and another of the defendant's employés, Minnie Sanders, were children. Neither of them was employed to operate the mangle; the starting of which caused the injury. They went to the mangle without the knowledge of any of the defendant's officers or agents in charge of its mill, and while there the plaintiff put her finger on the rollers for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were hot. According to her testimony, just as she did so Minnie Sanders, who was standing at the other end of the machine, started it in motion and it caught the plaintiff's arm, seriously mashing the same. The plaintiff's testimony does not disclose that Minnie Sanders could have seen her put her fingers on the rollers or had any reason to apprehend that she might do so. In this connection the plaintiff testified that she could see only the head and neck and top of the shoulders of Minnie Sanders, and that she supposed Minnie Sanders could only see her head and shoulders, and not her hands. Under these facts and circumstances, a verdict in favor of the defendant was demanded. When the case was here before, it was ruled (119 Ga. 452, 46 S. E. 676) that the plaintiff could not recover unless the master, or "some one for whose act he was responsible," was negligent. The judgment was reversed, with direction that the case be submitted to the jury on the sole question of whether or not the co-employé who started the machine was negligent; it appearing from the evidence adduced at the trial then under review that this co-employé, Minnie Sanders, was one of the three operatives whose duty it was to run the mangle. On the last trial it affirmatively appeared that Minnie Sanders had nothing to do with the operation of the machine, but, as above stated, that both she and the plaintiff were away from their posts of duty without either the assent or knowledge of any of the officials or supervising agents in charge of the mill. Had the defendant assigned to Minnie Sanders the duty of operating the mangle, it would be no defense that she was a person so young and inexperienced as not to be capable of looking out for the safety of the plaintiff before starting the machine. Relatively to her, the defendant was not only bound to exercise ordinary care in the selection of fellow servants who were capable of properly operating its machinery and taking precautions against injury to her, but was responsible for their conduct while performing the duties assigned to them; since the doctrine that a master is not ordinarily liable for the negligence of a fellow servant does not apply to a case like the present, where the person injured is an infant of tender years. 119 Ga. 448, 449, 46 S. E. 674. Accordingly, it was incumbent on the defendant to place in charge of the mangle an employé not only competent to run the same, but to operate it in such a manner as not to negligently injure other employés of tender years who might come about it and occupy a position which would suggest the probability of their being hurt if the machine were started without warning. This was recognized as true when the case was remanded for another trial on the question whether or not the employé who started the mangle was negligent. The important development on the last hearing, viz., that Minnie Sanders had not been placed in charge of the machine and really had nothing to do with its operation, put an entirely different complexion upon this phase of the case, and cut off all right to a recovery by the plaintiff. The question of the defendant's liability should not therefore have been submitted to the jury, as his honor recognized in his order granting a new trial.

2. A consideration of the points raised by the cross-bill of exceptions discloses additional reasons for setting aside the finding in favor of the plaintiff. Some of the grounds of the motion for a new trial which were overruled by the judge were not urged in the brief of counsel before this court, and therefore will not be considered. Still other grounds of the motion assign error upon portions of the judge's charge, which, while perhaps not entirely accurate, substantially set forth the law of the case as announced in the decision of this court when it was here before, and which do not show any good reason for reversing the judgment. In the interest of brevity these grounds will not be considered seriatim. It appears, however, that the court allowed a witness to testify that the machine which caused the plaintiff's injuries "was very dangerous, and not at all safe for a child of tender years to be around," and another to testify that she "considered the mangle dangerous with the cover off." This evidence was objected to, on the ground, among others, that the witnesses did not qualify as experts, and consequently their opinions as to the safety or danger of the machine were inadmissible. The admission of this evidence is assigned as error, and we consider the assignment a meritorious one. It was permissible for the nonexpert witnesses to describe the machine and set forth the method of its operation, leaving to the jury to say whether or not it was dangerous. It was not for them to venture an opinion on the subject, and the evidence should have been excluded on the proper objection being made. Mayor v. Humphries, 122 Ga. 800, 50 S. E. 986 (2).

3. Error is also assigned upon the following charge of the court: "I charge you, gentlemen, that the only question for you to consider in determining the liability of the defendant in this case is that of whether the press or mangle was running or standing still when [the plaintiff] went to it and put her hand or finger on the machine." We are clear that this charge was error. It was tantamount to a direct instruction that a given state of facts would constitute negligence and render the defendant liable; and, as the state of facts mentioned did not constitute negligence per se, the charge was entirely unauthorized. It is too well settled to need citation of authority that the jury is the sole judge of what constitutes negligence, save only in those cases where the law itself, in express terms or by necessary implication, declares given acts to be negligent. This ground of the motion for a new trial should not have been overruled.

Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed; on cross-bill reversed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 365)

CITY COUNCIL OF AUGUSTA v. MARKS.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. PLEADING — DECLARATION — ALLEGATIONS OF TIME.

A declaration must aver a time when every material traversable fact alleged in it transpired. If it fail to do so, it is subject to special demurrer on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, § 39.]

2. NUISANCE—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—LIMITATIONS.

Although a suit for the creation of a nuisance may be barred by the statute of limitations, yet if the nuisance be of a continuing character, which can and should be abated, suit may be brought for damages arising from its maintenance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, § 1786; vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Nuisance, §§ 41, 111.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—SEWERS—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—DECLARATION.

Where a declaration alleged that a municipal corporation built through the lot of the plaintiff a sewer which was constructed to carry off waste water, but which was used also for the carrying of filth, sewage, and fecal matter, and that by reason of the existence of the sewer on his property and the maintenance of a "dumping station" or place for the discharge of such sewage near his residence he has been damaged, on special demurrer he should have been required to allege when the sewer was constructed and for what length of time the nuisance had been maintained during his ownership of the property, causing the damage sued for.

4. SAME—ALLEGATIONS OF DEMAND.

Where an action for damages is brought against a municipal corporation, the declaration must allege a substantial compliance with the act of 1899, which requires persons having claims for money damages against a city to present the same for adjustment before bringing suit; but it is not necessary to annex to the declaration an exact copy of such written demand.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, §§ 1715, 1797.]

5. SAME—DEMURRER—QUESTIONS RAISED.

The demurrer in this case does not raise the question of the sufficiency of the demand made, but is based upon the ground that a copy of the demand is not annexed to the petition, and the defendant, therefore, cannot state whether the petition and the demand correspond.

6. NUISANCE—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—DECLARATION—VALUE OF PROPERTY BEFORE INJURY.

Where a declaration alleged that the market value of a lot belonging to the plaintiff had been depreciated in the sum of $3,500 by reason of a nuisance created and maintained by the defendant, such an allegation was subject to special demurrer, on the ground that it did not state what was the value of the lot before the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Damages, § 407.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by D. W. Marks, Jr., against the city council of Augusta. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

David W. Marks, Jr., brought an action for damages against the city council of Augusta. He alleged, that he was the owner of a lot bounded on one side by the Augusta canal, which was owned and operated by the defendant; that the defendant had caused to be built through his lot a large drain sewer, emptying immediately south of his lot and within a few feet of the windows of his dwelling; that it was constructed for a drain to carry off waste water, but the city used it not only for that purpose, but also to receive fecal matter and filth, which is thus carried through his lot and discharged very near his residence, generating noxious gases, vile stenches, and germs of disease; that this is a continuing nuisance and "by reason of the existence of said sewer on the property of your petitioner, and the maintenance by the city council of Augusta of a dumping station for its contents immediately against the property of your petitioner," the market value of his lot has been depreciated in the sum of $3,500, and the health of his family has been greatly impaired, and he has been forced repeatedly to close up his home and find another place of residence, to his damage in the sum of $1,500; that 30 days before filing this suit he petitioned the city council in writing to abate the nuisance, and called to their attention the fact that he had been damaged in the sum of $5,000, but to this petition they made no response. The defendant demurred to the declaration; the demurrer was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

C. Henry Cohen, for plaintiff in error.
F. W. Capers, Pierce Bros., and Chas. P. Pressley, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). If by reason of a trespass upon realty it has been so injured as to render it permanently useless and valueless to the owner, he should recover the damages thus occasioned in a single action. Thus where a petition alleged that by the erection and maintenance of a dam certain land of the plaintiff and the timber thereon had been rendered worthless and of no value, and a recovery was had, the plaintiff could not maintain against the defendant another action again alleging the same facts as to the injuries sustained and their cause. Clark v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 184, 30 S. E. 741; Allen v. Macon R. Co., 107 Ga. 839, 33 S. E. 696. But if the nuisance was of such a character as could be abated and terminate the injury, the plaintiff would not be limited to a single action resulting from its creation, but might sue for injuries resulting from its maintenance. In that event, if he so desired, he might bring successive suits for damages resulting up to the time of bringing each suit, provided they were not covered by a former action, and were within the statute of limitations. Massengale v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 966, 39 S. E. 578; Southern Ry. Co. v. Cook, 117 Ga. 286, 43 S. E. 697; Langley v. Augusta, 118 Ga. 590, 45 S. E. 486, 98 Am. St. Rep. 133; Southern Railway Co. v. Morris, 119 Ga. 234, 46 S. E. 85. Although the nuisance may have been created more than four years before the action was brought, if it be maintained as a continuing nuisance, this is a renewal of the wrong, and therefore actionable. Reld v.

Atlanta, 73 Ga. 523; Smith v. Atlanta, 75 Ga. 110. Under the allegations of the declaration in the present case, whether or not the sewer was constructed through the plaintiff's lot more than four years before the action was brought, if the defendant maintained a continuing nuisance by using it for sewage, fecal matter, and filth, instead of merely for waste water, the plaintiff could sue for damages resulting therefrom.

It is contended that an alienee could not sue for damages accruing while the property was owned by the alienor. This is true, but "the alienee of a person owning the property injured may sue for the continuance of the nuisance." Civ. Code, § 3862. It does not appear from the declaration that there has been any alienation since the nuisance began. The defendant, however, is entitled to be put on reasonable notice as to what is claimed by the plaintiff. The declaration alleges that the sewer was built through the lot of the plaintiff, that it had been and is being maintained as a continuing nuisance discharging filth, excrement, and foul matter near his house; that by reason of the "existence of said sewer and said dumping station" the health of his family has been greatly impaired, and he has been forced repeatedly to close up his home and find another place of residence; that the market value of his property has depreciated in the sum of $3,500, and that his total damages aggregate $5,000. Certainly the defendant is entitled to know when the sewer was constructed, and for how long a time the plaintiff claims that he has been receiving the continuing injuries alleged by him, affecting the health of his family and damaging the lot as a place of residence. In Bond v. Central Bank, 2 Ga. 100, it was said: The writ "must allege all the circumstances necessary for the support of the action, * * * and the time and place, with such precision, certainty, and clearness that the defendant, knowing what he is called upon to answer, may be able to plead a direct and unequivocal defence." In Kemp v. Central Ry. Co., 122 Ga. 559, 50 S. E. 465, it was said: "The more liberal the law in the allowance of amendments, and the less the necessity for formalities in pleading, the greater the right of the defendant by special demurrer to call for a full statement of the facts out of which the plaintiff's cause of action arises."

The act of 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 74) declares that no person having a claim for money damages against any municipal corporation on account of injuries to person or property shall bring suit at law or in equity against such corporation for the same time without first presenting in writing such claim to the governing authority of said municipality for adjustment, "stating the time, place, and extent of such injury, as nearly as practicable, and the negligence which caused the same; and no suit shall be entertained by the courts against such municipality until the cause of action therein" has so been presented. Thirty days are allowed the corporation to act upon the claim. A declaration based on such a cause of action must allege a substantial compliance with the act. But it is not necessary to annex a copy of the demand. Saunders v. Fitzgerald, 113 Ga. 619, 38 S. E. 978; City of Columbus v. McDaniel, 117 Ga. 823, 45 S. E. 59. The ground of demurrer referring to this subject is because "said petition has not annexed to it a copy of the petition filed with the said city council of Augusta, in accordance with the act of December 20, 1899; * * * and that this defendant, not having said petition to said city council of Augusta annexed to this suit, cannot state whether the same grounds alleged in the petition to council appear in this action, nor whether the time, or place, or extent of the injury correspond." This ground does not raise the question as to whether the allegations in regard to the demand are sufficient, but merely whether a copy of the demand should not have been attached to the declaration so that the defendant might compare it with the allegations. It being unnecessary to attach a copy, as stated above, this ground was properly overruled.

An allegation that the market value of plaintiff's property had been depreciated in the sum of $3,500 was subject to special demurrer. The defendant was entitled to know what was claimed to have been its value before the injury was done, and the ground of the demurrer raising this point should have been sustained. The general demurrer was properly overruled. Some of the grounds of the special demurrer should have been sustained, as indicated in this opinion.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 371)

STERLING ELECTRIC CO. et al. v. AUGUSTA TELEPHONE & ELECTRIC CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. PLEADINGS—AMENDMENT—ADJUSTMENT TO AUDITOR'S REPORT.

Where an issue was made before an auditor, evidence introduced upon it, and the report of the auditor found in regard to it, there was no error in allowing an amendment of the pleadings adjusting the prayer for equitable relief to the finding of the auditor, but not introducing any new or distinct issue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, §§ 603, 605.]

2. CORPORATIONS—ACTION AGAINST STOCKHOLDERS—EVIDENCE.

Under the special facts of the case, this court will not reverse the judgment of the trial court in refusing to decree that there was a liability on the part of the stockholders which was an asset to which the creditors were entitled to look for payment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 12, Cent. Dig. Corporations, § 1156.]

3. RECEIVERS — ACTIONS BY DISCRETION OF COURT.

A court of equity is not bound, as a matter of course, to direct its receiver to bring suit upon a note or open account appearing upon the books in his hands, but is invested with some discretion in determining whether such a suit would be profitable or likely to result in benefit or loss to the estate. Thus, if the person against whom such claim appears is insolvent, the court is not required to diminish the assets by the incurring of useless costs.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, §§ 162, 197.]

4. SAME—DIRECTIONS OF COURT.

Where it appeared that the books in the hands of a receiver indicated an indebtedness by a certain person, and the court directed the receiver to bring suit upon such account or claim, "if upon investigation it appears that there is a reasonable prospect of realizing on any judgment that may be obtained," and where exception was taken to such direction, but it was not shown what evidence was before the court touching the nature of the claim, or the solvency of the alleged debtor, or the probability of realizing on any judgment which might be obtained, this court will not reverse the direction so given.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; Austin Branch, Judge pro hac.

Action by P. H. Langdon, creditor of the Augusta Telephone & Electric Company, and others, against the Sterling Electric Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

P. H. Langdon, as a creditor of the Augusta Telephone & Electric Company, on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the defendant who might become parties, filed an equitable petition against that company, alleging that it had issued two series of bonds secured respectively by a first and second mortgage, plaintiff being the holder of bonds in each series; that it had defaulted, was insolvent, and was threatened with numerous suits, levies, and seizures of parts of its property, which would dismember it and cause loss. He prayed for a foreclosure of the mortgages, that all creditors be enjoined from suing except in this proceeding, and for general relief. Various creditors intervened. The plaintiffs in error were unsecured creditors who became parties plaintiff. Some of the other interveners claimed liens or priorities. The case was referred to an auditor, and among other things he was directed to report the assets and indebtedness of the defendant. Pending the hearing, Weed, an intervener, amended his intervention and alleged that certain stock had been issued as a bonus, without payment therefor, that the unpaid amounts of such stock were subject to a call or assessment, and were assets of the company and should be collected for creditors. He prayed that the receiver be required to institute suit against them, and also to institute suit upon a certain claim alleged to exist against one D. P. Langdon. The auditor in his report included as an asset the claim against Langdon as appearing prima facie to be due; but, under the evidence, held there was no liability on the part of the holders of the stock, and declined to include such a liability as an asset. Exceptions were filed by Weed on this branch of the case, and by others on other points. The report was filed August 26, 1904. On December 30th, following, the plaintiffs in error filed what they termed an amendment to their interventions, in which they alleged that the stockholders had never paid for stock issued to them, and prayed that the receiver be directed to collect the unpaid subscriptions, and "for such relief and for such further and other directions as may be proper under the circumstances." The original plaintiff filed an amendment to his pleadings, based upon the finding of the auditor, and asking relief in regard to a matter found in the auditor's report. This was demurred to by the plaintiffs in error, but the demurrer was overruled. On January 28th the plaintiffs in error amended their pleadings in reference to declaring a liability on the part of the holders of common stock and in regard to having suit brought on the claim against Langdon. The case coming on for a final decree, the presiding judge entered a decree in which he recites that, "it appearing that all the exceptions to the auditor's report have been withdrawn and dismissed by the parties making them, except the exceptions filed by John W. Weed, and it further appearing that all the parties in interest, as hereinafter set out, are before the court after due notice," he overrules the exceptions of Weed and the prayers of his supplementary petition, except as to the institution of suit against Langdon, "against whom the receiver is ordered to bring suit, if upon investigation it appears that there is a reasonable prospect of realizing on any judgment that may be obtained." The report of the auditor was confirmed, and a decree entered accordingly. Weed did not except, but the plaintiffs in error filed a bill of exceptions alleging three errors: First, because the court overruled their demurrer to the amendment of the original petition; second, because he refused to hold that there was a liability by the stockholders to subsequent creditors, and they contended that this was an asset to which they were entitled to look for payment; third, because, in authorizing suit by the receiver against Langdon, he limited it by the use of the words, "if upon investigation it appears that there is a reasonable prospect of realizing on any judgment that may be obtained."

P. C. O'Gorman, for plaintiffs in error.
Jas. B. & Bryan Cumming and C. Henry Cohen, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts).
1. There was no error in overruling the de-murrer to the amendment of the plaintiff. The matter dealt with in it had been before the auditor, evidence had been introduced on the subject, and he had made a report touching it. The amendment simply adjusted the plaintiff's pleadings and prayer to meet the facts which had thus been considered and passed on. Cureton v. Cureton, 120 Ga. 560, 48 S. E. 162 (2).

2. The plaintiffs in error were parties before the auditor. Evidence was introduced on the subject of the liability of the stockholders, and whether it was an asset of the company. No one except Weed seems to have objected to the auditor's making an adjudication on the subject of the liability. His counsel contended that it was not within the province of the auditor to pass on the question of liability, but to report these claims as prima facie assets. The auditor construed the order of reference and his duty differently. So far as appears in the record, the plaintiffs in error never filed any exceptions to the auditor's report. In the bill of exceptions it was recited: "That at this time, December 20, 1904, all of the parties who had filed exceptions to the report withdrew the same, except John W. Weed, on which day the [plaintiffs in error] joined in his exceptions by their counsel in open court and were allowed to do so by the court." It is not stated that they filed any exception themselves or took any order on the subject, and we presume that this meant no more than that counsel for these parties assisted in urging the exceptions of Weed. We do not know how they could have become parties to exceptions filed by another person, after the time for excepting had passed. In the absence of anything in the record to show that this was done, we put upon the language the construction referred to above, which represents all that could lawfully have been done by the plaintiffs in error at that time. The presiding judge recited in his final decree that all exceptions were withdrawn or dismissed except those of Weed, which were overruled. Plaintiffs in error appear to have largely rested their proceeding upon that of Weed, and, when he failed to except, they have undertaken to do so. It is true that they filed an amendment somewhat similar to that of Weed, after the auditor had filed his report, alleging that they had never had the opportunity to present this question in a court of law since the facts came to their knowledge. But inasmuch as evidence was introduced before the auditor and he reported on the subject, it is not easy to see how the plaintiffs in error or their counsel could have escaped knowing the facts. If they rested upon the proceeding of Weed to hold the stockholders liable, the auditor found that he was notified, before he purchased the bonds, that the company would make such a transaction, and that he must be assumed to have assented to it. Generally, where it is desired that a receiver shall bring suits, application is made to the court of his appointment, setting out the grounds for suit, and upon proper showing the court passes an order giving direction to the receiver. It is not altogether usual to have the question whether there is a liability on the part of stockholders, which should be enforced by a suit to be brought by the receiver, finally passed on in limine by an auditor, under an intervention filed with him, before actual suit by the receiver or by the parties, and without prayer for a judgment against any special persons, and to have the court thus decree that a liability exists, as plaintiffs in error seem to desire. Their exception is to a refusal to so hold. Some of the holders of the stock were themselves interveners on other grounds, and were thus before the auditor, while others were not. Neither by invoking an amendment of the order of reference or an order construing it, and giving direction to the auditor, nor by exception to the auditor's report, have these unsecured creditors who brought the case to this court raised the question in the trial court. The parties who filed the bill of exceptions seem to have taken their chances upon this mode of procedure, and we are not prepared to say that as to them the court erred in the ruling which he made. We do not wish to be understood as in any manner modifying or changing the ruling made in Allen v. Grant, 122 Ga. 552, 50 S. E. 494. What we hold is that, under the special facts of this case, the plaintiffs in error are not entitled to a reversal.

3. We do not know what evidence was before the presiding judge upon the subject of Langdon, or the nature of the claim against him, or whether he was solvent or insolvent, or as to the probability of realizing on a judgment against him. In regard to directing the receiver to bring suit on promissory notes or open accounts, the judge has some right to look to the interest of the estate. He is not bound to direct the receiver to involve the estate in heavy costs or expenses in suing insolvent or worthless claims. The plaintiffs in error do not appear to have shown whether there was a probability of realizing on the Langdon claim, or whether they were willing to save the estate from costs should the suit be unremunerative. The court gave the receiver some discretion in judging of the matter, and we cannot say that he erred.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 518)

LIVELY et al. v. HUNTER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

INJUNCTION—MOTION TO DISSOLVE—DECREE.

On the hearing of a motion to dissolve and vacate a temporary injunction, the court is without jurisdiction to enter a final decree disposing of the main case on its merits.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Injunction, §§ 389, 400.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Gwinett County; R. B. Russell, Judge.

Action by F. J. Hunter against C. P. and H. M. Lively. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

A petition for injunction was filed by F. J. Hunter, as executor under the will of Mrs. M. V. Medlock, and as next friend of her minor children, to prevent C. P. and H. M. Lively from erecting a warehouse, to be used for the storage of fertilizers, within close proximity to certain dwellings belonging to the estate represented by the plaintiff. A restraining order was granted by the judge of the superior court, and October 15, 1904, was fixed as the date for the interlocutory hearing. On that day an order was passed postponing the hearing, at the request of the parties, till November 2d, that they might be afforded an opportunity to settle the controversy. On October 27th they signed articles wherein they agreed to submit to certain named arbitrators the question whether the "health or property of said plaintiffs" would be injured or damaged by the use of the warehouse contemplated by the defendants; the parties also stipulating that the award of the arbitrators, if favorable to the plaintiff, should be returned to and made the judgment of the superior court. On December 28th the arbitrators, after formal hearing of the matter at issue, found in favor of the plaintiff, and made their return to the superior court, and the judge passed an order directing the submission and award to be entered on the minutes. This order was passed at the March term, 1905, of that court, which was the appearance term of the proceeding for injunction. On March 6th C. P. and H. M. Lively filed a demurrer and an answer to the plaintiff's petition. At that term they also filed exceptions to the award of the arbitrators, to which exceptions the plaintiff interposed a demurrer. The hearing thereon was passed till the next term of the court, owing to the sickness of his counsel. On March 23d the defendants presented to the judge a written motion to dissolve the restraining order previously granted, and asked that he fix a day for a hearing on this motion. On the 27th of that month the judge passed an order, at chambers, calling upon the plaintiff to show cause before him on April 29th why the restraining order should not be vacated and dissolved, upon the motion of the defendants. On April 24th another order was passed, reciting that it was impossible to hear the motion at the time appointed, and directing that the hearing thereon take place on June 8, 1905. The parties appeared on the date last named, and the judge then undertook to deal, not only with the motion to dissolve the restraining order, but also with the issues raised by the demurrer and answer to the plaintiff's petition for injunction, and by the exceptions filed by the defendants to the award of the arbitrators, as well as by the demurrer to these exceptions which had been interposed by the plaintiff. After considering all of the questions thus presented his honor passed an order reciting that the demurrer to the exceptions taken to the award of the arbitrators was sustained, and the exceptions were stricken; that the award of the arbitrators was made the judgment of the court; and that the defendants were "perpetually enjoined from using the house in question for the storage of guano." In a bill of exceptions sued out in behalf of the defendants below, error is assigned upon this judgment.

D. K. Johnston, for plaintiffs in error.
T. M. Peebles, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). The judgment complained of was rendered at the hearing fixed on motion of the defendants to dissolve an interlocutory injunction. The only question before the court on that hearing was the propriety of dissolving or vacating the restraining order in the main case, which was still pending. The main case was not before the court on its merits, and the court was without jurisdiction to enter a final decree disposing of it.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 518)

SWORDS v. ROBERTSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

NEW TRIAL—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The only complaint made is that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence. There was evidence from which the jury were authorized to find the verdict which was returned, and it was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. New Trial, §§ 142-143.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Walton County; R. B. Russell, Judge.

Action between Amy Swords and W. F. Robertson and others. From the judgment, Swords brings error. Affirmed.

T. W. Rucker, for plaintiff in error. Napier & Cox and F. C. Foster, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(53 W. Va. 537)

STATE v. WOODROW.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1906.)

1. WITNESSES — COMPETENCY — HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A wife is not a competent witness against her husband in a prosecution for crime.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 50, Cent. Dig. Witnesses, §§ 133, 139.]

2. SAME.

Quære, is a wife or husband a competent witness now against the other, in a prosecution for crime committed against such witness?

3. SAME—MURDER OF CHILD.

A wife is not a competent witness against her husband in a prosecution against him for the murder of his infant child, of the age of 14 months, though the same pistol ball killed the child and wounded the wife while the child was in her arms.

4. INDICTMENT—MOTION TO QUASH.

An indictment cannot be quashed because it rests in whole or part on incompetent evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Indictment and Information, § 488.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS.

Better practice is to require instructions to be in writing; but the mere fact that an instruction is oral will not reverse.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 3163.]

6. HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Refusal of an instruction, on a trial for murder, giving the findings in the power of the jury, including one of involuntary manslaughter, is not error, when no evidence in the case tends to show that degree of homicide. Such instruction should not be given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 26, Cent. Dig. Homicide, § 655.]

7. SAME—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

Evidence of experiment to test the capacity of a child to fire a pistol is admissible to repel evidence of one accused of murder, going to show that the child fired the pistol, causing the homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 854.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Poffenbarger and Sanders, JJ., dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Mineral County.

William Woodrow was convicted of murder in the second degree, and brings error. Reversed.

Frank C. Reynolds, for plaintiff in error.
The Attorney General, Frank Lively, and O. A. Hood, for the State.

BRANNON, P. William Woodrow was indicted in Mineral county for the murder of his child, Ruth Elizabeth Woodrow, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for eight years upon a verdict of murder in the second degree. The deceased was a baby 14 months of age, and was in the arms of its mother, at her breast, when a pistol shot killed it, the ball passing through the baby's head and wounding the mother, according to her evidence. The accused offered a plea in abatement to quash the indictment, on the ground that his wife had been examined before the grand jury; but the plea was rejected. On the trial the wife of the accused gave evidence at the instance of the state against her husband, over his protest. Was the wife a competent witness against him? Elliot on Evidence, vol. 2 § 736, states the law thus: "When the husband or wife was the defendant in a criminal prosecution, the other was, at common law, incompetent either for or against the accused. The marriage relation, however, must be a lawful one, or the rule generally has no application. And, if the offense was committed by husband or wife against the other, the injured party is usually a competent witness, either for or against the accused, both at common law and under the statutes." That late work of great practical value cites many authorities for its text. Bishop's New Crim. Procedure, vol. 1, § 1153, says that, "if personal violence is inflicted on the wife by the husband, she from necessity may, or, if required, must, testify to it in a criminal proceeding against him for the battery; and he may do the like if she beats him." This ancient rule of the common law is stated in all the books. The sole question in this case is: Does this case come within the exception to the rule; that is, was the prisoner's act of shooting the child a crime against the wife? It was not violence to her person. It was not a crime against her person corporeally. Such it has to be under this exception. It is true that there has been considerable difference of opinion as to what instances fall within this exception. Some cases hold that bodily violence to the wife is not the only case under the exception. For instance, cases of bigamy, and other cases, have been held to fall within the exception. The books must be resorted to for full discussion. It will be found that, though cases where no actual violence constituting assault and battery upon the wife have been held to fall within the reason of the exception, yet they are cases which directly affect the legal right of the wife, rights going along with her personality or person, as an individual separated from all other persons. However, I can safely say that the great bulk of American decision is that, to come within the exception, the case must be one of personal violence to the spouse. Bassett v. U. S., 137 U. S. 496, 11 Sup. Ct. 165, 34 L. Ed. 762; Baxter v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 394, 53 Am. St. Rep. 720; Crawford v. State (Wis.) 74 N. W. 537, 67 Am. St. Rep. 829; Commonwealth v. Sapp (Ky.) 14 S. W. 834, 29 Am. St. Rep. 406. And I repeat that those cases, like bigamy and others that do not actually involve violence to the person, which are held within the exception, are cases where the wrong is to the individual particularly and directly injured, by the crime for which the husband is prosecuted. Dill v. People (Colo. Sup.) 36 Pac. 229, 41 Am. St. Rep. 254. But the instances mentioned—I mean the cases—not requiring actual violence to persons are confined to a few states. The weight of authority is otherwise, requiring personal violence or a restraint of liberty to the wife; restraint of liberty being a wrong to her person. Bassett v. U. S., 137 U. S. 496, 11 Sup. Ct. 165, 34 L. Ed. 762. The act must touch her person, or her personal individual right, as a person distinct and individualized from the balance of the community, to come under the exception spoken of. An enormous wrong this murder was to the mother in a moral point of view, in an emotional point of view, in a sentimental point of view, in a pathetic point of view, under emotions of the heart which move human beings, owing to the relation of mother and child. We are apt to consider this terrible crime as a greater one against the mother than to any other living human being. Still, in a physical point of view, the homicide did not touch the person of the wife, but was only a crime against her as one member of the community—I mean in the eye of the law. Remember that Woodrow was tried for killing the child, not for shooting his wife. On a trial for shooting his wife she could, under the exception stated, give evidence against her husband, and could prove, if material, not only the shooting of herself, but also the shooting of the child, as part of the res gestæ; but on his trial for killing the child the fact that the one ball did violence to both mother and child does not alter the case. The homicide of the child is one distinct crime; the shooting of the mother another distinct crime. The close connection of the two in time and circumstances does not blend the results of the ball, and make the killing of the child a personal or corporeal violence to the mother. To come under the exception the crime must be against the mother in a legal point of view. The rule of evidence as to res gestæ will not admit the wife as a witness. Under that rule the question is, not the competency of the witness proving the things done or said, but whether the things themselves are proper to go before the jury, even though proven by a competent witness; whereas here it is a question whether the witness is a proper one to prove the things done or said, admitting those things to be proper evidence, if deposed to by a competent witness.

Necessity, the want of another witness, is pleaded for the admission of the wife's evidence in this case. That was the parent of the common-law exception. But that exception may often arise and call as loudly as in this case. Suppose the husband should kill a grown child in the privacy of the home, there being no other witness of the fact but the wife; would this necessity admit her evidence? Suppose he would there kill the wife's grown sister or any one else; would she be competent? I say not. If there were other witnesses present, would she be competent? I suppose not, as the necessity would not then exist. Then, the evidence would be competent or incompetent according as there was, or was not, another witness than the wife. Though we concede that the necessity meant by law in this instance is not merely necessity for some witness, but the necessity to protect the spouse, still that would not admit the wife's evidence in this case. It is suggested that tender age of the person injured, causing incapacity to give evidence, calls for the wife's evidence. Does it depend on age? If so, the wife's competency or incompetency would rest on the age of the person injured. If the husband should kill a man in the field or highway, none but the wife of the murderer being present, would she be a competent witness against her husband? Surely not. Yet the cry of justice would be as loud in that case as in the present case. The necessity would be just as great. The accidental circumstance that no eye saw the deed but that of wife and husband would, in such case, just as much create a necessity for the wife's evidence as in this case. The ancient rule of the common law, forbidding evidence of one spouse against the other, stands intact to-day. Our Code of 1899, in chapter 152, § 19, reads thus: "In any trial or examination in or before any court or officer for a felony or misdemeanor, the accused shall, at his or her own request, (but not otherwise) be a competent witness on such trial and examination. The wife or husband of the accused shall also, at the request of the accused, but not otherwise, be a competent witness on such trial and examination." The object of this statute, in its latter clause, was to make the wife or husband a competent witness for the other, at his or her request. It is an enabling statute, because before it came neither could use the evidence of the other. It enlarges the right of the accused by giving him or her the right to introduce his or her spouse as a witness, but it does not enlarge the right of the state. Before that statute the state could not introduce the wife against the husband, or the husband against the wife; neither can it do so since that statute. That statute does not touch this case. Whether it has, by the words "but not otherwise," abolished the exception which the common law made to the rule excluding wife and husband—that is, the exception allowing them to give evidence of a crime done by one to the other—we do not say, because it does not arise in this case. If we viewed this instance as within the common-law exception, then we would have to decide whether the statute changed the common-law exception and made the wife incompetent. It may with force be said that the statute is very broad; that it makes one, and only one, exception to the rule of the incompetency of the spouse; that it only allows one to use the other as a witness; that the words "but not otherwise" are an affirmative enactment, since they actually prohibit such evidence, except in one, and only one, case. Reasons which may have operated in the Legislature for branding such evidence as incompetent wholly can be suggested. In many instances the one spouse wants to get rid of the other, and may give false testimony to accomplish it. Also, it would in some cases breed animosity and marital dissension. The Legislature may have designed to utterly exclude its use in behalf of the state. If such was its design, it could scarcely have used more apt language than those prohibitory words. They are strong prohibitory words. Therefore we conclude that the evidence of Woodrow's wife was improperly used against him.

Next, as to the plea in abatement: The law is thus stated in 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 1288: "The court will not look behind the return of the grand jury to set aside an indictment because that body received improper evidence or the testimony of witnesses who were not competent to testify." Many cases there cited support this view. The Texas court said, in a case where a wife had been examined as a witness against her husband by a grand jury: "We cannot look behind the return of the grand jury and set aside an indictment because improper evidence has been received." Dockery v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 84 S. W. 281. Where the accused was examined by the grand jury, it was held not to invalidate the indictment. Mencheca v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 203. Some of the cases cited by the Encyclopædia for its text above quoted are cases where the wife was before the grand jury, giving evidence against her husband. State v. Tucker, 20 Iowa, 508; State v. Boyd (S. C.) 27 Am. Dec. 376; Dockery v. State, just cited. There are authorities to the contrary. In the wilderness of conflicting cases a court in these days can, at best, only select that line seeming to it the better one. Where is the better reason? In the first place, my own experience as a practitioner and judge tells me that it is not usual, under practice in this state, to challenge an indictment on either the ground of want of sufficient evidence to sustain it or even the incompetency of evidence before the grand jury. It would be a practice of great inconvenience. Very plainly a court cannot go into the question of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the indictment, and thus review the action of the grand jury. That would be for the court to usurp the office of the grand jury, and also to usurp the office of the petit jury, because the court is not the judge of the weight of the evidence, but the grand jury in the first instance is, and finally the petit jury. When once an indictment is returned a true bill, it has legal force. You cannot go behind the return. It is not void, and it only remains to try its truth. Where there is some legal evidence, though light, before the grand jury, the indictment cannot be quashed. Wharton, Crim. L. § 508; State v. Logan, 1 Nev. 509; State v. Morris, 36 Iowa, 272.

But how is it when the question is not one of sufficiency of evidence, but where incompetent evidence has been heard by the grand jury? The indictment is not void.

Often incompetent evidence is heard by grand juries, not merely incompetent matter, but incompetent witnesses. It would be an inconvenient and dangerous practice to institute preliminary investigation to ascertain what incompetent evidence was before the grand jury, how much good and how much bad evidence, and what its weight. Where there is any competent evidence before the grand jury, it cannot be quashed, though there may have been some incompetent evidence of witnesses, say the authorities just cited. This proposition would hardly seem to require authority. The court cannot say on what the grand jury found its indictment, or how far the incompetent evidence operated, or on what members it operated. You cannot call each member and ascertain on what evidence he formed judgment. Next, take the case where the indictment rests alone on evidence of an incompetent witness. In such cases some authorities say that the indictment must go, but, even here, why shall we not say that on the trial the state may furnish other evidence ample to sustain its indictment which was not before the grand jury? The indictment is only a charge, to be sustained by competent evidence on the trial. So the court said in State v. Dayton, 53 Am. Dec. 270. The accused can have the evidence, if incompetent, excluded on the trial. True, it is hard on him to be put to trial upon an indictment resting alone on incompetent evidence, but grand juries are not good judges of competency, and oftentimes do not consult the court. It would be very bad practice, endless inconvenience, to have a full preliminary trial of competence of evidence before the grand jury in many cases. How far would the practice go? Does the inconvenience to the accused justify the institution of such a practice? Are not his rights fully vindicated by his right to exclude improper evidence on the trial? Therefore we conclude that the plea in abatement was properly rejected.

The prisoner testified that his little boy, less than three years of age, often played with the pistol which killed the baby, and that on that fateful day he was playing with the pistol and discharged it, and thus the baby was killed. The state, to repel this defense, to meet this evidence, gave evidence tending to show that the little boy had not capacity to fire the pistol. This evidence was that, when the hammer of the pistol had been pulled back by a witness, the little boy's finger was placed upon the trigger, and he was asked to pull the trigger and throw the hammer, but was unable to do so. The evidence was also that the little boy was asked to pull back the hammer, and was unable to do so. This evidence was proper to go before the jury to say whether this defense of the prisoner was true or false. It is suggested that the little boy may not have exerted his full strength to lift the hammer or pull the trigger. This may, or may not, be so. It does not appear that the child refused to try, or did not try, to do so, but the evidence fairly shows that he did make the effort. Whether he used all his strength we cannot—we need not—say, since that is a question of probability or improbability before the jury, not a question of the admissibility of the evidence. In short, its weight was for the jury.

Error is assigned because the court refused to allow a witness to prove that the prisoner told him at a point a quarter of a mile from the place of the homicide, when going for a doctor, just after leaving the spot, how the shooting took place. It does not distinctly appear that the declaration was close enough in time or place to the transaction to be part of the res gestæ. Where the declaration is merely a narrative of a past occurrence, though made ever so soon after the occurrence, it ought not to be received in evidence, as it is no part of the res gestæ. Corder v. Talbott, 14 W. Va. 277; Hawker v. Railroad, 15 W. Va. 628, 36 Am. Rep. 825. The proposed evidence was merely the prisoner's story, not on the spot of the transaction, reflecting its truth, but after he had had time to make up the story. Furthermore, it does not appear what the witness would give in evidence as to how the shooting took place. What did Woodrow say to him as to how it took place? It does not appear. This is another reason for holding that the rejection of the evidence constitutes no error. Sesler v. Coal Co., 51 W. Va. 318, 41 S. E. 216; Greever v. Bank, 99 Va. 547, 39 S. E. 159; Kay v. Glade, 47 W. Va. 468, 35 S. E. 973.

The defendant excepted to the refusal of an instruction saying that the jury could find a verdict of not guilty, or of involuntary manslaughter, or of manslaughter, or of murder in the second degree, or of murder in the first degree, with a recommendation of confinement in the penitentiary, or of murder in the first degree. This instruction commenced with a verdict of not guilty. The usual course is to commence with murder in the first degree. Perhaps the court thought that the object was to give undue prominence to the verdict of not guilty. However, we do not see that this fact would render the written instruction objectionable. But the instruction is bad, because it introduced into the case the degree of involuntary manslaughter, when no evidence whatever tended to show involuntary manslaughter. If the prisoner killed the child, the law would presume that the act was prima facie murder in the second degree. Involuntary manslaughter had nothing to do with the case under the evidence. Many cases say that an instruction should not be given when no evidence fits it to the case, for the reason that it introduces before the jury a question not presented by the evidence. It is a wrong to the state, and often results in a defeat of justice. There is nothing in the evidence of this case to show facts entering into the legal definition of involuntary manslaughter.

Therefore we reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and grant a new trial, and remand the case for such new trial.

POFFENBARGER, J. (dissenting). The judgment is reversed because of the admission of the testimony of the wife of the accused on his trial. On the question of its admissibility I am compelled to differ from the majority of the court, though I am in perfect accord with all their rulings as to other phases of the case. Therefore I would affirm the judgment.

By the common law, husband and wife were not competent witnesses either for or against each other. This was the general rule. There was an exception to it, first declared in Lord Audley's Case, 3 State Trials, 402; Rex v. Aryre, 1 Str. 633; Lady Lawley's Case, B. M. P. 287; Rex v. Mead, Burr. 542; Rex v. Bowes, 1 T. R. 698; Jagger's Case, East's P. C. 454; Rex v. Woodcock, Leach C. C. L. 463. The existence of this exception to the general rule of the common law is generally admitted by the courts of this country. People v. Green, 1 Denio, 614; State v. Hussey, 44 N. C. 123; Whipp v. State, 34 Ohio St. 87, 32 Am. Rep. 359; State v. Davis, 3 Brev. 3, 5 Am. Dec. 529; Goodwin v. State, 114 Wis. 318, 90 N. W. 170; Davis v. Commonwealth, 99 Va. 838, 38 S. E. 191. In the case last cited the rule is stated as follows: "At common law the wife was a competent witness to testify against her husband in relation to offenses alleged to have been committed by him upon her." Starkie on Evidence, vol. 2 (part 1) 554, says: "The wife is a witness ex necessitate on a charge against her husband of violence committed on her person; so the dying declarations of the wife against her husband are admissible in the case of murder." For the state, it is insisted that, under this exception to the common-law rule, the evidence of the wife is admissible under the circumstances of this case.

Before entering upon an inquiry as to this, it is necessary to determine a preliminary question, namely, whether this exception exists in the law of this state. It does, unless taken away by some statutory provision. Section 19 of chapter 152 of the Code of 1899 is the only provision which seems to have any bearing upon the question. It reads as follows: "In any trial or examination in or before any court or officer for a felony or misdemeanor, the accused shall, at his or her own request (but not otherwise) be a competent witness on such trial and examination. The wife or husband of the accused shall also, at the request of the accused, but not otherwise, be a competent witness on such trial and examination. But a failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him or her, nor shall any reference be made to nor comment upon such failure by any one during the progress of the trial in the hearing of the jury." The meaning of this statute is plain. It was intended to modify the common law in respect to two rules entirely different from the one now under consideration. By that law the accused person was not permitted to testify at all. No matter what his condition in life, his mouth was closed as regarded testimony. He was only permitted to address to the court a statement, unsworn, and without the aid of counsel. State v. Taylor (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 247; Cooley's Cons. Lim. 442-449. The primary object of this statute was to enable the witness to testify in his own behalf, but in doing so the Legislature took care not to violate that provision of the Constitution which denies to any court power to compel a person charged with crime to testify against himself. To this end the court is required to allow such testimony only upon the request of the prisoner. To make this emphatic and plain, the Legislature said he should, at his own request, but not otherwise, be admitted as a competent witness. Then the privilege was further extended, so as to permit the wife of the accused, at his request, but not otherwise, to become a witness. This part of the statute relates to the general rule of the common law which prohibited the wife from testifying for or against the husband. It is an enabling statute, passed for the purpose of modifying two common-law rules: First, the one which prevents an accused person from testifying in his own behalf; and, second, the one which forbids the husband or wife of the accused from testifying on his trial. Confessedly its object and purpose is to remove and destroy restrictions upon the competency of witnesses, not to add to them in any respect. This has been the policy and evolutionary tendency of the law of evidence, and of all legislation on the subject. Incompetency by reason of interest has been almost wholly done away with by statute. In most of the states of the Union the accused is now permitted to testify upon his trial, and to have the benefit of the testimony of his spouse. Prior to the enactment of this statute in 1881 the accused was required to remain dumb while the evidence of the state was detailed against him. By the act passed in that year (Acts 1881, p. 277, c. 29) the privilege of testifying was extended to him, if he should request it, and that act contained the cautionary phrase "but not otherwise." Plainly this did not extend beyond the rule which disqualified the accused from testifying. No reference to his testimony on the trial of his wife, or to her testimony on his trial, is found in that act. There is no peg here upon which anybody can hang the contention that the words "but not otherwise" signify legislative intent to prevent the husband and wife from testifying against each other, when, by the common law, they are entitled to do so; for there is no reference to the husband or wife. It applies to the accused alone, but the double phrase "at his own request, but not otherwise" was used, nevertheless, just as it appears now in section 19 of chapter 152 of the Code of 1899. What possible reason could have existed for adding the words "but not otherwise" in that statute? Plainly nothing more than emphasis. The title of the act, "To make persons charged with crime competent witnesses in their own behalf," shows that it was. By the act of 1882 (Acts 1882, p. 494, c. 151) the substance of the act of 1881 was re-enacted into section 19 of chapter 152 of the Code of 1899 by way of amendment, and an addition was made to it, allowing the wife or husband, at the request of the accused, but not otherwise, to be a competent witness on such trial. As it is perfectly plain that the words "but not otherwise" were used in the act of 1881 merely for emphasis, it is reasonably to be presumed that they have no other signification in the act of 1882. It simply follows the language of the previous act. That phrase received legislative construction before it was inserted in the act of 1882, and therefore, under the rule that all acts in pari materia are to be considered together in ascertaining the legislative intent, it is clear that the purpose was merely to affect the two common-law rules of evidence to which reference has been made. The competency of such witnesses is made to depend upon the request of the accused. This implies intent only to make them competent when their testimony is desired by the accused, but not admissible, and to alter the common-law rules in so far only as they denied to the accused the benefit of such testimony when he might desire it. It cannot be supposed that the Legislature contemplated any such desire when the crime charged has been perpetrated upon the husband or wife of the accused. Cases of this class were governed by a rule different from the two rules which precluded such testimony when desired by the accused. It is termed by the courts and text-writers an exception to the general rule, but in itself it is a rule applicable to a special case, and legislation which is plainly applicable to other rules, and designed to modify them, ought not to be extended to this one by mere inference. Statutes which are in derogation of the common law are to be strictly construed. Moreover, it is well settled that in construing a statute the court must keep in view the evil which the Legislature sought to remedy. What that evil was in this instance is plainly apparent from the language used. By this process of reasoning I reach the conclusion that this statute works no change in the common-law exception which permits the wife and husband to testify against each other on criminal trials for offenses by one against the other.

Whether the exception is broad enough to make the wife a competent witness against the husband, under the circumstances of this case, involves a consideration of the reason or principle upon which that exception stands. All the authorities say it arises ex necessitate rei. What sort of necessity is its basis? In Bentley v. Cook, 3 Doug. 422, Lord Mansfield said "that necessity is not a general necessity, as where no other witness can be had, but a particular necessity, as where, for instance, the wife would otherwise be exposed without remedy to personal injury." In Soule's Case, 5 Greenl. 407, Mellen, C. J., said: "From the general rule some exceptions have been established, founded on the necessity of the case. For, instance, if a wife could not be admitted to testify against the husband as to threatened or executed violence and abuse upon her person, he could play the tyrant and brute at his pleasure, and with perfect security beat, wound, and torture her at times and in places when and where no witnesses could be present nor assistance be obtained." Wigmore on Evidence, § 2339, says: "That was commonly placed on the ground of necessity; that is, a necessity to avoid that extreme injustice to the excluded spouse which would ensue upon an undeviating enforcement of the rule." In Rex v. Wakefield, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 1, 20, 279, Hullock, B., said: "A wife is competent against her husband in all cases affecting her liberty and person. * * * It would be unreasonable to exclude the only person capable of giving evidence in certain cases of injury. Our law recognizes witnesses ex necessitate, and it would be strange, indeed, that the husband should be allowed to exercise every atrocity against the wife and her evidence not be admitted."

The nature of the necessity being thus disclosed, is it applicable to the case of a wrong done by either spouse to an infant child? Plainly it appears that this necessity grows out of the privacy and seclusion in which such wrongs may be perpetrated. The husband is master of his home. The law terms it his castle. From it he may exclude all except members of his family. There he has the right to require the presence and continuance of his wife and children. In the secret recesses of his mansion they are bound by duty to stay. Against his will they are not entitled to have others present. He is entitled to the custody and control of his children. He may make them utterly dependent upon him for their support, by denying to strangers the right to give them employment and to receive them within their doors. His right to their custody is admitted to be superior to that of the mother, even when the parents are living separately from each other. Is it possible that the law will not permit the wife to reveal the brutality and inhumanity of the husband to children of such tender years as to make them incompetent as witnesses? If she cannot, what remedy is there in the law for their protection? If it is not a wrong against her, conceding that it is necessary to bring the act within the definition of a legal wrong against her, then it does not justify her separation from him, and she is compelled either to remain silent and submit to it, or forfeit her right to the support of her husband and to any share in his estate. For a wrong cruelly perpetrated upon her she may, under our law, depart from her lord's castle without forfeiting her right to dower or her distributive share in his estate, but, if she cannot do so for cruelty to her infant child without making such sacrifice, it seems to me that the necessity is even greater than in the case of direct cruelty to herself, as by beating, wounding, and maltreating. If it does justify separation, then it must be, in law, a wrong done to her, and therefore strictly within the exception. To say it is not an injury and a wrong to her is to set at defiance the laws of nature. The lowest orders of the animal kingdom will not only protect their young, but will, as a rule, sacrifice life itself for their safety. Men and women who have the true natural instincts, and in whom the parental affection is normal, undepraved, and unrestrained by viciousness, will make any sacrifice, even that of their personal safety and lives, for the protection of their children. No sacrifice can be greater than that of the child. In subjecting Abraham to the final and highest test of his faith, God required him to offer up his son; and the highest ideal of sacrifice is embodied in the scriptural declaration: "God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son," etc.

Any interpretation of the common law which ignores natural rights is not to be entertained, for its object is the vindication of such rights. The general rule to which exception has been made is not predicated upon any natural, inalienable right, but merely upon public policy, and to say that public policy will, in any event, be carried to the extent of destroying a natural right, or falls short of the protection of such rights, is to carry it beyond reason. That the general rule disqualifying the husband and wife from testifying for or against each other does rest upon considerations of public policy is not open to question. All the decisions are to this effect. In Soule's Case, cited, Mellen, C. J., said: "Reasons of public policy do not certainly extend so far in such cases as to disqualify her from being a witness against him." Lord Hardwicke said, in Barker v. Dixie, temp. Hardw. 264: "The reason why the law will not suffer a wife to be a witness for or against her husband is to preserve the peace of families." Lord Kenyon said, in Davis v. Dinwoody, 4 T. R. 678: "Their being so nearly connected, they are supposed to have such a bias on their minds that they are not to be permitted to give evidence either for or against each other." Irvin, J., in Mills v. U. S., 1 Pin. 73, 75, said: "But, suffer or compel him to testify, and indelible disgrace may be fixed upon his family, and he be made the subject of the deepest mortification which a sensitive being can endure. * * * Is a policy so fraught with mischief to those delicate relations of society to be established? Surely not." "The reason for the exclusion of husband and wife when called for or against each other being social policy and not interest, statutes abolishing incompetency resting on interest do not remove the common-law incompetency of husband and wife for or against each other." Whar. Cr. Ev. § 400. If we were to examine all the cases on the subject, nothing better or more forcible than reasons of public policy could be found for the general rule disqualifying husband and wife from testifying. Some judges have said it is due to their unity. Grant it; and yet we have but a fiction rendered necessary for the working out of certain rights artificially created by the law. Are the natural, inalienable rights of life and liberty to be sacrificed or subordinated to mere reasons of public policy? If we say that disqualification goes so far as to prevent the wife from testifying against the husband concerning a wrong done to a helpless child, to whose voice the courts will not, and cannot, listen, we must say that reasons of public policy shall be paramount to natural right.

The rules and principles governing society and the marital relation, as well as the law of nature, demand that parents have the custody of the persons of their children. No law can alter this without subverting the family relation which lies at the basis of all society. No law can clothe a child of extremely tender age with the power to testify, with any degree of certainty, as to the nature and extent of injury inflicted upon it. Hence, if husband and wife are not permitted to testify against each other as to offenses against such children, the law affords no adequate protection to their lives and liberty. If, therefore, it be conceded that an injury to such a child is not a wrong to the person or liberty of the mother or father, the principle of necessity affords independent ground for the admission of the testimony of either husband or wife against the other in respect thereto. The object of the law is to protect life, liberty, and property, and encourage the pursuit of happiness. The family relation, its sanctity and inviolability, are necessary to the existence and perfection of society, and the law will not permit invasions of its sanctity, nor disturbance or breach of its confidential relations, upon considerations of mere convenience, or in respect to light and trivial matters; but human life, liberty, and immunity from great bodily injury are matters of such moment that the remedies afforded by the law must be adequate for the vindication of the right thereto under all circumstances. It must create no places in which wounding and murder may be perpetrated with impunity, and without fear or possibility of detection and punishment. Husband and wife will not be dragged forth to testify against each other as to offenses against strangers, and divulge matters communicated in confidence, and take action calculated to engender hatred between them and produce discord and dissensions, subversive of the family relation. Their own happiness, and the necessity of maintaining that relation for the benefit of society in general, as well as the protection of the helpless offspring of the union, forbid this, because the public right against the offender may ordinarily be vindicated without it. But when the blood of husband, wife, or helpless child is found on the door of the home, and wounds on the body of such member of the family, the law must invade that home and permit the truth to be disclosed, else the enemy of the home and all society, and violator of all laws, human and divine, must go unwhipped of justice. The law of necessity alters the general rule of competency under such circumstances. This is the force and effect of the common-law decisions which permit the husband and wife to testify against each other on charges affecting their persons and liberty. They declare a principle of the common law, and the reason for the application of that principle here is imperious.

The courts of this country seem to hold that nothing short of personal violence to the husband or wife will make one a competent witness against the other, under the common-law exception. Brock v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 335, 71 S. W. 20, 60 L. R. A. 465, 100 Am. St. Rep. 859; Compton v. State, 44 Am. Rep. 703; People v. Schoonmaker, 117 Mich. 190, 75 N. W. 439, 72 Am. St. Rep. 560; State v. Frey, 76 Minn. 526, 79 N. W. 518, 77 Am. St. Rep. 660; Crawford v. State, 98 Wis. 623, 74 N. W. 537, 67 Am. St. Rep. 829; Selden v. State, 74 Wis. 271, 42 N. W. 218, 17 Am. St. Rep. 144; State v. Evans, 138 Mo. 116, 39 S. W. 462, 60 Am. St. Rep. 549; People v. Curiale, 137 Cal. 534, 70 Pac. 468, 59 L. R. A. 588; Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 223, 10 L. Ed. 129; Bassett v. United States, 137 U. S. 496, 11 Sup. Ct. 165, 34 L. Ed. 762. In none of these cases, however, did the necessity of admitting the testimony appear. Some were charges of rape, perpetrated on the wife before marriage and when she was not the wife. Others were charges of bigamy, which the court said were not offenses against the wife, but against the marital relation. One was for incest committed with the daughter of the wife, stepdaughter of the accused. None of these cases, in the facts presented, come up to the exigency of this one. In each of them there was, or ought to have been, some competent witness, without calling the wife, and we need consume no time in testing their soundness. But it may be said, without fear of successful contradiction, that the courts, in all those cases, made a broader declaration against the scope of the exception than was justified by the facts disclosed and issues made, and in that declaration, disregarded the principle of the exception, and took only the precedents which had arisen under it for their guidance. A case relied upon by the Attorney General to sustain the competency of this evidence is Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1, 23 South. 671, 67 Am. St. Rep. 157, admitting the wife as a witness against her husband to prove him guilty of having murdered their child by beating her while enceinte, so that the child, though born alive, afterwards died, in consequence of injuries inflicted upon the mother. The exact ground upon which the evidence was admitted is debatable, since the court seems to have based its conclusion both on the ground of necessity, independently of any wrong done to the wife, and personal violence to her. The language is as follows: "Wherever the element of personal violence is a necessary constituent of the offense, every reason exists upon which the exception rested originally, and for the sake of public justice the wife should be admitted as a witness."

Having thus considered the circumstances and the principles of law relating to them, I am firmly convinced (1) that the killing or wounding of a child, too young to protect itself by its testimony, is, in law, a wrong to the parent, affecting the person and liberty, and so making the parent a competent witness against the other spouse on his trial for the crime; and (2) that, independently of any wrong to the parent, he or she is a competent witness against his or her wife or husband, as the case may be, on trial for the offense, ex necessitate rei.

SANDERS, J. (dissenting). I do not agree that the evidence of the wife is incompetent, and therefore concur in the dissenting opinion of Judge POFFENBARGER. I think the case entirely free from error, and would affirm the judgment.

(104 Va. 786)

UNITED MODERNS v. RATHBUN et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. INSURANCE—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—ACTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action on a beneficial certificate, where the constitution and laws of the order are introduced in evidence, the burden is on plaintiffs to show any change in such laws subsequent to the issuance of the certificate in suit affecting their rights.

2. SAME — NONPAYMENT OF ASSESSMENTS — WAIVER OF DEFAULT.

A beneficial certificate required insured to comply with the constitution and laws of the order, and provided that a failure to pay dues or assessments should constitute a forfeiture of all right to benefits. The constitution provided that members failing to make payments as they became due, thereby elected to terminate their membership. Insured failed in health and fell in arrears in the payment of assessments, whereupon his friends undertook to keep his certificate in force for him. Accordingly the financial agent of the order received a payment of back assessments from a friend of insured, who afterwards sent a check to insured's mother for insured's salary, without reserving anything for the payment of assessments. The following month, when the financial agent of the order called on the friend for later assessments, the latter asked him to see insured's mother, and, if she did not pay the assessments, to come back to him. Insured's mother refused to pay the assessments, the financial agent did not return to the friend, and insured died in default. Held, that there was no waiver of the default on the part of the order.

3. APPEAL—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—ENTRY OF PROPER JUDGMENT.

Where a case is submitted to the presiding judge without a jury, and he passes upon the law and the evidence, the Court of Appeals hears the cause as on a demurrer to the evidence, and will enter such judgment as the lower court should have rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 4581.]

Error to Circuit Court, Elizabeth City County.

Action by Fred W. Rathbun and others, by their next friend, against the United Moderns. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Jones & Woodward, for plaintiff in error.
S. Gordon Cumming, for defendants in error.

KEITH, P. Plaintiff in error, the United Moderns, a beneficial society, issued a policy of life insurance to Frederick G. Rathbun, for the benefit of his infant children, for the sum of $1,000.

On becoming a member, as appears from the policy, Rathbun stipulated that he would "comply with all and singular of the constitution, laws, and regulations of this order," and the policy further provided that "the member shall not be personally liable for dues or assessments, but a failure to pay shall forfeit all rights to benefits as provided in the constitution and laws aforesaid." The certificate of insurance also contained the following statement signed by Rathbun:

"This certifies that I accept the within certificate and the benefits conferred, fully understanding and agreeing that the same is to be and remain a liability upon the order only upon condition:

"First. That the statements made by me in my application for membership and to the medical examiner are true;

"Second. That I pay or cause to be paid all assessments, dues or money payable to the order, promptly, on or before the day the same becomes delinquent;

"Third. That I fully comply with the constitution, laws and regulations of the order. The within certificate to be and remain null and void for and during any such failure or default upon my part, as aforesaid."

Article 13, § 1, of the constitution of the order provides: "The first monthly payment falls due on the date of the issuance of the beneficiary certificate, and thereafter one monthly payment shall fall due on the first day of each succeeding calendar month and must be paid on or before the last day of the month in which it falls due, and no notice shall be required from the order for such payment. And section 2 that: "Members failing to make all payments as they become due, do elect, by reason of such failure, to terminate their membership in the order, and shall thereupon stand suspended by the non-payment of the call, and under the law, do elect and agree, by reason of such failure, not to hold the order for any liability whatsoever, and do thereby surrender all rights as a beneficiary member; provided, that if the member is in good health and shall pay any past due payment within ninety days of the time it became due, together with all other payments that may have come due in the meantime, and shall also accompany his payment with his certificate that he is in good health, and the local financier shall remit such payment to the supreme recorder within fifteen days after receipt of same, his beneficiary certificate shall become reinstated from the date of payment, provided that the member is in fact in good health at the time, but the fact of payment and furnishing certificate shall not bind the order unless the member was in fact in good health."

Just here it may be proper to notice an objection made by defendants in error to the proof of the constitution and by-laws, which is that it does not appear that they were the constitution and by-laws in force at the time the certificate of membership was issued to the decedent.

The constitution and laws of the order were proved. The members are presumed to know the constitution and by-laws, and, if a change had been made in them affecting the rights of defendants in error, the burden was upon them to introduce proof to that effect. Greenleaf on Ev. (15th Ed.) § 41.

On the 14th of September, 1903, the insured died, and, a demand having been made by the beneficiaries in the policy upon the association, payment was refused upon the ground that the insured was not, at the time of his death, a member in good standing, but had forfeited his rights under the policy by failure to pay the premiums as they fell due. Thereupon suit was instituted by the next friend of the beneficiaries, in the circuit court of Elizabeth City county, which terminated in a judgment against the plaintiff in error for the full amount of the policy, and to this judgment a writ of error was awarded by this court.

The first error assigned is that plaintiffs in the court below had not complied with the terms of the policy, which provides that "Every member and the beneficiary of every member shall before instituting any suit in the civil courts of the country against the order, first present their claims or contentions, together with the facts and proofs relied upon, to the proper officer, committee or authority of the order entitled to consider the same, and in the event of an adverse ruling by any subordinate authority to which an exception is taken shall exhaust all remedies within the order by appeal as a preliminary to any other proceedings."

We think the evidence shows a sufficient compliance with this provision, and that sufficient efforts to secure a settlement from the order without suit were made and proved unavailing; that the beneficiaries were justified in resorting to the courts for relief; and this assignment of error is therefore overruled.

It appears from the evidence that the insured was an organist in St. John's Church, in the town of Hampton; that in the spring and summer of 1903 his health became impaired, and that he failed to pay certain assessments promptly, as they fell due; but that, upon the payment of the money and the production of a physician's certificate as to the condition of his health, he was reinstated, and continued to pay his dues, though at intervals he would fall a month or two behind and would then be reinstated in accordance with the rules of the order.

About the middle of July he went to Lebanon, Ohio, and entered a sanatorium; the church of which he was the organist, in consideration of his long and faithful service in that capacity, agreeing to continue to him the payment of his salary.

The financial agent of the association mentioned to the rector of the church that there was a premium due on Rathbun's policy, and the rector told him that he knew Rathbun was sick, and that, being sick and having unusual expenses, he was in straits for money, but that the vestry of the church and he (the rector) personally did not mean that this insurance should lapse; and thereupon the rector and the agent went to the treasurer of the church to make arrangements with respect to the payment of the dues. It seems that both the rector and the financial agent of the order looked upon the arrangement as a continuing one. The treasurer advanced the money, and put the slips or tickets which the agent of the order had brought with him into his private cash drawer, and, it appearing that the salary of Rathbun as organist had been paid up to the 1st of July, the treasurer carried the tickets over until the next payment.

On the 1st of August the treasurer of the church drew a check in favor of Mrs. Rathbun, mother of Mr. Frederick G. Rathbun, for the amount of his July salary, without reserving anything (as perhaps he should have done under the arrangement) for the payment of the premiums. To the little girl who carried the check to Rathbun's mother, he said: "Tell your grandmother that I hold certain slips for insurance of your father's, and I suppose she wishes to cash them out of this check." In about an hour afterwards Mr. Rathbun, the father of the insured, came to the office, paid the money, and took the slips away with him. On the 1st of September the treasurer paid the amount of the August salary.

Some time in August the financial agent of the order again came to the treasurer of the church to collect the assessments then due, in accordance with the arrangement before entered into. The treasurer told him that he had already sent a check to Mrs. Rathbun, the mother, and he had no doubt that, if he would present the slips to her, they would be paid, and asked him to see her. He said to the agent that, if she did not pay them, to come back and let him know and he would pay them. This the treasurer says was the substance of what occurred between them; that after Rathbun died some one said to him that they were sorry the insurance in the Moderns had lapsed, and he said he had attended to that—that "I told Mr. Guthrie to see Mrs. Rathbun and, if she didn't pay it, to come back to me, and he had never been back."

The financial agent went from the office of the treasurer to the home of Rathbun's mother, as he had been directed to do, to collect the premiums for July and August. The money was not paid, and the reason for it will fully appear from the testimony of the rector, who, after Rathbun's death and burial, had a conversation with the mother of the deceased, who said to him: "I was deceived in Fred's condition. He kept on writing that he was better, and when Mr. Guthrie came to me we were so hard up for money—Fred had written for money and had said that he would be home in a few days." The rector stated that Rathbun wrote him the same kind of a letter—that he was improving; that he kept his mother in the dark, and she was under the impression that he was better; that "she thought it would be all right when Fred got home (he assured her he would be home in a few days), so she just let it slip. So that was her excuse for not doing what she knew she might have done—gone to Mr. Heffelfinger or come to me—if she had known her son was in danger."

The whole of the sad story may be summed up as follows: The health of the insured failed, and he was compelled to go to a sanatorium. He fell in arrears in the payment of his dues, and his friends undertook to make an arrangement by which his salary should be continued and the premiums upon his insurance paid. The necessities of his family were urgent, and, instead of reserving a part of his salary to meet the exigency, the whole of it was paid to his mother and father for the support of his infant children, in reliance upon the hope that, his health being restored, he would soon be able to return, present the necessary certificate of a physician, as he had before done, pay the money, and be reinstated to his rights in the order. But these hopes were disappointed. He died and, at the time of his death, as the proof shows, was delinquent in the payment of certain dues.

Granting that the financial agent had the power to bind the association to look to the treasurer of the church for the payment of the dues, it is plain that the departure from the agreement was not due to any fault on the part of the association. Indeed, it cannot be said that there was anything to censure in any one connected with the transaction. Had either the rector or the treasurer known the situation, it is certain that it would have been promptly relieved. The misfortune is due to the urgent needs of the mother who had the care of the infant children upon her hands, and who listened, as all of us do, to the delusive promises of hope. But the hard fact remains that at the time of his death Rathbun was in default in the payment of dues for July and August, and there is in our judgment no sufficient proof of waiver on the part of the company.

As was said in Knights of Honor v. Oeters, 95 Va. 610, 29 S. E. 322: "There can be no recovery on the certificate on his life which was payable only on condition of his being in good standing at the time of his death." And, in the same case, speaking of benefit societies, it is said: "They are not organized for the purpose of making money, but for fraternal and benevolent objects. Their schemes of benevolence, by which they aim to provide benefits for their members in time of sickness, and indemnity to their families upon their death, cannot be maintained, unless the rules and regulations prescribed by their constitution and by-laws for the attainment of these objects are substantially upheld. This it should be the policy of the law and the aim of the courts to do. Otherwise, their schemes for furnishing to the working classes and men of moderate incomes a cheap and simple substitute for life insurance cannot be accomplished."

In Bacon on Benefit Societies, § 354, it is said: "If the policy is conditioned to be void if the stipulated premium be not paid at the appointed day, time is of the essence of the contract; and, if the premium be not paid, the policy is void, unless the condition be waived. A beneficiary takes the policy subject to the condition requiring prompt payment of premium, and no notice of lapse is necessary." See, also, section 355; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Hall (decided at the present term) 52 S. E. 345.

The case was submitted to the judge, without a jury; he passed both upon the law and upon the evidence; and it is heard before us as though there had been a demurrer to the evidence. It is our duty to enter such judgment as the circuit court should have rendered, and we are forced to the conclusion that there was no liability upon the plaintiff in error, and that the judgment should have been rendered in its favor.

(104 Va. 524)

RANKIN et al. v. TOWN OF HARRISONBURG.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—ERECTION OF DAM—FLOODING ADJACENT LANDS—COMPENSATION.

Where the effect of raising a dam across a river 10 feet for the formation of a municipal water power would be to throw back the water for a long distance beyond the boundary line of the lands of riparian owners, to flood the banks of the river, to impose a greater volume of water on the bed, destroy a ford, and render the adjacent lands more liable to overflow, and greatly to alter the natural flow and condition of the stream, such facts of themselves were sufficient to entitle such owners to compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, § 254.]

2. SAME—APPORTIONMENT—OWNERS IN SEVERALTY—AGREEMENT.

Where riparian proprietors owned land on both sides of a stream in severalty, which would be damaged by the raising of a dam to create a municipal water power, but no one of them owned the right to abut a dam on both banks of the river within the distance measured by the eddy water of the proposed dam, such owners were entitled to orally agree that the compensation to be received for such water power should be distributed among them in particular proportions, and to execute a deed inter se before any interference with the rights sought to be condemned to carry such oral agreement into effect.

3. SAME—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.

Where a town sought to condemn a water power by raising a dam across a river, the fact that the riparian owners whose lands would be damaged by the raising of the dam were owners in severalty, and no one of them owned land on both sides of the river, was no defense to the city's liability for compensation for the rights taken.

Error to Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Proceedings by the town of Harrisonburg for the condemnation of a water right to secure a water power for a municipal electric plant. From a decree disallowing an award of damages to Henry L. Rankin and others, they bring error. Reversed.

Rehearing denied.

Sipe & Harris, for plaintiffs in error. T. N. Haas and J. B. Stephenson, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. The town of Harrisonburg gave notice to Henry L. Rankin and others that at the November term of the circuit court of Rockingham county it would apply for leave to raise the dam across the Shenandoah river, which it had acquired under a conveyance from the Rockingham Milling Company, from a height of 5 feet to 15 feet, in order to secure water power for an electric light plant for the use of the town. This notice was served upon divers persons owning land abutting upon the river, and in due course commissioners were appointed, who submitted a report to the court, to which numerous exceptions were filed. Some of these exceptions have reference to the form of the proceedings, and are brought to the attention of this court in the petition for a writ of error; but, at the hearing, it was agreed that all errors merely of procedure should be waived and that our judgment should be rendered upon the controlling question in the case, arising upon the tenth paragraph of the report of the commissioners, which is in the following words:

"From the end of the eddy or back water of the old dam at the Shaver or Ammon mill site, which was 5 feet high, up to the river to the end of the eddy or back water which will be made by the new dam, a distance of about a mile and a half, there is a fall of about 10 feet in the river which the applicant gets the benefit of in the development of its power by raising the dam from the elevation of the said old dam to the height of 15 feet. This 10 feet of fall occurs in that part of the river which is abutted by the lands of Dr. Rankin and Mrs. Burke on the east and south, and by the lands of Mrs. Walker on the west and north. Your commissioners ascertain that the water power gained by the applicant by this 10 feet of fall through the lands of Rankin, Burke, and Walker, as aforesaid, is worth the sum of $3,000, and that the applicant shall pay the sum of $3,000 as compensation therefor.

"It appeared by statement of counsel of Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Burke, and Rankin that it was agreed by their said clients that the compensation to be allowed for this water power owned by them should be divided among them in the proportion of one-half to Mrs. Walker, one-fourth to Dr. Rankin and one-fourth to Mrs. Burke. Your commissioners therefore report that, of the said sum of $3,000 to be paid by applicant as compensation for said ten-foot fall in the river, through the lands of Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Burke, and Dr. Rankin, as aforesaid, $1,500 thereof shall be paid to Mrs. Walker, $750 thereof shall be paid to Mrs. Burke, and $750 thereof shall be paid to Dr. Rankin."

The town of Harrisonburg excepts to paragraph 10 of the report, by which it is required to pay $3,000 as compensation for the water power, on the ground that "the said supposed water power for which said compensation or damages of $3,000 is found and allowed is not proper to be taken into consideration as an element of damages to be compensated for by applicant, because there is no developed or existing water power in the distance mentioned in said report through which the eddy water of the proposed dam of applicant will extend, and no such power can, under the physical conditions existing, be created or developed without the construction of a dam across the river, and neither the said three persons, nor any two of them, as co-tenants, nor any one of them in severalty, own or owned both banks of the river, or land on both banks, in the distance measured by said eddy water, nor do they or any two of them, as co-tenants, or any one of them severally, own the right to abut a dam on both banks of the river at any place within the said distance, but they, the said three persons, own their lands in severalty, the land of Mrs. Walker lying on one side of the river and the lands of Mrs. Burke and Dr. Rankin lying on the other side of the river, the middle of the river being the boundary of said lands. Wherefore it cannot be said that any one of them separately possesses, or that all or any two of them jointly possess a water power to be damaged or compensated for as such."

Upon the issue thus presented the circuit court decided in favor of the town of Harrisonburg, and refused to allow any compensation to Henry L. Rankin, Columbia J. Burke, and Emma E. Walker, but provided that the town of Harrisonburg should, at its expense, "construct where the private ford now is across the said Shenandoah river, just above the three springs, and connecting the land of said Henry L. Rankin, on the east side of the river, with the land of said Emma E. Walker, on the west side, or immediately near by, and in lieu of and as compensation for the destruction of said ford by the reflux water, a suitable and adequate ferry, which ferry the applicant shall forever maintain and keep in repair, but shall not be required to man or operate it, the same to be appurtenant to the farms of said Henry L. Rankin, Columbia J. Burke, and Emma E. Walker and for the use of the owners thereof without charge," etc.

To this order, Rankin, Burke, and Walker obtained a writ of error.

The facts set out in paragraph 10 of the report of the commissioners, and in the exceptions filed by the town of Harrisonburg, show that there has been an actual taking of the property of plaintiffs in error for the use of the defendant in error. The plaintiffs in error own the lands abutting upon the stream. They own its banks and the bed over which the water flows. The effect of raising the dam to an additional height of 10 feet is to throw back the water of the river for a long distance beyond the boundary line of plaintiffs in error, to flood its banks, impose upon the bed a greater volume of water, destroy the ford, render the adjacent lands more liable to overflow, and greatly to alter the natural flow and condition of the stream. This would of itself entitle the plaintiffs in error to compensation.

"Although, as will be seen in a subsequent section, there are a few cases which apply to the damming back of water, the rule that to entitle one riparian owner to complain of acts of another he must show that he has been injured, those decisions are not only against the weight of authority, but also are unsupported by principle. Any swelling of the stream over the line is an invasion of the rights of the upper owner, who has a right to the stream in its natural condition, which he may protect, not only for present needs, but for possible future ones. It constitutes a direct trespass upon his property, which he may seek the aid of the courts to redress, and he is not bound to show that he is specially injured to maintain the action. The right of the upper owner is strengthened if injury is done to him, as by the flooding of a building, or of a mining claim, or of a ford. * * * As a general rule, a riparian proprietor is restricted in the management of his property by the maxim 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas,' and he cannot take the initiative and construct a dam on a stream that will cause the water to overflow and injure the land of his neighbor that may lie opposite or above his own premises, either when the water is at its usual height, or in an ordinary freshet, or that so obstructs its flow as to prevent the land of the other riparian proprietor from being properly drained. The maxim of the common law, that the owner of the soil has absolute dominion over it above and below the surface, and that damage caused to others by his rightful command over his own soil is damnum absque injuria, has no application to such a case. Throwing the water back on the upper land is a nuisance in and of itself, of which the upper owner may complain whenever he desires to do so, whether it is a direct injury to him or not. He has a right to have his land free from the water, and can object to its presence whenever he chooses; and the lower owner has no right in the premises." Farnham on Waters and Water Rights, vol. 2, § 657.

Nor do we find anything in the case of Mumpower v. City of Bristol, 90 Va. 151, 17 S. E. 853, 44 Am. St. Rep. 902, which militates against this view of the law. In that case it was held that "the owner of a dam cannot enjoin the owner of a dam above from damming back water for operating his machinery, although such use at times keeps back the water to the extent of depriving the lower owner of water." The facts in that case and the law applicable to them bear no analogy to the subject now under consideration.

It further appears that, anticipating the objection successfully urged before the circuit court by the town of Harrisonburg, plaintiffs in error entered into a verbal agreement that the "compensation to be received for the said water power, whether the same should be granted by the owners or taken and appropriated against their consent, should be distributed among those owning the premises in the proportion of one-half to Mrs. Walker and one-fourth each to Rankin and Mrs. Burke," and on the 25th of January, 1905, while this proceeding was pending before the circuit court, they executed a deed, inter se, by which they bound themselves to carry into effect this verbal agreement. When, in answer to the objection urged by the town of Harrisonburg, that no one of plaintiffs in error "separately possesses, or that all or any two of them jointly possess, a water power to be damaged or compensated for as such," this agreement was offered in evidence, objection was made to the verbal agreement on the ground that it was void under the statute of frauds, and, to the deed, that it could not take effect because it undertook to change the title to the property in dispute pendente lite.

If the statute of frauds applies, it must be because it is a contract for the sale of real estate, or for the lease thereof, for more than a year. There is no other provision of the statute of frauds which can have any bearing upon it. If the parol agreement must be held to be void upon that ground—that is, as being a contract for the sale of real estate—it would seem to be conclusive of the first question considered; that is to say, that an interest in real estate belonging to plaintiffs in error was being taken for the use of defendant in error. But assuming, and there is nothing to the contrary, that the parol agreement was fairly entered into between the parties, it was mutually binding upon them, and it was proper for them to execute the deed which carried it into effect.

But, however that may be, there is another view of the case which seems to be conclusive. It is not denied by defendant in error that plaintiffs in error in severalty own parcels of real estate, which, if united in one ownership, or if held as co-tenants, would constitute an entirety of much value. The contention is that "there is no developed or existing water power in the distance mentioned in said report through which the eddy water of the proposed dam of applicant will extend, and no such power can, under the physical conditions existing, be created or developed without the construction of a dam across the river, and neither the said three persons, nor any two of them, as co-tenants, nor any one of them in severalty, own or owned both banks of the river, or land on both banks, in the distance measured by said eddy water, nor do they or any two of them, as co-tenants, or any one of them severally, own the right to abut a dam on both banks of the river at any place within the said distance." They owned, however, in severalty, rights as abutting owners upon the river, which, if held as co-tenants, or if brought under the control of a single owner, constitute a valuable property right. If that be so, it is plain that the right to constitute themselves co-tenants (as they unquestionably had a lawful right to do before the interference with that right on the part of the town of Harrisonburg), by which interests held in severalty, and which, existing in severalty, are valueless according to the argument of the town of Harrisonburg, would be made valuable, is of itself a thing of value; and that right is destroyed, if the town of Harrisonburg be allowed to come in and condemn the share of one or of two, as completely as though the whole had been taken.

And, again, it cannot be denied that, if the town of Harrisonburg can acquire the rights now held by plaintiffs in error, it will have obtained property of very considerable value. Can it be that it can come in and by force of the right of eminent domain take without compensation the several parts constituting a valuable entirety? The parts are equal to the whole, in law and in logic, and, if the entirety be of value, the parts which constitute the entirety must potentially be of an equal value.

Water privileges and water power can now be put to uses not dreamed of in the past. By the generation of electricity, power can be transmitted to a distance, no absolute limit to which has yet been fixed, and thus become subservient to all the uses to which, in the marvelous growth of modern industry, force in its varied manifestations of heat, light, and motion is applied. Water power, therefore, so far from being less valuable than heretofore, acquires an additional value as the possibilities of the generation and transmission of force by means of electricity are from day to day disclosed, and the courts should be careful not to introduce or to sanction refinements by which the value of those rights to riparian owners may be diminished or impaired.

Having reached the conclusion that plaintiffs in error were entitled to recover damages, we think the evidence sufficient to justify the amount awarded them in paragraph 10 of the report, and that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed.

(104 Va. 773)

HALL et al. v. HALL et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. EQUITY—PRACTICE—DECREE—ISSUES.

Where, in a suit in equity against the heirs and distributees of a decedent for the settlement of the estate, complainants asserted certain demands and the cause was referred to a commissioner, who reported that the demands had been paid, a decree finding that the demands were fraudulent and without consideration was unwarranted; no such issue having been raised by the pleadings in regard to such demands, and none in the commissioner's report.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19. Cent. Dig. Equity, § 1001.]

2. APPEAL—REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS—REVIEW.

A report of a commissioner in chancery, except as to errors apparent on its face, is prima facie correct; and where the evidence is conflicting the appellate court will not reverse the action of the trial court in overruling an exception to a report, unless the findings of the commissioner are clearly erroneous.

8. EQUITY—REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—EXCEPTIONS.

Exceptions to the report of a commissioner in chancery partake of the nature of special demurrers, and serve to direct the attention of the court with reasonable certainty to the specific points of the controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, § 910.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buckingham County.

Suit by T. H. Hall and others against R. F. Hall and others. From a decree in favor of defendants, complainants appeal. Reversed.

Beasley & Moon, for appellants. Jno. R. Moss and S. S. P. Patteson, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. This is a suit in equity brought by appellants, who are heirs at law and distributees of Thomas S. Hall, deceased, against the other heirs and distributees and the widow and administrator of the decedent, for the settlement of his estate.

The cause was referred to a commissioner in chancery to take the usual accounts; and, among other demands asserted against the estate, there were certain debts secured by a deed of trust due to William C. Hall, father of the grantor, Thomas S. Hall, deceased, and assigned by him to his grandchildren, who were the children of the said intestate.

The commissioner reported that these debts had been paid in full, and the appellants excepted. Subsequently, without passing upon the exceptions, the report was recommitted to the commissioner for supplemental inquiry; but no steps were taken before him upon the resubmission, and no further report was made with respect to the claims in question, but the parties took additional evidence elsewhere.

The cause was heard upon the report of the commissioner, the exceptions and the depositions of witnesses; and the court passed the decree under review, which adjudged appellants' deed of trust and the debts secured "fraudulent and without consideration," and confirmed the report of the commissioner.

No issue was raised by the pleadings in regard to the deed of trust, and none upon the commissioner's report, save by the exception of appellants to the finding that the debts had been paid. Nevertheless the court by the decree complained of rejected appellants' demand, on the theory that the deed of trust was "fraudulent and without consideration."

There is no warrant, under the equity practice which obtains in this jurisdiction, for such procedure. As observed, there was no issue made, either by the pleadings or before the commissioner, that the deed of trust was fraudulent and the debts secured without consideration; and consequently appellants could not have anticipated such defense, and were afforded no opportunity to contest the grounds upon which the court rested its decree. It is settled practice in this class of cases that the validity of any demand preferred against the estate of a decedent may be controverted, without pleadings and in an informal manner, before the commissioner to whom a general account of indebtedness of the estate is referred. Conrad's Adm'r v. Fuller, 98 Va. 16, 34 S. E. 893.

In that case (at page 20 of 98 Va., and page 894 of 34 S. E.) the court says: "After a decree for a general account in a creditors' suit * * * all the other creditors may come in under the decree and prove their debts before the commissioner to whom the cause is referred. Simmons v. Lyles, 27 Grat. 922, 929; Piedmont, etc., Ins. Co. v. Maury, 75 Va. 508; Beverly v. Rhodes, 86 Va. 415, 10 S. E. 572; 1 Bar. Chy. Pr. (2d Ed.) 286 et seq. * * * The practice in some parts of the state, following the English rule, is to require the creditor coming in under a decree to prove a claim against the estate of a decedent to accompany it with an affidavit that the debt remains due. Such affidavit is not intended as evidence before the commissioner in proof of the debt, and must not be so considered. It puts the claimant upon his conscience as to the bona fides of his claim, and thus frequently protects the decedent's estate from paying debts which have already been paid. 2 Daniel's Chy. Pr. (5th Ed.) 1209; Flading v. Winter, 19 Vesey, 199; Morris v. Mowatt, 4 Paige, 142."

In such case, however, the parties are given full opportunity to produce evidence for and against the debt, and to be heard before the commissioner, whose report upon exception is subject to review by the court. The principle is well settled that where a commissioner returns with his report, involving controverted questions of fact, the evidence upon which it is based, the court will, upon exceptions, "review and weigh the evidence, and if not satisfied that the commissioner has reached a right conclusion will overrule his finding." Shipman v. Fletcher, 91 Va. 473, 22 S. E. 458.

But the report, except as to errors apparent on its face, is prima facie correct, and where the evidence is conflicting the appellate court will not reverse the action of the trial court overruling an exception to the report and confirming it, unless the findings of the commissioner are clearly erroneous. Maddock's Admx. v. Skinker, 93 Va. 479, 25 S. E. 535; Triplett v. Woodward, 98 Va. 187, 35 S. E. 455; Kent v. Kent, 34 S. E. 32, 2 Va. Dec. 674.

The exceptions to the report partake of the nature of special demurrers, and serve to direct the attention of the court with reasonable certainty to the specific points of controversy. Robinnett v. Robinnett, 92 Va. 124, 22 S. E. 856.

A comprehensive monographic note on the general subject of commissioners in chancery will be found appended to the case of Whitehead's Adm'r v. Whitehead, 23 Grat. 373.

The evidence in this case has received careful consideration and fails to sustain any of the grounds of objection alleged against the validity of appellants' demand. Indeed, it was admitted by counsel for the appellees, in the argument of the case before us, that there was no evidence to justify the report of the commissioner that the debts had been paid; and, even if the question of fraud had been properly raised, the evidence is clearly insufficient to sustain it.

For these reasons, the decree of the circuit court must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions that the deed of trust, so far as the debts of appellants are concerned, be established as a subsisting lien upon the real estate thereby conveyed, and for further proceedings to be had therein.

(104 Va. 705)

ALLISON'S EX'R v. WOOD.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. APPEAL—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY—STATUTORY REDUCTION OF AMOUNT—EFFECT.

Acts 1902-04, p. 590, c. 373, Code 1904, p. 1837, § 3455, reducing the minimum jurisdictional sum of the Supreme Court of Appeals on a writ of error to any "final judgment" from $500 to $300, adopted subsequent to the rendition of a judgment in a controversy involving less than $500, but prior to the adjournment of the term of court at which it was rendered, gives the Supreme Court of Appeals jurisdiction of a writ of error to review the judgment, for the judgment, for purposes of bringing a writ of error, was not final until the adjournment of the term.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 199, 200.]

2. SAME.

Acts 1902-04, p. 590, c. 373, Code 1904, p. 1837, § 3455, reducing the minimum jurisdictional sum of the Supreme Court of Appeals on a writ of error to any final judgment from $500 to $300, so as to make the section provide that no petition shall be presented for a writ of error to any final judgment which shall have been rendered more than one year before the presentation of the petition, nor to a judgment when the controversy is for a matter less in amount than $300, is remedial in its nature, and sufficiently comprehensive to apply as well to judgments rendered before, as to those rendered since, its passage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 199, 200.]

3. PAYMENT—PRESUMPTIONS—LAPSE OF TIME.

Presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is repelled by evidence of non-payment, and on the issue facts reasonably tending to establish the improbability of payment are admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Payment, § 188.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit brought in 1901 on a bond executed in 1873 and payable one day after its date, evidence of the record in an action and an ancillary attachment proceeding instituted in 1881 against defendant on the bond including the judgment erroneously rendered for plaintiff in the action and sundry executions issued on the judgment which had been sent to various counties of the state in the effort to reach defendant's property was admissible to rebut the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, though defendant was not legally served with process in the action.

5. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The error in excluding the record of an action and judgment therein was not cured by the admission of testimony showing that an execution had been levied on property belonging to defendant, for plaintiff had the right to submit the entire record.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 4200-4208.]

6. EVIDENCE—REPUTATION.

Evidence that a nonresident of the state paid his hotel and drug bills and other incidental expenses during his periodical visits to the state was incompetent to establish general reputation for financial standing and promptness in paying debts.

Error to Circuit Court, Culpeper County.

Action by J. B. Allison's executor against Calvin Wood. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Barbour & Rixey, for plaintiff in error.
Grimsley & Miller, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. On May 25, 1873, the defendant in error, Wood, executed a bond for $140, payable one day after date, to Allison, plaintiff in error's testator, at which time both the obligor and obligee resided in Washington county, Va. Allison died in the year 1879, and the same year Wood removed from Washington county and settled in the Valley of Virginia, where he remained until the year 1883 or 1884, when he became a resident of the state of North Carolina. After his removal to North Carolina it was his custom to make occasional trips to Virginia, varying from a week to a month in duration, for the purpose of dealing in live stock.

The bond was found among Allison's papers after his death, and in the year 1901 his executors, taking advantage of one of Wood's periodical visits to Virginia, instituted an action of debt thereon against him in the circuit court of Culpeper county. There was a verdict and judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff brings error.

We are met at the threshold of the inquiry by a motion to dismiss the writ of error, on the ground that the sum in controversy is less than $500, which, it is alleged, was the minimum amount of which this court had jurisdiction at the date of the judgment.

The judgment was rendered December 8, 1903, at which date the debt amounted to about $400. Two days thereafter, on December 10, 1903, by act of the General Assembly which took effect from its passage, the jurisdiction of the court was enlarged so as to include cases in which the matter in controversy amounted to $300, exclusive of costs. The circuit court adjourned for the term on December 19, 1903. The question to be determined, therefore, is, whether section 3455 of the Code of 1904 (fixing the jurisdictional amount of this court at $500, which was in force on December 8, 1903, when the judgment was rendered), or that section as amended (reducing the minimum jurisdictional sum to $500, which became effective on December 10, 1903, two days after the judgment was rendered, but nine days before the court adjourned), is to govern the right of appeal in this instance.

The amended statute (Acts 1902-04, p. 590, c. 373; section 3455, p. 1837, Va. Code 1904) provides that "no petition shall be presented for an appeal from, or writ of error or supersedeas to, any final judgment, decree or order * * * which shall have been rendered more than one year before the petition is presented, * * * nor to a judgment, decree, or order of any court where the controversy is for a matter less in value or amount than $300, exclusive of costs."

The act, it will be observed, deals with writs of error to final judgments, and by the rule of the common law no judgment becomes final until the end of the term at which it is rendered.

The rule is thus stated in the case of Baker v. Swineford, 97 Va. 112, 33 S. E. 542: "At common law, no judgment became final until the end of the term at which it was rendered, regardless of the duration of the term; and, until final, no court could direct an execution to issue on it. Section 3600 of the Code, however, confers on courts authority to direct executions to issue on judgments under the conditions therein set forth, but such judgments do not thereby become final so as to deprive the court, during the term, of the power to correct, or if need be, annul them if erroneous."

It is true that for certain purposes a judgment takes effect from its date; e. g., it constitutes a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor from that time (Va. Code 1904, § 3567); and with respect to the limitation on appeals, this court, in accordance with the language of the statute, has held that time is to be computed from the date at which the judgment was rendered. Buford v. North Roanoke Land Co., 94 Va. 616, 27 S. E. 509.

But a different principle obtains in determining the right of appeal. During the term of the court at which the judgment is rendered, the trial court is clothed with exclusive jurisdiction over it, and may, in its discretion, modify, amend, or annul the same; and the jurisdiction of this court does not attach until after that jurisdiction of the trial court has terminated.

The due and orderly administration of justice demands the observance of the line of demarcation between the jurisdiction of trial courts and the jurisdiction of this court, and, in the absence of special statutory provision to the contrary, the jurisdiction of the former must cease before the jurisdiction of the latter accrues. The tendency of the rule is to prevent the confusion which might otherwise result from investing different tribunals with jurisdiction over the same subject at the same time.

But there is another quite sufficient reason why the right of appeal in this case is controlled by the amended act. The statute is remedial in its nature, and its language is sufficiently comprehensive to apply as well to judgments rendered before, as to those rendered since, its passage.

The rule of construction in such case is thus stated in 2 Cyc. pp. 553, 554: "Generally, a provision imposing a pecuniary limitation upon appellate jurisdiction, without an express exception made to exempt particular cases from its operation, applies to causes pending before the adoption of the provision, upon the principle that the right is a mere privilege and not a vested right. Even when judgment is rendered before the passage or taking effect of the act, the pecuniary provision applies if appellate proceedings have not already been instituted. But such general provision is not applicable to cases in which appeals have been perfected or writs of error sued out before the adoption or taking effect of the act."

See, also, Id. p. 521, note 92, where it is said, that the right of appeal depends upon the law in force at the time the appeal is granted, and not when the judgment was rendered.

That is the view taken by this court in the case of McGruder v. Lyons, 7 Grat. 233, where it is held that "the act of the Code limiting appeals to the court of appeals to $200, applies to cases decided before the act went into effect, where the application for an appeal is made since." The case arose under chapter 182, § 3, p. 683, of the Code of 1849, which, on the point involved, is substantially the same as the present statute. In construing it, Judge Allen observes: "The words are general, and as they merely apply to the remedy, they extend to and comprehend all petitions to this court, or a judge thereof in vacation, for an appeal, writ of error or supersedeas, whether the judgment, decree, or order was prior to or after the 1st July, 1850, when the new Code took effect."

We are therefore of opinion that the objection to the jurisdiction of this court is not well taken.

On the merits, the defendant rested his case upon the presumption of payment from lapse of time. Whereupon, to repel that presumption, the plaintiff offered in evidence a copy of the record in an action at law, and an ancillary attachment proceeding, instituted in March, 1881, in the circuit court of Rockingham county, Va., against Wood, on the bond in controversy, including the judgment erroneously rendered in behalf of the plaintiffs in that action, and sundry executions issued upon the judgment, which had been sent to various counties of the state in the effort to reach property of the defendant. But it appeared that the defendant was never legally served with process in the action, and upon that ground the court excluded the record, and would not suffer it to be read to the jury.

The evidence was not offered upon the hypothesis that the record was binding upon the defendant; but was intended, along with other circumstances, to exclude the conclusion that might be drawn from lapse of time unaccompanied by an effort on the part of the plaintiffs to enforce their demand, that they tacitly admitted payment of the bond.

Presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is a presumption only of fact, which may be repelled by evidence or circumstances tending to show nonpayment, in which respect it differs from the bar created by the statute of limitations, which is conclusive though the debt has not been paid. Upon such issue, facts and circumstances which reasonably tend to establish improbability of payment, are always admissible. Thus it has been held "that the institution of legal proceedings, though irregular, by the creditor within the time relied on to raise the presumption of payment, would rebut such presumption which might otherwise have arisen." 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 605.

The text is sustained by the following cases: McCormick v. Elliot (C. C.) 43 Fed. 469; Allen v. Sawtelle, 7 Gray (Mass.) 165; McCullough v. Montgomery, 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 17; James v. Jarrett, 17 Pa. 370; Palen v. Bushnell, 18 Civ. Proc. R. 53, 13 N. Y. Supp. 785; Wilson v. Pearson, 102 N. C. 290, 9 S. E. 707.

But it is said, "such proceedings should not be allowed to have this effect if instituted for the sole purpose of repelling the presumption of payment, and not in good faith, with the sincere object of recovering the debt claimed." James v. Jarrett, supra.

The rejected record tended to rebut the presumption of payment by showing that the plaintiffs had not abandoned their claim, but had actively and persistently, though unsuccessfully, endeavored to collect it through the medium of the courts. It was therefore admissible, pertinent evidence for that purpose, and the circuit court erred in excluding it.

It is true that the court admitted testimony showing that an execution, issued on the void judgment, had been levied by the sheriff of Culpeper county upon cattle belonging to the defendant and found in that county, but that was only a link in the chain of testimony, and did not cure the error complained of. The plaintiffs were entitled to submit the entire record, and not an isolated part of it, to the consideration of the jury.

The admission by the circuit court, over the objection of the plaintiffs, of the testimony of witnesses for the alleged purpose of proving the general reputation of the defendant for financial ability and promptness in meeting his obligations, is also assigned as error.

The witnesses relied on for that purpose resided in Culpeper county, Va., and confessedly did not know the general reputation of the defendant in the community in the particulars referred to. The facts which the testimony tended to prove, that the defendant, during his periodical visits to Culpeper county, paid his hotel bills, drug bills, and other incidental expenses, were plainly inadmissible to establish general reputation for financial standing and promptness in paying debts. The general reputation of the defendant, in the community in regard to the possession of the characteristics attributed to him, was the ultimate fact to be established, and adequate knowledge of the prevailing opinion on the subject is a prerequisite to the admissibility of such evidence. The authorities are practically agreed that evidence of particular opinions and particular acts is inadmissible to prove general reputation. See 16 Cyc. 1273, and note 89, where the subject is discussed and authorities cited. See, also, Carter v. Com'th, 2 Va. Cas. 169.

Tested by the foregoing principle, the evidence in question was inadmissible, and ought to have been excluded.

There were other assignments of error, but they need not be noticed, as they involve questions not likely to arise on the next trial of the case.

The judgment of the circuit court must be reversed and annulled, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial to be had not in conflict with this opinion.

GARDWELL, J., absent.

(104 Va. 759)

WINDER v. NOCK et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. TRUSTS—CARE REQUIRED OF TRUSTEE.

The care required of a trustee in an express trust is that required of an ordinarily prudent business man.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trusts, § 233.]

2. SAME—CREATION OF TRUST.

Where a contract between plaintiff and defendant provided that plaintiff should have an equal share in the rents and profits of certain land, and that defendant should sell the property for the best price possible, the proceeds to be divided, defendants' position as to plaintiff was that of a trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trusts, §§ 25, 34-36.]

3. SAME—DILIGENCE OF TRUSTEE—EVIDENCE.

In a suit by a cestui que trust against the trustee, evidence considered, and held to show that the price for which the trustee sold certain land was adequate.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Northampton County.

Suit by John L. Winder against L. Floyd Nock and others. From a decree in favor of defendants, complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Wise & Watkins and J. S. Parsons, for appellant. Stewart K. Powell, Benj. T. Gunter, N. B. Westcott, Ashby & Read, and E. J. Spady, for appellees.

HARRISON, J. Mrs. John L. Winder, the wife of appellant, and Samuel P. Fisher, her son by a former marriage, who together owned a farm in Northampton county containing 17½ acres, sold and conveyed the same in May, 1902, to the appellee L. Floyd Nock. For the part owned by Fisher the appellee paid $1,000 in cash, and for the part owned by Mrs. Winder he paid the sum of $3,000 in cash. Contemporaneously with the deed from Mrs. Winder, the appellee and her husband, the appellant, made the following contract:

"This contract and agreement, made this 10th day of May, 1902, between L. Floyd Nock, of the first part, and John L. Winder, of the second part:

"Whereas, the said L. Floyd Nock did on the 5th day of May, 1902, purchase from Samuel P. Fisher and wife all of the said Samuel P.'s right, title, interest, and estate in and to a tract of 85¼ acres, more or less, situated near Read's Wharf, Northampton Co., Va., for the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00), and has this day purchased from Mrs. Rose A. Winder, wife of said John L. Winder (her husband), her tract of 85¼ acres, more or less, adjoining that purchased from the said Samuel P. Fisher and wife, and also her contingent interest in the said Samuel P. Fisher tract, together for the sum of three thousand dollars ($3,000.00), to her in hand paid this day; and whereas, the said sums of $1,000.00 and $3,000.00, respectively, were paid by the said L. Floyd Nock and the deeds for the said property were made to him, with the understanding and agreement between the said Nock and the said Winder that the said Winder is to be joint and equal owner in the proceeds of sale with the said Nock, subject to the aforesaid debt of four thousand dollars ($4,000.00), the one-half of which amount, with interest on same from this day, is to be paid by said Winder to said Nock; and whereas, the said Nock and said Winder are to share equally the rents and profits of said land and the said Winder is to look after the property and collect the rents for which he is to receive a commission of ten (10) per cent. out of the gross amounts of rents received by him; and whereas, the said Nock is to sell the property as soon as practicable for the best price possible, the same having been purchased for said purpose, and for which and making the financial arrangements he is to receive a commission of five (5) per cent. on the gross amount of sales, which as well as the cost of advertising is to be deducted before any division between said Nock and said Winder; and whereas, the said Winder is to have the premises whitewashed and such other improvements made as he and said Nock may agree upon, with a view of making the said premises attractive to a purchaser, and the labor and material is to be paid for by them jointly: Now this agreement witnesseth, that the said Nock and said Winder do each hereby bind himself to a faithful performance of the stipulations and agreements herein contained to be done and performed by them severally.

"Witness our hands and seals, this 10th day of May, 1902.

"L. Floyd Nock. [Seal.]

"John L. Winder. [Seal.]"

"Witness: J. H. Nicholson."

On the 1st day of July, 1902, the appellee L. Floyd Nock and his wife, sold and conveyed this farm to Francis H. Dryden, of Worcester county, Md., in consideration of $4,300 cash. Contemporaneously with this deed the grantee therein executed a deed of trust to Nock, as trustee, securing $4,000 to certain parties who had loaned the same to Dryden to enable him to pay the $4,300 in cash to Nock for the farm.

In February, 1903, the bill in this cause was filed by John L. Winder, alleging that under the contract of May 10, 1902, he and the appellee, Nock, were jointly interested in the purchase that day made of the Fisher farm, and that appellee held the legal title thereto in trust for himself and appellant; that Dryden, the purchaser had actual notice of the contract between himself and appellee, and was a mere pretended purchaser; that the sale by Nock was not bona fide, had been made without sufficient advertisement, at an inadequate price, and without the knowledge or consent of appellant, for the purpose of defrauding him of his just rights in the premises; and that Dryden participated in this purpose and intent. The prayer of the bill is that the deed from Nock and wife to Dryden and the deed of trust from Dryden to Nock be set aside and annulled, and that Nock be required to account for the $4,300 of purchase money received by him, and to pay the same to the beneficiaries under the deed of trust; that the farm be sold and the proceeds divided between Nock and himself; and that Nock and Dryden be required to account for rents.

The defendants Nock and Dryden filed separate answers to the bill, in which each denies every material allegation of the bill, especially denying that there was any collusion or fraudulent purpose connected with the sale, and declaring that it was in all respects bona fide and for a full and adequate price.

From the decree of the circuit court dismissing the bill, this appeal has been taken:

it being insisted that the sale by Nock to Dryden should be set aside upon the ground of breach of trust and fraud.

The claim of appellant, that Nock held the legal title to the farm in trust for the joint benefit of himself and appellant, is most earnestly contested; it being insisted that under the terms of the contract of May 10, 1902, appellant had no interest in the farm itself, and that his only interest was in the proceeds of sale in excess of the $4,000 paid by Nock for the farm and the cost of selling.

The contract is not clear upon this point, but in the view we take of the case it is immaterial whether appellant owned a joint interest in the farm, or only an equal interest with appellant in the proceeds of sale in excess of cost, for in either case Nock occupied the relation of trustee to Winder, and was bound to act in good faith in making the sale.

The settled rule is that only the care of an ordinarily prudent business man is required of a trustee.

In Minor's Institutes, the learned author says: "It is indeed observable that whenever a fiduciary is called to account and a liability is sought to be fixed upon him, the inquiry must ever be whether, in the transaction in question, he acted within the scope of his powers, with good faith and ordinary prudence. * * * This is, indeed, nothing more than the application of an old principle, which has long governed trusts of all kinds, namely, that nothing more should be required of a trustee than to act in good faith and with the same prudence and discretion that a prudent man is wont to exercise in the management of his own affairs." Minor's Inst. vol. 4 (3d Ed.) 1482, 1495, 1496, citing numerous Virginia cases and other authorities.

It is to be observed that the same contract which is relied on as creating this trust relation, reposed in Nock unrestrained power "to sell the property as soon as practicable for the best price possible; the same having been purchased for said purpose." There is no limitation as to the time of selling, except that it shall be sold as soon as practicable. There is no contract requirement as to the extent that the property should be advertised, nor is there any suggestion that appellant was to be notified or consulted with respect to the sale. The whole matter of finding a purchaser and making a sale was left exclusively in the hands of Nock. The gravamen of appellant's complaint is that the farm was sold for an inadequate price, and that this constituted a breach of trust and was in fraud of appellant's rights. It is clear that unless this charge is well founded appellant has not been injured, and therefore cannot justly complain.

The evidence of value, as in most cases of this nature, is conflicting; but a careful consideration of all the testimony leads to the conclusion that its decided weight is in favor of holding that the price obtained was the fair value of the property at the time the sale was made. Eleven witnesses on behalf of the appellant fix the value of the farm at from $5,500 to $8,000. With much the larger proportion of these witnesses the estimate of value ranges from $7,000 to $8,000. Sixteen witnesses, introduced on behalf of appellees, fix the value of the farm at from $3,000 to $5,000. Nearly all of these witnesses estimate the value of the farm at from $3,000 to $4,300. A careful scrutiny of the evidence shows very clearly that the witnesses who practically concur in the view that the price at which the farm was sold by the appellee Nock was its fair and reasonable value, have been longest and best acquainted with the land, and are better informed as to its value than those who speak on behalf of appellant. The record further shows that during the years from 1890 to 1902, inclusive, the latter being the year of the sale, the assessed value of the farm for purposes of taxation varied from $1,990 to $2,205. So that the farm was sold for about twice its assessed value. It is not likely that this land was assessed at one-fourth of its real value, which would be the case if the estimate of value placed upon it by appellant's witnesses was reliable.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the appellee Nock acted within the scope of his powers in making the sale complained of, that $4,300 was the fair and reasonable value of the farm in question, and that the appellant suffered no injury by its sale at that price. There is no direct proof in the record of any fraudulent intent on the part of the appellees, and, in view of the conclusion that the appellant has not been prejudiced by the sale, we deem it unnecessary to comment upon the suggested suspicious circumstances attending the sale; for if the view of those circumstances taken by the appellant could be sustained, it would not affect the result.

For these reasons, the decree complained of must be affirmed.

CARDWELL, J., absent.

(104 Va. 777)

AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. v. POLISCO.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—USE OF STREETS—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injuries to a child run over by a vehicle driven by defendant's servant, the question as to the driver's negligence held one for the jury.

2. TRIAL—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION—CURE.

In an action for injuries to a child run over by a vehicle driven by defendant's servant, the court instructed that, if the driver at the time of the accident was looking where some persons were using a punching bag and did not see the child, plaintiff was entitled to recover. Other instructions told the jury in effect not that the failure to look was carelessness, but that if the driver negligently failed to look, and negligently and carelessly drove on, and that he could by the exercise of reasonable care have seen the child and could have avoided the accident, they should find for plaintiff. Held, that the error in the first instruction, in taking from the jury the consideration of circumstances other than the driver's conduct in looking at the bag, was not cured by the other instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 564, 705, 718.]

3. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INCONSISTENT INSTRUCTIONS.

Where two instructions are inconsistent and contradictory, the verdict will be set aside, unless it clearly appears that taking the instructions as a whole the defect could not have misled the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 564, 705, 718.]

4. SAME — PRESUMPTION AS TO EFFECT OF ERROR.

A misdirection or mistake of the court appearing in the record is to be presumed to have affected the jury, and the judgment will be reversed unless it plainly appears that the error could not have affected their verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 4043.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—USE OF STREETS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—CHILDREN.

A child a little over five years of age cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence in running across a street and into a wagon.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, § 124.]

6. SAME—CARE AS TO CHILDREN.

Where the driver of a vehicle by the exercise of reasonable care could have seen a child who ran across a street and ran into the wagon, and thus avoided injury to her, but failed to do so, he was guilty of negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, § 1515; vol. 25, Cent. Dig. Highways, § 459.]

7. SAME—TRIAL—ISSUES.

Where, in an action for injuries to a child owing to the alleged negligence of the driver of defendant's vehicle, the declaration charged that the driver was looking to one side of the street, and that while so doing the child attempted to run across the street, and, not being observed by the driver, was struck and run over by the wagon, the allegations were sufficient to warrant a recovery on a showing that the child ran across the street and ran into the wagon.

Error to Corporation Court of Danville.

Action by Joseph Pollsco against the American Tobacco Company. Judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Peatross & Harris and Cabell & Cabell, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Harrison and Thos. F. Hamlin, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. Joseph Pollsco, the father, and as the next friend of his infant daughter, Becky Pollsco, a little over five years of age, brought this action against the American Tobacco Company to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by her in consequence of the carelessness and negligence of the driver of a wagon of the defendant company passing over and along Craghead street, in the city of Danville.

The trial in the lower court resulted in a verdict and judgment against the defendant company for $1,800, which we are asked to review and reverse.

The declaration filed consists of two counts, in both of which the charge is made that at the time the vehicle he was driving ran over the child the driver was looking to one side of the street where some persons were assembled witnessing others sporting with a punching bag at or near the sidewalk, and, while the driver was thus looking to that side of the street, the child attempted to run across the street from the opposite side to her father's store, situated diagonally from the point at which she started, and, not being observed by the driver, was struck and run over by the wagon, and sustained serious permanent injuries.

No attempt was made at the trial to show that the driver was not skillful, experienced, trustworthy, and reliable, nor was there any evidence that he was driving rapidly or recklessly; so that his negligence, if any there was, consisted in looking to the side of the street where the group at the punching bag was, and not keeping a reasonably careful lookout along the street in front of the wagon.

The case does not belong to that class of cases to which Persinger v. Coal Co., 102 Va. 350, 46 S. E. 325, and Con. Brewing Co. v. Doyle, 102 Va. 399, 46 S. E. 390, cited by counsel for plaintiff in error, belong, and which hold that a defendant is not liable for damages resulting from an event which was not expected, and could not have been anticipated by a person of ordinary prudence; but to that class which have dealt with similar occurrences to the one out of which this case arises, on the streets of populous cities, in which it has been uniformly maintained that on a street of a city a driver of a vehicle is held to reasonably expect to meet people, young and old, in the street or crossing the street, and the law requires him to keep a lookout for them in order to avoid injuring them, and not to turn aside and put his attention and sight on other objects; and that whether or not an injury to a person on the street by being run over by a vehicle passing thereon was proximately caused by the negligence of the driver in not keeping a proper lookout along the street in front of him was a question for the jury. Among the cases last referred to are Wiswell v. Doyle, 160 Mass. 42, 35 N. E. 107, 39 Am. St. Rep. 451; Kennedy v. Sullivan (N. J.) 43 Atl. 535; McDonnell v. Brewing Co. (Sup.) 44 N. Y. Supp. 652; Nugent v. Metropolitan St. Ry. (Sup.) 61 N. Y. Supp. 476; Summers v. Bergner Brewing Co., 143 Pa. 114, 22 Atl. 707, 24 Am. St. Rep. 518; Barnes v. S. City R. (La.) 17 South. 782, 49 Am. St. Rep. 401; Evers v.

Phila. Tr. Co., 176 Pa. 376, 35 Atl. 140, 53 Am. St. Rep. 675.

It is, however, properly conceded in the argument here on behalf of plaintiff in error that whether or not the conduct of its driver, and especially whether or not his looking to the side of the street at the group assembled at the punching bag, instead of looking steadily ahead, constituted actionable negligence, was a question for the jury to determine from the evidence, under proper instructions from the court. Therefore the only question for our determination is whether or not the jury was properly instructed.

The trial court, on the motion of defendant in error, gave five instructions, to four of which—Nos. 1, 2, 4, and 5—plaintiff in error objected.

No. 1 is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that at the time the child, Becky Polisco, was struck and run over by defendant's wagon, defendant's driver was looking at the punching bag, and therefore did not see the child, then they must find for the plaintiff and assess her damages at such amount as the evidence warrants, not to exceed $5,000."

It is admitted by counsel for defendant in error that this instruction, standing alone, may be too broad a statement of the law; but it is insisted that it is only an incomplete, and not an erroneous, instruction, the defects of which are covered by other instructions given.

It is true that the jury were in effect told in defendant in error's instructions Nos. 2, 4, and 5, not that the failure to look was carelessness, but that if he (the driver) negligently failed to look, and negligently and carelessly drove on, and that he could, by the exercise of reasonable care, have seen the child, and could have avoided the accident, then they should find for the plaintiff.

We see no objection to these instructions, but they are plainly inconsistent with instruction No. 1, which erroneously took from the jury the consideration of other circumstances in the case, and told them that, if they found from the evidence that the driver of the wagon was looking at the punching bag when the child was run over and injured, this was negligence that would justify their finding a verdict in her favor.

While instructions are to be read as a whole, and defects in one instruction may be cured by a correct statement of the law in another, where the court considers that, taking the instructions as a whole, the defect could not have misled the jury, yet, if two instructions are inconsistent and contradictory, the verdict will be set aside, as it is impossible to say whether the jury was controlled by the good or the bad in arriving at a conclusion. Richmond Trac. Co. v. Hildebrand, 90 Va. 48, 34 S. E. 888; Wash. Alex.

& Mt. V. Elec. Ry. Co. v. Quayle, 95 Va. 741 30 S. E. 391.

It is also well settled that a misdirection or other mistake of the court appearing in the record is to be presumed to have affected the jury, and the judgment will be reversed, unless it plainly appears from the whole record that the error did not affect, and could not have affected, their verdict. Norfolk Ry., etc., Co. v. Corletto, 100 Va. 355, 41 S. E. 740, and authorities cited. That, however, is not the case here, as it is impossible for this court to say whether the jury in finding their verdict were guided by the erroneous instruction No. 1, given for defendant in error, or by the other instructions given, and which were free from error. The jury might very well have regarded that it was unnecessary for them to consider the other instructions in the case, as they had been told in instruction No. 1 that, if they believed from the evidence that it was a fact that the driver of the wagon was looking at the punching bag at the time the wagon struck and injured the child, they should find a verdict in her favor, leaving out of view any other fact or circumstance which the evidence may have proved or tended to prove.

The refusal of the court to give plaintiff in error's instruction No. 10 is assigned as error. It is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the child ran across the street and ran into the defendant's wagon, and that this was the proximate cause of the injury, then the plaintiff cannot recover under the allegation of negligence in the declaration."

Since the child could not, by reason of her age, be held guilty of contributory negligence, this instruction was too broad, and therefore misleading. She might have run across the street into the wagon; yet, if the driver could, by the exercise of reasonable care in keeping a lookout as to where he was driving and what objects the wagon might come in contact with, have seen her, and thus avoided doing her damage, the plaintiff in error was liable for the injury, and the allegations of the declaration in the case were sufficient to warrant a recovery on that ground. The instruction was properly refused.

The circumstances which occasioned the asking by plaintiff in error of instruction No. 11, which was refused, are not likely to arise at the next trial of the case. Therefore it is unnecessary to consider the ruling of the court in refusing the instruction.

For the error in defendant in error's instruction No. 1, hereinbefore pointed out, the judgment complained of will be reversed and annulled, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial, to be had in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

(104 Va. 788)

CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO. v. BEASLEY, COUCH & CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. CARRIERS — LIABILITY AS INSURER OF GOODS CARRIED FOR HIRE.

A common carrier is an insurer of the goods it undertakes to carry for hire, and is bound to deliver the same safely, and from this duty it can only be exonerated by the act of God or of a public enemy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 481.]

2. SAME—PASSENGER'S EFFECTS—LIABILITY DURING AND AFTER TRANSPORTATION.

A carrier's liability, as such, for a passenger's baggage, continues during transportation and for such a time thereafter as affords the passenger a reasonable opportunity to remove it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 1541, 1542.]

3. SAME—DILIGENCE OF PASSENGER IN REMOVING BAGGAGE.

A passenger reached his destination at 7:25 o'clock in the evening of a severe winter day, and his baggage was removed to the station to be weighed. The station was locked an hour later, and the agent left for the night. There was no reasonable way in which the baggage could have been removed at night, except by breaking the seal of a loaded freight car and making passageway through it, and it did not appear that such passenger knew that that was possible. Held, that the carrier was liable, as such, where the goods were destroyed during the night by fire.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 1541, 1542.]

4. SAME—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

Code 1887, § 1296 (Va. Code 1904, § 1204c, subsec. 25), providing that no agreement by a carrier for "exemption" from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect shall be valid, prohibits not only contracts exempting the carrier from liability, but also from making contracts limiting liability.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 654, 659, 667, 937, 1554.]

Buchanan and Harrison, JJ., dissenting.

Error from Circuit Court, Botetourt County.

Action by Beasley, Couch & Co. against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

R. L. Parish, for plaintiff in error. Benj. Haden, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. On March 1, 1903, H. A. Dudley, a traveling salesman representing the defendant in error, purchased of plaintiff in error a 1000-mile ticket, upon which he was entitled to travel in the passenger trains of plaintiff in error and to carry with him free of charge 150 pounds of baggage. The price of this ticket was one-half a cent per mile less than the regular fare, and in consideration of this reduced charge, Dudley signed a contract on the back of the ticket, which provides, in part, as follows: "That in the event of loss or damage to baggage, no claim shall be made therefor in excess of $100.00."

On February 1, 1904, Dudley had three trunks, weighing 600 pounds, checked on this ticket at Buena Vista, in Rockbridge county, to Eagle Mountain Station, in Botetourt county, paying 90 cents for the baggage in excess of 150 pounds. The train reached Eagle Mountain Station about twenty-five minutes after seven in the evening. Dudley went to a hotel, and his baggage was taken by the agents of the railroad company to its baggage room to be weighed. About an hour after the arrival of the train, the agent closed the station, locked up the baggage, and went home. Shortly after midnight the station was consumed by fire, and the baggage destroyed.

This suit was brought by the defendant in error, as assignee of H. A. Dudley, to recover damages for the destruction of the three trunks, which contained sample goods. Upon a demurrer to the evidence by the defendant company, judgment was given by the circuit court in favor of the plaintiff for $605.42, the amount ascertained by the verdict of the jury to be the value of the plaintiff's goods.

The first contention of plaintiff in error is that the fire resulted from no negligence on its part, and that its liability was not that of a common carrier but a warehouseman.

A common carrier is an insurer of the goods it undertakes to carry for hire, and is bound to deliver the same safely, and from this duty can only be exonerated by the act of God or of a public enemy. A carrier's liability, as such, for a passenger's baggage, continues during transportation, and for such a time thereafter as affords the passenger a reasonable opportunity to remove it. In determining what is a reasonable time for removing the baggage after reaching its destination, the peculiar circumstances surrounding each case must be looked to, such as the character of the station, the opportunities afforded by the common carrier for delivering baggage when called for, etc. Penn. Co. v. Liveright (Ind. App.) 41 N. E. 350; Wald v. L. E. & St. L. R. Co., 92 Ky. 645, 18 S. W. 650; Mote v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 27 Iowa, 22, 1 Am. Rep. 212; Roth v. Railroad Co., 34 N. Y. 548, 90 Am. Dec. 738; Burnell v. Railway Co., 45 N. Y. 184, 6 Am. Rep. 61.

The record shows that the weather on the night in question was unusually severe. The station was so situated and blocked with freight cars as to make it practically impossible to deliver the trunks that night. The agent testifies that after the train left he first put away his express; that then he would weigh the trunks before allowing them to be removed; that he left the station in about an hour after the train arrived, locking the trunks up in the baggage room, and went to his home; and that he would not have returned that night for any cause less than fire. He says that, if the trunks had been demanded before he left the station, they would have been delivered, but further says that there were only two ways in which the trunks could have been removed, one by taking them out on the railroad track and wheeling them down, which he says a reasonable man would hardly have attempted, and the other was to break the seal of a loaded freight car and make a passageway through it; that this last was the only practicable way in which the trunks could have been gotten from the depot and delivered that night; that the station hands had gone away some little time before he left; and that the trunks could not then be removed. He further says that Dudley was not informed that the trunks could be removed by opening the sealed and loaded freight car and taking them through it; and that appearances were such as to justify him in believing that they could not have been gotten out of the depot in that way.

We are of opinion, upon the whole evidence, that Dudley was not afforded a reasonable opportunity to remove his baggage on the night of his arrival at Eagle Mountain. Indeed, it is quite clear that the railroad company did not contemplate the removal of the baggage that night.

The second assignment of error is to the action of the circuit court in giving judgment in favor of the defendant in error for $605.42, with interest, the amount ascertained by the jury to be the value of the three trunks and their contents, instead of $100, the amount agreed upon, as shown by the contract, in the event of loss or damage to the baggage; the language of the fourth clause of the contract being, in part, as already seen, as follows: "That in the event of loss or damage to baggage, no claim shall be made therefor in excess of $100.00."

The decision of this question involves the construction of our statute upon the subject.

When the mileage ticket which contains this contract was purchased, section 1296 of the Code of Virginia of 1887 was in force. It declared that, "No agreement made by a common carrier for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by his own neglect or misconduct, shall be valid." The law in force on February 1, 1904, when Dudley took passage upon this ticket, was passed on January 18, 1904, and is found in Va. Code 1904, § 1294c, subsec. 25, which reads as follows: "No agreement made by a transportation company for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect or misconduct as a common carrier shall be valid"—language which is similar to, but not wholly identical with, section 1296 of the Code of 1887, in place of which it stands.

In Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. Payne, 86 Va. 481, 10 S. E. 749, 6 L. R. A. 849, this subject was under consideration, and it was said:

"There is no doubt that a common carrier cannot lawfully stipulate for exemption from liability for the consequences of his own negligence or that of his servants. This was decided in an elaborate opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Railroad Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. Ed. 627, and by this court in Railroad Co. v. Sayers, 26 Grat. 328; and the principle is now brought into the Code, section 1296 of which declares that 'no agreement made by a common carrier for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by his own neglect or misconduct shall be valid.'

"But that is not the question before us. The question here is whether, when the shipper signs a bill of lading, not exempting the carrier from liability for the negligence of himself or his servants, but limiting the amount in which the carrier shall be liable, in consideration of the goods being carried at reduced rates, such a contract, fairly entered into, is valid and binding; and we see no reason why, when its terms are just and reasonable, it should not be. The test to be applied in all such cases is, was the contract fairly entered into, and are its terms just and reasonable?"

"At common law, it is true, the carrier is chargeable as an insurer, unless loss or damage occur by the act of God or the public enemy. But, as the law now is, he may, by special contract, restrict his liability for losses otherwise occurring. Indeed, he may by such agreement exempt himself absolutely from any liability for damage not caused by the negligence or default of himself or his servants. And the owner and shipper, by entering into the contract, 'virtually agree that, in respect to the particular transaction, the carrier is not to be regarded as in the exercise of his public employment, but as a private person, who incurs no responsibility beyond that of an ordinary bailee for hire, and answerable only for misconduct or negligence.'" In support of these propositions the court cites New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchant's Bank, 6 How. 344, 12 L. Ed. 465; 2 Pars. Cont. (6th Ed.) 233; Nicholson v. Wilson, 5 East, 507, where Lord Ellenborough remarked that there is no case to be met with in the books in which the right of a carrier thus to limit, by special contract, his own responsibility has ever been, by express decision, denied; and Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. Ed. 556. The opinion then goes on to say: "The leading case on the subject is Hart v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 112 U. S. 331, 5 Sup. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717, in which it was decided that, where a contract of carriage, signed by the shipper, is fairly made with a railroad company, agreeing on a valuation of the property to be transported, with a rate of freight based on the condition that the carrier assumes liability only to the extent of the agreed valuation, even in case of loss or damage by the negligence of the carrier, the contract will be upheld as a proper and lawful mode of securing a due proportion between the amount for which the carrier may be responsible and the freight he receives, and of protecting himself against extravagant and fanciful valuations. * * * "The limitation as to value has no tendency to exempt from liability for negligence. It does not induce want of care. It exacts from the carrier the measure of care due to the value agreed on. The carrier is bound to respond in that value for negligence. The compensation for carriage is based on that value. The shipper is estopped from saying that the value is greater. The articles have no greater value, for the purposes of the contract of transportation, between the parties to that contract. The carrier must respond for negligence up to that value. It is just and reasonable that such a contract, fairly entered into, and where there is no deceit practiced on the shipper, should be upheld. There is no violation of public policy. On the contrary, it would be unjust and unreasonable, and would be repugnant to the soundest principles of fair dealing and of the freedom of contracting, and thus in conflict with public policy, if a shipper should be allowed to reap the benefit of the contract if there is no loss, and to repudiate it in case of loss."

It is to be observed that in Hart v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., which seems to have controlled the decision in R. & D. R. Co. v. Payne, supra, there was no statute involved; while with us the statute expressly declares that a contract, by which a common carrier undertakes to "exempt" itself from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect or misconduct, is void. The decision of this case must depend upon the meaning to be attributed to the word "exempt" in our statute.

If the carrier may limit its liability, though disabled by statute from exempting itself from liability, then the act of the Legislature is of little worth. The common law imposes upon railroad companies, as common carriers, the obligation to pay in full for property lost by them, which they have undertaken to transport, or damages to the extent of any injury which such property may have sustained. St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Sherlock (Kan. Sup.) 51 Pac. 899.

It is conceded that a contract, though resting upon a consideration mutually agreed upon between the parties and fairly entered into, would be void if it exempted the carrier from all liability. The value of the property lost in this case is fixed by the verdict of the jury at something more than $600; the recovery is limited by the contract to $100. The common-law liability, therefore, of the carrier is, by virtue of this contract, if it be sustained, effaced and obliterated, to the extent of $500, or five-sixths the value of the property. It seems to us that to the extent to which the carrier is relieved from liability which the law would otherwise have imposed upon it, it is to be considered and treated as having undertaken to exempt itself, by force of its contract.

But it is said the limitation must be a reasonable one. If, in the teeth of the statute, we are permitted to indulge in argument or conjecture as to what is in a particular case reasonable, where would the line be drawn? In the case before us the recovery is diminished from $600 to $100. Is that the limit of reasonableness? By what standard is five-sixths of the valuation determined upon as a reasonable limitation or restriction? Could not the estoppel upon the conscience of the shipper be urged with as much force if the value of the goods had been fixed by the contract at $50 or $20? It would still have been an agreement between parties capable of contracting, fairly entered into, and for a valuable consideration. It is void, not because it is unreasonable, but because the Legislature has seen fit to declare that all such contracts, whether reasonable or unreasonable, are invalid.

We do not perceive the force of the reasoning which would give operation and validity, by way of estoppel, to a contract which the lawmaking power has declared to be void as repugnant to public policy. In the case of Hart v. Penn. R. Co., supra, there was, as we have said, no statute affecting the contract. We do not believe that the Legislature, in passing the statute, either as it appears in the Code of 1887, or in that of 1904, meant to strike at contracts which exempt from liability, and leave untouched and in full force those which by limitation and restriction accomplish substantially the same purpose. Experience has shown that the shipper does not stand upon an equal footing with the carrier. He is at a disadvantage in contracting with the carrier. This the Legislature well knew, and this was the evil which it intended to suppress. The statute was designed to go to the very root of the trouble, and to declare all such contracts invalid; and it was not contemplated, in our judgment, by the Legislature, that any such halting and half-hearted remedy should be applied to the situation as a prohibition upon contracts which exempt, while leaving the carrier free to impose such terms of restriction of liability as would still leave the shipper at its mercy.

In Page on Contracts, vol. 1, p. 567, it is said: "Under statutes forbidding carriers to limit their common-law liability by contract, a limitation on the amount of damage is invalid. Under a statute forbidding a carrier to exempt himself by contract from his liability, the shipper is not bound by the value fixed by him, even if fixed too low in fraud of the railway company." In support of this, the case of Lucas v. Railway, 112 Iowa, 594, 84 N. W. 673, is cited.

The Iowa statute is almost identical with our own. It provides that no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt any corporation engaged in transporting persons or property by railway from liability of a common carrier which would exist had no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation been made or entered into—a provision somewhat more elaborate, but in all essential respects identical with our own.

The syllabus of the Iowa case, supra, is as follows: "As the limitation, in a contract of shipment of a horse, of the carrier's liability to $100, the 'released value of the horse' named in the contract, renders the contract void, under Code, § 2074, providing no contract shall exempt a railway from liability of a common carrier which would exist had no contract been made, fraud of the shipper in making representations to secure a cheaper rate of freight will not prevent his proving the full value of the horse."

This case is pertinent to the present discussion in two aspects. The statute of Iowa uses the word "exempt" as ours does, and yet the limitation by contract was held by the court to be in conflict with the statute, and therefore invalid. In other words, the limitation, to the extent that it diminished the common-law liability of the carrier, was treated as an exemption from liability, and "limit" and "exempt" were construed as words of synonymous meaning. In that case, too, it appears that, so far from the court imputing validity to the contract by way of estoppel, it declares that the "fraud of the shipper in making representations to secure a cheaper rate of freight will not prevent his proving the full value of the horse." Such was the vigor of the statute that it served to destroy the contract, and the shipper was permitted to recover the full value of the property shipped, although a cheaper rate of freight had been secured by false representations upon his part.

In Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Wynn, 88 Tenn. 320, 14 S. W. 811, a mare had been shipped without inquiry as to her value, and the shipper had received a receipt or contract which provided, in general terms, that in case of injury to any horse shipped under it for which the railroad company might be liable, the amount claimed should not exceed $100. In construing this contract and passing upon its validity, the court said:

"Manifestly the stipulation does not contemplate total exemption from liability; it only provides for partial or limited exemption. Upon that distinction the nice and important question arises: Can a stipulation of the latter character stand before the law, when one of the former kind cannot? Or, to state the same question differently, and so as to apply it more directly to the facts of this case, the rule of law being established, as we have seen it is, that the defendant company could not lawfully have contracted with the plaintiff that it would in no event be liable for any part of the value of the mare if lost or destroyed, can the limitation of its liability to $100 be upheld in the courts, if it should appear that her death resulted from the negligence of the company, and that she was in fact worth eight times that amount, as the jury found her to be? We unhesitatingly answer: No. The carrier cannot by contract excuse itself from liability for the whole nor any part of a loss brought about by its negligence. To our minds it is perfectly clear that the two kinds of stipulation—that providing for total, and that providing for partial, exemption from liability for the consequences of the carrier's negligence—stand upon the same ground, and must be tested by the same principles. If one can be enforced, the other can; if either be invalid, both must be held to be so, the same considerations of public policy operating in each case.

"With great deference for those who may differ with us, we think it entirely illogical and unreasonable to say that the carrier may not absolve itself from liability for the whole value of property lost or destroyed through its negligence, but that it may absolve itself from responsibility for one-half, three-fourths, seven-eighths, nine-tenths, or ninety-hundredths of the loss so occasioned. With great unanimity the authorities say it cannot do the former. If allowed to do the latter it may thereby substantially evade and nullify the law which says it shall not do the former, and in that way do indirectly what it is forbidden to do directly. We hold that it can do neither. The requirement of the law has ever been, and is now, that the common carrier shall be diligent and careful in the transportation of its freight, and public policy forbids that it shall throw off that obligation, whether by stipulation for exemption in whole or in part from the consequences of its negligent acts."

The contract construed in that case is almost identical with the one before us. There was no statute, and the court dealt with it as one controlled by the common law. The opinion is convincing and is supported by numerous authorities. It would be easy to multiply adjudicated cases and text-writers treating "exemption" and "limitation" of liability as convertible terms. This will be apparent from an inspection of Railroad Co. v. Sayers, supra, and the authorities there cited.

We rest our conclusion upon the force of the statute law of the state. If the statute was meant to declare the common law, and to cover the whole subject embraced by the common law, then it cannot be doubted, we think, that the Legislature never intended to diminish the protection which the common law afforded to the shipper, and that interpretation must be given to the statute which makes it coextensive with the common law. If, however, the statute was not intended to cover the whole subject, but merely to prohibit total exemption from liability, then the partial exemption, the restriction, the limitation upon liability, rests where it was at the common law.

It has been suggested that, as the section under consideration has been, in substance, re-enacted since the decision in R. & D. R. Co. v. Payne, supra, the Legislature is to be deemed to have approved that decision. There would be more force in this position had that case turned upon an exposition of the statute; but it is plain from the opinion that the statute was introduced by way of recital, and that the controlling influence with the court in its conclusion was the case of Hart v. Railroad Co., supra. In this view we are strengthened by the fact that, in the petition for the writ of error in Railroad Co. v. Payne, no allusion is made to the statute, though it is adverted to in appellant's reply brief, and it is altogether probable that the court meant to adhere to the view entertained by it when Melendy & Russell v. Barbour, Receiver, 78 Va. 544, was decided. In that case the parties agreed that the carrier should not be liable under any circumstances, nor for any cause, beyond the sum of $200, for injury to or loss of any animal carried pursuant to the agreement, although the actual value of the animal might exceed that amount. This limitation was earnestly insisted upon by the carrier, but was thought to be of so little force that it is not mentioned in the opinion of the court; and, notwithstanding the contract limiting the value to $200, the decree of the court below, allowing the plaintiffs to recover $1,000, was reversed in this court as inadequate, and the cause remanded to the circuit court with instructions to frame an issue and impanel a jury to try the question as to damages incurred by appellants through the negligence of the defendant company. It thus appears that the contract in that case was wholly disregarded, and the rights of the parties were fixed precisely as they would have been had there been no contract.

The conclusion of the whole matter may, in our view, be summed up as follows: At common law the carrier could not by contract limit or restrict his liability for injury or loss caused by the negligence of himself or his servants. The object of the Legislature was to give to this recognized common-law principle the force of a statute; and it would indeed be a singular outcome of an effort on the part of the Legislature to give an added sanction to the common law, if by ingenious construction the power to limit should be deduced from the prohibition to exempt.

BUCHANAN, J. (dissenting). In so far as the opinion of the court overrules the decision in the case of Richmond & Danville Railroad Co. v. Payne, 86 Va. 481, 10 S. E. 749, 6 L. R. A. 849, I dissent from it.

It was held in that case that, while section 1296 of the Code of 1887 did not permit a common carrier to exempt itself from liability for its own negligence, or the negligence of its servants, yet it did not prevent it from entering into a contract limiting the amount for which it should be liable, in consideration of the goods being carried at reduced rates, provided the contract was fairly entered into and its terms were just and reasonable.

Whatever may be thought of the correctness of that decision, the question decided is, in my judgment, no longer an open one in this state. That decision was made in January, 1890, nearly 15 years ago. By an act approved January 18, 1904 (Acts 1902-04, p. 968), the statute law of the state in reference to public service corporations was revised so as to conform to the provisions of the present Constitution of the state. Whilst many radical changes were made by the act, no alteration was made in the language of section 1296 of the Code of 1887, except to make it apply to all transportation companies, in performing their duties as common carriers; and as amended it was re-enacted as clause 25 of chapter 3 of that act (page 980) and now appears as clause 25 of section 1294c of the Code of 1904.

It is a well-settled rule of construction that, when a foreign statute, which has been construed by the courts of that state, has been incorporated into the laws of this state, it must be presumed that the Legislature intended to adopt the interpretation placed upon the statute by the courts of the foreign state. Doswell v. Buchanan's Ex'rs, 3 Leigh, 365, 23 Am. Dec. 280; Danville v. Pace, 25 Grat. 1, 5, 18 Am. Rep. 663; N. & W. Ry. Co. v. O. D. Baggage Co., 99 Va. 111, 37 S. E. 784, 50 L. R. A. 722; N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Cheatwood's Adm'x, 103 Va. 356, 367, 49 S. E. 489.

If this be true of a foreign statute incorporated into our laws, it must a fortiori be true in the re-enactment of a statute which has been construed by this court.

In Mangus v. McClelland, 93 Va. 786, 789, 790, 22 S. E. 364, 365, it was said that: "It was a familiar rule of construction that, where a statute has been construed by the courts, and is then re-enacted by the Legislature, the construction given it is presumed to be sanctioned by the Legislature, and thenceforth becomes obligatory upon the courts. See Anable's Case, 24 Grat. 563, where this rule of construction was held to be binding upon courts even in criminal cases, and a fortiori it is binding upon them in civil cases." See, also, Swift & Co. v. Wood, 103 Va. 494, 496, 49 S. E. 643, where it is reiterated that such a construction is obligatory upon the courts.

In my humble judgment, the construction placed upon section 1296 of the Code of 1887 by this court, in R. & D. R. Co. v. Payne, supra, is as much binding upon the courts since the re-enactment of that section as clause 25 of section 1294c of the Code of 1904, as if the Legislature had declared in the body of the statute that it should not be construed as prohibiting a common carrier from entering into a contract limiting the amount of its liability in consideration of the goods being carried at reduced rates, provided the contract be fairly entered into and its terms be reasonable and just. To hold otherwise, it seems to me, with all deference to the majority of the court, is not merely overruling a former decision of this court, but is repealing to that extent an act of the Legislature.

HARRISON, J. (dissenting). I concur in the view that the liability of the plaintiff in error, in this case, was that of a common carrier, and not that of a warehouseman. I am constrained, however, to dissent from the conclusion reached by a majority of the court that the plaintiff in error was not entitled to limit its liability, in the event of loss or damage to baggage, in consideration of a reduced charge for transportation.

A common carrier cannot lawfully stipulate for exemption from liability for the consequence of its own negligence, or that of its servants. This is the common-law doctrine, which has been more than once announced by this court. Railroad Co. v. Sayers, 26 Grat. 328.

At the time of the purchase of the ticket here involved (March 1, 1903), this common-law rule had been carried into section 1296 of the Code of 1887, which provides as follows: "No agreement made by a common carrier for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by his own neglect or misconduct, shall be valid."

When the fire was first discovered, it was burning on the inside of the station building. Its origin does not clearly appear, but, assuming that it was the result of negligence on the part of the agents of the defendant company, the question to be determined is whether, in view of section 1296, supra, a common carrier can make a valid and binding contract, not exempting the carrier from liability for the negligence of itself or its servants, but limiting the amount in which the carrier shall be liable, in consideration of carriage at a reduced rate.

This question was settled in this state by a well-considered opinion, in which it is held that the statute was merely declaratory of the common law, and that such a contract fairly entered into is valid and binding; the court saying: "We see no reason why, when its terms are just and reasonable, it should not be. The test to be applied in all such cases is, was the contract fairly entered into, and are its terms just and reasonable?" Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne, 86 Va. 481, 10 S. E. 749, 6 L. R. A. 849.

In the case at bar there is no question that the contract was fairly made, that Dudley secured a reduced charge for transportation, and that he signed the contract, agreeing to a valuation of $100 for any loss or damage to his baggage, in consideration of the reduced charge for travel.

The cases involving this question are numerous and conflicting; different rules prevailing in different states. In the Payne Case, supra, this court followed the view repeatedly announced by the Supreme Court of the United States. I think the weight of authority and the better reason is in favor of that rule. It rests upon the theory that the agreement to limit the liability, in consideration of a reduced charge, is nothing more than a contract in advance, by which the parties agree upon and fix the value of the thing transported so that the shipper cannot pay for shipping property of one value at a reduced rate, and when loss occurs demand payment upon another and higher valuation. The traveler or the shipper has two courses open to him, either of which he has the free and untrammelled right to adopt. He can either pay the regular fare and carry his goods at an unlimited valuation; or he can pay the reduced charge and carry them at the valuation then agreed upon in consideration of such reduced cost of transportation. No reason is perceived why such a contract, fairly made, should not be valid and binding. It is not inconsistent with public policy; indeed, it has been said that to permit a party to repudiate such a contract would be repugnant no less to public policy than to fair dealing. Hart v. Penn. R. Co., 112 U. S. 331, 5 Sup. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717, and cases cited. The principle settled by this case has been followed in a number of subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court. See the more recent cases of Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 18 Sup. Ct. 289, 42 L. Ed. 688; Calderon v. Atlas Steamship Co., 170 U. S. 272, 18 Sup. Ct. 588, 42 L. Ed. 1033; Penn. R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. 268, and the cases there cited.

Apart, however, from the merits of the question at issue, it is, in my opinion, upon well-settled principles, beyond the reach of further judicial inquiry, so far as this jurisdiction is concerned. As already seen, this court, in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne, supra, construed section 1296 of the Code of 1887, holding that, notwithstanding the statute, a common carrier could limit its liability in consideration of reduced charges for transportation, if the contract was fairly entered into and its terms were just and reasonable. By act approved January 18, 1904, before this cause of action arose, section 1296 of the Code of 1887 was re-enacted by the Legislature, in practically the same words, as follows: "No agreement made by a transportation company for exemption from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect or misconduct as a common carrier shall be valid." Acts 1902-04, p. 968; clause 25, § 1294c, Va. Code 1904. It has now been 15 years since section 1296 of the Code of 1887 was construed in R. & D. R. Co. v. Payne, supra. During all of that time, although recently re-enacted by the Legislature, no change has been made in the statute which affects the interpretation then given to it.

In Mangus v. McClelland, 93 Va. 786, 22 S. E. 364, this court said: "It is a familiar rule of construction that, when a statute has been construed by the courts, and is then re-enacted by the Legislature, the construction given to it is presumed to be sanctioned by the Legislature, and thenceforth becomes obligatory upon the courts. See Anable's Case, 24 Grat. 563, where this rule of construction was held to be binding upon courts even in a criminal case, and a fortiori is binding upon them in civil cases."

This doctrine has long been accepted and acted upon as settled law in this state, in those cases where foreign statutes are adopted by our Legislature, as well as where our own statutes are re-enacted. Doswell v. Buchanan's Ex'rs, 3 Leigh, 365, 23 Am. Dec. 280; Danville v. Pace, 25 Grat. 1, 18 Am. Rep. 663; N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Old Dom. Bag. Co., 99 Va. 111, 37 S. E. 784, 50 L. R. A. 722; Swift & Co. v. Wood, 103 Va. 496, 49 S. E. 643.

In the light of these authorities, I am of opinion that, whatever may be the view of this court upon the question involved, as an original proposition, it cannot now be reopened. With full knowledge of the judicial interpretation given the statute, it has been accepted and acquiesced in for 15 years, and, now that it has been re-enacted, "the construction given to it is presumed to be sanctioned by the Legislature, and has therefore become obligatory upon the courts."

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the judgment should be reversed.

(104 Va. 806)

NORFOLK & W. RY. CO. v. GEE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. TORTS—NATURE OF LIABILITY.

Where an act is lawful in itself, injury resulting therefrom is not actionable, unless the act is done at a time, or in a manner, or under circumstances indicative of a want of proper regard for the rights of others.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Torts, §§ 1-5.]

2. RAILROADS—OPERATION—FRIGHTENING ANIMALS—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—PLEADING.

A declaration against a railroad for injuries caused by plaintiff's horse taking fright at a hand car standing near a crossing is demurrable, where it fails to show that the hand car was by its nature an object calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, § 182.]

3. SAME—IMPROPER CROSSINGS—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—PLEADING—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

A declaration against a railroad for personal injuries sustained at a crossing, alleging as negligence defendant's failure to keep its right of way at the crossing sufficiently smooth and level to admit of safe and speedy travel over the crossing, as required by Va. Code 1904, p. 669, § 1294d, cl. 39, is demurrable, where it fails to state the nature of the defects complained of, or facts showing that the condition of the crossing was the proximate cause of the injuries sustained, which, it was alleged, resulted from plaintiff's horse taking fright near the crossing and plaintiff's inability to control the horse, owing to the defective crossing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Railroads, §§ 1108, 1109.]

Error to Circuit Court, Nottoway County.

Action by Ella Gee against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. There was a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

William Hodges Mann, for plaintiff in error. G. S. Wing, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. The first assignment of error is to the action of the court in not sustaining the defendant railway company's demurrer to each of the five counts of the plaintiff's declaration. The court sustained the demurrer to the first and fourth counts, but overruled it as to the others.

This action was instituted by the plaintiff to recover damages for injuries, caused by the alleged negligence of the railway company, received at a public crossing near Burkeville. The second count of the declaration avers that on the day of the injury the plaintiff was driving in a one-horse buggy along the public road where it crosses the track of the railway company, as she had the right to do, but that "the defendant company had so carelessly and negligently performed the duties it owed to the traveler on the said highway at the crossing, and that the said defendant company, or its servants and agents, had so needlessly, carelessly, and negligently placed a car, with long arms projecting above the same, commonly known as a 'hand car,' at or so near said crossing as to render the said crossing unsafe for the traveling public along the said highway at said crossing, when in vehicles to which horses were attached, of all of which the defendant company had notice." It further avers that by reason of said negligence her horse took fright at the hand car, and in shying to avoid the same, without fault on her part, the buggy was broken to pieces, and the plaintiff was thrown out with great violence, and the injuries complained of (which are set forth) inflicted.

The objection made to the declaration is, that the averments of fact in the count do not show that the hand car was an object so unusual or extraordinary as to have a natural tendency to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness and training.

Injury alone will not support an action of this kind. There must be a concurrence of wrong and injury. If a person does an act which is not unlawful in itself, he cannot be made liable in damages for resulting injury, unless he does the act at a time, or in a manner, or under circumstances, which will render him chargeable with a want of proper regard for the rights of others.

Mr. Elliott, in his work on Roads & Streets (section 616, 2d Ed.), in discussing the liability of a municipality for injuries resulting to travelers from horses becoming frightened at objects on or near the highway, says that "where a horse of ordinary gentleness becomes frightened at objects naturally calculated to frighten horses, which the corporation has negligently placed, or permitted to be placed, and remain, in the highway, and injury results without contributory negligence, the corporation will be liable therefor. This liability extends to objects on the margin of the highway and within its limits, although they may not be within the traveled path."

Judge Thompson, in his Commentaries on the Law of Negligence (volume 1, § 1257), says: "A person who negligently or unlawfully places or leaves on the highway an object which, from its appearance, is likely to frighten a horse of ordinary training and docility, is liable to a traveler for any damage which is the proximate result of the horse taking fright at such object." See, also, sections 1258, 1259, 1 Shear. & Red. on Neg. 355.

In Piollet v. Simmers, 106 Pa. 95, 51 Am. Rep. 496, where numerous cases are cited and the question quite fully discussed, the horse of a traveler took fright at a small barrel mounted on wheels, which the owners of the property through which the highway ran were using in whitewashing their fences, and which they moved from time to time as the work progressed. They left it standing covered over with a white cloth, and having a shovel projecting a short distance above the top, all day Sunday on one side of the beaten highway track. In an action for damages thus caused it was held that unless there was something of an unusual or extraordinary character in the structure and appearance of the apparatus, which would naturally tend to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness and training, it was not negligence to use it; and its reasonable use for no longer a time than was naturally required on the highway in whitewashing the fence of defendants would not subject them to liability, although some horses might and did take fright at seeing it.

If the rule stated in the authorities cited be correct as to objects on the highway, and we think it is, certainly no higher degree of care, if as high, should be required of a person placing or leaving near the highway, on his own premises, appliances in use thereon. The count under consideration does not show clearly whether the hand car was on the highway or on the defendant company's own premises outside of the highway. Neither does it show that the hand car was an object so unusual or extraordinary as to have a natural tendency to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness and training. While the question of whether or not the object is of that character is largely for the determination of the jury, from its nature, situation, and other like circumstances, under proper instructions of the court (Elliott on Roads, § 616; Piollet v. Simmers, supra), a count is demurrable which fails to show that the object which it is averred frightened the horse was by its nature calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness. North Alabama Ry. Co. v. Sides (Ala.) 28 South. 116; Keeley Brewing Co. v. Parnin (Ind. App.) 41 N. E. 471, 472.

The third count is substantially the same as the second, except that it makes the additional averment that the servants and agents of the defendant negligently hung wearing apparel and bright tin buckets on the arms of the hand car, and that these objects caused the horse to take fright.

If that count had averred, in addition, that the hand car, with these objects upon it, was so unusual or extraordinary in appearance as to have a natural tendency to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness and training, it would, we think, have stated a good cause of action.

The negligence relied on in the fifth count is based on the failure of the defendant to keep its right of way at the crossing "sufficiently smooth and level to admit of safe and speedy travel over such crossing," as required by section 1096, Code 1887 (clause 39, § 1294d, p. 669, Va. Code, 1904). The count avers that the public road on which the plaintiff was traveling was located prior to the building of the railway, and that it was the duty of the defendant company to keep the said crossing, to the full width of its right of way, sufficiently smooth and level to admit of safe and speedy travel; that on the day of the accident the defendant had not exercised ordinary care and prudence in complying with this duty, but on the contrary, through its negligence, the public road at the crossing, and within the defendant's right of way, was rough, gullied, and obstructed; that, the plaintiff attempting to cross the defendant's track on the day of the accident, as she had the right to do, her horse became alarmed at or near the crossing, and, by reason of the negligence of the defendant in not exercising ordinary care to keep its right of way at that point sufficiently smooth to admit of safe and speedy travel, she was unable to control her horse as she could otherwise have done; that the buggy in which she was riding was drawn by her horse with great violence against the crossing signpost of the defendant, the buggy broken to pieces, plaintiff thrown out of the buggy, and the injuries complained of inflicted.

Under the averments of this count it was the duty of the defendant to keep its right of way at the crossing in the condition required by the statute, and, if its failure to do so was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries, then the defendant would be liable in damages therefor. But the court fails to show the nature of the gullies and obstructions which it avers were in the highway, or how they prevented the plaintiff from controlling her horse, or such a state of facts as show that the condition of the highway was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the circuit court erred in not sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the 2d, 3d, and 5th counts of the declaration, and that for this error its judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to amend her declaration, and for further proceedings not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

Errors are assigned to the action of the court in giving and refusing certain instructions. As precisely the same questions involved in these instructions are not likely to arise upon the next trial, upon new and different pleadings, it is unnecessary to consider those assignments of error further than to say that, in so far as the action of the circuit court in giving and refusing instructions on the former trial are in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion in disposing of the demurrer to the declaration, it was erroneous.

(104 Va. 813)

PENDLETON'S ADM'R v. RICHMOND, F. & P. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. TRIAL—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

Evidence, on demurrer thereto, must be taken as true.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 43, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 355.]

2. CARRIERS—DUTY OF PASSENGER—ORDINARY CARE.

The fact that one waiting at a railroad station is to be regarded as a passenger, and entitled to that high degree of care for his protection due from a common carrier of passengers, does not relieve him of the duty of exercising ordinary care for his own safety.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 1363-1366.]

3. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad for wrongfully causing the death of decedent, evidence that decedent was waiting at defendant's station for a train, was familiar with the locality and with the position of the tracks, knew that the train was approaching, had an unobstructed view thereof, and was struck while crossing the track to the opposite platform, and while walking with his head down and seemingly in a state of abstraction, showed contributory negligence on decedent's part.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 1365.]

Error to Law and Equity Court of City of Richmond.

Action by Pendleton's administrator against the Richmond, Fredericksburg &

Potomac Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

John A. Lamb and Meredith & Cocke, for plaintiff in error. Leake & Carter, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. This action was instituted to recover damages for the death of Thomas O. Pendleton, who died from injuries received at the town of Ashland, Va., while crossing the track of the defendant in error in order to take a train to the city of Richmond.

Upon the trial there was a demurrer to the evidence, and the judgment of the law and equity court upon that demurrer was for the defendant.

The railroad tracks at Ashland run about north and south. There are three tracks—that on the west, over which trains pass moving to the south; immediately to the east of that track, one over which trains pass moving north; and still further to the east a side track, which is next to the station house.

The injury complained of occurred on the 15th of October, 1903, about 10 o'clock in the evening. The train which caused the accident was about 10 minutes late, and there is evidence which tends to prove (and which, upon the demurrer to the evidence, must be held to have proved) that the train was running at a greater rate of speed than that prescribed by the ordinance of the town of Ashland; that it gave no warning of its approach by blowing its whistle or ringing its bell; and that the headlight upon the engine was feeble and dim. The railroad company, under these circumstances, it may be conceded, would be liable for damages, unless it can be shown that its negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury inflicted upon plaintiff's intestate, but that he was guilty of contributory negligence.

The decedent, upon the night in question, was at the depot awaiting with others the approach of the south-bound train, intending to take passage for Richmond. It was, as we have said, about 10 minutes late, and when those who were waiting for it became aware of its approach, they left the depot, crossed the side track, the north-bound track, and the south-bound track, in order to be in a position to board the train upon its arrival. Pendleton was somewhat in the rear of the party, and it appears from the testimony of eyewitnesses to the occurrence, that when last seen he was between the two principal tracks, with one foot raised over the east rail of the south-bound track; but whether with the intention of stepping forward or moving back the witness was unable to say. There was no obstruction to his view. The approaching train was plainly visible for a distance of not less than ——— feet, and, while the evidence shows that the headlight was an indifferent one, it also appears that the train could plainly be seen. The deceased when last observed was approaching the south-bound track diagonally; that is to say, the track running north and south, while he was moving toward the southwest. This is shown by the testimony, and by the injuries which he received, which were upon the right side and shoulder, and to the rear. It appears that he was walking along with his head down, and seemingly in a state of abstraction. He knew the train was coming. He was going to meet it. It was plainly visible. He had but to lift his eyes and it could have been seen and the accident have been avoided.

It was earnestly argued that his attention had been disarmed and his vigilance lulled to sleep by a colored man in the employment of the railroad, with whom he had conversed as to the train, its detention, and probable time of its arrival. The duty of this employé was to take the mail bag, carry it across the tracks, and put it upon the train; and when the south-bound train approached, he with others passed in safety from the depot, and the decedent, following this employé and others, who were, like himself, intending to take passage upon the train, received the injuries of which he died.

These seem to us to be the controlling facts. There is much other evidence in the case, but it was introduced to prove the negligence of the road, which is conceded, or circumstances which we deem to be immaterial. The controlling facts in the situation are that this unfortunate young man, who was entirely familiar with the locality, with the position of the tracks, and with the approach of the train, undertook to pass where others had passed in safety, and, taking no thought for his own protection, walked heedlessly into the peril which he could so easily have avoided.

We have frequently held that when the question arises on a state of facts on which reasonable men may fairly arrive at different conclusions, the fact of negligence cannot be determined, until one or the other of these conclusions has been drawn by the jury; that the inference to be drawn from the evidence must be either certain and incontrovertible, or it cannot be decided by the court; and that negligence cannot be conclusively established by a state of facts upon which fair-minded men will differ.

This case is so plain as to its facts that there can be no diversity of opinion as to them, and there is as little difficulty about the law. The deceased is to be regarded as a passenger and entitled to that high degree of care for his protection which is due from a common carrier of passengers; but this did not relieve him from the duty of exercising ordinary care for his own safety, and this it is manifest he did not do.

We are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment complained of, which is affirmed.

CARDWELL, J., absent.

(104 Va. 871)

HOBACK v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. JURY—VENIRE FACIAS—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code 1904, p. 2114, § 4018, requiring the writ of venire facias, in case of a felony, to command the officer to summon 16 persons of his county or corporation from a list furnished him by the clerk issuing the writ, a venire facias directing the officer to summon persons from a list furnished him by the judge, instead of the clerk, was properly quashed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 81, Cent. Dig. Jury, § 295.]

2. SAME—JURY LIST.

Under Code 1904, p. 2114, § 4018, authorizing the judge to order more than 20 names to be drawn and placed in the jury list in a felony case, but providing that he shall in such cases specify the number of names to be drawn and the number of persons to be summoned, a letter from the judge directing the clerk to summon 30 first-class men for the first day of the term to serve as veniremen is insufficient to authorize the clerk to draw a list of that number.

3. SAME—VENIRE FACIAS—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a first venire facias was quashed, a second one commanding the officer to summon 16 persons from a list furnished by the judge, to which was attached a list of 16 names from among those summoned under the first writ, was insufficient, under Code 1904, p. 2114, § 4018, requiring the writ to command the officer to summon 16 persons from a list containing 20 names furnished by the clerk.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 81, Cent. Dig. Jury, § 295.]

4. SAME—SECOND WRIT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Code 1904, p. 2115, § 4019, providing that, when a sufficient number of jurors cannot be had from those summoned and in attendance, the court may direct another venire facias, and cause to be summoned from the bystanders or from a list furnished by the judge, as many as may be necessary to complete the panel, does not apply where the first writ, issued under section 4018, has been quashed, but only gives authority to complete the panel after the return of a valid writ issued under section 4018.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 81, Cent. Dig. Jury, § 313.]

5. SAME.

The provision of Code 1904, p. 2114, § 4018, that the names of jurors in felony cases shall be drawn and furnished by the clerk, and not selected by the judge, is mandatory, notwithstanding the further provision that no irregularity or error in drawing the names for the jury list or in summoning the persons named shall be ground for a new trial, unless objection was made before the jury was sworn, and the error was intentional or such as to probably cause injustice to the commonwealth or to the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 81, Cent. Dig. Jury, §§ 307-309.]

6. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—SELECTION OF JURORS.

That the jurors selected and summoned under an invalid venire facias were from among those summoned under a previous writ which had been quashed does not render the error harmless.

Error from Circuit Court, Floyd County. Fred S. Hoback was convicted of murder in the second degree, and brings error. Reversed.

A. A. Phlegar and J. C. Wysor, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General, Wm. A. Anderson, and R. L. Jordan, for the Commonwealth.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff in error was found guilty of murder in the second degree, and sentenced by the circuit court of Floyd county, in accordance with the verdict of the jury, to penal servitude for a term of eight years. To this judgment a writ of error was awarded, bringing the case before us for review.

It appears from the record that the judge appointed to hold the court at which the prisoner was tried wrote to the clerk of the court to summon "thirty first-class men for the first day of the term to serve as veniremen." Upon receipt of this letter the clerk drew from the box provided by law the names of 30 persons, and with these names attached thereto issued a writ of venire facias, addressed to the sheriff, in these words: "We command you, that you summon and cause to come before the circuit court of the county of Floyd, at the courthouse, on the 17th day of July, 1905 (being the first day of July term of said court), thirty persons of your county, to be taken from a list furnished you by the judge of said court, who are qualified," etc.

On motion of the prisoner, by counsel, this writ was properly quashed; it being, on its face, in direct contravention of the express mandate of the statute, which requires that "the writ of venire facias, in case of a felony, shall command the officer to whom it is directed to summon sixteen persons of his county or corporation, to be taken from a list furnished him by the clerk issuing the writ, who are qualified," etc. Va. Code 1904, p. 2114, § 4018.

In addition to the error appearing on the face of this writ, that the 30 persons mentioned were to be taken from a list furnished the officer by the judge, instead of by the clerk, the manner of drawing the persons named was irregular. It is true the judge could have ordered, for good cause shown, more than 20 persons to be drawn and placed in the list, but in such case the law requires that he shall specify the number of names to be drawn and the number of persons to be summoned, providing that the number drawn shall not be more than four in excess of the number to be summoned. Va. Code 1904, p. 2114, § 4018. These provisions of the law with respect to drawing the jury were wholly disregarded; the letter of the judge to the clerk merely directing him to summon 30 persons, without specifying the number to be drawn, or how many of the number drawn were to be summoned.

After quashing the writ mentioned the court issued a second writ of venire facias, addressed to the sheriff, in these words: "We command you to summon and cause to come before the circuit court of the county of Floyd, at the courthouse, on this 17th day of July, 1905, being the first day of July term of said court, sixteen persons of your county, to be taken from a list furnished you by the judge of said court, who are qualified," etc. To this writ was attached a list containing the names of 16 persons taken by the judge from among those summoned under the first writ of venire facias, which had been quashed. Upon this writ the sheriff made the following return: "By virtue of the foregoing writ, I summoned the above-named persons from a list furnished me by the judge of the circuit court of Floyd county." Not having secured a panel from these 16 names, a third writ of venire facias was issued, summoning two additional persons, whose names were taken by the judge from the list of those present in response to the first writ, which had been quashed. Before the jury thus summoned was sworn the prisoner, by his counsel, moved the court to quash this writ of venire facias, and also to quash the list of jurors accompanying such writ, upon the ground that it commanded the sheriff to summon 16 persons from a list furnished by the judge of the court. The action of the court in overruling this motion constitutes the first assignment of error.

This second writ of venire facias fails entirely to conform to the express mandate of the statute, which secures to one accused of a felony a jury of 20 persons, drawn by the clerk of the court or his deputy in the manner prescribed by the statute, and requires that 16 of the number so drawn shall be summoned.

It is contended on behalf of the commonwealth that, although the first writ of venire facias was quashed, the 30 persons summoned under it remained and continued to be a legal list of drawn jurors summoned in compliance with the statute, and that, when the second writ of venire facias was issued, it was done in pursuance of section 4019, p. 2115, Va. Code 1904, which provides as follows: "In any case of felony, when a sufficient number of jurors to constitute a panel of sixteen free from exception cannot be had from those summoned and in attendance, the court may direct another venire facias, and cause to be summoned from the bystanders, or from a list to be furnished by the court, so many persons as may be deemed necessary to complete the said panel."

This position is, we think, untenable. Mr. Abbott, in his Law Dictionary (volume 2, p. 364), defines the term "quash" as follows: "To annul, overthrow or vacate by judicial decision." When, therefore, the first writ was quashed, it was annulled, overthrown, or vacated; in other words, it was as though it had never been issued, and the court was without a jury present from which to make up a panel. The persons present, who had been summoned under the first writ, were mere bystanders, and were no longer under the control of the court. The list was a part of the writ, and when the latter was annulled by the court's action the former was vacated also. After quashing the writ, the only course open to the court was to begin de novo and have a jury drawn and summoned in accordance with the provisions of section 4018. When the opportunity for a drawn jury, provided by section 4018, has been given and jurors summoned, and the panel cannot be completed from that number, then under section 4019 the judge, to expedite the trial, may select the persons to be summoned to complete the panel; but section 4019 has no application in a case like this, where there was no panel to complete. If it were otherwise, the valuable rights secured to the accused by section 4018 could be wholly disregarded and denied him. The clerk would only have to issue an invalid writ, the court quash it, and then under section 4019 issue a new writ, summoning a jury selected by the judge.

As already seen, the statute (section 4018, p. 2114, Va. Code 1904; Acts 1904, p. 16, c. 17) expressly provides that the writ of venire facias, in case of a felony, shall command the officer to whom it is directed to summon 16 persons of his county or corporation, to be taken from a list furnished by the clerk issuing the writ. The law in force prior to the adoption of section 4018 provided that the judge should furnish the list; but the Legislature saw fit to change this law and to require that the list be drawn by the clerk in accordance with the provision of section 4018. The letter and policy of the statute was to give the prisoner in the first instance a drawn panel, and in that way to secure a fair and impartial jury. Each of the three writs in this case directed the jury to be summoned from a list furnished by the judge. Neither writ conformed to the positive mandate of the law, and was, therefore, no process at all.

In Jones' Case, 100 Va. 846, 41 S. E. 952, this court, quoting from a prior case, says: "Omission to direct a new venire facias, or omission of any statutory essential apparent on the record, is error. * * * These provisions of the statute in respect to impaneling juries are not directory merely, but imperative. They are rules which are made essential in proceedings involving life or liberty, and it is the right of the accused to demand that they be complied with. To disregard them is to deprive the accused of that due process of law which is provided by the Legislature, and which is required by the fundamental law of the land." Further, on page 847 of 100 Va., page 953 of 41 S. E., it is said: "This the statute requires, and if one of the formalities which it prescribes may be disregarded, all may be set at naught."

The argument at bar has been elaborate to show the guilt of the prisoner, but, if that fact was established with ever so much certainly, it would furnish no ground for removing any bar which the law has erected to protect the accused. The right of the guilty man is exactly the same when on trial as that of the innocent person, and his right to go unpunished until he is formally convicted, after making every defense to which the innocent are entitled, is one of the main pillars whereon rests our liberty and security in the pursuit of happiness. The guilty man is entitled to be convicted according to law, or in default thereof to be acquitted. Hence it is, says Mr. Bishop, "that before any person can be made to suffer for a crime he must be caught and held in the exact meshes which the law has provided; or, in other words, he must be proceeded against, step by step, according to the rules ordained by the law. It is of no avail to pursue him in a way indicated by better rules. The law's rules must be applied, or the law's penalty cannot be imposed." Bishop's Crim. Pro. § 89; State v. McCormick, 84 Me. 566, 24 Atl. 938; Hatch v. State, 8 Tex. App. 416, 34 Am. Rep. 751.

This learned author further says: "A court inquiring after the regularity of its proceedings never asks whether or not the defendant is guilty." Section 92. And in section 93 he says: "The function of human law is merely to conserve the outward order of society. And a part of this order, not less essential than any other, consists in adhering to the exact methods which the law has laid down for bringing criminals to justice."

The learned Attorney General, on behalf of the commonwealth, insists that the act of February 10, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 16, c. 17 [Va. Code 1904, p. 2114, § 4018]), was designed to modify the rule in Jones' Case, supra, and to make all of the provisions of the act, as to drawing names, making out and signing the list, and summoning persons named on the list, directory. In support of this contention the last paragraph of section 4018 is relied on, which is as follows: "No irregularity or error in drawing the names, or in making out, or copying, or signing, or failing to sign, the list, or in summoning the persons named on the list shall be cause for summoning a new panel, or for setting aside a verdict or granting a new trial, unless objection thereto was made before the jury was sworn, and unless it appears that such irregularity, error, or failure was intentional, or is such as to probably cause injustice to the commonwealth or to the accused."

The first writ having been quashed, and everything done in pursuance of it having, as already seen, fallen with it, neither the writ nor anything done under it could possibly contribute to the support of the second writ of venire facias. That writ must stand upon its own merits or fall by reason of its demerits. It was under this second writ alone that the persons who tried the prisoner were obtained. Before the jury thus summoned was sworn the prisoner made his motion to quash the writ, not because of any irregularity or error in drawing the names, for none had been drawn after the first writ of venire facias was quashed, nor for any irregularity or error in making out or copying or signing or failing to sign the list, or in summoning the persons named on the list, but because the persons summoned were taken from a list furnished by the judge, and not from a list drawn and furnished by the clerk, as required by the express mandate of the statute.

The last paragraph of section 4018 has no application to the conditions here presented, and was never intended to cure or relieve the fundamental error in the mode of selecting the jury which tried the prisoner. If the paragraph relied on were given the operation suggested, it would render nugatory all the preceding part of section 4018, which prescribes the method of drawing and summoning a jury in a felony case. That the jury shall be drawn and furnished by the clerk, and not selected by the judge, is mandatory, and the court is powerless to deprive the accused of that right.

It seems to be thought that, because the judge selected the names to be summoned from among those who had been summoned under the quashed writ, the prisoner has been done no injury, and therefore has no right to complain. To this contention we cannot give our assent. It was a jury selected by the judge, which the law forbids. If the judge had selected the panel to be summoned under the second writ from any other bystanders or from among names in the box, it would have been equally as lawful as selecting such panel from among the 30 persons brought together by the first writ of venire facias, which had been declared null and void.

This is not, as suggested, a technical view of this matter. Jurors as triers of the fact wield far more power than the judge on the bench in the trial of an accused person, and the Legislature has seen fit to safeguard the rights of the commonwealth and the accused by the enactment of mandatory provisions for the constitution of this important branch of the judicial system, which the courts are not at liberty to disregard, even if they deemed it expedient to do so.

Our conclusion is that the plaintiff in error has been tried by a jury selected by the judge without authority of law, has been deprived of the drawn jury prescribed by the statute, which was his right, and therefore has not had that fair and impartial trial which is guaranteed to him by the law.

The questions raised by the other assignments of error will not necessarily arise again, and therefore they are not dealt with in this opinion.

For these reasons, the judgment complained of must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

(140 N. C. 262)

JONES v. PENNSYLVANIA CASUALTY CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec 12, 1905.)

INSURANCE — HEALTH INSURANCE — POLICY — PROVISOS — CONSTRUCTION.

Where a health policy insured against certain named diseases, including blood poisoning, and a proviso declared that the policy should not apply to any disease which was the result of injury or other disease the proviso was inoperative as to blood poisoning, which always results from injury or other disease.

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Justice, Judge.

Action by Nelson C. Jones against the Pennsylvania Casualty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Action on insurance policy for an indemnity of $5 per week for 26 weeks. A jury trial was waived, and from the findings of fact by the court it appeared that the plaintiff, being the holder of an ordinary health policy in defendant company, on the 29th of November, 1902, received a small scratch on the hand; that the same began to inflame, blood poisoning developed, and on December 3, 1902, the plaintiff's arm was of necessity amputated; that the plaintiff was rendered incapable of performing any kind of manual labor and continued so disabled for a term of 26 weeks, for which time he sues for the stipulated indemnity; that all the formal preliminary requirements have been complied with on the part of the plaintiff, and proof of the plaintiff's disability for 26 weeks duly filed with defendant company. There was judgment for the plaintiff at the contract rate, and the defendant excepted and appealed.

J. W. Pless, for appellant. D. E. Hudgins, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the case). The policy (section 4) contains a definite stipulation for indemnity at $5 per week, not to exceed 26 weeks, in case of disability arising from certain specified diseases; blood poisoning being one expressly named. This disease being evidently the direct and controlling cause of the disability, as a matter of first impression the right of the plaintiff to recover would seem to be clear. The policy, however, having given this assurance of indemnity, then takes up the matter of provisos by way of restriction, and stipulates further: (1) That this policy shall not apply to any illness or disease whatever except those named. (2) That it shall not apply to any disease which is complicated with, or results from, any disease not herein named, etc. (3) Nor to any disease or illness which results from injury, etc. (4) Nor in effect to any disease which develops or results from those diseases that are named, etc. There are many other limitations and restrictions in the policy, for as my Lord Coke would say, "the 'etc.' meaneth much"; but those set out are enough to show that, if these provisos can prevail, blood poisoning is entirely withdrawn from the operation of the policy, and any and all stipulation for indemnity concerning it effectually removed. So far as we are informed, blood poisoning is not considered as one of the primary or idiopathic diseases. It is a toxic condition of the blood caused either from or through a surface wound or some internal lesion, or from the breaking down of tissue incident to an existent or precedent disease, and thereby producing suppuration. As to this disease, therefore, these provisos remove every possible condition where the disease can occur, and, if upheld, would as stated entirely set aside the definite contract for indemnity contained in a former clause of the policy. Such a result cannot be permitted and is not sustained by authority. It is established doctrine in construing these policies that doubts shall be resolved in favor of the insured. As stated in Vance on Insurance, p. 592: "Probably the most important general rule guiding the courts in the construction of insurance policies is that all doubt or uncertainty, as to the meaning of the contract, shall be resolved in favor of the insured." And speaking of certain kinds of special insurance, this author further says: "This rule, it is well settled, applies in full force to those contracts of special insurance which, unfortunately for both insurers and insured, are often filled with numerous conditions, the legal significance and economic purpose of which are alike uncertain." In Kendrick v. Insurance Co., 124 N. C. 315, 32 S. E. 728, 70 Am. St. Rep. 592, it is held: "The uniform rule of construction of insurance policies is that, if reasonably susceptible of two constructions, one shall be adopted which is most favorable to the insured."

Another principle applicable to the case before us, and equally well established, is that, while clauses in a contract apparently repugnant must be reconciled if it can be done by any reasonable construction, yet a proviso which is utterly repugnant to the body of the contract and irreconcilable with it will be rejected; likewise, a subsequent clause irreconcilable with a former clause and repugnant to the general purpose and intent of the contract will be set aside. Hawkins v. Lumber Co. (at this term) 51 S. E. 852; Bishop on Contracts, §§-386, 387; Devlin on Deeds, § 838; Beach on Modern Law of Contracts, § 718.

Our conclusion is that, as to blood poisoning, the various restrictive provisos are entirely repugnant to the definite stipulation of indemnity contained in the main body of the contract, are contrary to the general intent and purpose of the policy, and cannot avail to defeat the plaintiff's recovery.

Judgment affirmed.

(140 N. C. 246)

FINCANNON et al. v. SUDDERTH et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. BOUNDARIES — CONFLICTING CALLS — EFFECT.

Where certain deeds called for a rock near a small branch and 22 poles north of a railroad, "being a corner of a tract of land owned by the heirs" of S. and known as the J. tract, and running west with the line of the S. tract 228 poles to a stake on the old D. line, the call for the corner of the lands owned by the heirs of S. controlled the call for the rock.

2. SAME—SURVEYOR'S LINE.

Where, in a suit to determine a disputed boundary line, a surveyor testified that when he surveyed the land he understood that a certain rock was the corner of the land of S., when in fact such rock did not correctly mark the corner, and the surveyor made an incorrect survey based on such supposition, the lines run by him and the corners marked would not control a call in the deed for the actual corner of the land owned by the heirs of S.

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. A. Fincannon and others against Edward Sudderth and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Plaintiffs claim the locus in quo under deeds from their father, Isaac Fincannon, executed in 1887 for the purpose of making a division of his lands. They alleged that defendants had trespassed thereon. Defendants denied plaintiffs' title. For the purpose of fixing their boundaries, plaintiffs introduced a grant issued 1794 to John Hughes, in which the call for the southwest corner is a small post oak—running thence east, etc. This is indicated on the plat so: "L. P. O." They introduced a deed from C. A. Cilley, commissioner appointed in a proceeding instituted for the purpose of partitioning the lands of John Sudderth, to B. A. Berry bearing date March 25, 1882, describing the land conveyed as a part of the John Hughes grant. They next introduced a proceeding for the partition of the lands of B. A. Berry, and a deed from the commissioners to Mrs. Sudderth, calling for "a post oak and running east with Cannon's line 158 poles to a small pine," etc. They introduced a deed from B. A. Berry to Isaac Fincannon dated 1876, a deed from Dean to Berry dated 1871. These deeds call for "a rock near a small branch and 22 poles north of the railroad, being a corner of a tract of land owned by the heirs of S. A. Sudderth, deceased, and known as the Johnson tract and runs west with the line of the Sudderth tract 228 poles to a stake in the old Jonathan Duckworth line," etc. They introduced three deeds executed April 21, 1887, from Isaac Fincannon to each of the plaintiffs; all calling for the Berry line as the northern boundary. Plaintiffs introduced one Hudson, who testified that he had seen line run from the post oak. It had been pointed out as John Sudderth corner. He looked at it; three tracks on it; letters "J. S." on west side; had never seen land run from rock. Mr. Denton testified that he ran Sudderth land by Cilley deed; began at post oak and ran east; old marked line; thickly marked; found pointers at end of line. There was testimony that Berry said the post oak was his corner. Defendants introduced Mr. Huffman, who testified that he surveyed the land when Berry conveyed to Fincannon for the purpose of making deed. "Begun center of railroad; ran north to rock; understood it to be corner of S. A. Sudderth's tract and Hughes grant, also known as 'Johnson tract'; rock there. Begun at E; then to G, at Duckworth's line; then to I; then to J; from E to G known as line of Sudderth tract; was marked then and now; at G, pointers; do not think I marked line; marked line from G to I; never heard of line from P. O. till this suit," etc. There was evidence tending to show that Fincannon had been in possession of land to line from post oak east for many years. Plaintiffs insisted that their northern boundary was the southern boundary of Berry line, from post oak east, that the call for rock was a mistake, and that the controlling call was for Sudderth-Johnson land. They requested his honor to instruct the jury: "The calls in the deed under which plaintiffs claim are: Beginning on a rock near a small branch and 22 poles north of the railroad, the same being a corner of a tract of land owned by the heirs of S. A. Sudderth, deceased, or the heirs of John Sudderth, deceased, and known as the Johnson tract, and runs west with the line of Sudderth tract 228 poles to a stake in the old John Duckworth line; and the court charges you that, if the jury can find and fix the line of the tract so called for, and if it was marked or defined at the time the plaintiffs' deed was executed, the calls of the plaintiffs' deed would be controlled by the call for the Sudderth or Johnson tract, and would go to and run with it to the old Jonathan Duckworth line, if the Jonathan Duckworth line can be located, and this would fix the boundary of the plaintiffs' land." His honor declined this instruction and intimated that he would charge the jury that, if they found from the evidence that, at the time of the execution and delivery of the deeds under which plaintiffs claim, there was a contemporaneous survey of the lands conveyed thereby for the purpose of locating the lines and boundaries thereof, and the line was located and run with the line E G, and that it was the intention of the grantor and grantees that it should run with the red line, then said line would be the boundary of the plaintiffs' land, notwithstanding the calls in said deeds." Plaintiffs excepted, submitted to judgment of nonsuit, and appealed.

J. T. Perkins, for appellants. Avery & Ervin, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). The sole question presented by the plaintiffs' exception to his honor's ruling is whether, by a proper construction of the deed from Berry to Isaac Fincannon, the call for the Sudderth-Johnson tract shall control the other calls, thus making the southern boundary of that tract their northern boundary. The third rule for construing the language used in deeds in respect to boundary, laid down by Chief Justice Taylor, in Cherry v. Slade's Adm'r, 7 N. C. 90, is: "Where the lines or corners of an adjoining tract are called for in a deed or patent, the lines shall be extended to them without regard to distance, provided these lines and corners be sufficiently established, and that no other departure be permitted from the words of the patent or deed than such as necessity enforces or a true construction renders necessary." The reason of the rule is stated with his usual clearness by the learned Chief Justice. This is the leading case on the question of boundary in our reports and has been uniformly followed; the last case in which it is discussed being Hill v. Dalton (at this term) 52 S. E. 278. Applying the rule to the deed in question, we would hold that the words "being a corner of a tract of land owned by the heirs of S. A. Sudderth, and known as the Johnson tract, and runs west with the line of the Sudderth tract 228 poles to a stake in the old Jonathan Duckworth line," would control the other calls when contradictory.

The defendants, however, contend that another rule should be invoked and applied, by which the call for the "rock," followed by the other calls running therefrom, shall control and thereby discard the call for the Sudderth-Johnson land. In Cherry v. Slade's Adm'r, supra, the rule is thus stated: "Whenever it can be proved that there was a line actually run by the surveyor, was marked, and a corner made, the party claiming under the patent or deed shall hold accordingly, notwithstanding a mistaken description of the land in the deed or patent." It was this rule which his honor intimated he would instruct the jury to apply in locating plaintiffs' deed. There can be no question that this court has frequently approved and applied it. The last instance in which it was discussed, and the cases in which it was applied reviewed, is in a well-considered opinion by Mr. Justice Douglas, in Elliott v. Jefferson, 133 N. C. 207, 45 S. E. 558, 64 L. R. A. 135. We could add nothing to the exhaustive and satisfactory review of the authorities in that case. Quoting the language used in Safret v. Hartman, 50 N. C. 185, he says: "This rule presupposes that the patent or deed is made in pursuance of the survey, and that the line was marked and the corner that was made in making the survey was adopted and acted upon in making the patent or deed, and therefore permits such line and corner to control the patent or deed, although they are not called for and do not make a part of it." The plaintiffs insist that there is no evidence tending to show that at the time of, and with a view to the making of, the deed by Berry, or at any other time, the line contended for by defendants was surveyed and marked and corner marked. The only witness introduced by defendants was Mr. Huffham, who says that he surveyed the land and understood the rock to be the corner of S. A. Sudderth's land and Hughes' grant, also known as Johnson tract; he found marks but did not mark line. It is evident that he supposed that he was on Sudderth line. This testimony does not bring the case within the rule which defendants invoke. It is evident from the other testimony that Fincannon's northern boundary was regarded and treated as the Sudderth line. The evidence appears to be conclusive that the post oak is the beginning point in the Sudderth-Johnson line, being the same as the Hughes' grant, and that Berry claimed it as his corner. After his death the same line was recognized by his representatives, the deed made by the commissioners in the proceeding for partition calling for "a post oak and running east with Cannon's [which we understand to be Fincannon's] line." There is no evidence as to how the rock came to be at the point found by Huffham, or how long it had been there. It is much more probable that a mistake was made in locating the rock than that the parties intended to depart from the old marked Sudderth line. It was in evidence that Fincannon had been in possession to the Sudderth line for 35 years, and that Berry never cut wood south of that line. There is no serious controversy in respect to the law. We think that his honor gave undue weight and force to Mr. Huffham's testimony. It does not bring the case within the principle upon which defendants' contention must rest. The plaintiffs were entitled to the instructions for which they prayed.

The judgment of nonsuit must be stricken out, and a new trial had. It is so ordered.
New trial.

(140 N. C. 280)

WHITAKER v. COVER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 15, 1905.)

1. BOUNDARIES—CONFLICTING CALLS—COURSES AND DISTANCES.

Where a grant called for the east line to extend 320 poles to a stake, then with the line of another numbered grant south 320 poles to a corner, the call for the line of such other grant controlled the call for distance to the stake.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 8, Cent. Dig. Boundaries, § 23.]

2. SAME—QUANTITY OF LAND.

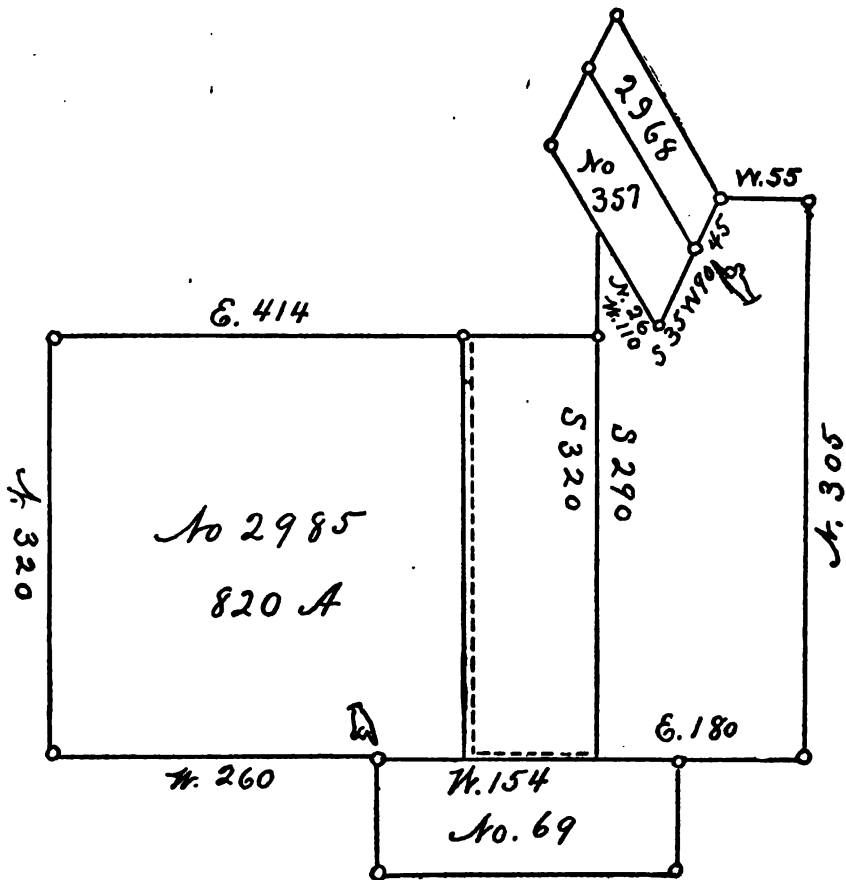

That there would be a difference in the quantity of land, if a call in a grant is stopped at the end of the distance and not extended to the line of another grant called for, cannot prevent the application of the rule requiring land to be located according to the primary calls of the deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by W. T. Whitaker against S. E. Cover and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Civil action for the recovery of money. The case was submitted on the facts agreed as follows: "W. T. Whitaker sold and conveyed to S. E. Cover et al. a certain tract of land in Cherokee county, containing, as shown by state grant No. 3,632, 640 acres, at the price of $3 per acre. The calls in said state grant are as follows: Beginning on a chestnut tree standing in the line of No. 69, and runs west 260 poles to a stake; then north 320 poles to a stake; then east 320 poles to a stake; then with the line of No. 2,229 south 320 poles to the southwest corner of said number on the line of No. 69; then with that line west 60 poles to the beginning. From the third corner running east 320 poles to a stake, and then south with the line of No. 2,229, would increase the distance 93 poles, and the acreage from 640 to 820 acres. W. T. Whitaker insists and contends that the line running east must go to the line of No. 2,229, and then with that line south, and that said S. E. Cover et al. are due and owing him $3 per acre for all lands in excess of 640, which said state grant calls for; and that the state grant covers and will hold the land to No. 2,229. S. E. Cover et al. contend that the east line calling for a stake but not in the line of No. 2,229, must stop when the 320 poles are reached at the stake, and that by stopping at the end of the call in the east line and running south to the line of No. 69 and then 60 poles to the beginning corner gives the complement of 640 acres called for in the grant. A plat and certificate of said land is hereto attached and made a part of this case agreed. The parties agree that, if the east line should be extended to the line of No. 2,229, and if the court so decides, S. E. Cover et al. will owe W. T. Whitaker for all land in excess of 640 acres called for in the state grant, $3 per acre. If the court decides that the east line stops at the end of 320 poles, then S. E. Cover et al. will owe W. T. Whitaker nothing, having paid Whitaker for 640 acres." Judgment was given for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

The following is the plat referred to:

E. B. Norvell and Axley & Axley, for appellants. R. D. Gilmer, Ben Posey, and J. D. Mallonee, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The only question in this case is whether the line described as running "east 320 poles to a stake" should stop when the distance gives out or should be extended to the line of patent No. 2,229; the next call being "then with the line of No. 2,229 south 320 poles to the southwest corner of said number on the line of No. 69." We have no doubt as to what our answer to this question should be. The affirmative of the proposition has been settled by a long, and we think unbroken, line of precedents in this state. Counsel for the defendants have called our attention to Brown v. House, 116 N. C. 859, 21 S. E. 938, and they contend that it marks a distinct departure from this established doctrine. If there were any irreconcilable conflict between the decision in Brown v. House and what we now decide, we should refuse to follow it; but an examination of that case will disclose that the court recognizes the settled rule to be that the general calls in a grant or deed control in locating the land described in the instrument, subject, however, to the exception that, when a natural object or monument is also called for and can be identified and located, it will control a call by course and distance. It is added that the courts have held that the line of an adjacent tract, if known and established at the date of the execution of the grant or deed, will have the same effect. We have given substantially the language there employed. The court, however, thought that the call then under consideration, namely, "south 360 chains to a stake supposed to be Stokeley Donelson's line, thence with his line east 390 chains to his northeast corner," was not within the well-known exception just stated, as it was too vague and uncertain to control the course and distance, and stress was further laid upon the fact that the line was only 360 chains long, whereas, if extended in order to reach Donelson's line, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles must be added to its length. Whether these reasons are cogent enough to take even that case out of the exception, we need not say, as there are no facts in this case of the kind which influenced the court in reaching its conclusion in that case. Here the call is a positive as well as a definite one, and the excess of distance only 94 poles in the third line, if we go to the line of tract No. 2,229, and, besides, that line is an established one and was actually located by the surveyor as appears by the annexed plats and field notes. Upon this showing, it is not necessary to disturb Brown v. House, as our case comes clearly within the exception.

But the learned counsel confidently relied on Harry v. Graham, 18 N. C. 76, 27 Am. Dec. 226, as showing that this case is not governed by the exception. The call in that case was "running north 45 degrees, west 220 poles to a black oak, near his [the grantee's] own line." If the black oak could not be found, it was held that the word "near" would not carry the line 30 poles further to reach another tract belonging to the grantee, but that it must be stopped at the end of the distance mentioned in the grant. The court in that case also recognizes the exception to the general rule that calls for the line of another tract will control course and distance, and intimates that it would have been applied to the call of the grant then being construed, notwithstanding the use of the word "near," if the next preceding call in the grant had not enabled the surveyor to fix with certainty the place where the black oak once stood; it being N. 45 degrees, W. 220 poles from a chestnut and red oak, which were found. The call for the grantee's line was not therefore the more certain one. That case, instead of militating against the position we take, is, we think, a direct and strong authority in support of it. In Haughton v. Rascoe, 10 N. C. 21, the call was "N. 12 E. 530 poles, then along the thoroughfare" and it was held, as a matter of course, and without discussion, that the line should be extended (beyond the distance given) to the thoroughfare. Judge Gaston, who argued the case for the defendant, seems not to have contested the point. The deed in Sandifer v. Foster, 2 N. C. 237, contained this call: "Thence south to a white oak; thence along the river to the beginning." The court decided, according to what it said had been "uniformly held in our courts," that the river was the boundary, although the distance gave out before reaching that object, and the white oak stood half a mile from the river. The call of the grant in McPhaul v. Gilchrist, 29 N. C. 169, was "N. 87, W. 199 poles to a hickory, thence the courses of the swamp to the beginning," and the court held that, though the distance from the last corner to the swamp was greater by 9 chains and 50 links than that given in the grant, and though there was no hickory to be found, and no proof of its existence, yet the line should go to the swamp and thence pursue its courses. To the same effect are the following cases: Pender v. Coor, 1 N. C. 228; Prest. of Lit. Fund v. Clark, 31 N. C. 58; Hartsfield v. Westbrook, 2 N. C. 258; Cherry v. Slade's Adm'r, 7 N. C. 82; Hays v.

Askew, 53 N. C. 226; Gause v. Perkins, 47 N. C. 222; Baxter v. Wilson, 95 N. C. 137.

In Corn v. McCrary, 48 N. C. 496, Pearson, J., uses language which has a strong bearing upon the facts of this case: "The line of another tract which is called for controls course and distance, being considered the more certain description, and it makes no difference whether it is a marked or an unmarked, or mathematical line [as it is termed in the case], provided it be the line which is called for. In deciding whether it be the line called for, the fact of its being a marked line may have an important bearing; but in our case it is assumed to be the line called for, which disposes of the question." And later, in Graybeal v. Powers, 76 N. C. 66, the same learned judge, speaking for the court, reaffirms the principle that, whenever the line of another tract is called for, whether it be a marked or a mathematical line, the course must be disregarded, if the line so designated as the end of the call is sufficiently established. In Campbell v. Branch, 49 N. C. 313, Battle, J., for the court, said: "The description about which there is the least liability to error must be adopted, to the exclusion of the other. It is equally well settled that the call for the line of another tract of land, which is proved is more certain than, and shall be followed in preference to, one for mere course and distance." The subject is fully treated in Rowe v. Lumber Co., 133 N. C. 433, 45 S. E. 830, and in Hill v. Dalton (N. C.) 52 S. E. 273, and Fincannon v. Sudderth (at this term) 52 S. E. 579. Wherever the principle has been held not to affect a call by course and distance, it will be found to be due to some peculiarity in the facts which rendered inapplicable the reason upon which it is based, namely, that an uncertain description should yield to one which is certain and less liable to disappoint the intention of the parties.

The difference in the quantity of the land, or the number of acres, if the call is stopped at the end of the distance and if extended to the line of lot No. 2,229, cannot be allowed to prevent the application of the principle embodied in the exception to the general rule requiring the land to be located according to the primary calls of the deed; the exception being "unless there are others more certain." "Ordinarily, the number of acres mentioned in a deed constitutes no part of the description, especially when there are specifications and localities given by which the land may be located; but in doubtful cases it may have weight, as a circumstance in aid of the description; and in some cases, in the absence of other definite descriptions, may have a controlling effect." Harrell v. Butler, 92 N. C. 20; Baxter v. Wilson, supra.

There was no error in the judgment of the court upon the case agreed.

Affirmed.

(140 N. C. 194)

BETTIS v. AVERY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. SLAVES—INHERITANCE.

Code, § 1281, rule 13, provides that the children born prior to January, 1868, of colored parents living together as man and wife are declared legitimate, with all the rights of heirs at law and next of kin with respect to the estate or estates of any such parents, or any one of them. Held, that such act merely legitimated a child born of slave parents, and extended the right of inheritance to the estate of the father, which right was previously restricted to the mother's estate, but did not extend the right of inheritance to property descending from collateral relatives.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 44, Cent. Dig. Slaves, § 115.]

2. BASTARDS — INHERITANCE — COLLATERALS — STATUTES.

Code, c. 28, § 1281, rule 9, provides that, when there shall be no legitimate issue, every illegitimate child of the mother and the descendant of such a deceased child shall be considered an heir and shall inherit her estate, but such child or descendant shall not be allowed to claim as representing such mother any part of the estate of her kindred, lineal or collateral. Held, that such rule referred only to a lineal descent from a mother to her illegitimate child and its descendants, and did not entitle a legitimate child of an illegitimate mother to inherit from her mother's collateral kinsman.

3. SAME.

Code, c. 28, § 1281, rule 10, declares that illegitimate children shall be considered as legitimate between themselves and their representatives, and their estates shall descend accordingly, provided that, when any legitimate child shall die without issue, his inheritance shall vest in the mother. Held, that the illegitimates referred to in such section were those who were children of the same mother who were entitled to inherit as between themselves and their representatives as if they were legitimate, and did not entitle a legitimate child of an illegitimate mother to inherit from her collateral relative.

4. SAME.

Code, c. 28, § 1281, rule 10, provides that illegitimate children shall be considered legitimate as between themselves and their representatives, and in case of the death of such child or his issue, without leaving issue, his estate shall descend to such person as would inherit if all the children had been born in wedlock. Held, that the "descent" so referred to was between brothers and sisters, and had no application to collaterals.

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by Clara Bettis against Wash Avery and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

The plaintiff brought this action to recover the tract of land containing 21½ acres described in the pleadings, and it was heard upon the following case agreed: (1) Matilda Greenlee, who died before 1861, was the mother of Adam Bettis and Clarissa Greenlee. (2) Clarissa Greenlee was the mother of Austin Greenlee. (3) Adam Bettis was the father of the plaintiff, Clara Bettis. (4) Matilda Greenlee, Adam Bettis, Clarissa Greenlee, and Austin Greenlee were slaves. (5) Clarissa Greenlee died about 20 years ago, Austin died afterwards, about 17 years ago, and Adam Bettis died a year or two before Austin. (6) Adam Bettis and his wife were married during slavery and lived together as man and wife before emancipation and afterwards, until the date of the death of one of them, which was some time after the year 1866; their child (the plaintiff, Clara) having been born prior to the 1st day of January, 1868. (7) Austin Greenlee was the owner of the land in dispute, having acquired title by deed dated March 25, 1878. He died seised and possessed of the land in fee simple. (8) Austin Greenlee married Laura Greenlee, who died after the death of her husband, leaving a daughter by another marriage, named Malinda, who married Wash Avery. They are the defendants in this case. (9) Austin Greenlee died intestate in Burke county, without ever having had any children. (10) Laura, the widow of Austin Greenlee, lived on the land in dispute after the death of the said Austin and until within a year prior to the beginning of this action, which was commenced July 31, 1903. The court was of opinion that upon the said facts the plaintiff is the owner of the land, and rendered judgment in her favor, from which the defendant appealed.

S. J. Ervin, for appellants. F. H. Busbee & Son, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The plaintiff's right to recover in this action depends upon the true meaning of our statute of descents in regard to former slaves and illegitimates, and their rights of property and inheritance growing out of their peculiar status. It seems to us that by a reasonable construction of our statute, whether it is based upon the letter or the evident intention of the Legislature, the plaintiff's claim to the land in dispute must fall. She would not have the shadow of a title if the case were decided according to the principles of the common law. But our statute has superseded those principles, and her right, if any she has, must rest solely on some provision of the statute. The Legislature took early action after the war to fix the marital relations of former slaves who were living together as man and wife by passing Acts 1866, p. 100, c. 40, § 5, and providing that those who thus cohabited at the date of the ratification of the act should be deemed to have been lawfully married as man and wife, with the provision for acknowledgment before the clerk or a justice of the peace and for making a record of the fact. This act was construed and held to be valid in Long v. Barnes, 87 N. C. 329, State v. Adams, 65 N. C. 537, and State v. Whitford, 86 N. C. 636. The act was upheld as constitutional, the necessary consent thereto being supplied by continuing cohabitation, and the provision as to acknowledgment was considered to be directory, so that a failure to comply with it, though a misdemeanor, did not affect the validity of the marriage. This statute is not material in this case, except in so far as it establishes the legitimacy of the plaintiff. There are no facts stated which would cause it to change the status of Adam Bettis and Clarissa Greenlee as illegitimates, for their mother, Matilda Greenlee, died in 1861 a slave, nor are there any to show the legitimacy of Austin Greenlee, who was born in slavery of a slave mother, Clarissa Greenlee. The act of 1866 (Code, § 1842) was followed by Acts 1879, p. 186, c. 73 (Code, § 1281, rule 13), which provided that "the children of colored parents born at any time before the first day of January, 1868, of persons living together as man and wife are hereby declared legitimate children of such parents or either one of them, with all the rights of heirs at law and next of kin, with respect to the estate or estates of any such parents, or either one of them." This act merely legitimates the plaintiff as the child of Adam Bettis and his slave wife, which perhaps was already done by the act of 1866; but it cannot be held to transmit any title to the land in dispute from Austin Greenlee to her, as it refers exclusively to the descent to such a child of the "estate or estates of its parents, or either one of them," and merely extended the child's right of inheritance to the estate of the father, which before that was restricted to the estate of the mother. In this case the plaintiff is not claiming the land as the heir of her father or of her mother, but as heir of an illegitimate first cousin. That provision of the law therefore does not apply. Tucker v. Bellamy, 98 N. C. 31, 4 S. E. 34; Jones v. Hoggard, 108 N. C. 178, 12 S. E. 906, 907. These two special statutes may, therefore, be laid out of the case, and the plaintiff, having no right at common law, is driven to claim under the statute of descents, applicable to illegitimates generally. It is true that she is a legitimate, but she is claiming collaterally from an illegitimate who is not her brother; they being the children, respectively, of an illegitimate brother and an illegitimate sister. Her case must then be brought within the provisions of either rule 9 or rule 10 of chapter 28 of the Code. The first of those rules is as follows: "When there shall be no legitimate issue, every illegitimate child of the mother and the descendant of any such child deceased, shall be considered an heir, and as such shall inherit her estate; but such child or descendant shall not be allowed to claim, as representing such mother, any part of the estate of her kindred, either lineal or collateral."

It is apparent that the rule just quoted refers only to a lineal descent from a mother to her illegitimate child and its descendants, and not to any collateral descent from her kindred to the child as her representative. These are the very words of the act, and the language is too clear and unmistakable for any reasonable doubt as to what is meant. Again, we say, bringing our case to the test of this rule, the plaintiff is not claiming as the illegitimate child of her mother, because, first, she is a legitimate, and, second, she is claiming under a collateral kinsman of her mother. So that, in every possible view, she is excluded from any benefit under that rule. Flintham v. Holder, 16 N. C. 345; McBryde v. Patterson, 78 N. C. 415; Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 N. C. 407. If the plaintiff traces her right to inherit from Austin Greenlee back through her illegitimate father (Adam Bettis) to her grandmother (Matilda Greenlee), and then down from her through her illegitimate daughter (Clarissa Greenlee) to Austin Greenlee, the son of Clarissa, she is equally unfortunate, as such an inheritance is positively forbidden by the last clause of rule 9, which excludes the right to inherit, as the representative of an illegitimate mother, any part of the estate of the latter's kindred, either lineal or collateral; and the right cannot, therefore, be traced beyond the mother, nor through the latter's lineal or collateral kindred. The law breaks the connection at the mother in the ascending line when it is necessary to pursue that in order to reach the propositus, and expressly prohibits any direct lineal or collateral descent but that mentioned in the first clause, namely, from the mother herself to the illegitimate child or the descendant of any such child deceased, and the descent provided for in rule 10 as between illegitimates themselves and from them or their issue, as therein specially provided. Nor do we think that under rule 10 the claim of the plaintiff is rendered any better. She comes within neither its letter nor its reason, and certainly not within the former. This canon declares that: "Illegitimate children shall be considered legitimate as between themselves and their representatives, and their estates shall descend accordingly in the same manner as if they had been born in wedlock. And in case of the death of any such child or his issue, without leaving issue, his estate shall descend to such person as would inherit if all such children had been born in wedlock: Provided, that when any legitimate child shall die without issue, his inheritance shall vest in the mother in the same manner as provided in rule 6 of this chapter." Code, c. 28, § 1281. The illegitimates mentioned in the rule are those who are the children of the same mother, and they inherit as between themselves and their representatives as if they were legitimate. We have no such case as this presented in the record. The plaintiff is not a sister of Austin Greenlee, and therefore has not the same mother, but they are first cousins, being the descendants, respectively, of a brother and a sister. The second branch of the rule also refers to a descent as between brothers and sisters, and utterly excludes the idea that such a descent, as that the plaintiff now claims, was ever contemplated. The proviso to rule 10 cannot, of course, affect the question involved herein.

The plaintiff could not derive any title from Austin Greenlee through his mother, even if she had been living at his death, so as to take from him under the proviso, when considered in connection with the proviso to rule 6.

The plaintiff's counsel, however, strenuously insisted before us that it being admitted Adam Bettis, though illegitimate, was collaterally related to Austin Greenlee, also illegitimate, and there being no other nearer claimant than Malinda Avery, the stepchild of Austin Greenlee, or the child of his deceased widow, if Adam had been white and had survived Austin, he would have been his heir under rule 10 of the canons of descent, giving to illegitimates the rights of legitimates as between themselves and their legal representatives, and the plaintiff consequently would inherit as heir of her deceased father. This was his principal contention, and in support of it he relied upon Tucker v. Tucker, 108 N. C. 238, 13 S. E. 5. A full and sufficient answer to the argument is that rule 10 applies, by its very terms, to illegitimate children, and is intended to affect only inheritances as between them and their representatives. This is clear from the words in the first part of the rule, "Illegitimate children shall be legitimate as between themselves," and their estates shall descend "accordingly," and also from those we find in the latter part, when reference is being made to the death of any such illegitimate child or his issue without leaving issue, and the descent of his estate to such person as would inherit, namely, "If all such children had been born in wedlock"; the said words evidently describing the children as a class who would inherit from each other, with the qualification as to the "issue" of such a child or the "representatives" of such children. The case of Tucker v. Tucker, instead of sustaining the contention of plaintiff's counsel, seems to us to be directly the other way. In that case the court decides that the act of 1879 (Code, § 1281, rule 18) provided for the inheritance of an illegitimate child from both parents, instead of, as formerly, from its mother, "and not collaterally," and then says: "Prior to that act, such children had only the rights of other illegitimates, and, by section 1281 rules 9 and 10, could only inherit from their mother, when there was no legitimate child, and from one another." And again it says: "By virtue of emancipation and the Constitution, the plaintiff has the same rights as any other illegitimates, and, under rule 10, can succeed to the estate of his illegitimate brother."

In no view that we can take of the facts and the law, can the plaintiff recover. She cannot claim under the act of 1866, and she does not present any facts which entitle her to claim under rule 13, as she does not assert title derived directly from either of her parents. She can, then, only rely on rule 9 or rule 10. The reason just given why she cannot claim under rule 13 applies with equal force to any claim under rule 9, and, besides, she is not an illegitimate child, but has been made legitimate by the acts of 1866 and 1879. As to rule 10, she does not claim directly from a brother or sister, or from the issue or heirs of either, but from an illegitimate first cousin. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 N. C. 408, 409. It is well argued in the brief of the defendant's counsel that in Tucker v. Bellamy, 98 N. C. 31, 4 S. E. 34, it was decided there is no statute which enables a niece to inherit from a deceased aunt, who was a slave; and, if that is so, how can a niece inherit from a descendant of such an aunt, unless there is some express provision to that effect? This is the plaintiff's case. It is true we should so construe these acts as to prevent an escheat, which is not favored by our system of laws and as it was the purpose to do so in passing them; but we must still give them a reasonable construction and decide according to their true meaning, regardless of the consequences. Besides, the defendant says there will be no escheat, as she is entitled to the land under rule 8, being the child of the widow of the propositus, Austin Greenlee. We do not say how this is, as it is sufficient to hold that the plaintiff cannot recover. It makes no difference whether the defendant has any title or not, for the plaintiff can succeed only on the strength of her own title as being good against the world or good against the defendant by estoppel. Campbell v. Everhart (at this term) 52 S. E. 201. It may be that the plaintiff's claim should appeal most strongly to our sense of what is just and fair, and also to our sympathy. If this be true, and we do not say that it is, as we cannot pass upon such matters, the law has declared against her, and what the law declares must stand for all that is right without question by us.

The court erred in its judgment, which is reversed, and the case is remanded, with direction to enter a judgment, upon the facts agreed, for the defendant.

Reversed.

(72 S. C. 532)

SEEGERS v. GIBBES, Mayor, et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 17, 1905.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—BOND ISSUES—ELECTIONS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Const. 1895, art. 8, § 5, authorizes cities and towns to acquire and operate waterworks systems. Act March 2, 1896 (Civ. Code, §§ 2008, 2009), authorizes cities and towns to construct and operate waterworks, and to raise funds for that purpose by the issue of bonds when approved by the qualified electors at an election by the municipal authorities. It further provides that at such election commissioners of public works shall be elected to sell and dispose of the bonds and to build and control the waterworks. Act March 9, 1896 (Civ. Code, §§ 2021, 2022), as amended by Act March 2, 1897 (22 St. at Large, p. 453), requires the municipal authorities of any city upon the petition of a majority of the freeholders to order a special election for the purpose of "enlarging, extending, or establishing electric light plants, or other light or water works." Held, that the former act applies only to cities in which there are no waterworks, while the latter act applies to cities which already have a waterworks system, and at an election for the issue of bonds for the purpose of enlarging the system already installed no commissioners of public works need be elected as required by the former act.

2. SAME—CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS.

The amendment to the Constitution of February 8, 1901, which provides that the limitation imposed by the Constitution on the bonded indebtedness of cities shall not apply to indebtedness incurred "by the cities of Columbia * * * where the proceeds of such bonds are applied solely for the purchase * * * of waterworks plants, * * * and by the city of Georgetown, when the proceeds of such bonds are applied solely for the purchase * * * of waterworks plants * * * where the entire revenue arising from the operation of such plants or systems shall be devoted solely and exclusively to the maintenance and operation of the same," does not require the revenue arising from waterworks in the city of Columbia to be devoted solely to the maintenance and operation of such works, but the clause containing that requirement applies only to the city of Georgetown.

3. SAME.

The constitutional amendment of February 8, 1901, which provides that the constitutional limitations imposed by the section which it amends and by Const. art. 4, § 5, shall not apply to the bonded indebtedness incurred by certain cities, where the proceeds of the bonds are applied solely for the purchase and maintenance of waterworks plants, repeals, as to the cities therein mentioned, Const. art. 10, § 5, providing that municipal corporations or political divisions covering the same territory possessing the power to levy a tax and contract a debt shall so exercise the power to increase their debts that the aggregate debt over and above any territory of the state shall never exceed 15 per cent. of the value of all taxable property in such territory.

Petition for injunction by John C. Seegers against T. H. Gibbes, mayor, and others, as aldermen of the city of Columbia. Denied.

The following is so much of the petition as states the material facts:

"(3) That the assessed value of all the taxable property of the city of Columbia for state taxation next preceding the filing of this petition, as appears from the books of the county auditor for Richland county, is $7,836,398.

"(4) That the present bonded indebtedness of the city of Columbia is $925,548, composed as follows: Old bonded city debt, $850,548; waterworks bonds outstanding, $75,000; besides which and in addition thereto, there is now outstanding a contingent liability of the city of Columbia aggregating $162,000, being the unearned interest on $200,000 of canal bonds, the interest coupons of which were guaranteed by the city under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of this state of the 24th December, 1887 (19 St. at Large, p. 1097), which said act authorized and requires the levy of a sufficient tax to promptly pay the same, and which tax, together with the other taxes of the city, shall not exceed 2 per cent. of the assessed value of the property of the city in any one year. That under the powers contained in the act to incorporate the board of trustees of the Columbia Canal, and for other purposes connected therewith (19 St. at Large, p. 1090) the said board issued $200,000 6 per cent. bonds (the coupons of which are guaranteed by the city as aforesaid), and secured the same by a mortgage upon the said canal and appurtenances and the lands held therewith; and under the powers contained in the act amendatory thereto of December 24, 1890 (20 St. at Large, p. 967) sold and conveyed the Columbia Canal before the same was completed to the Columbia Water Power Company, subject to all the contract liabilities and obligations made and entered into by the said board prior to such sale and transfer, amongst which obligations was that of paying the interest coupons on said canal bonds promptly as they should mature, and the said water power company, in addition thereto and as security for the prompt payment of the said coupons, has deposited with the National Loan & Exchange Bank of the city of Columbia $18,000 West Shore Railroad Co. 4 per cent. gold bonds, maturing in the year 2361, guaranteed by the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., with interest coupons attached, payable semiannually.

"(5) That the territory embraced within the city of Columbia is comprised within the territorial limits of Columbia township, a corporate political subdivision of this state, and the assessed value of all taxable property in Columbia township outside the limits of the city, as appears from the county duplicate of Richland county, is $2,375,473, making, together with the property within the city, a total of $10,211,877; and the said Columbia township now has an outstanding bonded indebtedness of $19,700, against which there is now held in the hands of the sinking fund commissioners for Richland county and applicable to the payment thereof the sum of $12,640.27, leaving a balance unprovided for of $7,059.73. That the said $12,640.27 in the hands of the sinking fund commissioners, as aforesaid, is the balance of the proceeds of the tax levied upon the property of the said township annually for the purpose of paying the interest and meeting and retiring the said bonds.

"(6) That the city of Columbia is now the owner of and operating a waterworks plant and system, but the same has become inadequate to supply the needs of the city, and on the 11th day of April, 1905, a petition duly signed by a majority of the freeholders of the said city, as shown by the tax books of the said city, was presented to the city council of said city, asking that an election be ordered, submitting to the qualified electors of the said city the question: 'Whether for the purpose of enlarging, extending and repairing its waterworks, waterworks system and plant, the city shall issue coupon bonds, as provided by law, to the amount of $400,000, or so much thereof as may be legally issued by the said city.'

"(7) In accordance with and pursuant to the said petition of freeholders, and under the provisions of the act of assembly of March 9, 1896, and acts amendatory thereto, being now section 2021 of the Code of Civil Laws of this state, the city council of the city of Columbia, in council assembled, by resolution ordered the said election, and requested and authorized the commissioners of election of Richland county to conduct the same according to law; and thereafter the said commissioners of election, prior to said election, published due notice of said election, as required by law, for the 9th May, 1905, in 'The State' and 'The Record,' two daily papers published in the city of Columbia.

"(8) That the said election was duly held on the 9th May, 1905, and a majority of the voters voting at said election voted in favor of the issue of said bonds, as petitioner is informed and believes, and the result is about to be so declared by said city council by ordinance, and in pursuance of said election the city council are preparing to issue and are about to issue $400,000 coupon bonds for the purposes aforesaid, and to deliver the same to its waterworks commission for said purpose.

"(9) Your petitioner, upon information and belief, alleges that the said election is illegal and void, and not sufficient to authorize the issue of any bonds, for the reason: (a) That no 'Commissioner of Public Works' was voted for or elected at said election, as is provided for in section 2009 of volume 1, of the Civil Code of Laws of South Carolina. (b) Petitioner is informed and believes the city of Columbia and the said city council do not intend to devote the entire revenue of its waterworks as enlarged, extended and repaired as contemplated, solely and exclusively to the maintenance and operation of the same; whereas, your petitioner submits that by the constitutional amendment of 1901 their doing so is made a condition of the exercise of the power to issue bonds therein referred to, and your petitioner further submits that said city and city council should be required to do so.

"(10) Your petitioner is informed and believes that the city council of Columbia are without authority to issue $400,000 worth of bonds for the purposes aforesaid, for the reason that: (a) $400,000, in addition to the present bonded debt of the city, including the guaranty on the canal bonds of the coupons thereof, and the proportion of the bonded debt of Columbia township chargeable to its taxable property within the city, will contravene section 5 of article 10 of the Constitution of this state, in that it will exceed 15 per cent. of the taxable property within the limits of the city. (b) The city council of Columbia claims that the amendment of 1901 to section 7 of article 8 of the Constitution, which is as follows: 'Provided, that the limitations imposed by this section and by section 5, art. 4, of this Constitution, shall not apply to bonded indebtedness incurred by the cities of Columbia, Rock Hill, Charleston and Florence, where the proceeds of said bonds are applied solely for the purpose, establishment, maintenance or increase of waterworks plans, sewerage system; and by the city of Georgetown, when the proceeds of said bonds are applied solely for the purchase, establishment, maintenance or increase of waterworks plant or sewerage system, gas and electric light plants, where the entire revenue arising from the operation of such plants or systems shall be devoted solely and exclusively to the maintenance and operation of the same, and where the question of incurring such indebtedness is submitted to the freeholders and qualified voters of such municipality, as provided in the Constitution, upon the question of other bonded indebtedness,' in repealing the 8 per cent. limitation as to the said cities, where the increase of bonded indebtedness is for the purpose therein specified, carried with it and also repealed by necessary implication the 15 per cent. limitation provided in section 5, art. 10, as to the said cities, where the increase of bonded indebtedness is for said purposes; whereas, your petitioner submits that said 15 per cent. limitation is wholly unaffected by said amendment repealing said 8 per cent. limitation as aforesaid, and that same still remains in full force as to said cities, even when the proposed increase is for the purposes aforesaid. (c) The said city council also claims that the clause in said amendments, 'where the entire revenue arising from the operation of such plants or systems shall be devoted solely and exclusively to the maintenance and operation of the same,' applies only to the city of Georgetown, whereas, your petitioner submits that it also applies to the other cities named in said amendment, including the city of Columbia; and further submits that, inasmuch as the city of Columbia does not intend that the entire revenue of its waterworks as enlarged, extended and repaired, as contemplated, shall be devoted exclusively to such uses, the said city has no power to increase its bonded indebtedness to any amount under the terms of said amendment.

"(11) Your petitioner submits that under a proper construction of section 7 of article 8, as amended, and section 5 of article 10, of the Constitution, the city of Columbia, if otherwise authorized to do so, has power to issue only $75,097 of bonds for the purposes aforesaid, as is shown by the following table:

Taxable property of the city is $7,336,398 15 per cent. of which is.....	$1,175,459 70
Old bonded debt of the city..	$350,548 00
Waterworks bonds	75,000 00
Proportion debt of Columbia township	12,815 00
Outstanding guaranteed interest coupon canal bonds..	162,000 00
	1,100,323 00
Balance	$75,097 70

"(12) That your petitioner is informed and believes that the said city council will issue bonds to the amount of $400,000, unless restrained by the order of this court.

"Wherefore, he prays that the respondents and the city of Columbia be perpetually restrained and enjoined from issuing any bonds in excess of the said sum of $75,097.70, and from delivering the same to its waterworks commission, and for such other and further relief as may be just, and your petitioner will ever pray," etc.

The return to the rule herein is as follows:

"(1) They admit the allegations of the first eight paragraphs of the petition, and also the allegation of paragraph 12 thereof.

"(2) Answering paragraph 9, they admit that no commissioners of public works were voted for or elected at said election, as alleged in said paragraph, but submit that the same is not necessary nor required for the validity of said election, for the reason said election was held under the provisions of sections 2021 and 2022 of the Civil Code of Laws of South Carolina, being an act entitled 'An act to authorize special elections in any incorporated city or town in this state for the purpose of issuing bonds for corporate purposes,' approved 9th March, 1896 (22 St. at Large, p. 88), and acts amendatory thereof—which does not require the election of commissioners of public works at such special election; and was not held under the provisions of sections 2008, 2009, of said Code, being the act entitled 'An act to authorize all cities and towns to build, equip and operate a system of water works and electric lights, and to issue bonds to meet costs of same,' approved 2d March, 1896 (22 St. at Large, p. 83), as alleged in the petition; and further, respondents allege the said city of Columbia is now, and was prior to the passage of the act of 2d March, 1896, the owner of and operating a system of waterworks and plant under the provisions of its charter, and already had and still has its duly elected and qualified waterworks commission, composed of five citizens, electors and freeholders of the city, under whose care and supervision the best source of water supply, plans and specifications for the repair, enlargement and extension of the waterworks plant and system have been procured and matured, and for the carrying out of which said bonds were voted and are now about to be issued and turned over to said commission. Further answering paragraph 9, they admit they do not intend to devote the entire revenue arising from the operation of its waterworks system to the maintenance and operation thereof, for the reason that the same would be more than sufficient for this purpose, but they do intend to so devote so much thereof as may be necessary. But they allege that under the amendment of 1801 to section 7 of article 8 of the Constitution, the provision that 'the entire revenue arising from the operating of said plants or systems shall be devoted solely to the maintenance and operation of the same' relates only to the city of Georgetown, and not to the other cities named therein.

"(3) Answering paragraph 10, they allege that under the facts alleged in the petition they are by the Constitution and laws of this state vested with full power and authority to issue $400,000 of bonds for waterworks purposes, for the reason: That in the absence of constitutional or statutory limitations, municipal corporations have the inherent power to contract debts to any amount for a proper public corporate purpose; that the limitation of 8 per cent. of the value of its taxable property as valued for state taxation, contained in section 7 of article 8, and section 5 of article 10, of the Constitution of this state, is a limitation upon this power; and the provisions in section 5, of article 10, providing: 'Whenever there shall be several political divisions or municipal corporations covering or extending over the same territory or portions thereof possessing a power to levy a tax or contract a debt, then each of such political subdivisions or municipal corporations shall so exercise its power to increase its debt under the foregoing eight per cent. limitation that the aggregate debt over and upon any territory of this state shall never exceed fifteen per centum of the value of all taxable property in such territory as valued for taxation by the state'—is a restriction upon the exercise of the power under said 8 per cent. limitation. And when, by the adoption and ratification of the amendments to article 8, § 7, the 8 per cent. limit was removed for the city of Columbia, the restriction upon the exercise of the limit imposed by the 8 per cent. clause necessarily fell with it; and they insist that under the amendment the city of Columbia has power to issue bonds for the purpose named under the conditions named to the full extent authorized by the election.

"(5) Answering paragraph 11, they allege that, even if the 15 per cent. restriction contained in section 5 of article 10 of the Constitution of 1895 applies, notwithstanding said amendment of section 7 of article 8 (which they deny), the amount of bonds as stated in the petition which the city is authorized to issue must be enlarged by the addition thereto of the items $162,000 unearned guaranteed canal coupon bonds, and by $7,398.57, the difference between $541,649, the proportion of the bonded debt of Columbia township properly chargeable to the city territory, and $12,815, the amount improperly charged in the statement in the petition, for the reasons: (a) The guaranty of the city on the interest coupons is now but a contingent liability fully secured by the mortgage property and the deposit of the water power company, and is not a bonded debt, within the meaning of the Constitution. (b) Even if such liability is to be deemed a part of its bonded debt, the amount with reference to the constitutional limitation of indebtedness should not be regarded as the aggregate of the interest coupons to the maturity of said bonds, but only such amount as according to the principle of the standard annuity tables would yield at 6 per cent. $12,000 per annum for 13½ years (the period to maturity of the bonds), to wit, the sum of $111,540. (c) The $12,640.27 now in the hands of the Sinking Fund Commission for Richland county is the accumulations from the annual taxes levied under the acts of the Legislature for the purpose of creating a sinking fund for payment of these bonds before they mature, and when they mature, which under the law is solely applicable to the retirement of the said township bonds and in contemplation of law, will never again have to be collected by taxation; therefore the $7,060, the amount now unprovided for by taxes collected, is the proper outstanding bonded debt of Columbia township, upon which the proportion should be estimated, and not $19,700 as shown by said tables. Respondents therefore submit that in any event they should not be restricted to an issue less than $244,495, or $182,955."

J. S. Muller, for petitioner. H. N. Edmunds and Allen J. Green, for respondents.

WOODS, J. This proceeding in the original jurisdiction of this court was brought by the petitioner, John C. Seegers, a taxpayer and freeholder of the city of Columbia, on behalf of himself and all others in like situation who will come in and share the expense of the cause, to enjoin the city council from issuing bonds for a greater amount than $75,097.70 for the purpose of enlarging, extending, and repairing the city waterworks; the allegation being that the council is about to issue illegally $400,000 of bonds for that purpose. The facts are not in dispute, and they are fully set out in the petition and answer.

1. The petition first charges that the statute under which the election was held to authorize the issue of bonds to the amount of $400,000 required that "commissioners of public works" should be voted for, and as no such officers were elected the entire election was illegal, and the issue of the bonds would be without authority. The act of March 2, 1896 (Civ. Code, §§ 2008, 2009), authorizes cities and towns to construct and operate waterworks, and to raise funds for that purpose by the issue of bonds, but requires such bond issue to be approved beforehand by the qualified electors at an election held by the municipal authorities. This act requires that at such election three citizens shall be elected "commissioners of public works," who are vested with authority to sell and dispose of the bonds, and to build, operate, and control the waterworks. It will not be doubted, if the election is to be referred to this statute, the failure to elect the commissioners of public works would invalidate the election, because without these officers the whole scheme contemplated by the act would be defeated. This act relates to the construction, purchase, and operation of waterworks and electric light plants, and obviously was intended to carry into effect section 5 of article 8 of the Constitution of 1895, which is as follows: "Cities and towns may acquire, by construction or purchase, and may operate water works systems and plants for furnishing lights, and may furnish water and lights to individuals, firms and private corporations for reasonable compensation: Provided, that no such construction or purchase shall be made except upon a majority vote of the electors in said cities or towns who are qualified to vote on the bonded indebtedness of said cities or towns." On the 9th day of March, 1896, another act was passed (Civ. Code, §§ 2021, 2022), which provided: "That it shall be the duty of the municipal authorities of any incorporated city or town of this state, upon the petition of a majority of the freeholders of said city or town, as shown by its tax books, to order a special election in any such city or town for the purpose of issuing bonds for any corporate purpose set forth in said petition: Provided, that the aggregate bonded indebtedness of any city or town shall never exceed eight per centum of the assessed value of the taxable property therein." 22 St. at Large, p. 88. No mention is made in this act of the former statute of March 2, 1896, above recited, though it had been passed only seven days before. This last statute of March 9, 1896, was subsequently amended (Act March 2, 1897, 22 St. at Large, p. 453), and at the time of the election here under consideration the portion material to this discussion read as follows: "It shall be the duty of the municipal authorities of any incorporated city or town of this state, upon the petition of a majority of the freeholders of said city or town, as shown by its tax books, to order a special election in any such city or town for the purpose of issuing bonds for the purchasing, repairing or improving of city or town hall, or park or grounds therefor, markets and guard house, enlarging, extending or establishing electric light plants or other lights, or water works, or sewerage, erecting, repairing or altering school buildings, fire protection purposes, improvement of streets and sidewalks, or any corporate purpose set forth in said petition: Provided, that the aggregate bonded indebtedness of any city or town shall never exceed eight per centum of the assessed value of the taxable property therein." Civ. Code, § 2021. This act contains no requirement for the election of commissioners of public works.

By referring to the portions of the Constitution and statutes we have italicized, it will be seen the statute first enacted was intended to provide for the construction and operation of waterworks and electric light plants where none had existed, and it was therefore reasonable that the General Assembly should require the election of commissioners of public works—new officers to take charge of a new municipal enterprise. The distinct characteristic of the latter act is that it provides for the issue of bonds, not only for establishing, but for enlarging or extending, waterworks and other public works. When these public works are already in existence under the management of municipal officers already provided, there would be far less, if any, reason at all, to require a complete change of administration upon their enlargement or extension. It may be, as far as these acts are in pari materia, that is, as far as they both relate to the establishment of waterworks, they must be construed as one act, and that the later act would not justify the issue of bonds for the construction and operation of waterworks where none had been in operation before, in pursuance of an election which did not include the choice of commissioners of public works. But that is not the question here, for the city of Columbia already has waterworks in operation and under the management of its municipal officers, and, although the site and mechanical construction may be entirely new, there would still be nothing more than the enlargement or extension of a specific public enterprise already in existence and in operation. The act of March 2, 1896, has no application, and the act of March 9, 1896, as amended, to which the election must be referred, does not require the election of commissioners of public works.

2. It is next contended the bond issue will be illegal because "the city of Columbia and the said city council do not intend to devote the entire revenue of its waterworks as enlarged, extended and repaired, as contemplated, solely and exclusively to the maintenance and operation of the same." The provision of the Constitution on which the petitioner relies as requiring the city of Columbia to devote the entire revenue of its waterworks to the purposes mentioned is so obviously limited in its application to the city of Georgetown that it is only necessary to quote the amendment itself to make the point clear: "Provided, that the limitation imposed by this section and by section 5, article 4, of this Constitution, shall not apply to bonded indebtedness incurred by the cities of Columbia, Rock Hill, Charleston and Florence, where the proceeds of said bonds are applied solely for the purchase, establishment, maintenance or increase of water works plants, sewerage system; and by the city of Georgetown, when the proceeds of said bonds are applied solely for the purchase, establishment, maintenance or increase of water works plant or sewerage system, gas and electric light plants, where the entire revenue arising from the operation of such plants or systems shall be devoted solely and exclusively to the maintenance and operation of the same, and where the question of incurring such indebtedness is submitted to the freeholders and qualified voters of such municipality, as provided in the Constitution, upon the question of other bonded indebtedness." If the intention had been to place Georgetown and the other cities mentioned upon the same footing as to the conditions upon which the municipal debt could be increased beyond 8 per cent. of the value of the taxable property, and the purposes to which the proceeds of the bonds and the earnings of the public works should be applied, respect for the intelligence of the framers of the amendment requires us to think they would have merely placed the word "Georgetown" after "Florence," and omitted what would have been the useless repetition of many words. The plain meaning is the city of Georgetown is allowed to exceed the 8 per cent. limit for gas and electric light plants, as well as for waterworks and sewerage, while the excess as to the other cities is restricted to waterworks and sewerage; and, on the other hand, Georgetown is restricted in the use of the revenue arising from these public enterprises to their maintenance and operation, while the other cities are not so restricted.

The petitioner next contends that, though the amendment to the Constitution last above quoted allows the city of Columbia to incur a bonded debt exceeding 8 per cent. of the taxable property of the city itself, the amendment did not affect the following provisions of section 5, art. 10, of the Constitution: "And wherever there shall be several political divisions or municipal corporations covering or extending over the territory, or portions thereof, possessing a power to levy a tax or contract a debt, then each of such political divisions or municipal corporations shall so exercise its power to increase its debt under the foregoing eight per cent. limitation that the aggregate debt over and upon any territory of this state shall never exceed fifteen per centum of the value of all taxable property in such territory as valued for taxation by the state. * * *" It is admitted, if this limitation of 15 per cent. is unaffected by the amendment, the issue of $400,000 of bonds would be illegal, as the aggregate debt of the "several political divisions or municipal corporations" covering the territory embraced in the city of Columbia would exceed 15 per cent. of the taxable property of such territory. But for the unfortunate slip in making the amendment of February 8, 1901, already quoted, apply to section 5, art. 4, which relates to an entirely different subject, instead of to section 5, art. 10, this question could not arise, for "the limitation" removed as to the amount of the bonded debt of the city of Columbia and other cities mentioned would have referred obviously to the 15 per cent. limitation, as well as to the 8 per cent. limitation; both being mentioned in that section. It must be confessed this mistake has given rise to doubt and confusion. The amendment by its terms, nevertheless, removed the 8 per cent. limitation as to the cities mentioned, because that limitation is provided in section 7, art. 8, which is expressly referred to in the amendment, and hence section 5, art. 10, was inconsistent with the amendment, as far as it provided for an 8 per cent. limitation, and this 8 per cent. limitation there repeated necessarily was also taken away. Bray v. City Council of Florence, 62 S. C. 57, 39 S. E. 810. It is true the 15 per cent. limitation might operate without the 8 per cent. limitation, but the terms of section 5, art. 10, under discussion, indicated these limitations were intended to operate together, the former to be a restriction on the latter; and hence we think the reasonable view is that they fell together. If the 15 per cent. limitation should be held in force, notwithstanding the repeal of the 8 per cent. limitation, the result would be that one municipal corporation could, by contracting a bonded indebtedness amounting to 15 per cent. of its taxable property, exclude another municipal corporation or political division of the state limited to the same territory from incurring any bonded indebtedness whatever, however great might be the necessity. To illustrate: A city coterminous with a school district might issue bonds to the amount of 15 per cent. of the taxable property of the common territory, and thus forever prevent the issue of bonds by the school district, though the necessity might be ever so great. The repeal of the 8 per cent. limitation defeated the original constitutional scheme as to the cities mentioned for the limitation of municipal indebtedness, of which the 15 per cent. limitation was a part. Even, however, if it be considered the mistake in the enactment of the constitutional amendment made this question a knot which cannot be untied, in cutting it we have effected the manifest purpose that the amendment was intended to serve.

The conclusions reached as to the questions herein discussed make the consideration of the other questions presented unnecessary. The judgment of the court denying the petition has already been filed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(73 S. C. 491.)

BROCK et al. v. KIRKPATRICK et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina, Oct. 10, 1905. On Rehearing, Oct. 30, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—SPECULATIVE EXCEPTION.

After trial and verdict rendered in favor of plaintiff, an exception by him to an order transferring the cause to the calendar for the trial of legal issues is speculative, and will not be reviewed.

2. SAME—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

An exception to a refusal to sustain a demurrer to so much of defendant's answer as sets up a certain defense cannot be sustained, where such demurrer had already been sustained by another judge on the ground that the facts stated in the answer were insufficient, reserving further consideration when sufficient facts were stated, and no amendment had been made.

3. JUDGMENT—PERSONS CONCLUDED—EXECUTORS AND DEVISEES.

Where a judgment was obtained on a note against an executor, and was acknowledged by him in his accounting on his final discharge, allowed as a claim against the state, and enrolled in the probate court as a judgment, on which judgment execution issued, it is binding on the estate, and the creditor, and is prima facie evidence in a suit by the creditor to subject lands of devisees to the payment of the debt without production of the note.

4. WILLS—DEBTS OF TESTATOR—ACTION TO ENFORCE—LACHES.

Where testator died in 1888, and within the year the executor converted the personality into money, and in 1890 an action was commenced on a note of testator in the common pleas, and judgment obtained in 1891, and lands in possession of devisees were levied on, but no sale was made, and proceedings to construe the will and for an accounting were begun in the probate court in 1890; in which proceeding judgment was rendered in 1892, and in 1893, on an allowance of the judgment of the court of common pleas in the probate court, execution issued from such court and was levied on the same land, and an injunction was obtained in an action commenced in 1893 against the enforcement of such levy, which injunction was made permanent in 1898, without prejudice, to bring an action to subject the lands devised to the debt, an action begun in 1899 held not barred by laches.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; J. E. McDonald, Special Judge.

Action by L. A. and T. H. Brock, partners, against Hannah Kirkpatrick and Annie Taylor. From the Circuit decree, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

See 48 S. E. 72.

Wm. N. Graydon, for appellants. M. P. DeBruhl and Frank B. Gary, for respondents.

SHAND, A. A. J. This is an action by L. A. and T. H. Brock, partners, against Hannah Kirkpatrick and Annie Taylor, devisees of Jane Taylor, deceased, to subject lands devised to them and in their possession to the payment of a debt due the plaintiffs by Jane Taylor at the time of her death. Jane Taylor gave to plaintiffs on 27th April, 1888, her promissory note for $109.90, payable at one day, with annual interest at 10 per cent. The maker of this note died in December, 1888, leaving this note wholly unpaid. Soon thereafter her will was duly proved, and Richard T. Kirkpatrick duly qualified as executor. She left a personal estate of about $1,200, and several tracts of land, all but two of which she had previously conveyed to her several children, these two defendants excepted, but these deeds seem not to have been delivered, and were recorded after her death. Of the two tracts not so intended to be conveyed, she directed one of 210 acres to be sold by her executor, and divided the other of 450 acres into two parcels, one of which, containing 200 acres, she devised to Hannah Kirkpatrick, and the other, containing 250 acres, to Annie Taylor. It is these two parcels that plaintiffs seek to subject to the payment of their claim against testator. In 1889, the executor of Jane Taylor's will made sale of her personal effects, realizing therefrom $940.50, collected $211.75 on debts due testator, and purchased himself at public outcry the 210-acre tract for $800. Of the personalty sold for $940.50 the legatees purchased to the amount of $743.91; Hannah Kirkpatrick's purchases aggregating $166.97, and Annie Taylor's $83.29. These amounts were never paid by the devisees, but were charged against their interests. Soon after the purchase of the land by the executor he resold it for $1,200, of which $800 was in notes secured by a mortgage of the premises. The executor subsequently, about 1890, sold these notes and mortgage to the plaintiffs, who paid him therefor, and thereafter recovered judgment of foreclosure on the mortgage. A statement made by the probate judge in 1895 indicates that the debts due by testator at the time of her death amounted to less than $925, and the subsequent expenses of administration, not including commissions, to $221.65. In this statement the executor was charged with $1,200 for the tract of land sold by him. In August, 1890, Mary Hughes and others, legatees and devisees of Jane Taylor, commenced a proceeding in the court of probate against the executor and other beneficiaries under the will of testatrix for the settlement of the estate. Creditors were not made parties. This case came to this court at the April term of 1892. See 37 S. C. 161, 15 S. E. 912. On December 3, 1890, the plaintiffs brought their action against R. T. Kirkpatrick, as executor of Jane Taylor, on the note for $109.90 given by her to plaintiffs on 27th April, 1888. Judgment by default was entered 6th February, 1891, for $125.56, and costs. Execution was issued same day, and was levied 5th November, 1891, on the 200 acres devised to Hannah Kirkpatrick as the lands of Jane Taylor, deceased. No sale was made under this levy. A like levy was again made on this same land on 16th September, 1893. Thereupon Hannah Kirkpatrick commenced her action against L. A. and T. H. Brock and the sheriff to enjoin a sale under this levy, alleging, among other things, her exclusive possession of this land since her mother's death, the possession by the testatrix at her death of other property sufficient to pay all of her debts, and the pendency of the case of Hughes v. Kirkpatrick. Mr. Justice McGowan granted a temporary injunction on 23d September, 1893, which was continued by Judge Wallace on 11th October, and made perpetual by Judge Klugh by an order which bears no date, as printed in the "case" for appeal; but Judge McDonald says this order was made in October, 1898. This last order, however, was made "without prejudice to any rights which defendants have to bring an action for the purpose of subjecting plaintiff's said land to the payment of the said debt evidenced by said judgment." Meantime, on 28th February, 1893, the probate judge, in the case of Hughes v. Kirkpatrick, had declared that the executor was insolvent, and directed him to turn over all the uncollected assets of the estate, and that all persons indebted should pay their debts into the probate court. And on 20th February, 1895, on petition by the executor for a discharge, the probate court fixed 21st March as the day for a hearing, and notice was duly published. The act (Code Civ. Proc. § 41) requires a publication of this notice to be for "at least one month." This means a calendar month, and therefore from 21st February to 21st March is "one month," within the meaning of the statute. Williamson v. Farrow, 1 Bailey, 615, 21 Am. Dec. 492; Sheets v. Selden's Lessee, 2 Wall. 189, 17 L. Ed. 822; Story Prom. Notes, § 213. On the day appointed the executor, with his attorney, appeared. The judge of probate took up the matter, recited the proceedings and adjudications in the case of Hughes v. Kirkpatrick, and made a statement of receipts and disbursements by the executor, adding interest charges and deducting commissions, and making statement of the claims outstanding against the estate, including "judgment of L. A. and T. H. Brock, $141.81, interest on $128.56 from February 6, 1891, $35.80—$177.61."

The probate judge on 6th April, 1895, made a certified transcript of the claims allowed by him in the proceedings before him on 21st March, filed the same on the docket of judgments in his office and a transcript in the office of the clerk of the court of common pleas for Abbeville county, and on the same day issued his execution for these several amounts. Code Civ. Proc. § 69. One week thereafter a return of nulla bona was made by the sheriff on this execution. No return of nulla bona was ever made on the former execution issued from the court of common pleas. Four years afterwards, on 21st April, 1899, the plaintiffs commenced this action against Hannah Kirkpatrick and Annie Taylor to subject to the payment of plaintiff's debt the two parcels of land devised to the defendants. They alleged the judgment recovered by them in the court of probate on a debt of the testator, upon which they had previously recovered a judgment in the court of common pleas, the issue of execution by the probate court and the return of nulla bona thereon, the death of Jane Taylor, the qualification of her executor, the devise to defendants, their possession of the land, and that the plaintiffs had made every effort, but without success, to recover from the executor. The complaint invited other creditors to join with plaintiffs in this action. To this complaint the defendants answered, and at the hearing moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Plaintiffs also demurred to certain of the defenses set up by the answer. These pleadings are fully printed in 60 S. C., at pages 322, 328, 38 S. E. 779, 85 Am. St. Rep. 847. The case was heard by Judge Gage on these demurrers. His decree and the judgment of this court on appeal settled these points: (1) That the complaint alleged, not only the judgment, but also, sufficiently, the note which had been sued to judgment, so that defendants could plead any defense to which the note was subject; (2) that it was not an action on a judgment, and therefore leave to sue was not necessary; (3) that plaintiffs had the right to have their debt paid out of any assets of testatrix without regard to a consequent derangement of testatrix's intended distribution; (4) that plaintiffs had the right to seek a recovery on their claim, either under action against the executor individually or against these defendants as devisees; (5) that the statute of limitations did not begin to run in favor of defendants under this action until a return of nulla bona on an execution issued to enforce the judgment obtained against the executor of the testatrix, and that the lands of testatrix in the possession of these defendants were not leviable under this execution. The question of homestead raised by the answer was left open, and seems not to have been again urged.

The case next came up before Judge Townsend, under order submitting the issue of title to a jury for trial, and on appeal to this court it was again held that the statute of limitations commenced to run in favor of defendants only from a return of nulla bona on execution issued to enforce the judgment alleged to have been entered against the executor. It was also held that there was no issue of title involved requiring a trial by jury as matter of right; the action being purely equitable. See 69 S. C. 231, 48 S. E. 72. The case was returned to the circuit court, where testimony was taken before the master under an order of reference to hear and decide all equitable issues. The several judgments and proceedings above stated were introduced in evidence, and there was some oral testimony, but the original note of Jane Taylor was not produced nor loss of it proved. L. W. Perrin, Esq., the master, reported: (1) That the probate court had jurisdiction to render the judgment of 6th April, 1895, in favor of L. A. and T. H. Brock against R. T. Kirkpatrick, as executor; (2) that, the note not having been produced, no valid debt against the testatrix had been established, the judgments against the executor not being evidence of such indebtedness as against the devisees; (3) that plaintiffs had not lost their rights in this action by reason of their laches. The correctness of these findings and of the reasons of the master therefor was questioned by numerous exceptions taken by both plaintiffs and defendants. Upon these exceptions the case was heard at the regular term of court for Abbeville county, in October, 1904; Hon. J. E. McDonald, special judge, presiding. In a very carefully prepared decree, and with a full consideration of authorities, Judge McDonald overruled the master's first ruling, sustained the second, and overruled the third, thus decreeing that there was no valid judgment by the probate court on 6th April, 1895, that the debt was not proved, and that plaintiffs, by laches, had lost their right of action. He therefore gave judgment dismissing the complaint. From this judgment the plaintiffs have appealed to this court. We agree with Judge McDonald "that all of the issues raised by the pleadings, which were not necessarily and specifically passed upon by the Supreme Court on the two appeals herein," were still open for adjudication by him.

1. The first exception by plaintiffs is to an order of Judge Klugh ordering the case transferred to calendar 1 for the purpose of trying the plea of adverse possession set up in the answer of defendants. As this trial has been had, and a verdict rendered in favor of plaintiffs, it is now, at plaintiffs' instance, a speculative question, and, besides, comes too late after the hearing on the former appeal. See Brock v. Kirkpatrick, 69 S. C. 231, 235, 48 S. E. 72.

2. The exception as to Judge Klugh's refusal to sustain plaintiffs' demurrer to so much of defendants' answer as set up the right of homestead cannot be sustained, for the reason that such demurrer had been already sustained by Judge Gage to the claim, on the grounds that the facts as stated in the answer were not sufficient, reserving further consideration when sufficient facts were stated. No amendment to this defense has ever been made.

The first exception to Judge McDonald's decree complains that the circuit judge erred in saying that the Hughes Case was begun in the court of common pleas, whereas it was in the court of probate. This was an inadvertent misstatement, which in no way affects the judgment. The remaining 34 exceptions will all be disposed of in the further consideration of this appeal.

3. It has been already adjudicated in this case that plaintiffs' right of action against the devisees arose on return of nulla bona. A return of nulla bona that would authorize action can be made only on execution issued to enforce a valid judgment in favor of plaintiffs. It is conceded that the only return of nulla bona was made on execution from the probate court. Where that court has rendered a valid judgment, and it has been duly transcribed and entered in his court and in the court of common pleas of the county—all of which was done in this case—an execution may be issued by the probate judge, directed to the sheriff, to enforce the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 69. So that the existence of a valid return in this case depends upon the validity of the probate court judgment. That judgment does not purport to have been rendered in the case of Hughes v. Kirkpatrick, as appellants contend, but in an ex parte proceeding for settlement and discharge instituted by the executor, at the hearing of which no one was present except himself and his attorney. It is true that the probate judge states the case of Hughes v. Kirkpatrick, but only as a recital of the principles established in that case, and as his guide in making this final settlement. It has been held by this court that a creditor cannot bring action in the court of probate for the mere recovery of his debt. Haley v. Thames, 30 S. C. 270, 9 S. E. 110. Also, that a claim presented and allowed in a proceeding in the court of probate to sell land in aid of assets, which necessarily involves the ascertainment of personal assets and liabilities, the administrators and heirs being parties by summons served, and creditors being called in, is a binding judgment. Dyson v. Jones, 65 S. C. 308, 43 S. E. 667. Does the same principle apply to the determination by the probate court in this case that the estate of Jane Taylor was indebted to these plaintiffs for the amount stated in the ex parte proceeding on 21st March, 1895? We think it does, so far as plaintiffs and executor are concerned. By law the executor is required to call upon all creditors to present their claims against the estate for settlement. Whether he did so or not, and whether these plaintiffs presented to him their note or a copy of it duly verified within the year, does not appear. But it was afterwards presented by summons and complaint against the executor, and judgment rendered thereon in the court of common pleas. Thereafter the executor and plaintiffs were estopped from disputing the debt or the amount of it as ascertained by that judgment. When, therefore, the executor applied for his discharge, he was bound to render an account, and on such accounting to include this judgment as a liability of the estate, established by the judgment of the court of common pleas—a claim, the amount of which these plaintiffs were estopped from disputing. In passing upon the account so admitted it was the duty of the probate court, under its constitutional "jurisdiction in all matters testamentary and of administration," to allow it as a valid indebtedness, and to so adjudicate, and this was done. Such adjudication in this case was not invalid for insufficiency of form and statement. Bankhead v. Good, 56 S. C. 393, 34 S. E. 689. This statement of indebtedness, however, was of no effect as against the devisees of Jane Taylor, who were not parties to the proceeding. But it was an ascertainment and allowance of a debt against the executor, and through him against the estate which he represented, because an adjudication that the estate of testatrix was indebted to plaintiffs on the debt presented by him to the extent that they made claim thereon, and the benefit of which they could therefore assert and enforce.

We find no decision in the courts of this state which has precisely ruled upon this question, and in its consideration we have limited ourselves to the facts of this case—a claim due by testatrix in her lifetime, established against her estate by judgment duly obtained against her executor, presented by the executor to the probate judge on statement made by executor of assets and liabilities on his ex parte application for final discharge, and the allowance by the probate judge in specific amount of judgment as a debt due by the estate, followed by formal judgment of the probate court in favor of plaintiffs and execution thereon. We do not consider the claim of any other creditor, because no other creditor has properly made himself a party to this action. The duties of an executor are to collect personal assets, pay debts and their legacies. He is required to publish a notice to creditors to present their claims to him duly verified. The probate court has "jurisdiction in all matters testamentary and of administration." The executor is authorized to apply to the probate court for a final discharge, but must then account for all his receipts and disbursements, and, if legatees are to be affected, must make a statement of all outstanding debts which have been presented to him and unpaid. The judge of the probate court must pass upon the correctness of every item of this return. And, as against debts due by his testatrix in her lifetime, the executor represents the estate and occupies an adversary position towards the creditors. And the claim in this case against the deceased having been already reduced to judgment at the instance of the plaintiffs and by the default of the executor, and such judgment then allowed as a debt due by the estate, and enrolled as a judgment, it became a judgment of the probate court against the personal estate of testatrix, of which the plaintiffs, who presented the claim, could avail themselves, the sufficiency of which in amount they were estopped from denying. O'Brien v. Heeney, 2 Edw. Ch. 245. To the facts of this case the principle decided in Dyson v. Jones, 65 S. C. 308, 43 S. E. 667, should be extended. This ruling is in accordance with the decision made in some other courts, where the constitutional and statutory provisions are substantially the same as those of this state. Carter v. Engles, 35 Ark. 205; Tate v. Norton, 94 U. S. 746, 24 L. Ed. 222; Mason v. Bair, 33 Ill. 206; Mitchell v. Mayo, 16 Ill. 84; Ford v. Newcomer, 14 La. Ann. 707; Johnson v. Waters, 111 U. S. 671, 4 Sup. Ct. 619, 28 L. Ed. 547; Thayer v. Clark, 48 Barb. 245; Lewis v. Welch, 47 Minn. 197, 48 N. W. 608, 49 N. W. 665; Bennett v. Camp, 54 Vt. 36; Freem. Judg. § 319a, and note 3; 2 Black, Judg. §§ 641, 644.

We think there is error, also, in the circuit decree as to the sufficiency of the evidence offered to establish the existence of the debt against the testatrix. We agree with the circuit judge that "the alleged judgment against the executor certainly has no force or effect so far as the defendants are concerned, because they were neither parties nor privies to it." This is substantially the ruling of the court in Wilson v. Kelly, 19 S. C. 166, 167, and Brock v. Kirkpatrick, 60 S. C. 351, 38 S. E. 779, 85 Am. St. Rep. 847. To make the devised estate answerable for the debt of the devisor, there must be evidence offered to show that the devisor was indebted. If such indebtedness is shown by bond or note, the bond or note is prima facie evidence of the indebtedness. If judgment has been obtained against the executor on the bond or note, such judgment establishes the debt against the personal estate of the deceased debtor, and also against lands not taken possession of by the devisees, but is not binding upon the devisees, nor upon the devised lands in their exclusive possession. Nevertheless, such judgment is prima facie evidence of indebtedness by the devisor, and, if there be no evidence to the contrary, it is conclusive. "Between the real and personal representative of a deceased person there is no privity. Hence a judgment against an administrator or executor is never conclusive against the heirs or devisees, and a judgment for or against an heir or devisee has no effect upon an administrator or executor. * * * But a judgment against the personal representative is prima facie evidence against the realty." Freeman on Judgments, § 163. "The relationship of privity does not exist at common law between administrator or executor and heirs or devisee, though it is held that judgment against the executor is prima facie evidence of the testator's liability in a scire facias against the heirs to subject the lands in the hands of the heir." Bigelow, Estoppel, 78. As "the proceeding against the executor is in substance the foundation of the proceeding against the heir or devisee, the argument for considering it as prima facie evidence may be irresistible; but I cannot consider it as an estoppel." Chief Justice Marshall, in Garnett v. Macon, 6 Call. 308, 10 Fed. Cas. p. 23, first column.

We have carefully examined all of the authorities cited by the circuit judge to sustain his decree, and by respondents' attorneys, but none of them go further than to hold that the judgment against the executor does not bind the heirs or prevent an inquiry into their original indebtedness. In Wilson v. Kelly, 19 S. C. 160, 167, the court says: "The judgment is at most only prima facie evidence of the validity of the claim, which is liable to be overcome by other evidence." Our judgment, therefore, is that the judgment of plaintiffs against the executor should have been received as prima facie evidence of the indebtedness by testatrix.

4. The only remaining point raised by the exceptions relates to defendants' plea of laches, which was sustained by the circuit decree. The judge below and the attorneys for respondents in their argument in this court concede that plaintiffs have shown no laches in prosecuting their claim against these defendants as devisees. Therefore the precise question before us is whether the plaintiffs have lost their right of action against the devisees by their laches in seeking to recover their claim from the executor. It has been held in this case, in 60 S. C. 322, 330, 38 S. E. 779, that the plaintiffs had the right to pursue either executor or devisees, but this does not dispose of the question now under consideration. In Smith v. Collins, Bailey, Eq. 74, 75, Judge Johnson says: "The right of a creditor to pursue the estate of his deceased debtor in the hands of legatees or distributees is unquestionable. * * * But in giving effect to this right, however just it might be in the abstract, the court is bound to take care that it is not abused, nor suffered to operate injuriously to others, and that the creditor has himself done all that reciprocal justice requires of him." In that case the debt was contracted in 1794, debtor died in 1801, estate distributed in 1805, without notice of this indebtedness, suit commenced in 1811, when executor was insolvent, and revived in 1822, and this action commenced against legatees in 1824. The court presumed a release of the legatees from the obligation to contribute. And in Goodhue v. Barnwell, Rice, Eq. 198, 240, Chancellor Dunkin says: "Certainly the personal estate is the primary fund for the payment of debts, and, if a creditor stands by and suffers the personal estate to be squandered, he will not be afterwards permitted to look to the heirs for the payment of his demand." This is quoted with approval in Bird v. Houze, Speer, Eq. 254. Chief Justice Simpson says, in McGee v. Hall, 26 S. C. 179, 186, 1 S. E. 711: "Laches may be regarded as an equitable statute or limitations, and is applied to equity cases in analogy to legal statutes applied to cases at law. And generally, when a party would not be barred at law, he would not be barred in equity." In Babb v. Sullivan, 43 S. C. 436, 441, 21 S. E. 277, Judge Benet gives the following definition of laches: "Delay is not the sole factor that constitutes laches. If it were so, some period fixed by statute or by common law of the courts would afford a safe and unvarying rule. Laches connotes, not only undue lapse of time, but also negligence and opportunity to have acted sooner; and all three factors must be satisfactorily shown before the bar in equity is complete. Other factors of lesser importance sometimes demand consideration, such as the nature of the property involved, or the subject-matter of the suit, or the like. As a definition of laches, however, it is sufficiently correct to say that it is the neglecting or omitting to do what in law should have been done, and this for an unreasonable and unexplained length of time, and in circumstances which afforded opportunity for diligence." This definition was approved in Wagner v. Sanders, 62 S. C. 73, 89, 39 S. E. 950, in opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Gary. In the application of these principles the court sustained the plea of laches against a claim 19 years past due with the same lapse of time since the death of the debtor, and where the creditor, after the alleged indebtedness, permitted slaves of the debtor to be turned over to her husband; no effort being made in all these years to collect this claim. Goodhue v. Barnwell, Rice, Eq. 240. In Bird v. Houze, Speer, Eq. 250, intestate died in 1828, and his heirs took possession of his lands. On 31st December, 1830, the creditor presented to the administrator for payment a note of intestate past due since 5th January, 1826. In October, 1832, the ordinary declined to allow the note, "as it was out of date," whereupon the creditor sued the administrator in summary process, and obtained judgment by default in December of same year. Nothing more was done until 1841, when the judgment was revived against the administrator, execution lodged March, 1842, lands of intestate levied on and bid in by creditor for $5 in April. Under bill for partition between the heirs this sale was set aside, and the creditor was held to have lost all rights against the heirs. Laches was likewise imputed to a creditor where intestate died in 1854, distribution was made in 1855, leaving a large quantity of personalty in the hands of the administrator to pay debts, suit was brought by creditor against administrator in 1860, and judgment by default then entered and execution issued, upon which a return of nulla bona was made in 1868, when bill was filed to reach lands of intestate in the possession of his heirs. Both of the administrators had died insolvent, one in 1866 and the other in 1868. Mobley v. Cureton, 2 S. C. 140. So, too, where no effort was made to collect the claim and, indeed, no claim made for nearly 17 years after the death of the debtor. Gregory v. Rhoden, 24 S. C. 90. So, too, the doctrine of laches applied in refusing relief under a motion to amend a judgment after an unexplained delay of about 10 years (Babb v. Sullivan, 43 S. C. 436, 21 S. E. 277), and under action of account against the representatives of a surviving partner after 23 years, without reason for delay and the interests of other parties having intervened. Wagner v. Sanders, 62 S. C. 73, 39 S. E. 950. On the other hand, there was held to be no laches where debtor died in 1865, notes made by him purchased in 1875, which were sued to judgment against the executor in 1881, and presented as a claim in proceeding to sell land in aid of assets instituted by the executor in 1883, even though in 1880 the land had been mortgaged by one of the heirs. Shaw v. Barksdale, 25 S. C. 207. We have not considered cases of specific performance, as they are governed by principles peculiar to themselves.

Under the principles above announced and deducible from the rulings made on the facts of the several cases cited, we do not think the plaintiffs in this case are barred by laches, and we so hold. Testatrix died 15th December, 1888, less than eight months after she had given her one day note to plaintiffs. All of the property of testatrix which could be reached by execution against the executor (other than the lands devised to these defendants) was converted into money before the year expired, during which action on this note could not be brought. Within less than 12 months after that year expired, to wit, on 3d December, 1890, action was commenced, under which judgment by default was entered against the executor on 6th February, 1891, and execution issued same day. Nine months afterwards this execution was levied on the lands devised to Hannah Kirkpatrick. No sale was made or attempted to be made under this levy. No reason is given for this nonaction, but at that time there was pending, and had been pending in the probate court since August, 1890, a proceeding to which creditors were not parties, but which involved a construction of the will, a claim of $500 presented by Annie Taylor for services rendered testatrix, the amount chargeable against the executor for the land purchased by him, the value of the tracts of land conveyed to the children by the deeds, made but not delivered, which were treated as advancements, on accounting by the executor and the payment into court of the amounts due the several legatees. These matters were considered by the probate judge in May, 1891, heard by the circuit court the following month, and on appeal to this court was heard April term, 1892, and decided by opinion filed September 20, 1892. See 37 S. C. 161, 15 S. E. 912. In that same case, on 28th February, 1893, the probate judge filed an order, wherein he recited that it had "been made to appear that the executor is insolvent and not able to pay in the funds belonging to the said estate which is in his hands," and directed all persons indebted to said estate to pay all "said debts into this court." On September 10, 1893, a second levy was made under the execution of L. A. and T. H. Brock against Kirkpatrick, executor, on the same tract that had been levied in November, 1891.

We find no blamable delay on the part of plaintiffs in awaiting for nearly two years the result of the case of Hughes against Kirkpatrick, which, if the executor was solvent and honest, would require the payment of their claim before distribution was made. And we see in the case no evidence to show that the defendants here have been put in any worse position by plaintiffs' failure to proceed personally against the executor, declared to be insolvent in February, 1893, and there is no evidence that any creditor of the estate or any legatee has received one dollar since 1889. We think the conclusion is fully warranted that at no time would anything have been realized by action against the executor. Under the levy of September, 1893, no sale was made, because enjoined by suit commenced the same month by Hannah Kirkpatrick, which action was ended by perpetual injunction in October, 1898, without prejudice to plaintiffs' right to bring this action. Meantime, under petition by the executor for settlement and discharge, the probate judge made his statement on 21st March, 1895, of the executor's receipts and disbursements, and of the liabilities of the estate. Judgment was enrolled thereon, and execution issued, upon which was indorsed a return of nulla bona on 18th April, 1895. Thereafter, in April, 1899, four years after the right of action accrued, and six months after it was finally decided that the lands devised to Hannah Kirkpatrick could not be sold under judgment against the executor, this action was commenced against Hannah Kirkpatrick, and also against Annie Taylor, whose status was the same as that of her codefendant.

Nor do we regard the purchase by plaintiffs of the mortgage given by the Haddons to Kirkpatrick, the executor, a bar to this action. It is true that the executor bought this land in October, 1889, at his own sale, for $300, and sold it soon thereafter to Haddon for $1,200, taking bond and mortgage for $800. This mortgage was purchased by plaintiffs from Kirkpatrick, probably in 1890. At the time, Kirkpatrick was claiming this mortgage as his own, for he so claimed in his answer in the Hughes Case in the latter part of 1890, and his liability to account for the $1,200 was not passed upon in that case. It seems to have been first charged against him at $1,200, in the statement made for settlement by the probate judge in March, 1895. We do not see how plaintiffs could have forced Kirkpatrick to receive their claim against the estate of Jane Taylor in part payment of their purchase of the Haddon mortgage.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded to that court for further proceedings to carry into effect the views herein announced.

GARY, A. J., disqualified.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. After carefully considering the petition for a rehearing in this case, and it appearing that this court has neither overlooked nor failed to consider any material issue of law or fact arising herein, it is ordered, that the order heretofore granted staying the remittitur herein be, and is hereby, vacated, and that the petition herein be, and is hereby, dismissed.

(124 Ga. 544)

CARSTARPHEN WAREHOUSE CO. v.

FRIED et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 22, 1905.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—SALE IN BULK—REMEDIES OF CREDITORS—ATTACHMENT—INJUNCTION—RECEIVER.

A sale of a stock of merchandise in bulk, not in compliance with the provisions of the act approved August 17, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 92), is void as to creditors on the ground of fraud; and a creditor of the vendor may proceed by attachment against his fraudulent debtor. It appearing from the allegations of the petition that the plaintiff's statutory remedy by attachment against the fraudulent debtor was both available and complete, the prayer for the extraordinary remedies of injunction and receiver was properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 24, Cent. Dig. Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 665, 681, 682; vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, § 12.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Action by T. J. Carstarphen, doing business as the T. J. Carstarphen Warehouse Company, against J. R. Fried and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

A petition for injunction and the appointment of a receiver was filed by T. J. Carstarphen, who conducted business under the name and style of the T. J. Carstarphen Warehouse Company, in which J. R. Fried, of Bibb county, and the firm of J. F. Williams & Son, of Wilkinson county, were named as defendants. The proceeding was brought in the superior court of Bibb county, and the facts alleged by the plaintiff as entitling him to the equitable relief sought were substantially as follows: The defendant firm is indebted to the plaintiff in the principal sum of $119.22 upon a promissory note dated February 17, 1905, and due March 1st after date. He is engaged in the wholesale grocery business in the city of Macon, and this note was given to him by J. F. Williams & Son in liquidation of an account for merchandise sold to that firm, which at the time was engaged in conducting a general merchandise store at McIntyre, Ga. Some time in the month of February or March, 1905, Fried purchased of J. F. Williams & Son the whole of the stock of goods, wares, and merchandise belonging to that firm, and is now in possession thereof, except so much of the same as he has disposed of since the date of his purchase. He did not, at least five days before the completion of the purchase or the payment for this stock of goods, notify personally or by registered mail the plaintiff and other creditors of the proposed sale, the price to be paid, and the terms and conditions thereof, nor furnish them with a statement of the assets and liabilities of the firm, as required by section 2 of the act approved August 17, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 93). The sale to Fried is absolutely fraudulent and void as to the plaintiff and the other creditors of J. F. Williams & Son, and the stock of goods in the hands of Fried and the money derived from his sale of a portion of the goods constitute a trust fund which is subject to the payment of plaintiff's demand and the debts due to other creditors of the firm. It is insolvent, as also are its members, J. F. and W. L. Williams. Fried received a discharge in bankruptcy in August, 1904, and the plaintiff "believes that the said J. R. Fried is now insolvent." He is rapidly selling out and disposing of the stock of goods. The plaintiff alleged that unless Fried was restrained from disposing of the goods, and a receiver was appointed by the court to take charge of the same, plaintiff would be "remediless at and by the strict rules of the common law," and accordingly was entitled to the equitable relief for which he prayed. Fried and J. F. Williams, one of the members of the defendant firm, took issue with the plaintiff as to this allegation, by interposing separate demurrers, in which they assigned various reasons why the extraordinary relief prayed for should not be granted, and insisted that the plaintiff did have a complete and adequate remedy at law, especially as he did not in his petition affirmatively allege that Fried was insolvent. They also filed answers in which they set out the circumstances under which the sale of the stock of goods was made, and in which they denied the right of the plaintiff under such circumstances to attack the sale as invalid. At the interlocutory hearing the case was submitted to the presiding judge upon the pleadings, including the demurrers to the petition, together with certain documentary evidence presented for consideration by the respective parties in support of their contentions regarding the merits of the plaintiff's complaint. After hearing the argument of counsel, the judge passed an order denying the prayers of the petition and revoking an order previously granted which provided for the appointment of a temporary receiver. The plaintiff excepted.

J. C. Morcock, for plaintiff in error. Nottingham & Cabaniss, for defendants in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). Under Civ. Code 1895, § 4937, a creditor may in one suit proceed for judgment on his debt and to set aside a fraudulent sale made by his debtor. De Lacy v. Hurst, 83 Ga. 223, 9 S. E. 1052. But in such an action the plaintiff would not be entitled to the extraordinary remedies of injunction and receiver if it appeared that an attachment against the fraudulent debtor (Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4543-4547) would afford complete and adequate relief (Booth v. Mohr, 122 Ga. 333, 50 S. E. 173). The act of the General Assembly approved August 17, 1903, declares that a sale of a stock of goods, wares, and merchandise in bulk, not in compliance with the provisions of the act, shall as to any and all creditors of the vendor be conclusively presumed to be fraudulent. Acts 1903, p. 92. The petition in this case alleges that the sale of the stock of merchandise was in bulk, and there was a failure by the vendor to comply in essential particulars with the terms of this act of the General Assembly. The sale was therefore inoperative and void as to creditors upon the ground of fraud, and the plaintiff's remedy by attachment against a fraudulent debtor would have afforded him an adequate legal remedy. On the rule to show cause why a permanent receiver should not be appointed and the writ of injunction should not issue as prayed, the defendants urged by demurrer that this legal remedy was both available and adequate, and assigned other reasons for denying the extraordinary relief sought. The court refused to grant the prayers of the petition for such relief, and vacated the order, previously passed, which provided for the appointment of a temporary receiver. We think the plaintiff had a complete statutory remedy by attachment, and that the court properly declined to appoint a permanent receiver and grant the prayer for injunction. Having reached this conclusion, it is not necessary to discuss the other matters urged by the defendants upon the interlocutory hearing in opposition to the prayers of the plaintiff for injunction and receiver.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 190)

EQUITABLE LOAN & SECURITY CO. v. LEWMAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. NEW TRIAL—SECOND NEW TRIAL.

A second new trial should not be granted where the presiding judge approves the finding of the jury upon the issue of fact, unless some error of law has been committed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 3952.]

2. ESTOPPEL—ATTESTING DEED—PARTIES AFFECTED.

The true owner of land, by attesting a deed the contents of which he knows, made by a person who has no title, will be estopped from asserting his title as against the grantee and his privies. This estoppel will not bind an existing creditor of the person estopped. Where such creditor subsequently reduces his debt to judgment, the lien thereof is superior to the equity of a third person who has neither title nor lien from the true owner, notwithstanding such owner is estopped from asserting his title because of having witnessed a deed to such third person, made by one without title to the premises therein described.

3. EXECUTION—SALE—SUBROGATION OF PURCHASER.

The purchaser at an execution sale is subrogated to all the rights of the execution creditor bringing about the sale, and before his title thus acquired can be defeated by an equity in a third person, the purchaser must not only have actual notice of the equity, but that equity must be superior to the lien of the judgment creditor bringing about the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 21, Cent. Dig. Execution, § 783.]

4. ESTOPPEL—WHO MAY CLAIM.

That one claiming ownership of a tract of land upon which another asserts a lien may have agreed with the latter or with some one else to pay off his claims of indebtedness affords no reason for holding that the claimant of the land is estopped from setting up title thereto. If the agreement be made with the person asserting a lien, his remedy is upon the contract; if made with some other person, then the lienholder is a mere stranger to it, and is not in a position either to enforce the contract or to urge it by way of estoppel.

5. TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — TECHNICAL EXPRESSIONS.

Although the court may, in charging the jury, make use of a purely technical expression, which correctly presents the law governing the case on trial, yet this is not cause for a new trial when there is no reason to apprehend that the jury failed to grasp the meaning of the expression so used, and the complaining party made no request of the court to elucidate the instruction excepted to.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—NOTICE—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Since the passage of the recording act of 1889 (Civ. Code 1895, § 2778), an unrecorded deed made by a testatrix is ordinarily to be regarded as inferior in dignity to a deed duly recorded subsequently made by her devisee to an innocent purchaser for value without notice of the prior conveyance. But this statute has no application to a case where the testatrix recognized in her will the title of her donee, and the purchaser from her devisee was thus put upon notice that the property conveyed to him formed no part of the estate of the testatrix, and could not be regarded as passing to the devisee under the residuary clause of the will.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Trial of claim between the Equitable Loan & Security Company and H. L. Lewman. From the judgment, both parties bring error. Judgment on main bills of exceptions reversed, and on cross-bill affirmed.

On December 18, 1865, Timothy Burke conveyed by deed to Mrs. Maria L. Harris a lot in the city of Atlanta 100 by 275 feet, having a frontage of 100 feet on the east side of what was then known as Collins street. She entered into possession, and for years occupied a house erected on the north half of this lot. Subsequently, in 1878 or 1879, her son-in-law, R. M. Farrar, built a house on the south half of the lot, with money which he borrowed for that purpose, and he and his family lived there continuously from that time up to 1886. Mrs. Harris died on December 6, 1884, leaving a will which contained the following provisions: To two of her daughters, Josephine E. and Matilda F. Harris, she devised the house and lot which she had occupied as a home, the premises being described as No. 179 Collins street, having a frontage on that street of 50 feet, and running back 275 feet, bounded on the north by the house and lot of Mrs. C. P. Sams, and on the "south by house and lot of Robt. M. Farrar." The executor was directed to collect the proceeds of a policy of insurance on the life of Mrs. Harris, and divide the same among certain named beneficiaries, one of whom was her daughter Frances F. Farrar, the wife of R. M. Farrar. The residue of the estate, both real and personal property, was given to Josephine E. and Matilda F. Harris, share and share alike. The testatrix nominated as her executor Robert M. Farrar, and after her death he qualified as such, and procured her will to be probated at the January term, 1885, of the court of ordinary of Fulton county. On March 4, 1896, Matilda F. Harris executed her will. She died shortly thereafter, and Robert M. Farrar, who was nominated as executor, brought the will to probate at the August term, 1897, of the court of ordinary. The sole beneficiaries under this will were Josephine E. Harris and Frances F. Farrar, to whom was devised the half interest of the testatrix in the house and lot occupied by Mrs. Harris prior to her death, situated on Courtland (formerly Collins) street, and described in the will as being the same lot which was willed to testatrix by her mother. At the date of the death of Mrs. Harris, her sole heirs at law were the three daughters above mentioned. On April 2, 1898, the survivors of them, Josephine E. Harris and Frances F. Farrar, executed quitclaim deeds inter se, therein describing the premises purchased by their mother from Timothy Burke in 1865, and reciting that they each acquired an undivided half interest in the property by inheritance from their mother, being her sole heirs at law; that her estate had never been administered, there being no necessity for an administration, as she owed no debts; and that having inherited their respective interests in her estate free from incumbrance, and being her sole heirs at law and of lawful age, they had agreed between themselves upon a division of the property. The deed from Mrs. Farrar to Miss Harris purported to convey an undivided one-fourth interest in the north half of the lot, which was described as having 100 feet frontage on Courtland street; and the deed to Mrs. Farrar recited that the grantor conveyed an undivided one-half interest in the south half of that lot, and that in the division Mrs. Farrar reserved an undivided one-fourth interest in the north half. One of the subscribing witnesses to these deeds was Robert M. Farrar. On April 9, 1898, Mrs. Farrar procured a loan of $1,000 from H. L. Lewman, and executed and delivered to him a security deed purporting to convey to him a three-fourths interest in the south half of the lot last above mentioned. Her husband also witnessed this deed. It was filed for record on April 30, 1898, and was duly recorded. On April 18, 1898, a fi. fa. in favor of D. W. Rountree and against R. M. Farrar and others issued from the city court of Atlanta. Mrs. Farrar died within a year or so afterwards, and Walter Tomlinson was appointed administrator upon her estate. As such he sold to the Equitable Loan & Security Company an undivided three-fourths interest in the entire tract which had been purchased by Mrs. Harris in 1865, and on the 22d of December, 1900, executed and delivered to that company a deed, in which the property was described as having a frontage of 100 feet on Courtland avenue. It immediately went into possession of the premises under this deed and one from Josephine E. Harris, whereby she undertook to convey an undivided one-fourth interest therein. In the latter part of that year, Miss Harris, who had been living with Farrar as a member of his family, went to Texas. Before leaving, she turned over to him a bundle of papers, which she said she had been keeping since the death of her sister Matilda, who had taken charge of her mother's papers upon her decease. Some months later, Farrar discovered among these papers one which appeared to be a deed to him, executed on the 27th of June, 1878, by Maria L. Harris, Josephine E. Harris, and Matilda F. Harris, and attested by two witnesses. It recited a consideration of $2,000, and purported to convey a four-fifths undivided interest in the city lot hereinbefore referred to as the south half of the tract purchased by Mrs. Harris, the lot being that on which Farrar had built the house in which he lived from some time in 1878 or 1879 up to 1898. The deed was in the handwriting of Farrar. Indorsed thereon, also in the handwriting of Farrar, was the following affidavit, subscribed to by one of the attesting witnesses, E. M. M. Hooper, before William W. Grant, a notary public, on August 3, 1878: "State of Georgia, Fulton County. Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, a notary public in and for said state and county, E. M. M. Hooper, who, being duly sworn, on oath says that the said Maria L. Harris, Josephine E. Harris, and Matilda F. Harris signed, sealed, and delivered the within deed in his presence and in the presence of the other witness, L. J. Farrar." Shortly afterwards, Robert M. Farrar showed this deed to C. J. Simmons, an attorney, whom he thought was representing the administrator of the estate of Mrs. Farrar. Simmons subsequently caused two fi. fas. against Farrar, of which he was the transferee, to be levied on the south half of the lot on Courtland street, and the Equitable Loan & Security Company interposed its claim to the land. The company effected a settlement with Simmons, and afterwards, under an agreement with the holder of the fi. fa. in favor of Rountree against Farrar et al., permitted the southern portion of the lot to be sold at sheriff's sale as the property of Farrar, itself becoming the purchaser at the sale under this fi. fa. Before the sale, a representative of the company announced that it had bought the property from the administrator of Mrs. Farrar. An attorney who represented Lewman also gave the following notice to prospective bidders: "Notice is hereby given that the property about to be sold as the property of R. M. Farrar, situated on Courtland street, in the city of Atlanta, is not the property of R. M. Farrar, but that the same was owned by Mrs. Fannie F. Farrar, who executed a loan deed upon the same to H. L. Lewman for the principal sum of $1,000, which indebtedness has been reduced to judgment, together with the interest and cost, and that said judgment is a superior lien to any title that can be passed under a sale of that property as the property of R. M. Farrar, and that any person who buys said property as the property of R. M. Farrar gets a bad title." This sale took place on the first Tuesday in August, 1902, and on the 5th of that month the sheriff made a deed to the property to the Equitable Loan & Security Company. Subsequently Lewman caused the same land to be levied on as the property of the estate of Mrs. Farrar, under the judgment obtained against her administrator. The Equitable Loan & Security Company interposed a claim, and at the trial of the issue thus formed Lewman sought to resist its claim by setting up the following facts as an estoppel upon it to assert title to the property: Robert M. Farrar assisted in procuring to be executed the deed from Josephine E. Harris to Fannie F. Farrar, conveying a half interest in the property in controversy to Mrs. Farrar, and also assisted in procuring to be executed the deed from his wife to Josephine E. Harris, conveying an interest in the adjoining lot. He knew these deeds were made for the purpose of dividing the estate of Maria L. Harris, and also that they were for the purpose of inducing Lewman to make a loan of $1,000 to Mrs. Farrar. He witnessed the deed from Mrs. Farrar to Lewman, and knew the purpose for which that deed was executed, and used the money loaned to his wife for the support of his family. This loan was made before the judgment in favor of Rountree and against Farrar was rendered, and the latter was estopped to claim title as against Mrs. Farrar or her grantee under the deed executed by Maria L. Harris in 1878, and at the time the judgment against him was rendered he had no interest in the property upon which the lien of that judgment could attach. Moreover, the claimant undertook and agreed to pay the indebtedness of Mrs. Farrar to Lewman, by a writing in the possession of claimant dated December 28, 1900, and, on account of the assumption of this indebtedness and the claimant's agreement to pay the same the claimant cannot now dispute either the amount thereof, or its priority over any title the claimant may have. The court declined to allow Lewman to interpose this plea of equitable estoppel against the claimant, and the case was submitted to the jury upon the issue whether or not Mrs. Harris had ever delivered to Farrar the instrument in the form of a deed purporting to have been executed by her and her two daughters Josephine and Matilda Harris on the 27th day of June, 1878. Upon this issue, the jury found in favor of the Equitable Loan & Security Company, the claimant. Lewman thereupon made a motion for a new trial upon divers grounds, all save one of which the court overruled. The Equitable Loan & Security Company excepts to the granting of a new trial on the ground of the motion which the court sustained, and Lewman, by a cross-bill of exceptions, complains of the overruling of the other grounds of his motion, and also of the refusal of the court to allow his plea of equitable estoppel.

Candler & Thomson and W. D. Thomson, for plaintiff in error. Du Blon & Alston and Howard Van Epps, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). 1. This not being the first grant of a new trial, and the presiding judge having expressed himself as satisfied with the finding of the jury upon the only issue submitted to them for their determination, their verdict should be allowed to stand if sufficiently supported by the evidence, unless the plaintiff in fi. fa., Lewman, was unjustly prevented from presenting his contention that the Equitable Loan & Security Company was estopped from asserting title to the land levied on. There was, we think, ample evidence to sustain the conclusion that the deed from Mrs. Harris to Farrar, in the execution of which two of her daughters joined, was delivered to him in 1878. He testified on the trial that he could recollect nothing with regard to its execution and delivery to him, and would not have assisted his wife in procuring a loan on the land as her property in 1898 had he at that time known of its existence; and that he did not remember ever having seen the paper till, some months after he received the bundle of papers which Miss Josephine E. Harris stated had belonged to her mother, he discovered it among them. Miss Harris testified she had no remembrance of signing it, and could not identify as genuine the signature of herself or sister, though what purported to be the signature of her mother corresponded with her handwriting. On the other hand, there was testimony, which Farrar did not undertake to question, that the paper was drawn up in his handwriting, as was also the affidavit of one of the subscribing witnesses. This witness was sworn at the trial, and testified that the document was genuine, and he had signed the probate indorsed thereon before W. W. Grant, a notary public, at the West Point freight depot, in the city of Atlanta. The notary public was shown to be no longer in life. The tax returns showed that Mrs. Harris did not, after the year 1878, return this south half of the land for taxes, but that the same was returned in the name of R. M. Farrar as owner from 1879 up to 1898. He stated he had, with money borrowed for the purpose, erected on the lot the house in which he lived up to 1888, but gave no satisfactory account of the circumstances under which he assumed to take possession of the premises, further than to say he had to live somewhere, and that he occupied the house without objection from Mrs. Harris. In her will Mrs. Harris recognized this lot as belonging to Farrar, by describing the premises she devised to her two daughters as being bounded on the "south by house and lot of Robt. M. Farrar." The deed was never recorded prior to the commencement of this litigation, but there was testimony from which the jury could infer that it was designedly kept from record because Farrar was financially embarrassed, and did not wish the fact of his ownership of the lot to become known to his creditors. In view of all the circumstances brought to light, we are of the opinion that the finding of the jury should not be disturbed; and in our further discussion of the case the fact will be assumed that in 1878 Mrs. Harris did execute and deliver to Farrar a deed covering an undivided four-fifths interest in the land in controversy.

2, 3. The true owner of property may estop himself by his conduct from asserting title to his own property, as when he stands by and allows property belonging to him to be sold to an innocent purchaser for value as the property of another. American Mortgage Co. v. Walker, 119 Ga. 341, 46 S. E. 426, and citations. Or he may so estop himself by attesting a deed, of the contents of which he knows, made by a person who has no title. Georgia Pac. Ry. Co. v. Strickland, 80 Ga. 776, 6 S. E. 27, 12 Am. St. Rep. 282. The negotiation of the loan from Lewman by Farrar in behalf of his wife, and his attestation of her deed given to secure the loan, would estop Farrar from asserting title in his own favor as against Lewman; assuming, of course, Lewman's ignorance of the true title. This estoppel in pais occurred pending the suit, but before the rendition of the judgment under which the land was sold. While the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to sheriff's sales, a bona fide purchaser at an execution sale, who has paid the purchase money without notice of an equity, will be protected against the same. Johnson v. Equitable Co., 114 Ga. 604, 40 S. E. 787, 56 L. R. A. 933. The purchaser is subrogated to all the rights of the execution creditor bringing about the sale, and before the title or a bona fide purchaser can be defeated by an equity in a third person, the purchaser must not only have actual notice of the equity, but that equity must be superior to the lien of the judgment creditor bringing about the sale. Atkinson v. Beall, 33 Ga. 153; Humphrey v. Copeland, 54 Ga. 543. "It is the right of the judgment creditor to sell whatever his judgment binds. This right would be impaired if purchasers were not allowed a corresponding right to buy. This corresponding right to buy purchasers would not have if they were liable to be affected by a notice of other liens or claims inferior to the judgment." Smith v. Jordan, 25 Ga. 689. From these observations it will appear that no proper solution of the rights of the purchaser at sheriff's sale can be arrived at without determining the relative superiority of the lien of the Rountree execution, which sold the land, and the lien of Lewman, acquired by virtue of Mrs. Farrar's security deed, aided by the estoppel of Farrar.

While great stress was laid in the argument upon the fact that the estoppel occurred a few days before the judgment was entered, we do not think this circumstance at all conclusive. The suit of Rountree, which eventuated in the judgment, was pending at the time the Lewman loan was effected. This particular creditor of Farrar had a right to reduce his debt to judgment, and the lien of his judgment ought not to be restricted because his judgment debtor had defrauded some one else. The general rule of estoppel is that only parties and their privies to the act or representation relied on to estop are affected by an estoppel in pais. 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 489. It can hardly be contended that any privy could exist between two creditors of a common debtor, each contending for priority of lien and preference in payment of his debt, where neither conspired with the debtor to defraud the other. In Shearer v. Woodburn, 10 Pa. 511, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania held that "declarations by one reputed to be the owner of lands that the title was in A., made to one who thereafter purchased A.'s title, will not estop a subsequent purchaser under a judgment recovered against such person, at or about the time of his making such declarations, from setting up his title against the purchaser from A. A similar ruling was made in Lyon v. Morgan, 64 Hun, 111, 19 N. Y. Supp. 201, by the Supreme Court of New York. Bigelow, in his work on Estoppel (5th Ed.) 609, says: "It would seem that a purchaser of goods is not a privy in estate or otherwise with his vendor, so as to be affected by an estoppel in pais resting on the vendor in respect of the goods. Thus, if a person stand by, and allow his goods to be sold as the goods of another to one who does not take possession, and the actual owner afterwards sells the same to another person for value and without notice of the previous transaction, the latter would be entitled to the goods against the first purchaser. The owner would simply be precluded from setting up title against the purchaser. It is not the office of an estoppel to pass title. The title remains, but it cannot be asserted against the party who acted upon the false representation. With reference to others, it may be asserted or conveyed, and a purchaser, not being a privy, would not be estopped to assert title to the goods. This is certainly true of a purchaser under an execution against the real owner." The author cites Richards v. Johnston, 4 Hurl. & N. 660, in support of this last proposition. In that case it was said that "a sheriff who comes to seize the goods of a debtor under a writ of execution is not bound by an estoppel which might have prevented the debtor himself from claiming the goods." In a later English case, that of Richards v. Jenkins, 18 Q. B. D. 456, 56 L. J. Q. B. 293, Lord Esher said: "Such an estoppel merely prevents the party who is estopped from saying as against some other party that the goods do not belong to such other party, though in fact they do not belong to him, and it only takes effect as between parties and privies. If the execution creditor could for this purpose be said to claim through and under the execution debtor, so as to be in privy with him, he might be estopped. But I do not think he can be said to so claim. He claims through and by the law as against the execution debtor, and not through and under him." In a Nebraska case it appeared that the owner of a business, by representing that it belonged to his wife, induced persons to sell goods to her, and to take a mortgage as security. Other persons, who had no knowledge of this misrepresentation, sold goods to the husband, and afterwards issued attachments against him. The court held that the attaching creditors were not bound by the estoppel, and consequently took priority over the mortgage. Oberfelder v. Kavanaugh, 29 Neb. 428, 45 N. W. 471. See, also, Bingham v. Kirkland, 84 N. J. Eq. 229. In Waters' Appeal, 85 Pa. 526, 78 Am. Dec. 354, Woodward, J., said: "The truth is, the relation of judgment creditors to their debtor's real estate is anomalous. They have a lien upon it by virtue of statute law, but they have no interest in it such as makes them privies in estate with their debtor." A contrary view was expressed in Parker v. Crittendon, 37 Conn. 148, in which case it was held that attaching creditors of a debtor, who with intent to defraud his creditors had conveyed a hack to another, and then stood by and allowed him to sell to an innocent purchaser, were privies in estate with their debtor, and, as such, estopped to set up title in him. This was ruled, notwithstanding it appeared that the innocent purchaser had not paid for the property; the court saying he "had a right to the benefit of his purchase." In Ewart on Estoppel, 208 et seq., the author, in commenting on these two lines of decisions, which differ as to whether an estoppel upon a debtor will bind his creditors, says (page 210): "Solution of the question in hand by a discussion of the existence of privity does not appear to promise great success." He expresses the opinion that, if privity in estate be the test, a purchaser at sheriff's sale gets only that which the debtor had, subject to all equities of every sort; but suggests (page 209) that the true test to be applied in determining whether or not a party other than the one who has estopped himself by his conduct can assert title in any given instance, is to "ascertain upon general principles who ought to have priority, and then, in accordance with the conclusion so arrived at, declare that the sheriff's purchaser was or was not in privity with the vendor, and so bound by the estoppel." This seems to be the proper test, looking to the origin and the purpose of the doctrine of equitable estoppel, and its application to a case where the owner of property stands by, and allows it to be purchased as the property of another. Those only who are chargeable with the fraud, actual or constructive, perpetrated upon the innocent purchaser, and those who seek to gain some benefit or advantage therefrom, or, as volunteers, succeed to the rights of the person who has estopped himself by his conduct, should be held bound by the estoppel. Creditors gain nothing by the commission of such a fraud upon an innocent purchaser, but, if held bound by the estoppel upon their debtor, must suffer the loss of their demands against him in whole or in part. They do not seek to ratify or confirm any act which he has done with respect to his property, but repudiate an act which was fraudulent, not only as against the innocent purchaser, but as against them as well; for by that act the debtor disclaims title to property which ought to go towards paying off his just debts, instead of being sold for the benefit of a person who has no title or interest in it nor lien upon the same. Certainly, as a general rule, "no privity exists between creditor and debtor; there is neither devolution nor subordination of rights in the relation." Bigelow on Estoppel (5th Ed.) 343. As between creditors of a common debtor, one is not entitled to prevail over another unless he has acquired a superior lien, such as is recognized by law in the way which the law prescribes. Thus, in Waters' Appeal, supra, an owner of land conveyed it to another with general warranty, acknowledging receipt of payment of the purchase price, and taking judgment for a portion of the purchase money, which had not in point of fact been paid. Subsequently, other creditors of the vendee obtained judgments against him, which were levied on the land, and the proceeds of the sale were paid into court. These creditors then sought to exclude the vendor from participation in the distribution, because of the recitals in his deed to their debtor; but the court held there was no estoppel of which they could take advantage. So it will be seen that the rule of estoppel, based upon the theory of privity in estate, works both ways, and cannot be relied on as bringing about equitable results, as was recognized in the case just cited. "Estoppel arising in virtue of a misrepresentation is the converse of an action of deceit. The property or interest claimed by reason of the estoppel corresponds to the damages sought in the action of deceit; and in order to make good the claim of estoppel, the same things, it should seem, are requisite that are necessary to the maintenance of the action mentioned." Bigelow on Estoppel (5th Ed.) 609, 610. The wrong committed upon an innocent purchaser from one other than the true owner, who stands by and allows a fraud to be committed upon the party misled, gives to him a cause of action. As against the true owner, he has two remedies—one an action for damages for the deceit practiced upon him, and the other a plea of equitable estoppel against asserting title to the property so bought. If the former remedy were pursued, no one could contend that, by reason of the purchase under such circumstances, the purchaser acquired any estate or interest in the property, or lien thereon. Only by proving his cause of action, and procuring judgment upon his demand against the true owner, could the purchaser obtain any lien upon the property, and the judgment lien would rank in dignity, as against other liens on the property, only in the order of its date. He would not, until he in this way established a lien, stand in any better position, relatively to other judgment creditors of the owner, than any one who had a demand against him not reduced to a judgment. The law gives priority among creditors to those who first avail themselves of the remedies whereby they can establish and enforce their rights against the common debtor. The innocent purchaser who is the victim of the fraud cannot, by way of equitable estoppel, gain an advantage over others having claims against the owner of the property, since he has no lien thereon, nor legal nor equitable estate therein. He is simply the victim of a tort, and has no greater interest in the property of the tortfeasor than would a person who was injured by its owner's carelessness or wilfulness in running over him in the street with a carriage or automobile.

As we have endeavored to show, the purchaser of the land under the Rountree fi. fa. is remitted to all the rights of the plaintiff in fi. fa.; and as the record suggests nothing even tending to estop the original execution plaintiff, it is immaterial what notice may have been given on the day of the sale, or what was the arrangement between the purchaser and the transferee of the execution looking to the bringing of the land to sale. The purchaser's title was altogether unaffected by the estoppel of Farrar, and if the legal title was in Farrar at the date of the judgment under which the sale was made, then it passed by virtue of the sale to the purchaser. The finding of the jury that the deed from the Harrises to Farrar had been delivered settled the issue of the fact as to title.

4. It was further urged in the amendment offered, and which was disallowed, that the claimant undertook and agreed to pay the indebtedness to the plaintiff in writing, and that, on account of this assumption of the indebtedness and agreement to pay the same, the claimant cannot now dispute either the amount thereof, or the priority of the same over any title it may have. It does not appear from the allegations of the equitable amendment with whom the claimant entered into this agreement. If the agreement was made with the plaintiff in fi. fa., his remedy is upon the contract; if made with some other person, he is a mere stranger to it, and it cannot be urged as an estoppel against the claimant in asserting its title to the premises.

5. Criticism is made on the instruction of the court on the subject of delivery of a deed, the plaintiff insisting that one of the phrases used by the court was technical, and should have been explained to the jury. The court instructed the jury that delivery was sufficient if the deed went out of the hands or control of the grantor, "with her intent that it [should] operate and inure as a muniment of title to the grantee." This expression is characterized as so technical that its meaning should have been explained to the jury. Considered in connection with the context, we cannot think that an intelligent jury could have failed to apprehend the meaning of the court. Besides, if the plaintiff had desired any further elucidation of the instruction, he should have made a timely request of the court. Holmes v. Clisby, 121 Ga. 248, 48 S. E. 934, 104 Am. St. Rep. 103. In these modern times, where there is such a general diffusion of education among the masses, and our juries are made up of intelligent and upright citizens, it would seem that they should be given some credit for intelligence and comprehension, even though the idea be expressed in other than colloquial speech.

6. In the third, fourth, and fifth grounds of the motion for a new trial complaint is made that the court submitted to the jury the single issue whether or not the deed from Mrs. Maria L. Harris and Josephine E. and Matilda F. Harris to Robert M. Farrar had ever been delivered, and failed to instruct the jury that, inasmuch as this deed was not recorded, it was junior to the deed held by Lewman from Frances F. Farrar, for the reason that the title held by her and conveyed to Lewman was derived through the will of her mother and her sister Matilda, and by a deed from Josephine E. Harris, which was duly recorded, provided Frances F. Farrar took this deed from Josephine E.

Harris without notice of the prior conveyance made to Robert M. Farrar. Prior to the recording act of 1889 (Civ. Code 1895, § 2778), a recorded deed from an heir or devisee was inferior in dignity to an unrecorded deed of the ancestor. Webb v. Wilcher, 33 Ga. 565; McCandles v. Inland Acid Co., 108 Ga. 618, 34 S. E. 142. This rule was changed by the act of 1889, and that statute applies where the senior deed was made by a testatrix and the junior by her devisee. Holder v. American Investment Co., 94 Ga. 641, 21 S. E. 897. But the court properly omitted to submit to the jury any issue as to the relative priority of the unrecorded deed to Robert M. Farrar, for the reason that, under the undisputed facts, the junior deeds relied on by Lewman should not have been given priority, inasmuch as the record of the title of Frances F. Farrar to the lot in controversy was sufficient to put Lewman on notice that Mrs. Maria L. Harris had, prior to the execution of her will, disposed of this lot to Robert M. Farrar, and that it therefore constituted no part of the residuum of her estate. It will be remembered that in the will of Maria L. Harris the lot on Collins street, which was specifically devised to two of her daughters, was described as being bounded on the "south by house and lot of Robt. M. Farrar," who was then in possession of the premises. This lot is the one now in controversy. In the will of Matilda F. Harris she undertook to devise only her half interest in the house and lot which had been occupied by Mrs. Maria L. Harris prior to her death, and reference was made to her will for a more particular description of this lot. An investigation of Mrs. Farrar's claim of title would have disclosed to Lewman that she got no estate by inheritance from her mother, but derived such title as she had under the will of her mother and the subsequent will of her sister, Matilda. The recitals to the contrary in the deed from Josephine E. Harris to Mrs. Farrar were untrue, as an examination of the records by Lewman at the time of making the loan to Mrs. Farrar would have demonstrated. The records disclosed, not only that Mrs. Harris died testate, but that in her will she recognized that the house and lot fronting the southern boundary of her home place, and then being occupied by Farrar, belonged to him, and formed no part of her estate. In view of this unequivocal disclaimer of ownership on the part of Mrs. Harris, no one would be warranted in assuming that the lot in controversy passed under her will as a part of the residuum of her estate. Lewman thus had constructive notice that Mrs. Harris recognized the title to this lot to be in Robert M. Farrar, and therefore is not in a position to assert that he stands in the attitude of an innocent purchaser without notice of the unrecorded deed from her to Farrar.

The foregoing discussion disposes of all the questions presented with which it is necessary to deal. The court below very fully and fairly submitted to the jury the only issue which was really involved in the controversy, and their finding upon this issue should, we think, be allowed to stand.

Judgment on main bills of exceptions reversed; on cross-bill affirmed.

All the Justices concurring, except LUMPKIN, J., disqualified, and BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 204)

TYLER v. THEILIG et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. WILL—CONSTRUCTION—NATURE OF ESTATE.

A testator devised described real estate to his wife, "free from all charge or limitation, to her own proper use, benefit, and behoof," but added in immediate connection therewith the following provision: "In the event that I and my said wife should die without children, then I give, bequeath, and devise the said above-described real estate to my wife's sister [F.], to have and to hold the same in fee simple, to her and her heirs forever; nevertheless this bequest and devise shall in no wise interfere or limit my wife's interest in said real estate. Should said [F.] die before my said wife leaving no child or children, then this devise shall revert and become a part and parcel of my general estate, subject to any disposition that my wife may make of the same." Held:

(1) The widow took a fee-simple estate, determinable upon her death without issue, in which event F., if living, or her issue, if she had previously died leaving children, would take a fee-simple estate.

(2) In the event of the death of F. without issue prior to the death of the testator's widow, the property would revert to the testator's general estate, subject to the control of the widow and to her disposition by deed or will.

2. SAME—DEVISE OF REMAINDER—DESCRIPTION OF TESTATOR—CONDITIONAL PROVISION.

A devise of the residue of the estate to the testator's widow for life or during widowhood, with remainder after her death or remarriage to "the lawful heirs of Charles F. Tyler in the United States of America, or the lawful heirs of Carl F. Theilig, formerly of Noulitz, Saxon Altenburg," according to the Georgia statute of distributions, conveyed to the widow an estate for life or widowhood, with remainder to the heirs of the testator other than the widow.

(a) It appearing that the testator, a native of the German Empire, was known in Germany as Carl F. Theilig and in the United States as Charles F. Tyler, and that the will was signed with both names, the alternative expression was merely a means of identification, and did not render the devise in remainder void.

(b) A subsequent clause in the will, which provided for children which might be born after its execution, was not in conflict with the devise last mentioned, but was merely an alternative or conditional provision.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by Maggie Tyler against Franz Theilig and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Carl F. Theilig, a German subject, moved to this country, became naturalized, and changed his name to Charles F. Tyler. In 1903 he died, a citizen of Georgia, leaving a will in which he sought to dispose of an estate valued at something more than $50,000. His wife, Maggie Tyler, was made executrix of the will. The present suit is upon her petition, which alleges that the will is ambiguous, and prays that the court construe it. The first item of the will is as follows: "I give, bequeath, and devise to my wife, Maggie Tyler, the following property, to wit: All that tract or parcel of land in the city of Atlanta, known as No. 157 Walton street, situated on the north side of said street and fronting on the same fifty (50) feet, more or less, and extending back from said street one hundred and sixty (160) feet, more or less, free from all charge or limitation, to her own proper use, benefit and behoof. In the event that I and my said wife should die without children, then I give, bequeath, and devise the said above-described real estate to my wife's sister, Froney Flowers, to have and to hold the same in fee simple, to her and her heirs forever—nevertheless this bequest and devise shall in no wise interfere or limit my wife's interest in said real estate. Should said Froney Flowers die before my said wife, leaving no child or children, then this devise shall revert and become a part and parcel of my general estate, subject to any disposition that my wife may make of the same." The petition alleges that Froney Flowers was in life at the date of the death of the testator; that the testator died without leaving any child or children, or the descendants of a child or children, being survived only by his wife, the petitioner, who, as before stated, was named as his executrix; and that petitioner is unable to determine what estate, if any, passes to Froney Flowers under the last-named clause of the item quoted, "whether the attempted bequest to said Froney Flowers is wholly void because repugnant to the devise to Maggie Tyler made in the first clause of said first item, or whether the same, if in any event valid, lapsed by reason of the fact that Maggie Tyler did not die prior to the will's taking effect." The second item of the will was as follows: "I give, bequeath, and devise to my wife, Maggie Tyler, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my real and personal estate, of every name, description and nature whatever, to be used and enjoyed by her during her natural life, or so long as my wife shall be and remain a widow; and from and immediately after her decease, or in the event of her marrying again, from and immediately after her remarriage, then the rest, residue, and remainder of my real estate shall be distributed to and descend according to the laws of inheritance in force in the state of Georgia, to my lawful heirs in the United States of America, or the lawful heirs of Carl F. Theilig, formerly of Noulitz, Saxon Altenburg." It was alleged that at the time of his death the testator was survived by his widow, the petitioner, a resident of Fulton county, Ga., a niece residing in Pasadena, Los Angeles county, Cal., and brothers and sisters and children of a deceased brother and a deceased sister living in the German Empire, and that petitioner is unable to determine the legal effect of the second item of the will; four questions arising in its construction, to wit: (1) Does Maggie Tyler take an absolute title in the personal property of the estate under this item, or only an estate therein for life or widowhood? (2) Is the remainder estate attempted to be created under this item for the heirs of the testator void for uncertainty? (3) If not void for uncertainty, is the devise of the remainder of the estate, created under item 2, limited to the heirs residing in the United States of America, or to the German Empire alone, or does it include both? (4) If not void for uncertainty, would Maggie Tyler, the widow of the testator, in the event of her remarriage, take as sole heir under the Georgia statute of distributions? The third item of the will undertakes to create in the testator's wife a trust for the benefit of any child or children begotten by him which might be born of her before or subsequent to his death; but the petition, as amended, shows that no such child was born, and that the possibility of issue has become extinct. It was prayed that the court construe the will, and enter a decree by which the various doubts suggested should be resolved, and that certain named parties at interest, residing in this country and in the German Empire, be served and made parties to the suit. As no question of fact was involved, the case was submitted on its purely legal aspects to the judge for determination, and a decree was entered in accordance with an opinion which his honor filed and had sent up with the record. To this decree the executrix excepted.

Montz & Austin, for plaintiff in error.
David Eichberg, for defendants in error.

FISH, O. J. (after making the foregoing statement). Since this case was tried, the learned jurist who rendered the judgment has, as was said of his lamented kinsman by Chief Justice Bleckley on a similar occasion, been translated to a seat on this bench, and the possibility of an error on his part, like that of issue on the part of the plaintiff below, has become extinct. Not that there has been any error committed by him in the judgment now under review, for the clear and lucid opinion in which he sets forth his reasons for that judgment so thoroughly accords with our own view of the case that we have decided to adopt the opinion, with some necessary modifications, as our own.

1. It is contended that the first item of the will gave a fee-simple absolute estate to Mrs. Tyler, and that Froney Flowers took no estate thereunder. If this construction is correct, and there was no condition or limitation intended to be put upon the estate devised to Mrs. Tyler, then the second paragraph of this item is absolutely meaningless and mere surplusage. If effect is to be given to the first paragraph alone, then the second paragraph would be given no effect whatever. This will not be done unless absolutely necessary, but all the provisions will be construed in harmony when it can be done. The expression "free from all charge or limitation" in the first paragraph of this item may well be construed to mean that there shall be no incumbrance or charge fixed upon the estate, or limitation as to her use and enjoyment of the estate devised to her, or limitation upon the manner of her enjoyment of it. So, also, the words "to her own proper use, benefit, and behoof" are as applicable to a life estate or an estate for years as to an estate in fee simple, merely excluding any trust, use, or benefit for others. Immediately following this is the provision that, in the event the testator and his wife should die without children, then he devised the property to Froney Flowers, "to have and to hold the same in fee simple, to her and her heirs forever." While a devise or grant in this state does not require the use of the word "heirs" in order to convey a fee-simple estate, yet the fact that the devise to Mrs. Tyler does not expressly declare a fee-simple estate or use the word "heirs," and the devise to Froney Flowers does both of these things, indicates that the person who drew the will intended some difference in the estates to be granted. The words, "nevertheless this bequest and devise shall in no wise interfere or limit my wife's interest in said real estate," appear to have been added for fear that her use and enjoyment might be hampered or fettered by this additional devise to Froney Flowers. Sometimes a remainderman may proceed against a tenant in a particular estate because of waste, or the like. It would seem, by reason of this additional devise to her sister, that the husband did not desire any interference of this kind with his wife. It will be noticed that he does not say here that his wife has a fee-simple or absolute estate, but that this devise shall not interfere with her "interest in said real estate." The fact that the draftsman evidently understood the meaning of the expression "fee simple," and that it was nowhere used in connection with the devise to Mrs. Tyler, but was used in connection with the additional devise to her sister, and that in referring to what was devised to Mrs. Tyler it was not spoken of as a fee-simple estate, but as her "interest" in the property, indicates that the testator did not intend to devise to his wife an absolute fee-simple estate free from all conditions. The provision that "should said Froney Flowers die before my said wife, leaving no child or children, then this devise shall revert and become a part and parcel of my general estate, subject to any disposition that my wife may make of the same," is not so repugnant to what precedes as to render it void. It provides for two things: First, that if Froney Flowers should die before his wife, without child or children, the devise to her should not inure to her collateral heirs, but the property should revert to the testator's general estate; and, secondly, he evidently desired that in that event his wife should have the right to make final disposition of it, and that it should not necessarily fall into the residue, and be governed by item second. Taking the entire item altogether, we think the proper construction is this: The testator devised to his wife the real estate described in this item in fee, but this fee was determinable upon the condition named, to wit, that the testator and his wife should die without children. In that event, upon her death the property should pass to Froney Flowers in fee simple. If Froney Flowers should die before the testator's wife, leaving no child or children, then the property should revert and become part of his general estate, but his wife should have the right to make disposition thereof, excepting it from the method of distribution provided for in item second, if she so desired. It is not absolutely clear whether the testator meant that this disposition should be by deed or will, or either, at the option of his wife, but most probably, as no limitation is put upon the word "disposition," he intended to confer the power of disposition upon her as she might choose, in case of a reversion upon the death of Froney Flowers without child or children. It cannot be said that this added provision for the benefit of the wife is inconsistent with the grant to her of a fee determinable upon condition. If the devisee in remainder under such condition should die without child or children, the wife would have the added right of disposition.

2. It is contended that under item second Mrs. Tyler took an absolute fee-simple estate in the realty; that she took an estate for life or widowhood, with remainder to the testator's heirs at law, according to the laws of descent in this state; that she, as his widow, was the only heir at law; and that therefore the estate for life or widowhood united with the estate in remainder, and she thus acquired an absolute fee-simple estate. The brothers and sisters of the testator and the descendants of brothers and sisters deny this contention. They contend that the proper construction of item second as to the real estate is to give Mrs. Tyler a life estate or estate during widowhood, and after her death an estate in remainder to them; that having given her a life estate with remainder to his lawful heirs, he meant his lawful heirs other than her. As to the personality referred to in this item, it will be observed that the first part of the item creates a life estate in Mrs. Tyler, while the second part, which refers to the remainder estate, does not include the personality, but only the real estate. Therefore, as to the personal property, an estate for life or widowhood is created in Mrs. Tyler, with no provision as to remainder.

It is contended that Mrs. Tyler takes a particular estate as devisee thereof, and also takes the remainder estate as sole heir, under the description of the person or persons to take in remainder. If this contention is correct, then item second of the will might be briefly stated thus: A testator devises to his wife an estate in the residue of his property, which he distinctly limits to an estate for life or during widowhood. He desires to make provision as to what shall become of the real estate upon her death or remarriage, and in order to do this he provides that it shall go to his wife. It is hardly likely that the testator intended to use so many words and so many provisions for the purpose of conveying a fee-simple absolute estate to his wife. It is as if he had said: "I create a life estate in favor of my wife, which I distinctly limit as being a life estate, and after her death I then create a remainder in her." It is quite true that there are a number of cases which hold that where a testator gives property to a tenant for life, and on the death of the life tenant to the testator's next of kin, and there is nothing in the context to qualify, or in the circumstances of the case to exclude, the natural meaning of the testator's words, the next of kin of the testator living at his death will take; and if the tenant for life be such next of kin, either solely or jointly with other persons, he will not on that account be excluded. There are other cases which hold to the contrary. Ordinarily in this state a limitation over to "heirs" means to children. But the testator did not mean this, because he had no child, and made a different provision if one should be born. So that we must look from the ordinary signification to the meaning of the testator. In the present case Carl F. Theilig formerly lived in Noulitz, Saxon Altenburg. He came to America many years ago, leaving brothers and sisters in Germany. He married in this country, but never had any children. None of his family are in America, except one niece in California. After he came to this country, he adopted the name of Charles F. Tyler, instead of the German name of Carl F. Theilig. He has brothers and sisters, and descendants of brothers and sisters, in Germany. In the light of these facts, we must look for his intent in the use of the expression in item second of the will. If the testator has used clear and unambiguous words, and there is nothing in the context to qualify the meaning of such words as "heirs" and "next of kin," they will take effect according to their ordinary signification, although the result may be somewhat anomalous. Did the testator mean that after his wife's death the residue, in which she had a life estate, should then descend to her in fee simple? The words "shall be distributed to" also throw some light upon the intention of the testator. It is true that, if there is only one person entitled to an estate, such expressions as "distribute" or "divide" would not create more devisees or distributees; but where the testator had brothers and sisters among whom an estate might be distributed or divided, and where the term is not as apt as when applied to a single individual, it may be considered as throwing some light upon the intention of the testator. Further, the testator was careful in this connection to note the fact that he was known as Charles F. Tyler in the United States and Carl F. Thellig in Germany, and that the heirs referred to were the heirs of Charles F. Tyler in the United States, or Carl F. Thellig, formerly of Noulitz, Saxon Altenburg. If the testator had intended that his wife alone should have the remainder in fee, what possible reason could there have been for him to refer to the fact of his former German name, and persons who might be his heirs under that name. Again, in item fourth, the testator's wife is nominated as his executrix, and it is provided that, in the event of her death before entering upon said trust, "or before the completion of said execution of this will," then Froney Flowers should become executrix. Now, if the testator intended merely to make his wife his sole devisee in fee simple and also his executrix, there could be no reason for providing for another executrix in case of her death before the completion of the execution of the will. It would seem that the testator contemplated something further to be done in the execution of this will besides merely turning over the property to his wife. He evidently did not mean to refer merely to the payment of debts, because the will nowhere refers to the existence of debts, nor does he make (what is quite a common provision with testators) a statement that debts shall be paid. Taking the entire will together, it is evident that the testator did not mean by the second item of the will simply to provide that his wife should have a life estate, and upon her death the remainder interest should descend to her; or that she should have an estate for widowhood, and that if she remarried the remainder should "descend" to her. The fact that the husband provided an estate during widowhood which was to terminate upon the remarriage of the widow evidently indicates that he intended to lessen her estate in case of remarriage, not to increase it. If the contention of the plaintiff is correct, the testator worked exactly the opposite result, because his wife clearly has an estate under the will so long as she remains a widow, but if she remarries she gets a fee-simple estate. It is hardly likely that the testator intended to accomplish this result. In the first item he had provided a home for his wife, which she would not lose in case of remarriage. He also left her the personalty, which is not affected by the remainder. It appears most likely that his memory reverted to the home of his early days, and that he did not wish, in the event his wife died childless or remarried, that this other property should pass to strangers, but to his own blood kin.

It is suggested that the expression, "that is to say, the lawful heirs of Charles F. Tyler in the United States of America, or the lawful heirs of Carl F. Thellig, formerly of Noulitz, Saxon Altenburg," being in the alternative, renders the devise in remainder void. We do not think so. In view of the fact that Mr. Tyler's original name was Thellig, and that when he came to America he adopted the name of Tyler, and that in providing for this remainder he doubtless had in mind the fact that in Germany he might still be called Thellig, and that persons claiming as his heirs might know him under that name, and in view of the fact that there are no heirs in America except his wife, and that one niece had come to the United States who might possibly have answered to the description of an heir if her father died, and that others might come to this country as two of the family had done, it seems that the more natural construction to be put on the will is that the testator, in providing for the distribution to his heirs, merely wished to identify himself as Charles F. Tyler in America and Carl F. Thellig in Germany, and to direct that distribution should be made according to his will, whether the claim be made under the name of Tyler or Thellig. This idea is further borne out by the fact that he signed the will in both names, Tyler and Thellig. At all events, the construction indicated is certainly to be preferred to one which would render the devise void.

It is also suggested that item third is in direct conflict with item second, and therefore destroys its efficacy. We cannot concede the soundness of this contention. The will was executed in May, 1897, and the testator died in November, 1903. Item third was merely an alternative or conditional provision, made in case there should be a child born to himself and wife. No such child was born, either before his death or afterwards, and item third never took effect. Mere alternative provisions, one of which creates a trust if a child be born, and the other different distribution if there be no child born, are not in conflict, and one does not destroy the other.

A number of authorities have been cited by counsel for the plaintiff to sustain their position as to the words "heirs" and "next of kin" when used in wills, but we do not think they are in point. The only Georgia case cited is that of Wiggins v. Blount, 33 Ga. 409. That case, however, is very different from the one at bar. There an estate was created in the testator's wife for life or during widowhood, for the benefit of herself and the testator's family, with the provision that, if any of the children should leave the family, by marriage or otherwise, they should cease to share in the benefits of the estate during the life of their mother. A daughter married, and subsequently dies without issue, and her husband, surviving her, remarried, and also died without issue. His widow sued the administrator d. b. n. of the original testator for a child's share of the estate, the testator's wife having died in the meantime, and it was held that she could recover. In the present case there is no provision for holding the estate together until a given time, and then dividing it among the widow and others; but according to the contention of the widow the property constitutes for her a life estate, with a remainder to her after her death or remarriage. It is not a case of division among a class of which she is a member, but it is claimed that she alone is meant by the description of who is to take in remainder, and that all the words about Theilig and Germany and distribution are surplusage. We do not hesitate to hold that this claim is without foundation.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except LUMPKIN, J., disqualified, and BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 310)

HARRIS v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. TRUSTS — EDUCATIONAL AND RELIGIOUS PURPOSES.

Where the owners of a lot of land conveyed it to certain named persons, "and their successors, in trust for the purposes herein-after mentioned and declared," to have and to hold to them "and their successors in office, forever, in trust that they shall erect and build or cause to be built thereon two academies or seminaries, and also to build a house or place of worship for the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in further trust that in case of vacation, by death or otherwise, of a trustee or trustees, the vacancy shall be filled by the proper authority by another trustee or trustees as the case may be," such a conveyance created a continuing trust for educational and religious purposes.

2. SAME — TRUSTEES — DEATH — APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSORS.

Such a trust is the subject of equitable jurisdiction; and, if the original trustees named in the deed are no longer in existence, the superior court, exercising equitable jurisdiction, will appoint successors upon application of any person authorized to bring the action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Charities, §§ 8, 42, 85; vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trusts, §§ 207, 208.]

3. SAME — TITLE OF TRUSTEES.

Under the acts of this case, neither the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church nor the trustees of the Ft. Valley Male & Female Academy are shown to be the successors of the original trustees, lawfully appointed.

4. SAME — ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST — RIGHT TO SUE — BENEFICIAL INTEREST.

One who owns a residence lot abutting on the land covered by the trust is not for that reason a beneficiary of the trust or authorized to file a proceeding to have trustees appointed and the trust protected.

5. SAME.

A woman who alleges that she is a citizen and taxpayer of the town and county in which the land covered by the original trust deed is located does not thereby show a sufficient interest in the trust to authorize her to file an equitable petition for the purposes stated in the last note.

6. SAME — PROTECTION OF TRUST PROPERTY.

A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the town in which the land was situated, and which occupied the church building erected on the lot, had such an interest in the trust as authorized her to file an equitable petition to have trustees appointed, and to enjoin an unauthorized sale of the property by the church authorities. Whether a sale by proper trustees will be authorized by the court is not decided.

7. SAME — SALE BY TRUSTEE — RIGHTS OF PURCHASER — NOTICE.

A purchaser from a trustee, with notice actual or constructive of the trust, holds as trustee for the beneficiaries.

8. SAME — DEED BY TRUSTEES TO OTHER TRUSTEES.

Where two sets of trustees claim to be acting under a deed which created the trust, a deed from one of them to the other will not operate either as title or color of title as against the common trust.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Houston County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Suit for injunction by A. W. Harris against S. B. Brown and others. There was a decree for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

On August 28, 1836, Mathew Dorsey and James A. Everett conveyed to Hardy Hunter and eight other persons named, "and their successors, in trust for the purposes hereinafter mentioned and declared," certain described lands in the county of Houston, containing six acres more or less, "to have and to hold the above-described lot or piece of land unto the said [persons named] and their successors in office, forever, in trust that they shall erect and build or cause to be built thereon two academies or seminaries, and also to build a house or place of worship for the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and in further trust that in case of vacation, by death or otherwise, of a trustee or trustees, the vacancy shall be filled by the proper authority with another trustee or trustees as the case may be." The makers of the deed warranted the title to the persons named "and their successors in trust, forever, in fee simple." A schoolhouse was erected on the property, and also a church building for the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Some of the trustees named in the deed were members of the Methodist Church and some were Baptists, and they had no official connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In some way, not very clearly indicated by the evidence, certain persons, styling themselves trustees for the Ft. Valley Male & Female Academy, were in possession of the school building and managing it as if they were trustees for the educational use. The trustees appointed by the conference of the Methodist Church were managing the interest of the church. It is not clearly disclosed what became of the original trustees under the deed, but presumably, from the long lapse of time, they are all dead. No successors were ever appointed for them by the court, so far as the evidence shows. Prior to August, 1882, the school trustees removed the school to another location not on the land involved in the controversy, and the building was sold and torn down. At the date just mentioned a conveyance was made which purported to be from a number of persons as "trustees of the Ft. Valley Male & Female Academies, of said state and county," to certain other persons as "trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Ft. Valley." The consideration named was $50, and it purported to quitclaim the land involved in this litigation. It was signed: "William I. Green, Pres. A. C. Riley, Sect." The trustees of the Methodist Church claim that since said deed they have held entire and exclusive possession of the property. About three years ago the Methodist Church was removed from its location on this property to another place in the town of Ft. Valley. Recently, under authority from the quarterly conference, and with the consent of the preacher, the trustees of the church have proceeded to divide up the property into lots for the purpose of offering them for sale. The plaintiff, alleging herself to be a citizen and taxpayer of the town of Ft. Valley, in which the property is located, and owner of a residence lot fronting on the property, which is referred to as a square, and also a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South of Ft. Valley, filed her equitable petition for the purpose of enjoining the church trustees from dividing or selling the property in lots, from closing certain streets which she claimed existed on the property, from removing the trees upon it, and from interfering with the public use and enjoyment of the square as an open public square. She also prayed that the court would appoint trustees to hold the property and to conserve and carry out the uses and purposes of the trust, and for general relief. The defendants denied that the plaintiff was entitled to injunction, but contended that they had the title to the property and the right to bring it to sale. On hearing the application for injunction the presiding judge refused it, and plaintiff excepted.

N. E. & W. A. Harris, for plaintiff in error.
H. A. Mathews and Jos. H. Hall, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). 1-3. The deed of Dorsey and Everett created a trust of a dual character, educational and religious. Clearly it was not their intention for the trust to terminate upon the building of the academies and the church. The conveyance was to the persons named as trustees and their successors, to have and to hold to them "and their successors in office forever in trust," and it was declared that, in case of a vacancy in any trusteeship, it should be filled by "the proper authority." These expressions in the deed, as well as the general character of the trust created, negative the idea that the grantors intended for it to terminate as soon as the houses were built. The deed created a continuing charitable trust, for the two purposes mentioned. Beckwith v. St. Philip's Parish, 69 Ga. 574; Thompson v. Hale, 123 Ga. 305, 51 S. E. 383. A consideration of $10 is recited; but the evidence indicates that it was a deed of gift, and it has been so treated in the argument. Such a trust is peculiarly a subject of equitable jurisdiction. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4006-4008. "A charity once inaugurated is always subject to the supervision and direction of a court of equity, to render effectual its purpose and object." Civ. Code 1895, § 4009. A trust will not be permitted to fail for want of a trustee. Civ. Code 1895, § 3197. While the courts are reluctant to interpose in questions affecting the management of the temporalities of a church, yet, if property is devoted to a specific doctrine or purpose, the courts will prevent it from being diverted from the trust. Civ. Code 1895, § 2362. Had this trust been for the church only, section 2353 of the Civil Code of 1895 (codified from the act of 1805, which was in force when the deed was made) would have been directly applicable. It declares that land conveyed to a church or its trustees, for the purpose of erecting a church or meetinghouse, "shall be fully and absolutely vested in such church or religious society, or in their respective trustees, for the uses and purposes in said deed expressed; to be holden to them, or their trustees, for their use by succession, according to the mode of church government, or rules of discipline exercised by such churches or religious societies respectively." If, therefore, the only use specified in the deed had been the erection of the church, the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, chosen according to its method of church government, would be held to be the proper successors of the original trustees. But the trust was for an educational as well as a religious purpose; and therefore the act referred to did not control it. That act does not say that, where a trust is created for both a church and an academy, the trustees of the church alone shall take the entire title. The original trustees appear to have died. At some time in the past, certain persons styling themselves "trustees of the Ft. Valley Male & Female Academy" held possession of the academy on this property. Who elected or appointed them, or how they claimed to be successors of the original trustees under the deed, does not appear. The usual trustees chosen by the Metho

Church according to its form of government to hold and manage its property seem to have exercised control over what was considered the interest of the church. Thus the trust property was being held by two sets of trustees; neither being the original trustees, nor successors shown to have been legally appointed. The deed creating the trust declares that vacancies shall be filled by appointment "by the proper authority." In the absence of any other provision as to the mode of succession, a court of equity was the proper authority, or, under our system, the superior court exercising equitable power, on proper application therefor.

4. If the trust stands without lawful trustees to administer to it, the next question which presents itself is whether the plaintiff is authorized to apply to have trustees appointed, and to have the trust protected. She claims the right to do this on three grounds. The first is because she owns a lot abutting on the square or tract of land covered by the trust. In this capacity she has no-standing in court. The trust was not created for the benefit of adjacent lot owners, nor was the dedication by the grantors for a public park or playground. No such intention is expressed in the deed, nor is there any evidence that they sought at any time to impress such a use upon the land; nor could they have done so after having parted with the title to it and dedicated it to another use. Whether the town of Ft. Valley acquired any rights in regard to streets, or to maintain its water pipes on certain portions of the land, the evidence is conflicting, and the presiding judge did not abuse his discretion in dealing with it. There was much evidence introduced for the purpose of showing that certain streets claimed to exist were mere irregular and undefined pathways or roadways crossing a vacant lot, and not established or fixed roads or streets. Whether or not certain streets have been established, it seems quite clear that the property has not been divested of the educational and religious trust and become a public park.

5. The next ground on which the plaintiff contends that she is entitled in equity to the relief prayed by her is that she is a citizen and taxpayer of the town of Ft. Valley and of the county of Houston, in which it is located. In Thompson v. Hale, supra, the proceeding was brought by certain persons who were patrons of the academy for whom it was sought to appoint trustees, as well as residents and taxpayers of the town in which it was located. In the opinion, Mr. Justice Evans says: "The beneficiaries under the deed are not the trustees, but all the persons living in the locality of the school who might avail themselves of its educational advantages and opportunities." The right of the plaintiffs in that case did not depend alone upon their being citizens and taxpayers. While a taxpayer may file a petition to enjoin public authorities, such as a municipal council or the fiscal agents of a county, from misapplying public funds held by them, this rests upon the basis that the public authorities hold such funds in trust, and that the taxpayers are in the nature of beneficiaries of the trust. But it does not follow that every taxpayer is such a beneficiary of a trust created by a deed to individual trustees for the purpose of founding a school as to authorize him to enforce such trust, to enjoin a diversion of it, to have trustees appointed for it, and to exercise supervisory acts in regard to it. In England, the King, as parens patriæ, protected public trusts; and, if the superintendence of such a trust was involved, it was necessary for the Attorney General to be made a party on behalf of the crown. Adams, Eq. (8th Ed.) §13. In 2 Perry on Trusts (5th Ed.) §744, it is said that, if the trustees of a charity abuse the trust, the property does not revert to the heirs or legal representative of the donor, unless there is an express condition of the gift that it shall do so; "but the redress is by bill or information by the Attorney General or other person having the right to sue." The author does not, however, enter into a discussion as to what other person has such right. In Chambers v. Baptist Educational Society, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 215, 221, a bequest was made of a fund, the interest of which was to be used exclusively for the education of such Baptist preachers or candidates for the Baptist ministry as adhered to the articles of general union of Baptists in Kentucky. The college for this purpose was located in Georgetown. In the opinion of the court it was said, in reference to the status of the plaintiff (page 221): "The charge that he is a Baptist, belonging to the general union of Baptists in Kentucky, resident in Georgetown, and owning property there, will not suffice. The interest thus derived is too general, undefined, and remote to justify his interference." In Hathaway v. New Baltimore, etc., 48 Mich. 251, 12 N. W. 186, where money was bequeathed to a village to be employed in the erection of a school building to be used as a high school, and the building was erected, it was held that a suit in equity would not lie by a taxpayer to compel the village to maintain a high school in the building. In Michigan, however, St. 43 Eliz., commonly known as the "statute of charitable uses," has never been adopted, as held by the Supreme Court of that state. How far this fact may affect the decision referred to need not be discussed. To authorize the plaintiff to enforce such a trust by proceedings in equity, she must have some pecuniary interest in it, or show that she is a beneficiary who may attend the school herself, or send members of her family to it, or in some way avail herself of its educational advantages; and the bare statement that she is a citizen and taxpayer is not sufficient.

6. One of the purposes of the trust declared in the deed of Dorsey and Everett was to build a house or place of worship for the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is not denied that the plaintiff is such a member of the church which used the building on the lot; and in that capacity she is one of the beneficiaries of the trust. Hullman v. Honcomp, 5 Ohio St. 237; Baptist Church of Lancaster v. Presbyterian Church, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 635; Brunnenmeyer v. Buhre, 32 Ill. 183 (2); Happy v. Morton, 33 Ill. 398.

7, 8. It is contended by the defendants that, if the deed purporting to have been made by the academy trustees and signed by the secretary and president did not convey to the church trustees a perfect title, it at least operated as color of title, and that prescription had ripened under it. If the academy trustees had no title, they could not convey one. They do not appear to have been incorporated; and, if they had any title, it was not conveyed by a deed signed merely by one as their president and another as their secretary. Considered from the standpoint of color of title, it could not avail the defendants. Neither the academy trustees nor the church trustees claimed in opposition to the trust created by the deed of the donors, but both of them claimed under it. "The purchaser from a trustee, with notice actual or constructive of the trust, holds as trustee for the beneficiaries." Civ. Code 1895, § 8179; Baptist Church of Lancaster v. Presbyterian Church, supra. It appearing that there are no successors to the original trustees lawfully appointed, and that the plaintiff has a status in equity as a beneficiary, it follows that the trustees of the Methodist Church should be enjoined from making the sale, and that the court should appoint trustees to succeed those named in the deed. If the trustees appointed by the quarterly conference have not succeeded to the title of the original trustees appointed by the deed, a sale by them would not convey a perfect title, even if the injunctions were denied. They could not convey more than they have. The only way in which a complete title to this land can be made is through a court of equity. The complainant, being a beneficiary, may not be entitled to prevent a sale, if the court deems such a sale advantageous to the trust; but she is entitled to have it take place lawfully, so that a good title will be conveyed and a price be realized based upon such a valid conveyance. There is no indication in the evidence that the church trustees desire knowingly to act wrongfully. They doubtless would not wish to make a sale which would not convey a good title to the purchasers; and, having at heart the best interest of the church and trust, they will no doubt readily perceive the desirability of making a valid sale, if one is made at all. As to whether there shall be a sale or not, and if there shall be one, what direction shall be given in regard to the fund arising, are questions not now for decision.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 338)

ATLANTA BUGGY CO. v. HESS SPRING & AXLE CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. SALES—UNILATERAL CONTRACT.

Where a written contract was entered into between a purchaser of certain goods and a person who signed for the seller, which contained a provision that the contract "shall only be considered binding on the seller when signed by one or more of its officers," and it did not appear that it was ever so signed, or that there was any consideration for the promise of the purchaser, except the contemplated mutual obligations to be assumed by the seller, the contract was unilateral. The seller not being bound, neither was the purchaser; and the latter might withdraw from it before it became mutually binding by acceptance in the manner agreed on.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 48, Cent. Dig. Sales, § 45.]

2. SAME—ACTION—DECLARATION—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—RATIFICATION.

Where the proposed vendor brought suit for breach of such contract against the vendee, and by amendment alleged that the person who signed the contract with the vendee was the agent of the plaintiff, with full power to represent it in making the contract for the articles specified in it, and binding it thereto, and that the contract he made was fully ratified by the plaintiff and accepted by it as binding on it, such amendment did not show that the contract was or ever became one whereby one became bound to sell and the other to buy the specified property. The allegation that the person signing the contract on behalf of the plaintiff was authorized so to do, and that the contract was ratified by the plaintiff, did not change its written terms, but left as one of them that it should not be binding on the seller until signed by one or more of its officers.

3. SAME.

Authority to make the contract had reference to it as made, and ratification confirmed it as made. Neither anterior authority nor subsequent ratification would operate to change the terms of the written contract without the knowledge or consent of the other party, and adversely to it.

4. SAME—PART PERFORMANCE—EFFECT.

Two written contracts of a similar character being involved, the fact that under one of them the vendee specified certain articles which he desired, and which were furnished, rendered it binding on the parties to the extent only of the accepted specification.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by the Hess Spring & Axle Company against the Atlanta Buggy Company. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

The Hess Spring & Axle Company brought suit against the Atlanta Buggy Company. The declaration contained three counts, but one of them was stricken on demurrer. Of the others, one was based on each of two contracts. They were similar in character, except that one applied to vehicle axles, the other to vehicle springs. The first began thus: "Contract for axles. Made in duplicate at Atlanta, Ga., July 25th, 1902. The Hess Spring & Axle Co., of Carthage, Ohio, agrees to sell, and the Atlanta Buggy Co., of Atlanta, Ga., agrees to buy, upon the terms and conditions stated herein." Then followed a description of the quantity, prices, and terms, provisions in regard to making specifications by the buyer, a warranty by the seller, etc. The contract closed with these words: "No verbal agreement shall affect this contract, nor can it be changed in any manner, except in writing and noted hereon, and it shall only be considered binding on the seller when signed by one or more of its officers. [Signed] The Hess Spring & Axle Co., per C. W. Cathcart. Accepted: Atlanta Buggy Co., Clarence Houston, Secty. & Treas." As to the first contract, it was alleged that the defendant failed and refused to make specifications within the time named in it. As to the second, it was alleged that the defendant made specifications for a small amount of the springs, but failed and refused to make specifications for more. Defendant demurred to the declaration, and the plaintiff amended by adding the following allegations to each count: "Said contract was made by a duly authorized agent of the plaintiff, to wit, C. W. Cathcart, with full power to represent plaintiff in making the contract for the articles specified in said contract, and binding the company to make and deliver the same. Said contract, when made, was fully ratified by plaintiff, and accepted by it as binding upon it. Plaintiff stood ready to fully perform each and every obligation imposed upon it by said contract. Said plaintiff was a manufacturer, and was known by the defendant to be such, and said contract was made with the plaintiff with the intention that the articles therein specified should be manufactured by it and sold by it to the defendant." The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Smith, Hammond & Smith, for plaintiff in error. Slaton & Phillips, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. It is necessary to consider only one question raised by the demurrer, namely, that it appears that each of the contracts provided that it should "only become binding on the seller when signed by one or more of its officers," that it was without consideration, unless there were mutual promises, and that the seller never made a promise or became bound, and therefore the defendant was not bound. No other consideration moving to the defendant is alleged or insisted on, except that there were mutual promises, and that each contract was binding on both parties. If this were not so, then there was no mutuality, and neither would be bound. Under the allegations of the original declaration it is clear that no contract binding on both parties was set forth. Each of the contracts contained the provision above quoted as to when it should become binding on the seller. It is not alleged that it was ever signed by an officer of the seller, nor is there any allegation that Cathcart was such an officer. Was this cured by the amendment? It still did not allege that Cathcart was an officer of the seller, but that he was a duly authorized agent of the plaintiff, with full power to represent it in making the contract for the articles specified therein, and binding the company to make and deliver them. Concede that he had authority to make the contract, and also to bind the plaintiff to make and deliver the articles; did he exercise it so as to thus bind the plaintiff? Evidently not. The written contract which he actually made contained as one of its terms that it did not become immediately binding. If Cathcart was an agent, and had authority to contract absolutely for the making and delivery of the articles, he did not exercise it, but in fact contracted that his principal should not become then presently bound. The cases in which it has been held that, when there are provisions in an insurance policy declaring that none of its terms can be waived except in writing, there may, nevertheless, be a waiver by an agent, shown to be in fact authorized by the company to make it, in some other manner. Western Assurance Co. v. Williams, 94 Ga. 128, 21 S. E. 370, and like decisions, do not affect this case. That a party may, by himself or his agent duly authorized to do so, waive a provision of a contract in his favor, and that the other party may take advantage of such waiver, is quite different from an effort on the part of one party to a contract to waive one of its terms providing for a certain signature as precedent to its becoming binding on him, and thus, without notice to or the assent of the other party, to establish a right in his own favor which would not otherwise exist. This case is more like that of Reese v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ass'n, 111 Ga. 482, 36 S. E. 637, in which it was held that when the application for a policy of insurance and the policy itself stipulated that it should not become binding on the company issuing it until the first premium had been actually received, during the good health of the applicant, this payment of the premium during his good health was a condition precedent to fixing liability on the company. See, also, Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Stephens, 115 Ga. 192, 41 S. E. 679. In Perry v. Paschal, 103 Ga. 134, 29 S. E. 703, there was a consideration for the contract signed by the party sought to be bound, and the fact that both parties did not sign the agreement in regard to land was not fatal to a recovery, where the party not signing brought an equitable proceeding for specific performance. So in Sivell v. Hogan, 119 Ga. 167, 46 S. E. 67, the contract was based on a consideration, or at least the seal attached imported a consideration. It was held that "a unilateral contract, although required by the statute to be in writing, may be made mutual by the other party doing some act which would take the case out of the statute, so far as he is concerned." But a tender of the purchase price, made after the time specified for delivery (if a tender would otherwise be sufficient), was held not to have that effect. For mutual obligation to furnish a consideration, they must be mutually binding.

It is further contended by plaintiff, that, if the allegation was not otherwise sufficient, the statement that it ratified the action of Cathcart showed the contract to be binding. If the act of Cathcart originally bound the plaintiff, ratification could give it no greater force. Pleading ratification of the act of one acting as agent implies that he originally was wanting in authority, or exceeded his authority. Otherwise, ratification would be unnecessary. As to whether, if one party to a contract is not bound by reason of want of authority in a person signing as his agent, he can afterward ratify such act and claim that the other party became bound, although the contract was not originally binding on both, the authorities are in conflict. In Wisconsin it has been held that "ratification of contract, entered into by person acting as agent, but without authority so to do, made by the person for whom he assumed to act as principal, cannot validate the contract so as to bind the other contracting party without his assent." Atlee v. Bartholomew, 69 Wis. 43, 33 N. W. 110, 5 Am. St. Rep. 109. Speaking of a vendee in a contract for the purchase of land, who has not signed the written contract, the same court says: "He ought not to be in a position where he can hold the other party to the contract, and compel its performance if advantageous to him, and at the same time be at liberty to avoid the contract on his part if disadvantageous. Both parties ought to be bound by the contract, or neither should be bound." Lowber v. Connit, 36 Wis. 183; Dodge v. Hopkins, 14 Wis. 630, 637, 641; Townsend v. Corning, 23 Wend. 435, 444; Governor v. Fox, Eng. Law & Eq. R. 420; Mechem on Agency, § 179 (b). Judge Story thought the general rule to be that ratification related back to the act done, both for and against the principal, but with certain exceptions. Story on Agency, § 245 et seq. An elaborate discussion of the subject will be found in a note to Atlee v. Bartholomew, supra, in which the position of Mr. Mechem is criticised. See, also, Lawson on Contracts, § 177; Andrews v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 596; Hammond v. Hagnin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 490; Soanes v. Spencer, 16 Eng. Com. L. 32 (Sergeant & Lowber's Ed. 14); McLean v. Dunn, 4 Bing. 722, 13 E. C. L. R. 710; Rev. Rep. 714; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 12, 13. The Georgia cases hold, as a general rule, that ratification relates back to the act ratified, except where there is an intervening equity. Howard v. Cassels, 105 Ga. 412, 31 S. E. 562, 70 Am. St. Rep. 44 (2); Singleton v. Bank, 113 Ga. 527, 38 S. E. 947 (2); Graham v. Williams, 114 Ga. 716, 40 S. E. 790; Civ. Code, § 3019. As to the point made in the quotation from Lowber v. Connit, supra, compare decisions in Perry v. Paschal, 108 Ga. 137, 29 S. E. 703. We are not, however, required to decide whether in this case the seller could retain the right to ratify or reject until it developed which would be the more advantageous, and then ratify, if for its own interest, and thus by relation back make the contract mutual instead of unilateral. Suppose that the principal could ratify; what would it ratify? The exact contract which the person acting as agent made. What was that? It was that the written instrument should not become binding on the seller until signed by one or more of its officers. This agreement formed one of the terms of the written contract made by the person acting as agent. When his acts were ratified, it simply confirmed the contract which he made. It did not operate to make another contract, or to change the terms of the one made. Ratification confirms. It neither changes the contract nor makes a new one with different terms. The contract made, therefore, not having been binding on the seller, and there being no consideration, the purchaser was not bound, and could retire from it before it became a complete and mutually binding contract. Cooley v. Moss, 123 Ga. 707, 51 S. E. 625.

The case of George Delker Co. v. Hess Spring & Axle Co. (C. C. A.) 138 Fed. 647, is relied on by the plaintiff. That decision dealt with three points: That the contract was not too uncertain to be enforced; that the purchaser was not put on his election as to his action in certain events provided for in the contract; and the determination that the contract contemplated manufacturing the articles, and that the measure of damages was one adapted to a manufacturing contract, and not to an ordinary contract of bargain and sale. The questions dealt with in this opinion were not involved. The specification of certain articles under one of the contracts did not go further than to render it binding to the extent of the accepted specification. McCaw Mfg. Co. v. Felder, 115 Ga. 408, 41 S. E. 684.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 521)

DOLLAR v. BUSHA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE — EXECUTION AGAINST HUSBAND—LIABILITY OF WIFE'S PROPERTY.

In a claim case, where it appeared from the uncontradicted evidence that the property levied on was produced on the land of the claimant, who was the wife of the defendant in fi. fa., mainly by the work of the claimant and her children, though assisted by the labor of the husband, and that he had no interest whatever in the property, a verdict finding it subject to the lien of an execution against the husband was wholly unwarranted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 26, Cent. Dig. Husband and Wife, §§ 455, 457.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Hall County;
J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Action by S. J. Busha against E. B. Dollar. Judgment for plaintiff on levy of execution. L. J. Dollar interposed claim. From a judgment holding the property subject, she brings error. Reversed.

A fi. fa. in favor of S. J. Busha was levied on a bale of cotton as the property of E. B. Dollar, the defendant in fi. fa., and a claim thereto was interposed by his wife, Mrs. L. J. Dollar. On the trial of the claim case in a justice's court, the claimant admitted possession of the cotton in the defendant in fi. fa. after the rendition of the judgment against him. She testified that the cotton belonged to her; that it had been raised on land of which she was in possession and which had been given her by her mother; that she and her children performed most of the labor in growing the cotton, though her husband worked some with them; that the plowing was done with a mule belonging to her, and she bought and paid for the guano to make the cotton; and that she did not rent the land to her husband, but he rented other land to make corn. The claimant's mother testified that she had given the land to her daughter, who had been in possession of it several years, but that no written deed to it had ever been delivered to her; that she owned the mule and ran the business, and her husband had no interest in the land or stock. Another witness swore that claimant owned the land and stock and that the cotton was hers, and that he had "traded for the mule for her." The defendant in fi. fa. testified: "I never had any interest in the land. It belongs to claimant. Her mother gave it to her. I never rented the land from claimant. I hauled the cotton to the gin for her." The plaintiff in fi. fa. introduced no evidence in rebuttal, nor did he make any effort to impeach any of the witnesses who had testified. The jury nevertheless found the property subject, and the claimant took the case by certiorari to the superior court, where the finding of the jury was upheld. Exception is taken to the judgment of that court overruling the certiorari.

W. B. Sloan, for plaintiff in error. Brook & Henderson, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). The defendant in fi. fa. and the claimant sustained the relation of husband and wife. The cotton levied on was produced on the claimant's land. The chief part of the labor in making the crop, of which the property levied on was a part, was performed by claimant and her children. The bare fact that the husband assisted in making the crop gave him no proprietary interest in it. If a husband debtor employs his labor on homestead land, or in connection with the exempt personalty, what his labor produces inures to the homestead beneficiaries. Wade v. Weslow, 62 Ga. 564; Kupferman v. Buckholts, 73 Ga. 778. A husband, acting bona fide, may become the creditor of his wife for services, by contract expressed or implied; and, if he be such a creditor, his creditors have their remedy against her by garnishment. Keller v. Mayer, 55 Ga. 409. But the debtor cannot be forced to apply his labor to the extinguishment of his creditor's claim. There is no way of reaching it. King v. Skellie, 79 Ga. 151, 3 S. E. 614; Kiser v. Dozier, 102 Ga. 434, 30 S. E. 967, 66 Am. St. Rep. 184. There is nothing in the record to even intimate that the wife rented the land to the husband, or that he was in any wise the owner of the crop produced on the land. We can see no objection in law or in morals to an insolvent husband contributing his labor, or that of his minor children, in assisting his wife to make her separate estate productive. The income would belong to the wife; and, at most, the husband's creditors would only be entitled to reach what, if anything, might be due the husband for his services, by process of garnishment. Certainly the crop grown on her land would not be subject to an execution against her husband. No fraud or collusion between the husband and the wife is even suggested, and the verdict was clearly contrary to the evidence, and should have been set aside in the certiorari proceeding. The jury was not at liberty to arbitrarily disregard the testimony of the claimant's witnesses, who stood unimpeached, upon the bare suspicion that they had testified falsely. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Walthour, 117 Ga. 427, 43 S. E. 720; M. & B. R. Co. v. Revis, 119 Ga. 332, 46 S. E. 418. The facts of this case are altogether different from those appearing in Crawford v. Kimbrough, 76 Ga. 299, which is relied on by counsel for the defendant in error; the evidence in that case disclosing that there was collusion between the husband and wife to defraud his creditors, and that there was no merit in the claim interposed by her to the crops levied on. The decision in Sams v. Thompson Hiles Co., 110 Ga. 648, 36 S. E. 104, directly supports the ruling now made. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 523)

PARKS v. SIMPSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—LIEN ON CROPS—FORECLOSURE.

The special lien of a landlord for money or supplies furnished in making a crop exists, and can be foreclosed as a lien, only on the crops of the year in which the advances are made. A balance of indebtedness for a prior year cannot be included in a foreclosure of such a lien, even by agreement of the parties at the beginning of the year that such balance shall be included with the advances of that year.

2. SAME—CREATION BY ESTOPPEL.

Estoppel cannot operate to create a special lien, with the right of summary foreclosure, where no such lien exists under the statute.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Action by J. F. Simpson against Will Parks. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Simpson instituted a proceeding in a justice's court against Parks to foreclose a landlord's lien on the crop of the defendant raised in the year 1904 for the sum of $39.29. The defendant filed a counter affidavit. The case was appealed to a jury in the justice's court. The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant carried the case to the superior court by writ of certiorari. It appeared from the evidence that in the year 1903 the plaintiff had furnished to the defendant supplies, and that about $52 was still due on that account. About the beginning of the year 1904, the landlord told Parks that he would have to foreclose the lien on the corn, fodder, and other products of the latter to realize the balance which he owed for the year 1903, if he did not make the landlord safe in some way, by giving a security or a mortgage. The tenant, Parks, proposed that he would let the balance due on his account for the year 1903 be made a new debt for the year 1904, and that his crop in the latter year should stand bound for such balance as though it had been furnished in the year 1904. During the year 1904 the landlord furnished $27.50 to aid the tenant in making his crop. So that in the fall the entire debt due, including interest, was $85.39. In December, 1904, the tenant paid $50, without directing how the payment should be applied. The landlord thereupon applied it to the oldest or first part of the account, leaving the balance sued for. On the hearing of the certiorari the presiding judge overruled it, and refused a new trial. The defendant excepted.

Parks & Gaillard, for plaintiff in error. W. B. Sloan, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). The special lien which exists in favor of a landlord upon the crops of his tenant for money or supplies furnished in making such crops is a lien only on the crops of the year in which they are made. Civ. Code 1896, § 2800, subsec. 3. Statutes affording summary remedies must be strictly construed. Porter v. Lively, 45 Ga. 159; Dart v. Mayhew, 60 Ga. 104; Mabry v. Jenkins, 66 Ga. 732; Hinton v. Goode, 78 Ga. 233. As the statute creates this special lien, with the right of summary enforcement, only under certain circumstances, debts cannot be collected in the mode so provided, unless they fall within the terms of such statute. Parties cannot by agreement bring other debts than those which the law itself embraces within its scope. The landlord's special lien was only for money and supplies furnished to make the crops of the year 1904, and the parties could not include within it an indebtedness due for the year 1903. It is immaterial that the landlord might have foreclosed a lien for that debt at the proper time. He did not do so. It is urged that the tenant is estopped from denying the landlord's right to proceed summarily to foreclose a lien for the entire amount. A person may estop himself from asserting a lien, but estoppel cannot create a special lien, where by the terms of the statute none exists. The operation of an estoppel is negative, not creative. The judgment will be affirmed, with direction that the amount of the verdict in excess of the indebtedness for money furnished during the year 1904 be written off.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 501)

ROGERS v. BLUENSTEIN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

1. SALES—CONTRACT—VALIDITY.

If one buys property of another, and agrees to resell it to such other at an advanced price payable in the future, such a transaction actually made is not illegal, but will be enforced.

2. SAME—USURY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether the transaction was a sale with the right of repurchase, or whether it was a ruse devised to evade the usury laws and to take a security for the loan of money at a usurious rate, was a question of fact for the jury.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge of the court, if not entirely accurate, was not such as to require a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Action by Laura B. Rogers against S. Bluenstein. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Laura B. Rogers brought an action against S. Bluenstein to recover a diamond ring and setting and a diamond pendant and setting. The evidence showed that on June 18, 1902, the plaintiff executed an instrument in writing by which she conveyed the diamonds to one Carroll D. Judson for the sum of $400. He executed to her on the same day a paper whereby he agreed to sell the diamonds to her on or before October 15th for the sum of $408. The agreement contained the following: "It is expressly agreed and understood that this instrument constitutes an option for the purchase of said property described, at the price named and within the time specified, time being hereby made expressly of the essence of the contract; and, upon the neglect or failure of the said Mrs. Laura B. Rogers to exercise the said option by paying the sum aforesaid within the time specified, the said option shall be null and void, and the said personality shall remain the sole and exclusive property of the said Carroll D. Judson, free and clear of any and all claims or demands of the said Mrs. Laura B. Rogers." The option was extended to November 15th. On November 14th she wrote Judson, saying: "You are hereby authorized and requested to sell and convey by bill of sale the diamond ring and pendant described in the within agreement to S. Bluenstein, and your doing so shall fully satisfy this contract." Judson then executed a written transfer of the property to Bluenstein, and he gave to her a writing stating that he agreed to sell and deliver the diamonds to her at any time on or before February 14, 1903, upon the payment in cash of $425.64. This paper contained a clause similar to that above quoted from the agreement of Judson. Some time after the date specified in this agreement had passed a tender was made to Bluenstein, which he refused, and the present action was brought. The plaintiff contended that the transaction with the defendant was merely a loan of money at usurious interest; that the diamonds were first pledged to Judson; that the defendant advanced to take them up, charging interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, and adding it to the amount of money advanced by him. The defendant contended that the transaction was not that of loaning money at usurious rates, but was as it purported to be. The jury found for the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial. It was overruled, and she excepted.

Winter Wimberly, Jesse C. Harris, and Akerman & Akerman, for plaintiff in error. Jno. P. Ross and W. J. Grace, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). 1. It is legally possible for one person to buy property from another and agree to resell it to the vendor at a higher price payable in future. If such be the actual transaction, the law will enforce it. The difficulty frequently arising is to determine whether in a given instance the parties intended a sale or a mortgage. Felton v. Grier, 109 Ga. 320, 35 S. E. 175; Spense v. Steadman, 49 Ga. 183; Monroe v. Foster, Id. 514. If Bluenstein in fact bought the diamonds from Judson with the assent of Mrs. Rogers, and agreed to sell them to her at an advanced price payable in the future, there would be nothing unlawful about it. If in fact the transaction was one by which Bluenstein loaned Mrs. Rogers a sum of money at a usurious rate of interest, it was illegal, and the title so obtained was tainted with usury. The transaction, being on its face apparently lawful, might, nevertheless, be shown to be a device for concealing usury. But the burden of proving this rested on the party asserting it. Morrison v. Markham, 78 Ga. 161, 1 S. E. 425; Einstein v. Butler, 65 Ga. 561; Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 31, 38 S. E. 374, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204 (5); Civ. Code 1895, § 2802. There was a considerable amount of evidence tending to show that in fact the title of the defendant was tainted with usury, but it was not free from conflict. In addition to what appeared on the face of the papers, when asked in regard to a loan to the plaintiff, defendant testified: "There was no loan with her. * * * As to how much money I let Mrs. Rogers have, I never had a contract with Mrs. Rogers. The bill of sale shows what I paid Judson. I don't remember exactly—$413, or something. * * * And I gave an option to purchase back on the 14th of February, 1903." If the jury based their verdict on the belief that this was in fact a sale with an agreement to resell, we cannot say that they were without evidence authorizing them to do so.

2. The plaintiff in error alleges that the court erred in charging that if the diamonds were conveyed to the defendant as a security for a debt which was tainted with usury, and not in fact as a sale with the right to repurchase, and if she tendered the defendant the amount of money due upon her contract with him, and it was refused, she would be entitled to recover the difference between the amount of her debt at the time of the tender and the highest proved value of the property since the date of such payment. It is contended that, if the diamonds were pledged as a security for a loan, the pledgor would be entitled to redeem the property pledged, regardless of the question of usury. If this be conceded, there was, nevertheless, no harmful error in the charge. If what transpired between the parties amounted to a pledging of the diamonds to secure a debt, the amount fixed for their return or reconveyance was, without any controversy, greater than the amount advanced with legal interest. The plaintiff contended that there was usury, and in making the tender her attorney calculated the rate which he alleged had been previously charged. We think the charge of the court, if erroneous, could not have injured the plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 393)

ISDALE v. HANSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

INJUNCTION—FRAUD—SALE OF INTEREST IN BUSINESS.

Under the facts of this case, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to grant an injunction and appoint a receiver as prayed. But the plaintiff having prayed that the defendant be enjoined from selling, hypothecating, or disposing of certain notes which he had given to the defendant for the purpose of obtaining an interest in the partnership, and the latter having expressed a willingness that such notes should be impounded, direction is given that the judgment be modified, and a proper order impounding them be entered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Injunction, §§ 95, 304, 307.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by O. G. Isdale against F. Hanson and others. From an order refusing an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Isdale filed an equitable petition against Hanson, alleging that he purchased from the latter an interest in the business conducted by him under the name of the Hanson Supply Company, for $1,000, for which he gave his notes, and on which he had paid amounts aggregating $180.49; that the defendant has refused to comply with his agreements or to permit plaintiff to have access to the books or records of the company or any voice in the management or control of the business, and has openly declared that plaintiff has no interest in the business, and has agreed upon a sale of it for the sum of $10,000 to certain persons named; that defendant has converted into money the greater portion of his real estate, and plaintiff believes and is reliably informed that after receiving the purchase money for the sale of the business he will leave the state. Plaintiff has demanded of defendant a return of the money with interest on it, and that the unpaid notes be returned to him and canceled; but defendant has refused this demand. Plaintiff prayed that the purchasers of the business from the defendant be enjoined from selling or hypothecating any of the notes given to him by the plaintiff for the purchase of an interest in the business, and that a receiver be appointed, an accounting be had, and judgment be rendered in his favor. Defendant answered, in brief, as follows: The plaintiff sought and obtained employment with him, representing himself to be an experienced and competent steam and gas fitter. As additional compensation and for the purpose of insuring increased interest in the business, defendant entered into an agreement with plaintiff and one Gowan, by which each of them was to pay, from his compensation for work, for an interest in the business amounting to $1,000. Stock was to be taken, and the proposed interest of the plaintiff was to be in the proportion which $1,000 should bear to the entire valuation which should be shown by the inventory. Notes were given by the plaintiff, and a written contract entered into, one of the terms of which was that, "should said Isdale fail to pay said notes above mentioned, then this contract should be null and void." It soon developed that the plaintiff was incompetent to do work as a steam and gas fitter, and he neglected the business and failed to carry out his contract, causing loss and damage to the defendant. Finally the plaintiff severed his connection with the defendant, and rescinded the contract and terminated all rights which he had to claim any interest as a partner. On an accounting the plaintiff would be indebted to the defendant. "Defendant deposits with the clerk thirty-three of said notes which have not been paid by petitioner, amounting to $825 of principal, besides interest added in the face of each note, and prays that the sum be impounded to be disposed of by order of this court." The intention to sell all of his property and leave the state is denied. On the hearing the evidence was conflicting. The court denied the prayers of the plaintiff for injunction and receiver, and he excepted.

W. J. Nunnally, for plaintiff in error. Denny & Harris and Halsted Smith, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 504)

RAYMOND v. STRICKLAND.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

FIXTURES—LANDLORD AND TENANT—REMOVAL—EXPIRATION OF LEASE.

An electric chandelier, annunciator, and like contrivances or devices attached to the ceiling or walls of a house by a tenant, at his own expense and for his personal comfort and convenience, come within the legal definition of "domestic fixtures," when so placed that they can be readily detached without injury to the premises. In the absence of any understanding to the contrary, such fixtures may be removed by the tenant at any time during his term or occupancy, and even thereafter, if he be deprived of the opportunity to remove them by a wrongful retaking of possession of the premises by the landlord. Not being annexed to the rented structure with any view to their becoming permanently attached thereto as a part of the realty, they do not lose their identity as chattels, and a possessory warrant will lie to recover them from a landlord who wrongfully withholds possession thereof from the tenant.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Action by Amie Raymond against Mabel Strickland. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

This litigation originated in a justice's court, from which there issued a possessory warrant sued out by Amie Raymond against Mabel Strickland to recover an annunciator and a chandelier of which the former claimed to be the owner. The following facts appeared on the trial in that court: The plaintiff rented from the defendant a house in the city of Macon, agreeing to pay $25 per week rent. After taking possession, the plaintiff took down an old chandelier, had the house "wired" for electric service, and put up a new four-light chandelier and also an annunciator at her own expense. A short time thereafter, she went on a visit to Jacksonville, Fla., and on her return, within a few days, found that the defendant had taken possession of the house. Plaintiff asked the defendant for the chandelier and the annunciator, but the latter refused to give them up till the plaintiff paid $50 back rent. The chandelier was fastened by screws to the ceiling, and the annunciator was fastened to one of the walls by a large screw. Both were connected with the "wiring" of the house, but could have been readily disconnected by merely cutting the wires, and could have been removed without injury either to the ceiling or wall. The contract of rent did not embrace any special stipulation with regard to the putting in of fixtures of this kind, though they are generally removed by the tenant on vacating a house. Plaintiff was to have the house as long as she paid the rent, and defendant was to retake possession if she did not pay the rent promptly. Before re-entry, the defendant had heard that the plaintiff had left the house and the state with the intention of never returning, and the defendant went to the house and found the same occupied by the servants only, and that nothing was there belonging to the plaintiff except the fixtures referred to above. The plaintiff, on her return, made demand for them, but made of the defendant no demand to be put back into possession of the house. The defendant declined to surrender these fixtures unless the plaintiff paid the $50 rent then past due, which the latter promised to do, but has never done; and the defendant held the fixtures as collateral for the back rent. Later, plaintiff sold them to the party from whom she purchased the same, and this party sent a man to the house to remove them, but the defendant declined to deliver them to him, though he produced a written order therefor. The plaintiff then agreed to rescind the sale, restored to the party who bought the fixtures the money paid her for them, and instituted the present action to recover possession of the same from the defendant. A judgment in favor of the plaintiff was rendered in the justice's court, and the defendant took the case by certiorari to the superior court. There an order was passed sustaining the certiorari, and the judge entered a final judgment in favor of the plaintiff in certiorari, holding that neither the chandelier nor the annunciator was a chattel, and therefore a possessory warrant would not lie for a recovery of the possession of either. To this judgment exception is taken by the defendant in certiorari, who was the plaintiff in the suit brought in the justice's court.

Glawson & Fowler, for plaintiff in error.
Herman Brasch, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). The bill of exceptions recites that the court sustained the certiorari because the articles described in the possessory warrant were not chattels, and possession thereof could not be recovered by possessory warrant; so that the correctness of the judgment excepted to depends upon the classification of the articles as personality or as fixtures attaching to the realty so as to become part thereof.

Our Code provides that "anything intended to remain permanently in its place, though not actually attached to the land, such as a rail fence, is a part of the realty and passes with it. Machinery, not actually attached but movable at pleasure, is not a part of the realty." Civ. Code 1895, § 3049. Anything detached from realty instantly becomes personality. Id. § 3050. Section 3049 is peculiarly applicable to cases where the fixtures are erected by the owner of the realty, who subsequently sells or mortgages the premises. "When land is conveyed, whatever fixtures are annexed to the realty at the time of the conveyance pass with the estate to the vendee, unless there be some express provision to the contrary; and fixtures pass to a bona fide purchaser of the real estate, notwithstanding an agreement between the owner of the land and the vendor of the fixtures that they should remain personal property. The same rules as to fixtures which apply as between vendor and vendee apply also as between mortgagor and mortgagee." Cunningham v. Cureton, 96 Ga. 492, 23 S. E. 420. See, also, Waycross Opera Co. v. Sossman, 94 Ga. 100, 20 S. E. 252, 47 Am. St. Rep. 144. Where the fixtures are placed on the premises, not by the owner or in pursuance of a contract with him, but by a tenant for his personal use or convenience, a much more liberal rule as to their severance obtains. The tenant cannot cut or destroy growing trees, remove permanent fixtures, or otherwise injure the property. Civ. Code 1895, § 3119. "A tenant, during the term or a continuation of his tenancy, or while he is in possession under the landlord, may remove fixtures erected by him. After the term and possession are ended, they are regarded as abandoned to the use of the landlord, and become the latter's property." Civ. Code 1895, § 3120. This section of the Code is to be construed to refer only to trade fixtures, and when so interpreted, it is in entire harmony with all the cognate sections of the Code. Wright v. Du Bignon, 114 Ga. 770, 40 S. E. 747, 57 L. R. A. 669. A further indulgence is allowed the tenant in removing such ornamental and domestic fixtures as may be annexed to the premises by the tenant for the more advantageous use thereof, provided no material injury results to the realty or to the substantial characteristics of the articles themselves. Domestic fixtures have been held to include ranges and stoves fixed in brickwork, furnaces, gas fixtures, pumps, clocks, window blinds, bath tubs, and other chattels annexed for convenience. The following articles have been considered ornamental fixtures: hangings, tapestry, and pier glasses nailed to the walls or panels of a house; marble chimney-pieces, cornices, etc. Bronson on Fixtures, §§ 34, 35, and cases cited in note. With regard to domestic and ornamental fixtures, it is very generally held that they may be removed by the tenant, and are to be considered personalty even though annexed; and that any wrongful act or refusal on the part of the landlord with respect to the removal of the tenant's fixtures amounts to a conversion for which an action will lie. Bronson on Fixtures, § 109c; Wright v. Du Bignon, supra; Richards v. Gilbert, 116 Ga. 382, 42 S. E. 715. An action will not lie for domestic fixtures left annexed after the right of removal has expired.

In the case in hand, the annunciator and chandelier are easily classified as domestic fixtures; the evidence shows that both could be removed without injury to the ceiling or walls of the house. They were the personal chattels of the tenant, and she had the right of removal during her tenancy and possession. A wrongful entry by the landlord could not deprive the tenant of this right. Indeed, the landlord did not controvert the tenant's title to the articles, but held them as collateral for past due rent. Presumably the landlord, by declining to return the fixtures to the tenant on demand therefor, did not question the tenant's right of removal if the rent arrears should be paid. It appears that the tenant, while absent on a visit, left her servants in charge of the house, and before her return the landlord took possession of the house and assumed dominion over the fixtures. On the tenant's return, demand was made for the fixtures, but compliance with this demand was refused. The landlord had no right to summarily, without any legal process, eject the servants of the tenant and in that way retake possession of the premises. Entelman v. Hagood, 95 Ga. 390, 22 S. E. 545. Nor would possession obtained by the unauthorized consent of the tenant's servant defeat her right to entry before the termination of the tenancy to remove the fixtures. The landlord's conduct amounted to a conversion of the fixtures, and the tenant had her remedy by possessory warrant to recover possession of them. The court erred in sustaining the certiorari.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 506)

SHANK et al. v. WASHINGTON EXCHANGE BANK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—ACTION ON NOTE—JUDGMENT.

If a certain person bought property and gave promissory notes therefor payable to the vendor or order, two of them signing as principals and one as surety for them, and such notes were transferred to a bona fide purchaser for value before due and without notice, in a suit by the holder against the makers, the surety, and the payee as indorser, the makers and the surety for them could not, by alleging that the property was of no value and that there was a total failure of consideration, claim to occupy the position of sureties for the original payee, and to have the judgment in favor of the plaintiff so molded as to declare that they were such, and that they should have the privilege of paying the judgment and being subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Washington; W. H. Toombs, Judge.

Action by the Washington Exchange Bank against George S. Shank and others. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

The Washington Exchange Bank brought suit against George S. Shank and T. S. Paschal as makers, Louisa J. Shank as surety, and E. L. Holland as indorser on two promissory notes. The defendants, George S. Shank, T. S. Paschal, and Louisa J. Shank, security, filed a plea alleging that the notes were given to Holland for the purchase of a certain boiler and engine; that they were both totally worthless and not suited for the purpose for which they were sold; that this was known to Holland before the sale, and that his conduct was a fraud upon them; that Holland indorsed the notes and was sued in this action as such indorser; and that there was no consideration for the notes sued on. But they admitted that they would have to submit to a judgment in favor of the bank, if it was a bona fide holder for value. They contended that the judgment in favor of the bank should be so framed as to allow it to be controlled by them as mere sureties or guarantors for Holland, with permission to them to pay it and be subrogated to the rights of the bank against him. It was agreed that the bank was a bona fide purchaser of the notes for value and without notice. On motion the court struck the plea, and, after verdict against the defendants filing the plea and Holland, the former excepted.

F. H. Colley, for plaintiffs in error. J. M. Pitner, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). Where a suit is brought against several defendants, some of whom are in fact sureties for another, if this does not appear on the face of the contract, it may be proved by parol either before or after judgment; the creditor not being delayed in his remedy by such collateral issue between the principal and the surety. Civ. Code 1895, § 2984; Whitley v. Hudson, 114 Ga. 668, 40 S. E. 838; Camp v. Simmons, 62 Ga. 85, Cauthen v. Central Georgia Bank, 69 Ga. 733. This rule applies where the relation of principal and surety in reality exists, although it does not appear on the face of the contract. In the case now under consideration the defendants who filed this plea did not allege that they were in fact sureties for Holland or signed as such, or that the relation of principal and sureties was ever contemplated between them. They were debtors of Holland, not sureties for him. Louisa J. Shank signed as surety for the other two, not for Holland. If they have any claim against Holland, it is not because they are sureties for him, but because they gave him a note for certain worthless machinery and are subject to judgment because the note was transferred to an innocent purchaser for value without notice. Want of consideration or failure of consideration for a promissory note does not create the relation of principal and surety between the makers of the note and the payee, although it may have been indorsed to an innocent purchaser, and the makers may be unable to assert their defense against the holder. The plea was properly stricken. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 510)

AMERICAN BONDING & SURETY CO.
OF BALTIMORE CITY, MD., v.
ADAMS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—CERTIORARI—NOTICE OF HEARING—SUFFICIENCY.

A plaintiff in certiorari notified the defendant of the sanction of the writ, stating the name of the case and designating it as one which had been "tried in the justice's court of the 187th district, G. M., said county, on the 8th day of October, 1904." The notice recited that the writ would be heard "at the courthouse in said county at the next term of the superior court, to be held on the second Monday in March, 1904." The notice was dated November 25, 1904, and nowhere stated the name of the county in which the certiorari was to be heard. The notice served on the defendant was not an exact copy of the one attached to the petition for certiorari, which the sheriff certified to having served on the defendant's attorney, though the two were substantially identical.

Held: (a) The designation of the district in which was situated the justice's court in which the case was tried, together with the recital that the writ of certiorari was to be heard at the courthouse "in said county," was sufficient notice to the defendant as to the county in which the writ would be heard. (b) The defendant was bound to know when the "next term" of the superior court of his county would be held; and the fact that the notice incorrectly named the date of the term did not render it invalid. (c) If the defendant desired to take advantage of the discrepancy between the copy of the notice attached to the petition and the notice served upon his attorney, he should have traversed the return of the sheriff. This was not a ground to dismiss the certiorari.

2. CERTIORARI—PETITION—VERIFICATION.

A petition for certiorari filed by two plaintiffs, one of whom is an attorney at law, is properly verified by an affidavit of the attorney made individually as an attorney for his co-plaintiff.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Elbert County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action between the American Bonding & Surety Company of Baltimore City, Md., and S. L. Adams. From a judgment on a writ of certiorari, the surety company brings error. Affirmed.

Z. B. Rogers, for plaintiff in error. T. L. Adams, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 510)

NEAL v. GRAY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

1. INSURANCE—PREMIUM NOTE—RENEWAL—ACTION—DEFENSES.

Where a policy of insurance contained a provision that "the failure to pay any of the first three years' premiums, or any notes or interest upon notes given to the company for any premium or part of a premium, on or before the days upon which such premiums, notes, or interest shall become due, shall avoid and nullify this policy without action on the part of the company or notice to the insured or beneficiary, and all payments made upon this policy shall be deemed earned as premiums during its currency," and where a note was given for the first years' premium, and when it became due it was not promptly paid, but was afterwards, during the year, renewed, and the renewal note was accepted by the company and suit brought on it by an indorsee of the company, this operated as a waiver of forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment at maturity of the note first given for the annual premium, and it furnished no defense to a suit on the note that the renewal took place some time after such maturity.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Insurance, §§ 1067-1069.]

2. SAME—DEFAULT IN PREMIUMS—WAIVER.

Whether or not the agent of the company, who represented to the defendant that the policy would not be void, but would remain in force upon giving the renewal note, had authority to waive the forfeiture, the acquiescence in the renewal of the company, and its receipt of the second note and claiming the right to transfer it by indorsement, operated as such waiver.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Insurance, §§ 1061-1069.]

3. BILL AND NOTES—INDORSEMENT—ACTION BY INDORSEE.

Where a promissory note was indorsed by the payee or by an indorsee from the payee to another "for collection only," the indorsee had such a legal title as would authorize him to bring suit upon the paper in his own name.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 7, Cent. Dig. Bills and Notes, §§ 1383, 1406.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Unless denied on oath, an indorsement need not be proved, although the name of the indorser purports to have been signed by an agent, and the action is against the maker.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 7, Cent. Dig. Bills and Notes, § 1552.]

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

It being doubtful under the evidence whether the verdict was for 18 cents more interest than it should have been, this will not necessitate a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 4547, 4548.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glascock County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action by M. B. Gray against Henrietta Neal. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Suit was brought in a justice's court and carried by appeal to the superior court. It was based on a promissory note dated December 15, 1904, due December 30th, payable to the order of the Union Central Life Insurance Company, and signed by Henrietta Neal. It had on it the following indorsements: "The Union Central Life Insurance Co., by T. S. Lowry & Son, Mgrs." "Pay to the order of M. B. Gray, Agt., for collection only. T. S. Lowry & Son, Managers." The suit was brought by M. B. Gray, "Agt.," against the maker. The defendant filed a plea, admitting a prima facie case and assuming the burden of proof. She pleaded that the note sued on was without consideration, having been given for the premium of a policy of insurance which had already lapsed and become void when the note was made; and that Gray falsely and fraudulently represented to her that the insurance policy would be good if the note was given, notwithstanding it had become void before that time, which representation deceived her and induced her to make the note, and that such representation was untrue, though this fact was unknown to her. On the trial the evidence showed that the defendant had obtained a policy of life insurance from the company, dated April 1, 1904. Instead of paying the first annual premium in cash, she gave her promissory note for the amount. It does not appear from the evidence what was the date of this note, or when it fell due, but it was renewed once or twice, and the suit was based on the note thus given in renewal. One of the conditions stated in the policy was as follows: "Payment of premium. The failure to pay any of the first three years' premiums, or any notes or interest upon notes given to the company for any premium or part of a premium, on or before the days upon which such premiums, notes, or interest become due, shall avoid and nullify this policy without action on the part of the company or notice to the insured or beneficiary, and all payments made upon this policy shall be deemed earned as premiums during its currency. Any and all notes, with their conditions, which may be given for premiums or loans upon the security of this policy are hereby made a part of this contract of insurance." The husband of the defendant testified as follows: "When the note sued on was given, the premium was long past due, and I told Mr. Gray that the policy was already void, because the policy said so, and the first note said the policy would be void if the note was not paid at maturity. Mr. Gray, the agent for the company, said that made no difference, that if my wife would give the note the policy would be good. No money has ever been paid. * * * She gave this note because Mr. Gray, the agent, told her the policy was good and had not lapsed at the time she gave this note. I did pay the interest on the note when this last note was given. Mr. Gray told me my wife would have to pay the interest. Defendant has had policy ever since it was issued, and had policy, application and receipt when note sued on was given. * * * My wife gave the note sued on only because Mr. Gray, the agent, told her if she would give the note the policy would be good. She would not have given the note if he had not told her the policy would be good. She thought Mr. Gray, the agent, was telling the truth." The application for insurance contained the following provision: "It is hereby agreed and warranted that, should the company issue a policy upon the application, its interest shall not be affected by verbal statements made to its agents or others, or by the knowledge of such agent, but that it shall be affected only by the statements herein made, including that made to the medical examiner, which are hereby warranted to be true, full, and correct as facts, and they shall constitute the basis of any policy which may be issued hereon." The note sued on contained the following: "Such policy, including all conditions therein for surrender or continuance, as a paid-up term policy, shall without notice to any party or parties interested therein be null and void on the failure to pay this note at maturity, with interest from date at 8 per cent. per annum." On the margin of it was printed the following statement: "Agents are not authorized to make any contract verbal or written differing from that written or printed on face of this note, nor are they permitted to collect any part of the same unless indorsed to them for that purpose." At the close of the evidence the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant excepted.

B. F. Walker, for plaintiff in error. Isaac S. Peebles, Jr., for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). 1. A policy of insurance may provide that the failure to pay any premium or any notes or interest upon notes given to the company for any premium, on or before the dates upon which such premiums, notes, or interest shall become due, shall void and nullify the policy without action on the part of the company or notice to the insured or beneficiary; and such a provision is valid and binding. 2 Joyce on Insurance, § 1205. A condition of this character may be waived, or the company may be estopped from asserting it. Thus, prompt payment may be waived by a course of dealings calculated to cause the insured to think that the exact time specified would not be insisted upon, and which would operate as a fraud upon one relying on such custom or usage in dealing with him, if suddenly changed without notice. Grant v. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co., 76 Ga. 575; Cotton States Life Ins. Co. v. Lester, 62 Ga. 247, 35 Am. Rep. 122;

Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Garmany, 74 Ga. 51. If the insurance company, with knowledge of the facts, receives and retains past due premiums, after the day specified in the contract for payment, it renews the contract and waives forfeiture for nonpayment, where such acceptance is unconditional. 2 Joyce on Ins. § 1364; Wyman v. Phoenix Mutual Life Ins. Co., 45 Hun (N. Y.) 184; Rice v. New England Mutual Aid Society, 146 Mass. 248, 15 N. E. 624; Mobile Life Ins. Co. v. Pruett, 74 Ala. 488 (8); Piedmont & Arlington Ins. Co. v. Lester, 59 Ga. 812; Clark v. Minor, 73 Ga. 590. If the note given for the premium had not been paid at maturity according to the terms of the contract, a forfeiture would have resulted. But if, after its maturity, the company had received payment of it, the forfeiture would have been waived, and the policy renewed. Instead of payment being made in money, the agent represented that the policy would be continued in force upon the giving of a renewal note. This was done, and the note was received by the company and indorsed by it for collection. It had notice of the terms of its own policy, and that the note given for the premium for the current year had not been promptly paid. It saw fit to deliver up the original note and accept in lieu thereof another due at a future date. It could not receive payment of a premium due for the year and at the same time insist on a forfeiture for nonpayment. So likewise, when it accepted a renewal of the note due for the current premium, treated such note as valid, and indorsed it to another, who is seeking to collect it by suit, the company cannot assert that the policy was void because the renewal was made after the former note became due. Mere demand for a past due premium has been held not to constitute a waiver of forfeiture, where such payment was refused by the insurer. Sullivan v. Conn. Indemnity Ass'n, 101 Ga. 809, 29 S. E. 41; McCroskey v. Hamilton, 108 Ga. 640, 646, 34 S. E. 111, 75 Am. St. Rep. 79; National Life Ass'n v. Brown, 103 Ga. 382, 29 S. E. 927. If payment had been made when demanded, a waiver would have resulted. Here surrender of the old note, and the acceptance of the note payable in the future for the premium of the then current year, made after the failure to pay the first note promptly, and with full knowledge of the facts on the part of the company, operated as a waiver of forfeiture as completely as if payment had been made in cash. Gray, the agent, said that the policy would remain of force; and, in view of the facts, as indicated in the foregoing opinion, he was right. It is said that under the terms of the contract the agent was without authority to waive a forfeiture. But after he had taken the renewal note, the company received, held, and indorsed it; and one of its agents, as indorsee, is suing upon it. The forfeiture was therefore waived, and the renewal note given by the insured was collectible, and the defense set up was without merit. The defendant also knew all the facts when she gave the second note. Atlanta Consolidated Bottling Company v. Hutchinson, 109 Ga. 550, 35 S. E. 124; Hogan v. Brown, 112 Ga. 662, 37 S. E. 880; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Stephens, 115 Ga. 192, 41 S. E. 679.

2, 3. In this state an indorsee for collection has such a title as to enable him to bring and maintain a suit in his own name. Wilson v. Tolson, 79 Ga. 137, 8 S. E. 900; Freeman v. Exchange Bank, 87 Ga. 45, 47, 13 S. E. 160.

The authority of Lowry & Son to indorse the note for the company was not denied under oath; but, on the contrary, the defendant admitted a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff. Civ. Code 1895, § 3705; Habersham v. Lehman, 63 Ga. 380; Tyson v. Bray, 117 Ga. 689, 45 S. E. 74.

4. It is contended by defendant that her husband paid the interest on the note to its maturity, and that the verdict directed included $1.80 interest, when it should have been only $1.62, thus making 18 cents in excess of the correct amount of interest. This would seem to furnish a proper case for the application of the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex." Neal v. Brockhan, 87 Ga. 130, 13 S. E. 283. Certainly the evidence is not sufficiently clear to require a reversal or a correction of this slight error, if indeed it be one. The entire testimony on this subject is contained in the following statement of the defendant's husband: "I did pay the interest on the note when this last note was given. Mr. Gray told me my wife would have to pay the interest." This does not show how much interest was paid, or to what time.

The defendant having admitted a prima facie case against her, and having failed to establish any lawful defense, there was no error in directing a verdict.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(104 Va. 331)

JOHNSON v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 25, 1906.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — APPEAL — REVIEW OF FACTS—RULE OF DECISION.

Under the express provisions of Code 1904, § 3484, where the evidence and not the facts are certified, the rule of decision in the appellate court in considering the evidence is the same as on a demurrer to the evidence.

2. SAME—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

In order to entitle accused to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the evidence must have been discovered since the trial. It must have been such that it could not have been discovered before the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence. It must be material, and such as should produce an opposite result on the merits, and it must not be merely cumulative, corroborative, or collateral.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 2306-2336.]

3. SAME.

In a prosecution for rape, the evidence of identification was conflicting and unsatisfactory, and it was testified on the trial that detectives, while watching defendant in his house, saw him go to the fireplace and burn some clothes which looked like soiled underwear, and there was further evidence of experts that burnt pieces of cloth, exhibited on the trial as taken from the fireplace, were the ribs of a pair of drawers or of an undershirt. After conviction an affidavit, made by a credible person of high integrity, was filed, stating that affiant went with the detectives to defendant's house, that there was no fire of any kind in the house or signs of any fire having been there, and that the only piece of burnt cloth taken from the fireplace was a piece of burnt ribbon resembling a necktie. Held, that a new trial should have been granted for newly discovered evidence.

Error to Circuit Court, Henrico County.

Austin Johnson was convicted of rape, and brings error. Reversed.

Edgar B. English, for plaintiff in error.
Wm. A. Anderson, Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

WHITTLE, J. At the June term, 1905, of the circuit court of Henrico county, the plaintiff in error, Austin Johnson, was indicted, tried, and convicted of the crime of rape, alleged to have been committed by him upon the person of a female child of the age of 10 years, and his punishment was fixed by the jury at death.

The prisoner moved the court to set aside the verdict and grant him a new trial on two grounds: (1) Because the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence; and (2) for after-discovered evidence. But the court overruled the motion, and pronounced judgment upon the verdict, to which judgment a writ of error was awarded by this court.

The evidence in the case (not the facts) having been certified in accordance with the injunction of section 3484, p. 1862, Va. Code 1904, the rule of decision in this court in considering the evidence must be as on a demurrer to the evidence. The effect of that rule is too familiar to demand repetition, and conformably to its requirement we feel constrained to sustain the action of the trial court in overruling the motion of the prisoner to set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground that it was contrary to the law and the evidence.

But in that connection it is proper to observe that, while in obedience to the explicit mandate of the statute we have been obliged to uphold the ruling of the court upon the first assignment of error, nevertheless we are painfully conscious of the unsatisfactory state of the proof with regard to the identification of the prisoner as the perpetrator of the atrocious crime of which he stands convicted. This allusion to the inconclusive character of the evidence on behalf of the commonwealth upon that subject is rendered pertinent by reason of the correlation of the two assignments of error.

In considering the last assignment it will not be necessary to examine all the evidence in the case, but only such parts of it as tend to make clear our reasons for the conclusion which we have reached.

It appears that the crime was committed about dusk on May 6, 1905, and upon a general description, given by the child, of her assailant, that he was a dark man with thick lips, and wore a black slouch hat, a dark blue shirt with black pearl buttons, a dark coat, and shoes with large holes in the tips, the accused was arrested that night and taken into the presence of the child for identification. She was twice asked if he was the guilty party, and each time indicated by a shake of her head that he was not. Thereupon the officers, having learned that a small negro girl, Cornelia Horsley, was in company with the child at the time she was enticed into an alleyway by her assailant (upon the pretext that his sister wanted to buy some of the cologne that she was peddling), took the prisoner to her home, and, on being interrogated as to whether he was the man who lured the child off, she replied: "No; that is not the man. That is Austin Johnson. The man who met us this evening was a tall, black man, who had on a black slouch hat and gray coat and blue shirt, dark pants, and tan shoes." It was also in evidence that Austin Johnson was well known to Cornelia Horsley, having formerly been in her father's employment—a circumstance which adds to the probative value of her testimony on the question of identification, and renders improbable the theory that the prisoner would have enticed his victim from the presence of a person to whom he was thoroughly known, and whose testimony he might reasonably have anticipated would lead to his detection and conviction. After hearing the statement of Cornelia Horsley the officers naturally concluded that a mistake had been made, and released the prisoner. Subsequently, however, on the same night, one of the officers received information that the child had said that she was frightened when Johnson was brought in her presence, and wanted to see him again, and believed that he was the man who assaulted her. On the following morning two detectives went to the child's home, and, learning that she believed Johnson to be the guilty party, they set out to arrest him. They discovered the accused in a shanty at a brickyard in the vicinity, where he was accustomed to stay at night with a friend, lying, as they say, in a bunk, and feigning to be asleep. Continuing, one of these detectives testified that, while his companion had gone to the house of the owner of the brickyard to telephone for the patrol wagon, he observed the accused get up from the bunk where he was lying and go to the fireplace and kindle a fire; that he then went to the corner of the room, pulled down some cloth from the loft above, which looked like a garment of some kind, made a bundle of it, put it in the fire, and burned it up. "He burned two pieces, dirty looking—looked like a shirt or two shirts. It might have been two pairs of drawers." The witness exhibited to the jury two pieces of burnt cloth—one piece about the size of a quarter of a dollar; and the other some two inches square, which he testified that he had extracted from the ashes of the fire made by the prisoner. Another witness for the prosecution, who claimed to be an expert on the subject, stated that, in his opinion, the burnt pieces of cloth were "either the ribs of a pair of balbriggan drawers or the ribs of an underwear shirt." Soon after the alleged burning of these articles the officers appeared on the scene and arrested the accused and handcuffed him, and he was again taken into the child's presence and identified by her as her assailant. He was indicted June 8, 1905, and a week later put upon trial.

After his conviction the prisoner made affidavit that since the trial he had discovered material evidence affecting the merits of the case, which he could not have obtained by due diligence before or during the trial, and also filed affidavits of a number of persons setting forth the after-discovered evidence upon which he relied. We shall only notice the affidavits of two of these witnesses, J. T. Herrin and W. J. Ready.

The affidavit of Mr. Herrin is to the effect that he is the managing overseer of the "West End, Brickyard," located near the "New Reservoir"; that a private detective came to his residence on Sunday afternoon, May 7, 1905, and requested affiant to accompany him to a shanty some 30 or 40 yards distant, where he desired him to see a negro, who was there asleep, and ascertain if he belonged in the yard; that he (the detective) thought he was the same negro who was suspected of having perpetrated a rape upon a little white girl the day before; that affiant found the accused lying on a bunk asleep, and awoke him and asked what he was doing there. The affidavit proceeds: "I will state most positively that there was no fire of any kind in the shanty house, and that there were no signs of any fire having been there, and that nothing was said by Johnson (the detective who testified about the accused burning the bundle of underwear) or any one else about there having been any fire there. I remember distinctly that the prisoner accompanied the officers very willingly, making the remark: 'Yes; I will go anywhere with you'—addressing the officers. * * * That on the next day, Monday, Duke and Johnson (the detectives) came to the yard and requested permission to go into said shanty house. The key was in my possession, and I accompanied them to the said house, and into the same. That they examined into a small accumulation of old ashes in the fireplace, a large open fireplace, and took therefrom a piece of burnt cloth, which resembled a piece of burnt ribbon, and which they said was a piece of necktie. That is all they took from the fireplace. I know nothing of any burned pieces of underwear found there that day and taken from the fireplace. There were certainly no burnt pieces of underwear found that day, and none to my knowledge in the fireplace."

Affiant W. J. Ready, the proprietor of the brickyard, deposed that he had known J. T. Herrin for 10 years, that he had been in his employment as managing overseer of his brickyard and plant for 15 months, and that he is a man of "the highest integrity of character."

The rule governing the granting of new trials for after-discovered evidence is well settled by the authorities in this jurisdiction, and is succinctly stated in the case of Nicholas v. Commonwealth, 91 Va. 741, at page 753, 21 S. E. 364, at page 368, as follows:

"(1) The evidence must have been discovered since the trial. (2) It must have been evidence that could not have been discovered before the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence. (3) It must be material in its object, and such as ought, on another trial, to produce an opposite result on the merits. (4) It must not be merely cumulative, corroborative, or collateral." 4 Min. Inst. pt. 1, 758, 759; Wynne v. Newman's Adm'r, 75 Va. 817; Whitehurst v. Com., 79 Va. 558. See to the same effect the cases collected in a note to St. John's Ex'r v. Alderson, 32 Grat. (Va. Rep. Ann.) 140.

Applying these principles to the case in judgment, we are of opinion that the accused is entitled to a new trial.

The injurious impression that must have been wrought upon the minds of the jury, in their effort to reconcile the conflicting evidence in respect to the identification of the prisoner as the guilty party, by the uncontradicted testimony of the detective, that the day after the crime was committed the accused was discovered in the act of burning his underclothing, the condition of which it was believed would incriminate him, can hardly be overstated. And, conversely, the testimony of an intelligent, disinterested witness of high character, which, if true, indicates a purpose on the part of the detective to compass the conviction of the accused upon fabricated evidence, would reasonably have exerted a favorable influence with the jury in his behalf.

Inexpressibly horrible as was the crime perpetrated upon this unfortunate child, it would be still more baleful to endeavor to expiate it either by taking the life of an innocent man, or of one whose guilt had not been established with that degree of certainty which the law in its wisdom has ordained. For these reasons, the verdict of the jury must be set aside, the judgment of the circuit court reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(104 Va. 744)

NEWPORT NEWS PUB. CO. v. BEAUMEISTER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—ACTION FOR INJURIES—ALLEGATION AS TO DUTIES.

A declaration alleged that in operating the printing press of defendant it became necessary for plaintiff to occasionally enter a pit under the press to adjust the machinery, and that on the day of the accident it became necessary for him to go down in said pit to set tapes on the machine, and that after adjusting the same and while still in the pit, though plaintiff was exercising due care, his hair caught in the machine, resulting in the injury. Subsequently the declaration was amended by inserting after the words "adjusting the same" the words "plaintiff recognized that there was a defect somewhere in the rollers, and in trying to locate the trouble, which was a necessary duty of the plaintiff." Held, that it sufficiently appeared that it was part of plaintiff's duty to be under the press in his endeavor to locate the defect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 851.]

2. SAME—DUE CARE ON PART OF PLAINTIFF.

In an action for injuries to plaintiff while in defendant's service, it is not incumbent upon plaintiff to aver that he has not been guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 849.]

3. PLEADING — DECLARATION—ANTICIPATING DEFENSES.

It is not incumbent on plaintiff to negative defenses that may possibly be interposed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, § 139.]

4. DAMAGES — INSTRUCTIONS — MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR PERSONAL INJURIES.

In an action for personal injuries, where there could be no recovery of exemplary or punitive damages, but only a suitable recompense for the injury sustained, an instruction that "there is no legal limit to the damages the jury may award, * * * and they are the judges of the extent of the damages which, from the evidence, plaintiff may be entitled to recover," was misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Damages, § 548.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—DUTY OF SERVANT TO REMEDY DEFECTS.

The rule that it is the master's duty to exercise ordinary care in seeing that the place assigned to his servant to work is kept in a reasonably safe condition does not control where the person injured is himself to perform the duty of keeping the place in a safe condition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 704, 711, 714.]

6. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY OF SERVANT.

Where the evidence showed that at the time a servant was injured the duty rested upon him to prevent the accumulation of paper which tended to make the place dangerous and which contributed to the jury complained of, an instruction that it was the master's duty to exercise ordinary care in seeing that the place assigned to plaintiff was kept in a reasonably safe condition was erroneous, in failing to make reference to the duties that rested on plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 1188, 1187.]

7. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

There is no error in refusing an instruction which is fully covered by an instruction already given by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 651, 657.]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT—ACTION FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to a servant, the original declaration alleged that plaintiff went down into a pit under defendant's printing press to adjust some tapes, and after adjusting the same and while still in the pit his hair was caught in the machinery. The amended declaration, upon which trial was had, alleged that after adjusting the tapes plaintiff recognized that there was a defect somewhere in the rollers, and in trying to locate this trouble, which was a necessary duty of plaintiff, his hair caught, etc.; the issue being, not whether it was necessary for plaintiff to go into the pit while the machine was in operation, but whether, being already in the pit and having accomplished in safety the purpose for which he went in, it was necessary that he remain and keep the machine in operation while making the investigation in the other end of the pit from where he adjusted the tapes. Held, that an instruction ignoring this issue, and requiring the jury to find, as a condition precedent to a verdict for defendant, that it was not necessary that plaintiff should go into the pit while the machine was running, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 587.]

9. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

In an action by a servant for injuries, it appeared that plaintiff entered a pit under defendant's printing press for the purpose of examining the machinery; that defendant had failed to perform its duty in providing an electric light in such pit, but plaintiff was a man of experience, and had entire control of the printing press, and was well acquainted with all the conditions surrounding the dangers confronting him when he attempted in the dark to locate the trouble; that plaintiff knew that he could not stand erect in the pit, and by stooping he had accomplished part of the objects for which he entered, and then, by raising his head too high, his hair caught in the machinery and the injury complained of resulted. Held, that plaintiff's negligence was the proximate cause of his injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 795-797.]

Error to Circuit Court of City of Newport News.

Action by W. H. Beaumeister against the Newport News Publishing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

R. M. Lett and O. D. Batchelor, for plaintiff in error. Bickford & Stuart and Ashby & Read, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. This is the sequel to the case of Newport News Publishing Co. v. Beaumeister, reported in 102 Va. 677, 47 S. E. 821. At the first trial there was a verdict and judgment for $2,000 in favor of the plaintiff, which judgment, on a writ of error to this court, was reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial. At the second trial the plaintiff again prevailed, and recovered the judgment for $4,500 now under review.

The declaration on which the first trial was had alleged that in operating the printing press of the defendant company it became necessary for the plaintiff to occasionally enter the pit under the press, in order to adjust certain parts of the machine; that it was the duty of the defendant company, in the exercise of reasonable care, to properly light the pit, so that the plaintiff might, with due caution on his part, perform his duties therein; that the defendant company failed to provide sufficient light in the pit for his safety, though it had promised to do so, and that in reliance on such promise plaintiff had continued in the defendant company's employment; that on the day of the accident it became necessary for him to go down in the said pit to set some tapes on the said machine; and that after adjusting the same, and while still in the pit, though the plaintiff was exercising due and proper care, his hair caught in the said machine, etc.

Recognizing that the evidence on the former trial showed that the plaintiff had accomplished with safety the purpose for which he went into the pit, when the case went back for a new trial, his declaration was amended by inserting after "adjusting the same" (the tapes) the words "plaintiff recognized that there was a defect somewhere in the rollers, and in trying to locate the trouble, which was a necessary duty of the plaintiff." So that, by the first declaration, the duty which plaintiff claimed he was performing when injured was setting "some tapes," while by the amended declaration it was in trying to locate a trouble in the rollers.

To the amended declaration the defendant company demurred, which demurrer was overruled, and this ruling of the trial court is assigned as error.

The ground of the demurrer relied on is, that the declaration, as amended, contains no allegation of necessity or duty on the part of the plaintiff to be under the press, while it was in operation, in his endeavor to locate a defect in the rollers.

We are of opinion that there is no merit in this contention. Enough has been said of the declaration to show that it does allege the duty on the part of the plaintiff to be under the press in his endeavor to locate the defect in the rollers, and, when this allegation was read by the defendant company along with the other facts alleged, it could not fail to understand that the allegation meant that it was necessary for the plaintiff to be under the press, while it was in motion, in his endeavor to locate the defect in the rollers. It is not incumbent upon a plaintiff to aver that he has not been guilty of contributory negligence, nor is it necessary to negative defenses that may possibly be interposed. All that is required is that the declaration state the facts constituting the alleged cause of action with sufficient certainty to be understood by the defendant, who has to answer them; by the jury, who are to inquire into their truth; and by the court, which is to render judgment. In other words, if the declaration is sufficient to inform the defendant of the nature of the demand made against him, and states such facts as will enable the court to say that, if the facts are proved as alleged, they establish a good cause of action, it is sufficient. Va., etc., Wheel Co. v. Harris, 103 Va. 708, 49 S. E. 991, and authorities cited.

We think the amended declaration measures up to the requirement of the rule adverted to, and that the demurrer thereto was properly overruled.

The next error assigned is the action of the court in giving the following instruction for the plaintiff:

"The jury are instructed that there is no legal limit to the damages they may award for personal injuries, and that they are the judges of the extent of the damages which, from the evidence, the plaintiff may be entitled to recover, and, in estimating such damages, they may take into consideration his age, his station in life, his injury, his physical and mental suffering arising from said injury, his loss of wages for the time he has been prevented by said injuries from working, and a proper compensation for his being deprived by said injuries from following such calling or business as he could have followed, but for said injuries, but the damages may not exceed $10,000, the amount claimed in the declaration."

This is practically the same instruction on the measure of damages that came under review in Norfolk, etc., Ry. Co. v. Marpole, 97 Va. 599, 34 S. E. 462, where the objections made to the instruction were (1) that it allowed the jury, without special proof, in fixing the plaintiff's damages, to take into consideration his mental suffering; and (2) that it intimated to the jury that they might award the sum of $10,000, in the way of damages, without qualifying the statement by saying that this sum was only mentioned because it was the maximum amount claimed by the plaintiff.

This court was of opinion then, as it is now, that, in so far as it relates to the amount of damages that the jury might allow, the instruction is erroneous, and calculated to mislead the jury; but as we could not see that it had probably done so in that case, and the judgment of the circuit court having to be reversed on other grounds, we only took occasion in the opinion to comment on the instruction as follows: "We do not think that the instruction, as a whole, misled or could have misled the jury in estimating plaintiff's damages, although it would have been better had the instruction simply told the jury that the plaintiff claimed $10,000, and they were authorized to award such sum as the evidence justified, not exceeding that amount."

The vital difference between that case and the case under consideration is in the first named there was nothing to indicate that the jury might have been misled by the instruction, while here the significant fact appears that at the first trial of the case, when the instruction in question was not given, the jury awarded the plaintiff $2,000 damages, and at the second trial, with this instruction before the jury, he was awarded $4,500.

It is not complained that the instruction specified in detail the possible injuries suffered by the plaintiff, to be considered in estimating his damages, but that it was misleading to tell them, in that connection, that there is no legal limit to the damages they might award; in other words, that the instruction is misleading, and calculated to misinform the jury that the law does not intend that a fair compensation for the injuries alone shall be given under the evidence, but that any amount named by the jury within the limit of damages claimed is the proper measure under the law. Counsel for the plaintiff cite a number of cases in support of their contention that this court has repeatedly sanctioned the expression in an instruction, "that there is no legal limit to the damages that the jury may award for personal injuries"; but upon reference to those cases it will be seen that the question under consideration was whether or not the damages awarded were excessive, and not the question here under consideration. The expression is used in those cases, "there is no legal measure of damages," but in its use is to be found no sanction of an instruction in an action for personal injuries that admits of the interpretation that there is no legal limit fixed by law to guide the jury in awarding damages other than the amount claimed in the declaration.

As was well said by Riely, J., in Richmond Ry., etc., Co. v. Garthright, 92 Va. 635, 24 S. E. 269, 32 L. R. A. 220, 53 Am. St. Rep. 839: "No method has yet been devised, nor scales adjusted, by which to measure or weigh and value in money the degrees of pain and anguish of a suffering human being, nor ever likely to be." But it was not meant there, or by what has been said by this court in any other case, so far as we have been able to find, that juries are not to be, in cases like this, guided in arriving at the amount of damages by a due and proper consideration of what would be a fair compensation for the injury suffered, and that fair compensation is not the legal limit to the damages which they may award.

As was said in the opinion by Joynes, J., in Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Grat. 484, 94 Am. Dec. 468: "When the trespass is committed without fraud, oppression, or other special aggravation, the object of the law, it is generally said, is to give compensation for injury suffered, and damages are restricted to that object."

In this case there could be no recovery of exemplary or punitive damages as a protection to the public, but only a suitable recompense for the injury sustained, and we are of opinion that the instruction under consideration was, in the form in which it was given, clearly misleading, and should not have been given.

Instruction T, given for the plaintiff, is also erroneous, in view of the evidence in this case. The established rule is that it is the master's duty to exercise ordinary care in seeing that the place assigned to his servant to work is kept in a reasonably safe and suitable condition, for in most cases the master cannot delegate that duty so as to relieve himself from liability. N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Phillips' Adm'x, 100 Va. 362, 41 S. E. 726. But that rule does not control where the person injured is himself to perform the duty of keeping the place where he is at work in a safe condition. R. Or. Coal Co. v. Wells, 96 Va. 416, 31 S. E. 614.

In this case it clearly appeared in the plaintiff's evidence, and in fact is admitted, that it was the duty of the plaintiff to keep the pit clear of the accumulation of paper that rendered his movements under the press more dangerous; while the instruction is not applied to the light alone, which it is alleged the defendant company had failed to furnish. It makes no reference whatever to this admitted fact that the duty rested upon the plaintiff to prevent the accumulation of paper in the pit making his movements under the press more dangerous; and therefore the jury might have believed that the neglect of this duty on the part of the plaintiff contributed to his injury, and yet understood from the instruction that they should find in his favor because of the neglect of the defendant company to furnish a sufficient light at the pit.

But it is contended that the evidence does not show that the accumulated paper increased the plaintiff's danger in the pit, or that there was enough in there to warrant its removal; and therefore, the instruction could not have prejudiced the defendant company. This, however, it not borne out by the record. There was evidence that, with no accumulation of the paper in the pit, the plaintiff could have stood erect therein and under the press with a clear space of at least half an inch between the top of his head and the tapes in which his hair was caught; while, with the accumulated paper under his feet, he had to go to find out the trouble in the ink rollers, stooping so low that he could see neither the tapes that caught his hair nor the ink rollers, and, while in that position, he happened to raise his head too high, resulting in his hair at the back part of his head being caught, causing him to throw up his hand to extricate himself, when it was caught in the machine and mashed. Under these circumstances, the instruction, in telling the jury the duty rested upon the defendant company to see that the place assigned to the plaintiff to work was kept in a safe and suitable condition, without any reference to the evidence tending to prove that it was his duty to keep the pit in which he received his injuries free from accumulated paper, or to the evidence tending to prove that this neglect of duty on his part contributed to the injury, was erroneous, and well calculated to mislead the jury, and was not cured by any other instruction given.

The next assignment of error is to the refusal of the court to give instruction No. 2 asked for by the defendant company. Its purpose was to tell the jury, that if the point where the accident happened was so dark that plaintiff could not see the tape which caught his hair, or the cylinder which crushed his hand, even if he had been looking for them, he could not recover.

Instruction No. 7 contains the same proposition of law more clearly and fully expressed. Therefore the defendant company was not prejudiced by the refusal to give its instruction No. 2.

As has been stated, the former declaration alleged that plaintiff went down into the pit to adjust some tapes, and after adjusting the same, and while still in the pit, his hair was caught, etc., but did not say where he then was, or what he was doing. The amended declaration, upon which the last trial was had, alleges that after adjusting the tapes "plaintiff recognized that there was a defect somewhere in the rollers, and in trying to locate this trouble, which was a necessary duty of the plaintiff, his hair caught, etc. The issue under the declaration, as amended, was, therefore, not whether it was necessary for plaintiff to go into the pit while the machine was in operation, but whether, he being already in the pit and having accomplished in safety the purpose for which he went in, it was necessary that he remain in there and keep the machine in operation while making the investigation of the rollers situated in the other end of the pit from where he adjusted the tapes, which he says he was making at the time of the accident.

To meet these new conditions, and in accordance with the views of this court when the case was here on the former writ of error, the evidence being directed mainly to this phase of the case, the defendant company asked for the following instruction, numbered 8: "An employé unnecessarily undertaking work in such a position that its performance is obviously dangerous, or known by him to be dangerous, when it could have been otherwise performed without danger in a way well known to the employé, cannot recover for injuries occasioned thereby; and if the jury believe from the evidence that the investigation of the trouble with the ink rollers, which the plaintiff says he was making at the time of the injury, could have been made after first stopping the machine, or could have been made on the outside of the pit, then the jury must find for the defendant." This instruction was refused; the court giving in lieu thereof, with certain changes, instruction No. 6 refused at the last trial, and ruled by this court to be correct as the case stood at the former trial.

Instruction No. 8 contains a concise statement of the law of the case entirely applicable to the issue under the amended declaration and to the evidence bearing on that issue, while No. 6, given in its place, required the jury to find, as a condition precedent to a verdict for the defendant company, that it was not necessary that the plaintiff should go into the pit while the machine was running, which was not in issue, the issue made under the amended declaration relating solely to the conduct of the plaintiff after going into the pit, wholly uninfluenced by anything that transpired prior thereto; for when plaintiff went in, and until he had finished adjusting the tapes which caused him to go in, he was ignorant of the trouble which he was endeavoring to remedy at the time of his injury. As was said by counsel for the defendant company, the necessary effect of directing the consideration of the jury to the necessity of going into the pit and the danger attendant thereon was to divert their minds from the real issue—the prudence of plaintiff's conduct with relation to what transpired in the pit after adjusting the folding tapes—and to fix their attention on the prudence of the conduct of plaintiff in relation to the adjustment of the tapes, which was the real issue at the former trial before the declaration was amended, but which, under the amended declaration, has become a mere matter of inducement.

It was sought by instruction No. 8 to submit plainly and fairly to the jury the question whether or not it was necessary to locate the defect in the ink rollers without first stopping the machine, unhampered and unincumbered by any issue concerning the tapes, such issue not being pertinent at this trial; and we are of opinion that it was error to refuse it and to give in its place instruction No. 6.

Instruction No. 3 having been refused, the defendant company's instruction No. 4, which stated in different form the proposition enunciated in No. 3, should have been given; but at another trial of the case it will not be necessary to give both.

We do not consider it necessary to pass upon the question presented in bill of exceptions No. 4, as it is not likely to arise at the next trial.

The remaining assignment of error is the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence.

The plaintiff has established the duty of the defendant company to provide the electric light alleged to have been necessary for use in examining and adjusting the machinery of the printing press in the pit, and its failure to do so, whereby the plaintiff would be entitled to recover damages in this action for the injuries he sustained, unless it appears from the evidence, viewed under the familiar rule governing its consideration, that his own negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, or contributed thereto.

The plaintiff was a man of experience, and had entire control of the printing press when he received the injuries for which he sues; and no one knew better than he the conditions surrounding and the dangers confronting him when he attempted in the dark to locate the trouble in the ink rollers. As said in the opinion of this court (Newport News, etc., Co. v. Beaumeister, supra), the absence of the light increased the danger, and imposed upon the plaintiff enlarged obligations to exercise due care and caution in the performance of his duty. Notwithstanding the darkness and the promise of the master to repair the light, there was the absolutely safe way of repairing the defect in the machine, and the question arises whether the plaintiff did not owe to his master, as well as to himself, the duty of adopting the method of doing the work with respect to which there was no danger.

To meet the contention of the defendant company that the defect or trouble in the ink rollers, which the plaintiff says he was trying to detect when he was injured, could have been detected after the machine had been stopped, or from the outside of the pit, we have only his statement that it could not be done; but he states no facts to show this, and therefore what he says on that point is but an expression of an opinion. But, were it conceded that he was right in the statement he makes, the question remains: Was it necessary or his duty to expose himself to the known danger of going under the press in the dark to find the cause of the defect in the work it was doing, and which appears from his evidence to have been trivial?

It would serve no good purpose to review the evidence in detail. Leaving wholly out of view that part of it tending to prove that his neglect of duty in allowing the paper to accumulate in the bottom of the pit, in consequence of which he could not walk under the machine without stooping, and could not tell how near to the machine his head was when in that position, contributed to his injury, there is no getting away from the admissions he makes in giving his own evidence that it was not safe in the pit under the machine at the west end, where he was, without a light; that he could not see the ink rollers he went to inspect and had to walk under, and would not say that he could have seen his hand two inches before his face; that the trouble, when located, could not be remedied with the machine in motion; that he had to go in a stooping position when looking for it; and that in raising his head in passing under the ink rollers he was liable to come in contact with them. When asked: "Well, how could you calculate in the dark just how far you could raise your head without striking them [the rollers]?" he answered: "I didn't know. I just stooped way low." His witness Vaiden also states that it was dangerous under the machine where the plaintiff was hurt without a light. The following questions and answers appear in plaintiff's own evidence: "Q. Could you see the ink rollers at all? A. No, sir. Q. Was there light enough there, if you had looked, for you to have seen the tape which caught your hair? A. When? Q. At the time your hair was caught, or just prior thereto, if you had looked for the tape, would you have seen it? A. No, sir." If the contention of his counsel that he was speaking of not being able to see the tapes and ink rollers because of his stooping position could be accepted, it would all the more show his recklessness in putting himself in that position.

There are times when an employé may incur extraordinary risks and not relieve his employer from liability for an injury he thereby sustains, as when it is necessary in order to save the lives of others, or to prevent injury to them or to the employer's property, and perhaps other instances might be given; but that was not the situation when the plaintiff exposed himself on the occasion of his injury. No consequences of importance—certainly none serious—would have resulted if he had refused, as he should have done, to go to the dangerous place under the printing press, or had he pursued the absolutely safe course of stopping the machinery before attempting to detect and adjust the trouble in the ink rollers. It is true that he claims that he could not have detected the trouble in the ink rollers, which caused the defect in the paper being printed, with the machine stopped, or from the outside of the pit; but it is also true, as shown by his own admissions, that he could not have discovered the trouble in the ink rollers in the darkness there, and therefore he needlessly and recklessly went into a place of danger to accomplish what, as he well knew, he could not accomplish without sufficient light. He undertook to enter a place where he had to go in a stooping position with his eyes down. If there had been a blaze of light, he could not have seen the ink rollers in that position. In undertaking to raise his eyes to look, he made the mistake of raising his head too high, resulting in the injury to him, for which, under the circumstances, his employer is not responsible.

It was said by Judge Cooley, in Sjogren v. Hall, 53 Mich. 274, 278, 18 N. W. 812, 814, quoted by Buchanan, J., with approval in Persinger's Adm'r v. A. Ore, etc., Co., 102 Va. 354, 46 S. E. 326: "So far as there is a duty resting upon the proprietor in such cases, it is a duty to guard against probable danger; and it does not go to the extent of requiring him to render accidental injury impossible. * * * If the fact that prevention was possible is to render the employer liable, then he may as well be made an insurer of the safety of those in his service in express terms, for to all intents and purposes he would in law be insurer, whether nominally so or not."

The opinion in Persinger's Adm'r v. A. Ore, etc., Co., supra, says: "It is right that the master should be required to anticipate and guard against consequences that may reasonably be expected to occur, but it would violate every principle of justice or law if he should be compelled to foresee and provide against that which reasonable and prudent men would not expect to happen." Terminal Co. v. McCormick, 104 Va. —, 51 S. E. 731.

In Ohes. & O. Ry. Co. v. Hafner's Adm'r, 90 Va. 621, 19 S. E. 166, it was held that the railroad company was not liable for the death of Hafner, who was struck by the fourth sill of a dangerously low bridge after he had passed in safety under the three first sills by stooping and lowering his head, when he had full knowledge of the dangerous character of the bridge, and the accident was due to his negligently raising his head too soon; his own negligence being the proximate cause of the injury. Discussing the evidence as to Hafner's conduct at the time of the accident, the opinion by Lacy, J., says: "He did not stoop low enough all the way under the bridge, but negligently raised his head too soon, and was struck; while others situated precisely as he was did stoop low enough, and were unharmed. This was clearly contributory negligence on his part, which was the proximate cause of his injury, and he cannot recover. * * * There the negligence charged was the keeping and maintaining a dangerously low bridge, under which the employees of the company had to pass in the discharge of their duties; but it was considered that, while the company was in this respect negligent, the accident to Hafner was due to his want of proper care for his own safety in passing under the bridge.

While it was negligence on the part of the defendant company not to restore the electric light for use under its printing press, clearly the injury to plaintiff was not due to that negligence, but to his negligence in not exercising due care for his own safety when in a place of known danger, to the mistake of raising his head too high when he knew he was liable to come in contact with the machinery above him—an accident which the defendant company could not have foreseen as liable to happen, and provided against by the exercise of any sort of care on its part.

We are of opinion that the plaintiff's own palpable negligence was the proximate cause of his injury, and that the circuit court erred in not setting aside the verdict of the jury as contrary to the law and the evidence. Therefore its judgment must be reversed and annulled, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(104 Va. 532)

SELDEN v. BROOKE, Collector.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 25, 1906.)

1. TAXATION — SITUS OF PROPERTY — TRUST FUNDS.

Under Code 1887, § 492, as amended by Acts 1897-98, p. 519, c. 490 (Code 1904, p. 252), providing that the separate property of a person over 21 years of age, or a married woman, shall be taxed "to the trustee, if any they have, and if they have no trustee, it shall be listed by and taxed to themselves; in either case it shall be listed and taxed in the county or corporation where they reside," a trust fund, the income of which is payable to a resident of the state over 21 years of age, during her lifetime, is taxable in the city in which the cestui que trust resides, although the trustee is a nonresident of the state.

2. SAME—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE.

Code 1887, § 492, as amended by Acts 1897-98, p. 519, c. 490 (Code 1904, p. 252), although so construed as to authorize the taxation in this state of a trust fund, held by a nonresident trustee, the income of which is payable to a resident beneficiary, is not unconstitutional.

Appeal from Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Suit to settle the estate of Arthur Taylor, deceased, in which Arthur T. Selden was appointed substituted trustee for Elizabeth T. Selden. The case was referred to a commissioner, who held the trustee liable to R. T. Brooke, collector, for certain taxes on the trust estate. From a decree overruling exceptions to the commissioner's report, the trustee appeals. Affirmed.

Hughes & Little, for appellant. Tazewell Taylor, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. This case involves the validity of certain taxes assessed by the city of Norfolk for the years 1898, 1899, and 1900, upon a trust fund consisting of intangible personal property in the hands of a nonresident trustee, in the income of which the cestui que trust, Elizabeth T. Selden, a citizen of the state domiciled in that city, has a life estate.

The trustee was appointed and bonded by a decree of the corporation court of the city of Norfolk, which had jurisdiction of the fund, and directed to pay the income and revenue accruing therefrom to the cestui que trust "during her entire life." The cause was subsequently transferred, by force of the statute in such case made and provided, to the court of law and chancery of the city of Norfolk, where it is now pending; and this appeal is from a decree of that court, which confirmed the report of a commissioner sustaining the validity of the assessment, and ordered the trustee to pay the taxes out of the income.

It is the policy of this commonwealth to impose taxes upon all intangible property of its citizens in the county or corporation of their residence, without regard to the situs of the physical symbols by which such property is evidenced. Commonwealth v. Williams' Ex'r, 102 Va. 778, 47 S. E. 867. But the specific enactment by authority of which these assessments were made is as follows: "If the property is the separate property of a person over 21 years of age or a married woman, it shall be listed and taxed to the trustee, if any they have, and if they have no trustee it shall be listed by and taxed to themselves; in either case it shall be listed and taxed in the county or corporation where they reside. * * * If the property is held for the benefit of another, it shall be listed by and taxed to the trustee in the county of his residence [except as hereinbefore provided]." Acts 1897-98, p. 519, c. 490, amending section 492 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 252].

While the statute may be unskillfully drawn, we are of opinion that by fair construction the case in judgment is obviously within its provisions. The income from the trust fund upon which the tax is imposed constitutes, in a certain sense, the separate property of Elizabeth T. Selden, a person over 21 years of age, who has a trustee, and resides in the city of Norfolk. The language, "If the property is held in trust for the benefit of another, it shall be listed by and taxed to the trustee in the county of his residence (except as hereinbefore provided), is controlled by the antecedent provision, that whether the person whose property is amenable to tax has or has not a trustee, the property shall, "In either case be listed and taxed in the county or corporation where they reside." Though the tax is assessed in the name of the trustee, the burden is, in reality, imposed upon the beneficial owner, a resident of the commonwealth, who enjoys the protection of its laws along with other citizens, and ought in fairness to contribute her due proportion of revenue for the support of the government.

The term "separate estate," in the connection in which it occurs, imports separate ownership by the persons designated, in contradistinction to an equitable separate estate, or the legal separate estate of a married woman, under our statute. 2 Bouv. L. Dict. (Rawle's Rev.) 981.

If the construction, contended for on behalf of the appellant, that the domicile of a nonresident trustee fixes the situs of intangible personal property for purposes of taxation, were to prevail, it would afford ready means of escape from taxation and divert from the treasury of the state a very large amount of revenue to which, in our judgment, it is justly entitled. The contention that the construction indicated would render the statute unconstitutional, proceeds upon the hypothesis that the tax is against the nonresident trustee, whereas he is personally unaffected by the imposition, and is but the conduit through the medium of which the tax upon the property of a citizen passes into the state treasury. Hunt v. Perry (Mass.) 48 N. E. 103; Lewis v. County of Chester, 60 Pa. 325.

It was suggested that there are other statutes which authorize the assessment of the tax, but the view already taken disposes of the question and renders further consideration of the case unnecessary.

The decree is plainly right, and is affirmed.

(106 Va. 444)

SANDS et al. v. STAGG et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 25, 1906.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — ENFORCEMENT — PLEADING.

A bill to enforce a mechanic's lien need not allege that suit was brought, as required by Code 1887, § 2481 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1243], within six months from the time that the whole amount covered by the lien became payable, where it does allege the dates on which the amounts asserted as liens became due and payable, and it appears from the date of the process that suit was brought within the time required by the statute.

2. SAME—GENERAL OR SUB CONTRACTORS.

Where a building contract required the first party to erect buildings on a lot owned by the second party, in consideration of a conveyance of part of the lot with certain of the newly erected buildings, and the payment of a sum of money by the second party to the first party, persons who contracted with the first party to furnish material and labor were general contractors, and entitled to perfect a lien for their materials and work in the manner prescribed by Code 1887, §§ 2475, 2476 [Va. Code 1904, pp. 1236, 1238], and not subcontractors within the meaning of section 2477 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1240], such as to be required to give notice of their claims to the second party in order to fix his interest in the premises with liability for their claims.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—RIGHTS OF VENDOR—CONFLICTING EQUITIES.

Where a vendee, who was erecting buildings on the premises to be conveyed, borrowed money to complete the buildings on an indorsement of his vendor, with the understanding that the loan should be repaid before the execution of a deed, and the vendee failed to make such repayment, and the loan was repaid by the vendor, the latter's right to reimbursement for the sum paid by him had priority over a claim of a grantee of the vendee to a conveyance of the legal title.

Appeal from Chancery Court of Richmond.

Separate suits by Thomas B. Stagg, by William H. Lumber & Son, and by W. R. Mason, surviving partner, against G. G. Ryan and others. The causes were heard together. A decree was rendered in favor of complainants, and Conway R. Sands, trustee, and certain other defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. R. Sands, A. W. Patterson, and Geo. Bryan, for appellants. Harvey Willson, Sol. Cutchins and Leake & Carter, for appellees.

BUCHANAN, J. This is an appeal from a decree rendered in three chancery causes heard together; the object of all of them being to subject a lot and five houses thereon to the payment of mechanics' and builders' liens asserted by the complainants for materials furnished and work done in the erection of the houses.

The first error assigned is to the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the bills filed in the several causes.

Two grounds of demurrer are relied on here: The first is that the bills fail to allege that the suits were brought within six months from the time the whole amount covered by the liens became payable. Code 1887, § 2481 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1243].

The bills do not allege when the suits were instituted, but they do allege when the amounts asserted as liens upon the property became due and payable, and the date of the process shows that the suits were brought within the time required by the statute. Where the record shows at the time the bill is demurred to that the suit was instituted within the period fixed by the statute, there is no good reason for requiring the bill to allege that fact, since the court will take judicial notice of when the suit was instituted, as well as of all other proceedings in the cause. 1 Elliot on Ev. § 57; Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, § 554.

The other ground of demurrer is that the bills fail to allege that the complainants gave notice of the amount and character of their claims to Mahony, the owner of the land, as required by section 2477 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1240].

The bills do not allege such notice; but the contention of the complainants, appellees here, is that they were not subcontractors, and therefore no such notice was necessary. The decision of this question depends upon the construction of the contract between Mahony and Ryan, under which the buildings on the lot were erected. That contract is as follows:

"This contract, made this 23d day of August, 1894, by and between G. G. Ryan, of the city of Richmond, and state of Virginia, party of the first part, and Daniel H. Mahony, of the second part, and of Philadelphia, Pa.

"To wit: That for and in consideration of the sum of $4,860.00 (four thousand three hundred and sixty dollars) each, the said party of the first part agrees to furnish all material, labor and erect and complete for the said party of the second part (2) two of the (2) two story and mansard brick tenements, according to plans and specifications made by the said party of the first part and approved and accepted by the said party of the second part. And to be built on Floyd avenue near Morris St.

"The said party of the first part agrees to allow the said party of the second part $100.00 per front for 68' 0" adjacent to the houses already described and upon which the said party of the first part proposes to build (3) three houses, duplicating those aforesaid described, making a row of (5) five tenements.

Cost of bld. the above (2) two tenements.....	$8,720 00
Cost of 68' 00" of land at $100.00 per ft.....	6,300 00

To balance in favor of the said party of the first part.....	$2,420 00
--	------------

"First Part: G. G. Ryan, [Seal.]

"Second Part: Danl. H. Mahony. [Seal.]"

The agreement between the parties contemplated the erection of a row of five houses, duplicates of each other, on the lot of Mahony, built according to plans and specifications furnished by Ryan and approved by Mahony. Two of the houses (which two the contract does not designate) were to be built for Mahony. For furnishing the material and doing the work in erecting and completing these two houses, Mahony was to convey to Ryan the residue of the lot on which the other three houses were erected, at the price of $6,800, and in addition pay him $2,420.

While it may be difficult to define the precise legal relation between Mahony and Ryan, it is clear, we think, that Ryan was authorized and empowered to erect the row of five houses on Mahony's lot. Mahony having authorized that work to be done by Ryan on his lot, the men who furnished the material and did the work in carrying out the scheme agreed to and authorized by Mahony, ought not to be compelled to look alone to Ryan's interest in the property for the payment of their claims. The fact that their contracts for material and labor were made alone with Ryan ought to make no difference when he was in fact carrying out the scheme entered into between him and Mahony, and Mahony's interest in the property, as well as Ryan's, ought to be liable for their claims. See Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, §§ 300-305; Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, §§ 69-72a; 2 Jones on Liens (3d Ed.) § 1487; Paulsen v. Manske (Ill.) 18 N. E. 275, 9 Am. St. Rep. 532; Henderson v. Connelly, 123 Ill. 98, 14 N. E. 1, 5 Am. St. Rep. 490; Hill v. Gill, 40 Minn. 441, 42 N. W.

294; O'Leary v. Roe, 45 Mo. App. 567; Hilton v. Merrill, 106 Mass. 528.

We are of opinion, therefore, though the question is not entirely free from difficulty, that the complainants should be held to be general contractors within the meaning of sections 2475 and 2476 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, pp. 1236, 1238], and that it was not necessary for them to give Mahony notice of their claims, as provided by section 2477 of the Code.

The commissioner who was directed to ascertain and report the liens on the property sought to be subjected, and their priorities, reported, among other things, that there were no liens upon the two houses which Mahony had selected and retained under his agreement with Ryan; that the first lien upon the three houses which Mahony had conveyed to Ryan by deed delivered in escrow was a debt due Mahony from Ryan for money which Mahony had, in effect, furnished to enable Ryan to complete the erection of the houses; that the second liens were the claims of the complainants and another mechanic's lien claimant who had come into the cause by petition to assert his claim; and that Anderson, one of the appellants, to whom Ryan had conveyed one of the three houses, took it subject to those liens.

The mechanic's lien claimants did not except to the commissioner's report. The appellants excepted to it, but their exceptions were overruled by the court.

One of their exceptions was that the commissioner erred in reporting in favor of complainant Stagg's claim, instead of rejecting it entirely. The action of the court in overruling that exception is assigned as error.

Without discussing the facts upon which the commissioner based his finding and the depositions taken subsequent to the filing of the report, we are of opinion that Stagg's claim is a valid one, and that his lien had been perfected in the manner required by the statute.

The appellants also excepted to the report of the commissioner because he reported the claim of Daniel H. Mahony for $3,000 as the first lien upon the three houses of Ryan. The action of the court in overruling that exception is assigned as error.

While Ryan was engaged in building the five houses, it became necessary for him to borrow money to complete them. To enable him to do this, John Mahony, who lived in Richmond, at the request and as the agent of Daniel Mahony, who lived in Philadelphia, indorsed Ryan's note for $3,000 upon which he borrowed that sum, which was used in completing the houses, with the understanding that it was to be paid by Ryan before he would become entitled to a deed from Daniel Mahony, his vendor. Ryan having failed to pay it, and becoming insolvent, John Mahony paid it as the agent of his brother, Daniel Mahony, and the commissioner reported it as a debt due the latter.

Under the agreement between Daniel Mahony and himself, Ryan had no right to a conveyance of the legal title to that portion of the lot on which his three houses were built, until he had complied with the terms of the agreement of August 23, 1894, and to secure the performance of which Mahony had retained such title. Anderson, to whom Ryan had conveyed one of his three houses, only acquired such interest in the property conveyed as Ryan had; and, not having acquired by his deed the legal title, Anderson took the property subject to all the equities between Ryan and Mahony growing out of the agreement between them, one of which was the right of Mahony to have the $3,000 furnished to complete the houses repaid before he could be required to part with the legal title. The commissioner was, therefore, clearly right in reporting Mahony's claim of $3,000 as having priority over Anderson's purchase from Ryan. Lewis v. Caperton's Ex'r, 8 Grat. 148, 163, 164; Yancey v. Mauck, 15 Grat. 300, 306, 308; 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 220; 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1260.

The remaining assignment of error is to the action of the court in overruling the exception of Sands, trustee, to the commissioner's report, because he did not report that the deed of trust of May 9, 1895, was a prior lien on all the property embraced in that deed.

The grounds upon which it is claimed that the deed of trust ought to have been reported as the first lien upon the property embraced in it are that the bills of the complainants are demurrable, that the liens asserted by those doing work and furnishing material were invalid, and that Mahony had no lien for the $3,000 debt asserted by him.

As each of these grounds of objection to the court's action has been considered in discussing the other assignments of error, and decided against the contention of the appellants, it follows that this assignment of error must also be overruled.

We are of opinion, therefore, that there is no error in the decree appealed from to the prejudice of the appellants, and that it should be affirmed.

(104 Va. 826)

SELDEN'S EX'R v. KENNEDY.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 25, 1906.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW — DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY — ABSENTEES.

Code 1887, § 3373 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1786], providing that if a resident absents himself from the state for seven years successively he shall be presumed to be dead in any case where his death shall come in question, unless proof be made that he was alive within that time, if construed, in connection with section 2639 of the Code [Va. Code 1904, p. 1352], which provides for the granting of letters of administration on a decedent's estate, so as to authorize the administration of an absentee's property during his lifetime, without his knowledge or consent, and in a proceeding to which he is not a party and of which he has no notice, is repugnant to to Const. U. S. Amend. 14, declaring that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law.

*Rehearing denied March 9, 1906.

2. EQUITY—LACHES—GROUNDS OF BAR.

Whether lapse of time is sufficient to bar a recovery depends upon the particular circumstances of the case, and in order to work such result the delay must be such as to afford a reasonable presumption of satisfaction or abandonment of the claim, or such as to prevent a proper defense by reason of death of parties, loss of papers, or death of witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, §§ 204-209.]

3. EXECUTORS — RECOVERY OF LEGACY — LACHES.

Fifteen years' delay of an absentee in suing for a legacy which had been paid to an administrator for him was not such laches as to bar his right of action, where the executor, whose duty it was to pay the legacy, was still living, and no evidence had been lost by death, no records had been destroyed, and there was no uncertainty in the amount due, nor any presumption of payment.

Appeal from Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Suit by C. E. Kennedy against C. W. Grandy, executor of William Selden, deceased. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Loyall & Taylor, for appellant. Burroughs & Bro., for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. This suit was instituted by C. E. Kennedy against C. W. Grandy, surviving executor of Dr. William Selden, deceased, to recover a legacy.

It appears that Dr. Selden, by his last will and testament, which was probated in November, 1887, bequeathed to Charles E. Kennedy the sum of $1,000. Kennedy died before the testator, leaving three children, who, under section 2523 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1290], were entitled to the legacy. The executors paid to two of the children their portion of the legacy. Upon the 7th day of January, 1896, the corporation court of the city of Norfolk, upon proof that C. E. Kennedy, the other child, had been a resident of this state, and had since gone from and had not returned to the state, more than seven years prior to that date, adjudged, ordered, and decreed that he was and should be presumed to be dead, as declared by section 3373 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1736], and appointed T. D. Kennedy, his brother, administrator of his estate. A few days after his appointment he collected his brother's share of the legacy from the appellant as surviving executor of Dr. Selden.

In 1904 C. E. Kennedy, who had been absent from the state for many years, made a demand upon the surviving executor for his share of the legacy; and upon his refusal to pay the same this suit was instituted, and upon a hearing of the cause, a decree was rendered against him for the sum demanded. From that decree this appeal was taken.

The first assignment of error is that the payment made by the appellant to T. D. Kennedy, as administrator of the estate of the appellee, was a valid payment, and that the trial court erred in not so deciding.

In order to sustain this contention, it will be necessary to hold that section 3373 of the Code, when considered in connection with section 2669 of the Code [Va. Code 1904, p. 1352], which provides for the granting of letters of administration when a person is dead, authorizes the appointment of an administrator of the estate of the appellee, under the facts disclosed by the record; and, if it does, that it is not in conflict with that portion of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which ordains that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of the law."

Section 3373 [page 1736] is as follows: "If any person, who shall have resided in this state, go from and do not return to the state for seven years successively, he shall be presumed to be dead in any case where in his death shall come in question, unless proof be made that he was alive within that time."

It may well be doubted whether the Legislature intended by that section to authorize the courts to grant letters of administration upon the estate of a person who was once a resident of the state, and had been absent therefrom for more than seven years, irrespective of death. But if it be conceded that such was its intention, is not the statute in plain violation of the due process of law clause of the fourteenth amendment?

It is conceded, and if it were not it is well settled, that the grant of letters of administration on the estate of a live man, as if he were dead, is absolutely void.

In the case of Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 38 L. Ed. 896, the question of the validity of such letters of administration was fully discussed, the authorities, English and American, cited, and the conclusion reached that a court of probate, in the exercise of its jurisdiction over the probate of wills and the administration of estates of deceased persons, had no jurisdiction to appoint an administrator of a living person, and that the appointment of an administrator, after public notice to the next of kin, creditors and the like of the estate of a living person, who had been absent from the state more than seven years, was in violation of the due process of law clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. And there are general expressions in that opinion which would seem to indicate that a state was absolutely without power to provide by special proceeding for the administration and care of the property of an absentee, and to confer jurisdiction on its courts to do so, irrespective of the fact of death.

But in the recent case of Cunnius, etc., v. Reading School Dist., 198 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1126, that court, in considering the validity of certain statutes of the state of Pennsylvania "relating to the grant of letters of administration upon the estates of persons presumed to be dead by reason of long absence from their domicile," held that the due process of law clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not wholly deprive a state of the power to confer jurisdiction on its courts to administer the estates of absentees, irrespective of the fact of death, by special and appropriate proceedings distinct from the general law for the settlement of the estates of decedents. It further held, that fixing the period of a person's absence from his last domicile within the state at seven years, or more, before his estate could be administered under the special proceedings, was not so unreasonable as to render the statute repugnant to the due process of law clause of the fourteenth amendment; and that the notice required to be given by order of publication before an administrator could be appointed, and the safeguards provided for the protection of the property of the absentee in case of his return, satisfied the requirements of the fourteenth amendment. But the court expressed the opinion in that case, that a state law which did not provide, among other things, for adequate notice as a prerequisite to the proceedings for the administration of the estate of an absentee would be repugnant to the fourteenth amendment.

It is said that the expression of the court in that case, that the appointment of an administrator of the estate of an absentee while he is still living, without adequate notice as a prerequisite to such appointment would be void, was unnecessary to a decision of that case, and therefore a mere dictum. Even if this were so, the principle there announced is in accord with the repeated declarations of that court, as to what is required by the due process of law clause of the fourteenth amendment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; Scott v. McNeal, supra.

Tested by that rule, a statute which provides for the taking of an absentee's property and administering it when he is alive, without his knowledge or consent and in a proceeding to which he is not a party, and of which he has no notice, is clearly in violation of his rights under the fourteenth amendment.

The other assignment of error is that the trial court ought to have denied the relief sought, because of the long delay of the appellee in asserting his claim.

It has always been a principle of equity to discourage stale demands, and laches is often a defense wholly independent of the statute of limitations. But the rule is adopted because after great lapse of time, from death of parties, loss of papers, or death of witnesses, there is danger of doing injustice, and there can be no longer a safe determination of the controversy. Tazewell's Ex'r v. Sanders' Ex'r, 13 Grat. 354; Bargamin v. Clarke, 20 Grat. 544, 553; Rowe v. Bentley, 29 Grat. 756, 763; Jameson v. Rixey, 94 Va. 342, 346, 26 S. E. 861, 64 Am. St. Rep. 726.

Mere delay is not always laches, and laches in the assertion of a right is not always sufficient to defeat it. The laches must be such as to afford a reasonable presumption of satisfaction or abandonment of the claim or such as to prevent a proper defense by reason of the death of parties, loss of evidence, or otherwise. Tazewell's Ex'r v. Sanders' Ex'r, supra. 362; Jameson v. Rixey, 94 Va. 346, 26 S. E. 861, 64 Am. St. Rep. 726, and cases cited. Whether the lapse of time is sufficient to bar a recovery must of necessity depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Aylett's Ex'r v. King, 11 Leigh, 486; Rowe v. Bentley, 29 Grat. 763; Bell v. Wood, 94 Va. 677, 683, 27 S. E. 504. Tested by these general principles, the facts of this case do not make out such a case of laches as ought to bar the appellee of his right to recover. The time between the accruing of his right to collect the legacy and the institution of his suit is about 15 years—a long time to delay the assertion of his right if he had knowledge of it. It is not shown when he first learned of it, but it does appear that he had been absent from the state for more than 7 years before letters of administration on his estate were granted, that during that period he had not been heard from by his nearest relatives, and that he was still a nonresident at the time of the institution of his suit. We think it may be fairly inferred from the record that he had no knowledge of his rights until after his legacy had been paid to his administrator, and probably not until shortly before he made his demand upon the appellant and instituted his suit. But if it be conceded that he knew that the legacy had been left him, the only thing other than mere lapse of time that could stand in the way of his right to recover is that the appellant voluntarily paid it to another, who had apparent, but no real, authority to receive it, and who gave a refunding bond for appellant's protection. The appellant whose duty it was to pay, and the appellee, who was entitled to receive the legacy, are both living; no evidence has been lost by death, no records have been destroyed or papers lost, there is no uncertainty as to the amount that is due, and no presumption of payment. In the absence of all of these, the equitable circumstances which generally constitute the grounds for the application of the doctrine of laches, we do not think that the appellee can be said to be guilty of such laches as will bar his right to recover.

We are of opinion that there is no error in the decree appealed from, and that it should be affirmed.

(104 Va. 509)

CAMPBELL et al. v. BRYANT, Mayor, et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—TAXES—RESTRAINING COLLECTION.

Equity has jurisdiction to entertain a bill to enjoin the officers of a town from undertaking to collect taxes on the ground that the act purporting to incorporate the town is unconstitutional and void.

2. SAME—PARTIES.

In a suit to enjoin the collection of taxes by the authorities of a town on the ground of the invalidity of the act incorporating the town, where the mayor and members of the council of the town are made parties defendant, and appear and answer the bill in their official capacity, as well as in their own right, it is not necessary that the town itself be made a party by name.

3. STATUTES—GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS—INCORPORATION OF MUNICIPALITIES.

Under Const. art. 8, § 117 [Va. Code 1904, p. cccxxviii], requiring the General Assembly to enact general laws for the organization and government of cities and towns, and providing that no special act shall be passed in relation thereto, except in the manner prescribed in article 4 of the Constitution, cities and towns not in existence when the Constitution went into effect can only be incorporated under general laws, regardless of what special acts may be passed in relation to cities and towns under article 4 [Va. Code 1904, p. ccxvii].

4. SAME—DEPARTURES FROM GENERAL LAW.

Acts 1904, p. 283, c. 167, purporting to incorporate a certain town, and which provides that the election of mayor and councilmen shall be held on the first Tuesday in June, 1904, and every two years thereafter, whereas, under the general law [Va. Code 1904, § 1021] town elections for mayor and councilmen must be held on the second Tuesday in June, and which further provides that the mayor shall be vested with the power and authority of a justice of the peace to a distance of $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles beyond the town limits, and gives the sergeant of the town the authority of a constable within the same territory, whereas the general law [Va. Code 1904, §§ 1082, 1083a] confines the criminal jurisdiction of town authorities to territory extending one mile beyond the corporate limits and confines their civil jurisdiction to these limits, and which contains other departures from the general law, is repugnant to Const. art. 8, § 117 [Va. Code 1904, p. cccxxviii], requiring the General Assembly to enact general laws for the organization and government of cities and towns.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—SELF-EXECUTING PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 8, § 117 [Va. Code 1904, p. cccxxviii], requiring the General Assembly to enact general laws for the organization and government of cities and towns, and prohibiting the enactment of special acts in relation thereto, except in the manner prescribed in article 4 of the Constitution, and amending the charters of towns and cities so as to make them conform to the provisions of the Constitution, is self-executing, in so far as it prohibits special legislation and amends existing municipal charters.

6. TAXATION—CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS—UNIFORMITY.

Acts 1904, p. 283, c. 167 [Va. Code 1904, p. 484], purporting to incorporate a certain town and exempting the persons residing within the territorial limits of the proposed town from the payment of certain county taxes, is repugnant to Const. art. 18, § 168 [Va. Code 1904, p. cclxii], which provides that all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws.

7. STATUTES—EFFECT OF PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Acts 1904, p. 283, c. 167 [Va. Code 1904, p. 484], purporting to incorporate a certain town, is, in view of the provision exempting persons within the town from the payment of certain county taxes in violation of Const. art. 18, § 168 [Va. Code 1904, p. cclxii], requiring taxes to be uniform within the territorial limits of the levying authority, invalid as a whole, since the proffered exemption was one of the chief inducements held out to procure votes for the charter when it was submitted to the inhabitants of the proposed town, and it cannot be determined that they would have voted for the charter, had the exemption provision been omitted.

8. SAME—EFFECT OF TOTAL INVALIDITY.

An unconstitutional statute purporting to incorporate a town is absolutely inoperative, and does not empower the town authorities to levy or collect taxes.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—TAXATION—DECREES ENJOINING COLLECTION.

A decree enjoining the collection of a municipal tax on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the act purporting to incorporate the municipality is not subject to the objection of purporting to judicially dissolve a municipal charter.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Amherst County.

Bill by Duncan Campbell and others against A. J. Bryant and others, mayor and councilmen, etc., of the so-called town of Madison Heights. From a decree of dismissal, complainants appeal. Reversed.

Caskie & Coleman and W. K. Allen, for appellant. Whitehead & Whitehead and J. G. Haythe, for appellees.

HARRISON, J. By an act of the General Assembly, approved March 14, 1904, (Acts 1904, p. 283, c. 167 [Va. Code 1904, p. 484]), entitled "An act to incorporate the town of Madison Heights, in Amherst county," it was enacted that the territory in Amherst county contained within the limits set forth and described in section 2 of the act should be deemed and taken as the town of Madison Heights, and that the inhabitants thereof should be a body politic under that name for all purposes for which towns are incorporated in this commonwealth. By the terms of the act, the charter thereby created was not to become operative until it had been ratified by a majority of the registered voters within the limits of the proposed town and by a majority vote of the freeholders voting at the special election to be ordered by the judge of the circuit court of Amherst county for the purpose of ascertaining the will of those entitled to vote on the question.

In pursuance of the terms of the act an election was held on the 10th day of May, 1904, at which a majority of the whole vote cast was for the ratification of the charter, and a majority of the freeholders voting were likewise in favor of such ratification. It further appears that on the 7th day of June, 1904, A. J. Bryant was elected mayor, and George A. Christian, C. P. Shener, J. N. Cooper, George T. Harris, Thomas H. Banton, and C. E. Bell, councilmen. At a meeting of these persons, claiming to be mayor and councilmen, respectively, of the town of Madison Heights, by virtue of the election of June 7, 1904, certain persons were appointed officers of the town, among others J. D. Mays as sergeant and collector, and on the same day the council proceeded to levy a tax for various town purposes for the year ending June 30, 1905, amounting in the aggregate to $2,010, and to place the same in the hands of J. D. Mays, sergeant, for collection.

Shortly thereafter (the date does not appear) the bill in this case was filed by Duncan Campbell and 20 others, suing for themselves and on behalf of all other citizens of the territory embraced within the limits designated by the charter act, alleging that said act, purporting to incorporate the town of Madison Heights, was unconstitutional and void, and that the mayor and council of the so-called town were therefore without authority to levy or collect taxes, and praying that the taxes assessed by the council be declared to be nugatory, and that J. D. Mays, the pretended sergeant of such town, be perpetually enjoined from undertaking to collect the same. To this bill the persons already mentioned, styling themselves mayor and council of the town of Madison Heights, and J. D. Mays, styling himself collector of said town, were made parties defendant, and filed a joint demurrer and answer in their own right and in their several official capacities, in which answer they deny all of the material allegations of the bill, insisting upon the validity of the charter act of March 14, 1904, and of their proceedings thereunder.

Upon the hearing the circuit court of Amherst county, by decree of March 16, 1905, overruled the demurrer, but dismissed the bill upon the ground that the complainants were not entitled to the relief prayed for. This conclusion of the circuit court, which rests upon the view that the act of March 14, 1904, incorporating the town of Madison Heights, is constitutional, is called in question by the present appeal.

The demurrer was properly overruled. The jurisdiction of a court of equity in this class of cases is well established. Bull v. Read, 13 Grat. 78; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Grat. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 867; Johnson v. Drummond, 20 Grat. 419; Redd v. Supervisors, 31 Grat. 695;

Lynchburg v. Dameron, 95 Va. 546, 28 S. E. 951; Cahoon v. Iron Gate, 92 Va. 367, 28 S. E. 767; Day v. Roberts, 101 Va. 248, 43 S. E. 862.

The mayor and members of the council are parties defendant, and have appeared and answered the bill in their official capacity, as well as in their own right. It was, therefore, not necessary to make the town a party by name. It was present through its mayor and council, who were the only parties who could have represented it. To have, in addition, made it a party by name, would have been a vain act, serving no purpose, which is not required. This view is sustained by authorities already cited in support of the jurisdiction of the court.

Section 117, art. 8, of the Constitution [Va. Code 1904, p. cccxxxviii], provides that general laws for the organization and government of cities and towns shall be enacted by the General Assembly, and that no special act shall be passed in relation thereto, except in the manner prescribed in article 4 of the Constitution. What special acts may be passed in relation to cities and towns, under article 4 of the Constitution [Va. Code 1904, p. ccxviii], need not now be considered; for it is clear that cities and towns not in existence when the Constitution went into effect can only be organized and governed in accordance with the general laws. This provision of our present fundamental law prohibiting special legislation and providing that general laws for the organization of cities and towns shall be enacted, and that no special act shall be passed in relation thereto, is second to no other provision of the Constitution in value and importance, and cannot be too carefully observed or strictly enforced.

Of course the Legislature can, as formerly, grant charters creating cities and towns. But, when such charters are granted, the city or town so chartered must be organized and governed in accordance with the general laws; otherwise, the charter would be obnoxious to the constitutional provision forbidding special legislation.

The charter of the town of Madison Heights, as set forth in the act of March 14, 1904, is obnoxious in numerous particulars to the constitutional inhibition against special legislation. It is not necessary to point out in this opinion all of the material respects in which the powers sought to be conferred by the act in question differ from the powers conferred upon towns by the existing general law. One or two examples may be mentioned.

Clause 20 of the act provides that the election of mayor and councilmen of Madison Heights shall be on the first Tuesday in June, 1904, and every two years thereafter; whereas, under the general law, town elections for mayor and councilmen must be held on the second Tuesday in June. Va. Code 1904, § 1021.

It is provided that the mayor of Madison

Heights shall be invested with the power and authority of a justice of the peace, within the limits of the town and to a distance of $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles beyond in Amherst county, and shall exercise like jurisdiction in all cases originating within such limits that a justice of the peace may now or hereafter have and exercise. This provision gives to the mayor both civil and criminal jurisdiction within the corporate limits and for a distance of $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles beyond; whereas, the general law [Va. Code 1904, § 1032] provides that the jurisdiction of the corporate authorities of each town or city, in criminal matters and for imposing and collecting a license tax on all shows, performances, and exhibitions, shall extend 1 mile beyond the corporate limits of such town or city, and further provides [Va. Code 1904, § 1033a] that the civil jurisdiction of mayors of towns shall be confined to the corporate limits of the town and their criminal jurisdiction to such limits and 1 mile beyond.

The sergeant of the town is given all of the powers and authority of a constable and conservator of the peace within the corporate limits and for a distance of $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles beyond; whereas, as already pointed out, the jurisdiction of the corporate authorities of a town is limited by the general law to 1 mile beyond the corporate limits.

Without further detail it may be said that most of the important provisions of the act incorporating the town of Madison Heights are either in conflict with the existing general law or without any general law to support them. The fact, however, that no general law on the subject has been passed does not affect the question. Section 117 is self-executing, so far as it prohibits special legislation, and also to the extent that it amends the charters of towns and cities, so as to make them conform to the provisions of the Constitution. Hicks v. City of Bristol, 102 Va. 861, 47 S. E. 1001.

It would seem from clause 19 of the act that the draftsman of the charter intended to confer special authority and power; it being there provided that, "in addition to the special powers hereinbefore especially delegated to the town council, all general powers not in conflict with the laws of this state or of the United States, necessary for the proper government of said town, and which are by law allowed to municipal corporations, are hereby likewise delegated and vested in the said town council."

If, however, the Legislature had possessed the power to pass an act for the organization and government of a town, conferring special powers, the charter in the case at bar would still be invalid, because it exempts the persons residing within the territorial limits of the proposed town from the payment of certain taxes to the county of Amherst, in violation of section 168, art. 13, of the Constitution [Va. Code 1904, p. cccxli], which expressly provides that all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws. This court has held that a town is a part of the county for all purposes of taxation, and that the Legislature has no power, by reason of the constitutional inhibition mentioned, to exempt the taxable persons and property in a town situated within the limits of a county and forming a part thereof from county levies; that a part of a county cannot be made to bear all the burden of taxation for county purposes; and that the uniformity required extends, not only to the rate and mode of assessment, but also to the territory to be assessed, and when a tax is levied by a county it must be uniform throughout the county. Day v. Roberts, 101 Va. 248, 43 S. E. 362.

In the case cited the court was construing a similar provision in the Constitution of 1869. The provision in the present Constitution is possibly more explicit in providing that taxation shall be uniform within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax than that construed in Day v. Roberts. This being so, the county of Amherst can and must levy the same taxes upon the people and property of Madison Heights as upon the rest of the county. The provision of the charter exempting the people of that town from the taxes mentioned is therefore wholly nugatory.

This provision for exemption from taxes cannot be held invalid and the residue of the act be permitted to stand, unaffected by the illegal section, as was done in the case of Cahoon v. Iron Gate, supra, because to escape the payment of such taxes was one of the chief inducements held out by the charter to get the taxpayers of the proposed town to vote for the charter when it was submitted to them for their approval or rejection, and we cannot say that the people would have voted for the charter if that provision had been omitted. In such a case the whole charter must be held invalid. Robertson v. Preston, 97 Va. 296, 301, 33 S. E. 618.

It is not necessary to consider other features in which it is contended that the act of March 14, 1904, is invalid. It being unconstitutional in the particulars pointed out, the appellees had no power or authority to levy or collect the tax complained of. The act being unconstitutional, it is not a law. It confers no rights. It imposes no duties. It affords no protection. It creates no office. It is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed. Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178.

The authorities relied on by the appellees (see Agner's Case, 103 Va. 811, 48 S. E. 493) in support of their argument that the courts have no power to dissolve a municipal charter, and that municipalities exist only by legislative sanction, and cannot be dissolved or cease to exist except pursuant to legislative provision, have no application to a case like this. There is no undertaking to dissolve the charter of Madison Heights, and no such decree is asked for. It is a proceeding, sanctioned by a long line of Virginia decisions, asking for relief from an unconstitutional, and therefore illegal, tax. We are only holding that the act attempting to incorporate the town of Madison Heights and providing for its organization and government is invalid, because not passed in conformity with the Constitution of the state. In other words, we determine that the act, which it is claimed creates the town and gives its council the power to levy the tax complained of, is a nullity, because in violation of the Constitution. If it had ever been a valid act, then the court could not annul it or declare it forfeited. That would be a legislative power. But whether or not there is a valid act or charter authorizing the tax complained of is a judicial question, and the court not only has the right, but is bound, to pass upon such a question whenever it is properly presented.

For these reasons the decree appealed from must be reversed, and this court will enter here such decree as the lower court ought to have entered, declaring the tax complained of invalid and perpetually enjoining the appellees from all further attempt to collect the same.

(140 N. C. 233)

LEDFORD v. EMERSON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 15, 1905.)

1. JOINT ADVENTURES—DISSOLUTION—ACTION BETWEEN PARTNERS.

Where a partnership was formed to engage in a single venture or purchase, which had been closed, and nothing remained but to pay over the claimant's share of the proceeds, the claimant was entitled to maintain an action at law against his partner for the amount due.

[Ed. Note. For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Joint Adventures, § 7.]

2. ARREST—CIVIL ACTION—FRAUD.

Where, in an action by a partner in a joint adventure to recover the amount due from his copartner, plaintiff alleged and proved intentional fraud on the part of defendant throughout the entire transaction, and the trial judge found that defendant was guilty of fraud as alleged, plaintiff was entitled to a continuance of an order of arrest granted under Code, § 291, subsec. 4, providing that, when a defendant has been guilty of fraud in incurring the obligation for which the action is brought, an order of arrest may be issued.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Neal, Judge.

Action by John P. Ledford against A. S. Emerson. From an order discharging an order of arrest in a civil action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See 51 S. E. 42.

The principal action was instituted in July, 1903, to recover plaintiff's share arising from a sale of certain options on land situated in north Georgia, same having been procured by plaintiff in the years 1900, 1901, etc., and sold by defendant in April, 1903, at a price of $10,000. The allegation and testimony of plaintiff tended to show that plaintiff procured a large number of options on land in north Georgia, and took same in the name of defendant, under an agreement that defendant was to advance the incidental expenses, sell said options, and divide the profits equally with the plaintiff; that defendant, having sold said options at the price of $10,000, fraudulently concealed the facts from plaintiff and paid plaintiff $250 which plaintiff took under false and fraudulent assurances as to the disposition of the options, giving defendant his receipt in full, and defendant had failed to make any other or further payments to plaintiff by reason of said deal, etc. As ancillary to the principal action, an order of arrest was issued in the cause on affidavits duly made on February 15, 1904, and defendant was arrested thereunder and held to bail. There was a motion to discharge the order of arrest, heard before Judge Neal, as stated. Motion allowed, and plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Axley & Axley, E. B. Norvell, and Busbee & Busbee, for appellant. Ben Posey and Dillard & Bell, for appellee.

HOKE, J. The judge below on the hearing found the facts contained in the plaintiff's affidavits to be true, and held, as a matter of law, that on these facts there was no right shown to arrest defendant. His honor thereupon discharged the order of arrest and entered judgment exonerating the bail from any and all liability by reason of his suretyship. This, as we understand, was on the idea that the facts disclosed a case of partnership, and in such case there was no legal right in one partner to cause the arrest of another. It is a well-recognized principle that, during the continuance of a partnership, one partner cannot sue another on any special transaction which may be made an item of charge or discharge in a general partnership account. This has sometimes been put on the ground that such a suit would necessitate that the party complained of should be both plaintiff and defendant. But I apprehend a reason of more moment is that as to such a transaction, till a full accounting is had, it cannot be ascertained or declared what portion of such claims belong to the one or the other; and so it is true that one partner, during the continuance of the partnership, cannot ordinarily bring trover or trespass against the other by reason of acts concerning partnership property, unless the same be destroyed or removed entirely beyond the reach or control of the complaining party, for one has no more right to deal with the property than the other. Where, however, the partnership has terminated, and, all the debts having been paid and the partnership affairs otherwise adjusted, nothing remains to be done but to pay over an amount due from one to the other, to be ascertained by a reckoning as to one special item, or even several items, the matter presenting no complication of any kind, as in Clarke v. Mills, 36 Kan. 393, 13 Pac. 569; or where the partnership was for a single venture or special purpose, which has been closed, and nothing remains but to pay over the claimant's share of the proceeds, as in Jacques v. Hult, 16 N. J. Law, 38—in either case an action would lie in favor of one against the other. George on Partnership, 304; Bales on Partnership, 865, 866; Clarke v. Mills, and Jacques v. Hult, supra; Musler v. Trumbour, 5 Wend. 274; Moran v. Le Blanc, 6 La. Ann. 113; Wheeler v. Arnold, 30 Mich. 304. In Clarke's Case, supra, Holt, P. J., for the court, said: "There were no debts to be paid, no money to be collected, no property to be disposed of, and under the facts of the case it was purely a pecuniary demand, involving no complications that could not properly be determined in a justice's court." In Wheeler v. Arnold, supra, it is held: "The remedy at law for contribution between two partners after dissolution is admissible, and, when there have been no such dealings with assets and no such private relations with the firm as to make a settlement difficult, there would be no occasion, under our statutes making discovery obtainable at law by an examination of parties as witnesses, for an accounting in equity." In Jacques v. Hult, supra, it is held: "A mutual covenant to divide the proceeds of a certain crop, if it be a partnership, is so only for a special purpose and terminates as soon as the crop is sold; and an action lies by one of the parties against the other for any balance due thereon to the plaintiff from the defendant, without resorting to the action of account render."

This being the correct doctrine, and an action at law maintainable, the facts bring the claim within the provisions of our statutes on arrest and bail, no reason occurs to us why the plaintiff should be deprived of this ancillary remedy. The statute (Code, § 291, subsec. 4) provides that when a defendant has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which action is brought, or for concealing or disposing of property, or to recover damages for fraud or deceit, an order for arrest may be issued; and it has been held in Powers v. Davenport, 101 N. C. 286, 7 S. E. 747, that such an order is proper when there has been fraud committed after contracting the debt, as by concealing property or other devices for defeating the creditor. Here is allegation, and ample evidence to sustain it, charging intentional fraud throughout the entire transaction on the part of the defendant, and the judge below has found that these charges are true: A fraudulent design in having the options drawn in the name of the defendant; a fraudulent effort and purpose in concealing the sale from the plaintiff; false and fraudulent statements in procuring from the plaintiff a receipt in full, etc. We must not be understood as holding that no right of arrest can ever exist where the partnership has terminated and the affairs are so complicated that, in order to a proper settlement, an action in the nature of a bill in equity for an account is required. We have only elaborated the position that the right of arrest may exist when an action at law would lie, with a view of confining the decision to the points required by the facts of the case before us.

The court is referred to the case of Soule v. Hayward, 1 Cal. 345, as authority supporting the defendant's position; but this was a case construing the California statutes that a partner was not included under the term "agent" in their statute on arrest, and the propositions here discussed do not seem to have been presented or considered by the court.

There was error in allowing the defendant's motion, and the order to that effect will be set aside.

Error.

(128 N. C. 750)

CARTER et al. v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Feb. Term, 1905.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by P. V. Carter and others against the North Carolina Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Barringer and R. C. Strudwick, for appellants. King & Kimball, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. Affirmed.

(129 N. C. 490)

CARTER et al. v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. DEATH—ACTIONS FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for wrongful death, an instruction that it was "necessary for the administrator to show by affirmative evidence that the net earnings of the deceased exceeded his expenditures, and unless he has done that it is the duty of the jury to say that he is not entitled to recover anything," was erroneous, as confining the jury to the consideration of the testimony in regard to the net earnings of deceased at and prior to his death, and directing the jury to deduct from the gross earnings which the deceased would have made his expenditures.

2. SAME—DAMAGES—PROSPECTIVE PECUNIARY BENEFITS.

Under Code, § 1498, providing for actions for wrongful death, and section 1499, providing that the plaintiff in such action may recover such damages as are a fair and just compensation for the pecuniary injury resulting from such death, the jury, in determining the damages, must take into consideration the entire life, character, habits, health, and capacity of the deceased, regardless of whether he had accumulated property at the time of his death.

* [Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Death, §§ 103-119.]

3. SAME—EARNINGS AND EXPENSES OF DECEASED.

In determining the amount recoverable for wrongful death under Code, §§ 1498, 1499, after the gross income or earnings which the deceased would have made is determined, there should be deducted therefrom only his reasonably necessary personal expenses, taking into consideration his age, manner of living, and business, and not the total expenditures which the deceased might have made for family and other expenses.

4. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVINCE OF JURY.

It is not for the court to instruct the jury in any case, when death by wrongful act is shown or admitted, that upon any state of facts it is their duty to render a verdict against plaintiff; such matter being necessarily an inference of fact from all the evidence.

Petition for rehearing. Allowed.

For former decision, see 52 S. E. 642.

PER CURIAM. This is a petition to rehear this cause disposed of at the last term, 138 N. C. 750, 52 S. E. 642. His honor said to the jury, among other things: "The court charges you as a matter of law, and it is so plain that there can be no mistake about it, that in this case, whenever an adult has been killed—no matter whether he was killed by an individual or a corporation, it is all the same—and his administrator brings suit, it is necessary for the administrator to show by affirmative evidence that the net earnings of the deceased exceeded his expenditures, and unless he has done that it is the duty of the jury to say that he is not entitled to recover anything." To this instruction the plaintiff excepted.

There was error in two respects. The instruction, whether so intended or not, confined the jury to the consideration of testimony in regard to the net earnings of the deceased at the time of his death or prior thereto, or, in other words, whether he had accumulated anything at the time of his death. By a proper construction of the statute (Code, §§ 1498, 1499) the inquiry whether or not the relatives of the deceased have suffered any pecuniary loss by his death is not limited to the date of his death. It must necessarily extend beyond that period. The true question is, did the relatives really suffer any loss by reason of the fact that the deceased failed to live out his expectancy? In determining it, the jury must take into consideration the entire life, character, habits, health, capacity, etc., of the deceased, and, from the result of such consideration, estimate as near as may be, and ascertain according to the rule laid down by the court, what pecuniary advantage would have accrued to his relatives if he had lived out his expectancy, as the jury may find it to be, using the mortuary tables prescribed to aid them. This question is within the peculiar province of the jury. The court may not take it from them and decide it as a question of law. He instructs the jury in regard to the rule for ascertaining the net income during the entire life of the deceased, and how to ascertain the present worth of the amount fixed by the jury as the total accumulation during his life, and their verdict in the light of all the evidence must be fixed by them. This court said, in Benton v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 1009, 30 S. E. 333, after stating the rule as laid down in Pickett's Case, 117 N. C. 638, 23 S. E. 264, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611: "In applying this rule, * * * and to enable the jury to properly estimate the reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage from the continuance of the life of the deceased, they should consider his age, habits, industry, means, business qualifications, skill, and reasonable expectation of life." Watson v. Railroad, 133 N. C. 190, 45 S. E. 555. This court held, in Russell v. Steamboat Co., 126 N. C. 961, 36 S. E. 191, and Davis v. Railroad, 136 N. C. 116, 48 S. E. 591, that substantial damage, ascertained in the manner pointed out, could be recovered for the wrongful killing of an infant. To confine the jury to the net income prior to and at the time of the death would exclude any recovery in such cases. The same result would follow in the case of a young man just entering upon active life, as well as many others which readily occur to the mind.

The charge was also erroneous, in that it directed the jury to deduct from such gross income or earnings, as they might find the deceased would have made, his "expenditures." The true rule requires the jury to deduct only the reasonably necessary personal expenses of the deceased, taking into consideration his age, manner of living, business calling, or profession, etc. If by "expenditures" is understood, and we think the jury, in the absence of any explanation, may have well so understood it, the amount spent for his family or those dependent upon him, the result would be to deprive the families of a very large majority of men from recovering damage for their death. But a small number of men accumulate estates. Their income or earning, after paying their actual personal expenses, are expended in the support and education of their children. Certainly it was not contemplated that for wrongfully causing the death of such a man no damage could be recovered, although his death deprived his family of their sole support, while for the death of one without any family, or who by miserly living and hoarding deprives his family of support and education, large damages should be awarded. It cannot, with any show of truth, be said that in the first case the family sustain no pecuniary loss by reason of the death of the husband and father. Such a construction of the statute would place beyond the protection of law nine-tenths of the people. His honor, of course, did not intend to so construe the law; but it is the logical result, if the absence of accumulation by the deceased or the lack of an excess of earnings over all expenditures is to be laid down as the rule of law. It is not for the court to instruct the jury in any case, when death by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of the defendant is shown or admitted, that upon any state of facts it is their duty to render a verdict against the plaintiff. "The reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage from the continuance of the life of the deceased" is necessarily an inference of fact from all of the evidence, and can only be drawn by the jury, subject, of course, to the supervisory power of the court to prevent injustice by setting aside the verdict, if excessive.

The petition must be allowed, and a new trial awarded.

Petition allowed.

(73 S. C. 26)

JOHNSON v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. CARRIERS—RATE SCHEDULE — FAILURE TO POST—ACTION FOR PENALTY.

A complaint against a railroad company for failure to post schedule of rates under Civ. Code 1902, §§ 2092, 2093, providing that the railroad commissioners shall make reasonable rates of freight and passenger tariffs, and that the schedule of rates shall be posted by the railroad companies at their respective stations, must allege that each and every act required of the railroad commissioners has been done, in order to state a cause of action for failure to post said schedules.

2. SAME—NOTICE OF SCHEDULE.

Under Civ. Code 1902, § 2093, requiring the railroad commissioners to make schedule of rates for railroads in the state, and requiring railroad companies to post the same, 30 days is a reasonable notice by a railroad commission of schedule of rates made.

3. SAME—DEFENSES.

In an action for a penalty for failure to post rates made by a railroad commission, the railroad company cannot interpose as a defense that the commission has not published schedules of rates for all the railroads in the state; Civ. Code 1902, § 2093, providing that the schedule shall not be taken as evidence until schedules have been prepared for all the railroad companies in the state, only applying to the reception of the schedule as evidence.

4. PENALTIES—PROCEDURE — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The word "prosecutions," in Const. art. 5, § 31, providing that all writs and processes shall run and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name of the state, applies to indictments for crime, and does not affect suits under penal statutes, which may be brought in the name of any person in the manner provided by the statute creating the same.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Orangeburg County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by Estes C. Johnson against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. From an order sustaining a demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wolfe & Berry, for appellant. Lyles & McMahon, for respondent.

JONES, J. The plaintiff appeals from an order of Judge Townsend sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, which, after alleging that defendant is a corporation, is as follows: "(2) That sections 2092 and 2093 of the Civil Code of South Carolina (1902) provide that the railroad commissioners of said state shall fix a schedule of reasonable freight and passenger rates for each railroad corporation doing business in this state. (3) That the defendant is a railroad corporation doing business in said state, and that North is a station of said railroad corporation between Columbia, S. C., and Denmark, S. C., but the said station of North is wholly within the state of South Carolina. (4) That the railroad commissioners of said state, more than a year prior to the commencement of this action, fixed a schedule of freight and passenger rates for the defendant corporation. (5) That section 2093 of the Civil Code of South Carolina (1902) provides that any railroad corporation failing to post at any of its stations a copy of the schedules aforesaid shall incur and suffer a penalty of $100 for each and every day during which time such corporation shall fail to post such schedule, and that such penalty may be sued for by any citizen of the said state, and the recovery shall be equally divided between the citizens so suing and the state of South Carolina. (6) That the defendant failed to post such schedules at the station of North, S. C., from January 1, 1903, to December 9, 1903, a period of 329 days, and that thereby the defendant has incurred and is liable for a penalty aggregating $32,900. (7) That the plaintiff is a citizen of said state, and sues for the said penalty of $32,900, according to the provisions of section 2093 of the Civil Code aforesaid. "Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment for $32,900 and his costs."

The fifth, sixth, and seventh grounds of demurrer were as follows, and of these the circuit court sustained the fifth and seventh, with leave to amend, and failed to mention the sixth. "(5) Because said complaint does not allege that the Railroad commissioners of the state of South Carolina had prepared and published such schedule for doing business in this state, or a schedule of just and reasonable rates and charges for the transportation of passengers and freight and cars on said railroad. (6) Because said complaint does not allege that said schedule has been published according to law, or that 30 days' notice thereof had been served upon the defendant company. (7) Because said complaint does not allege that the railroad commissioners of the state of South Carolina had prepared and published such schedules for all the railroad companies organized under the laws of the state of South Carolina, or the time of the publication of such schedule."

1. We think the circuit court was correct in sustaining the fifth ground of demurrer. Section 2002, Code 1902, provides, among other things, that "the commissioners elected as hereinbefore provided shall, as provided in the next section of this chapter, make reasonable and just rates of freight and passenger tariffs, to be observed by all railroad companies doing business in this state on the railroads therein," etc. Section 2003 is as follows: "The said railroad commissioners are hereby authorized and required to make for each of the railroad corporations doing business in this state, as soon as practicable, a schedule of just and reasonable rates of charges for transportation of passengers and freight and cars on each of said railroads, and said schedule shall, in suits brought against any such railroad corporation wherein is involved the charges of any such railroad corporation for the transportation of any passenger or freight or cars, or unjust discrimination in relation thereto, be deemed and taken in all the courts of this state as sufficient evidence that the rates therein fixed are just and reasonable rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight and cars upon the railroads, and said commissioners shall from time to time, and as often as circumstances may require, change and revise said schedule. When any schedule shall have been made or revised it shall be the duty of all such railroad companies to post at all their respective stations a copy of said schedule for the protection of the people: Provided, that the schedule thus prepared shall not be taken as evidence as herein provided until schedules have been prepared and published for all the railroad companies now organized under the laws of this state, or that may be organized at the time of said publication. All such schedules purporting to be printed and published as aforesaid shall be received and held in all such suits as prima facie the schedule of said commissioners without further proof than the production of the schedule desired to be used as evidence, with a certificate of the railroad commission that the same is a true copy of the schedule prepared by them for the railroad company or corporation therein named, and that the same has been duly published as required by law: Provided, that thirty days' notice of any change or revision of the schedule of rates shall first be given to the railroad company to be affected thereby before the same shall go into effect. Any railroad company which shall fail to post at any of its stations a copy of the schedule of rates as provided in this section, shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each and every day in which it shall fail to post such schedule, to be recovered by any citizen who will sue therefor, one-half of such penalty to go to the state, the other half to the citizen suing for the same." This, being a penal statute, must be strictly construed. Holman v. Frost & Co., 26 S. C. 294, 2 S. E. 16. Under this statute it is the duty of the railroad commissioners "to make for each of the railroad corporations doing business in this state a schedule of just and reasonable rates and charges for transportation of passengers and freight and cars on each of said railroads." The complaint alleges that the railroad commissioners "fixed a schedule of freight and passenger rates for the defendant corporation." Probably to "fix" a schedule is, for the purpose of a demurrer, substantially the same as to "make" a schedule, and therefore we lay no stress on the failure in that particular to use the language of the statute. But the statute required that a just and reasonable schedule shall be made, and the complaint fails to allege that such a schedule was made, nor does it state facts from which the court might or must infer that the schedule made was just and reasonable. Furthermore, the schedule required by the statute to be made was not only of charges for transportation of passengers and freight, but also of transportation of cars, and it is not alleged that any such schedule was made by the railroad commissioners. In addition to this, we may add that the making of such a schedule for a railroad company necessarily must include a delivery of such schedule or a copy thereof to the railroad company to be affected thereby, or such promulgation of the schedule as will give the railroad company reasonable notice of the same. These things being done by the railroad commissioners, the statute provides that the railroad company shall post at all its stations a copy of such schedule for the protection of the people, and further provides a penalty for failure to do so. In an action to recover a penalty under a statute, it is essential to allege all the facts necessary to show a case falling within the terms of the statute. 16 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 275, and cases cited.

2. The circuit court having omitted to pass upon the sixth ground of demurrer, it is unnecessary and perhaps improper that we express an opinion upon the same. The statute does not expressly provide what notice the railroad commissioners shall give the railroad company in cases of the original making of the schedule, although it does require 30 days' notice in case of a change or revision of the schedule, and in section 2002, 30 days' notice is required before applying a joint rate as therein provided for. If the provision as to the notice of a change or revision of the schedule does not expressly apply to the making of a schedule, it is essential that some reasonable notice thereof be given, and in the light of the statute it would seem that the court should hold that 30 days is such reasonable notice.

3. We do not think the seventh ground of demurrer is well taken. The penalty attaches to any railroad company whenever it fails, after due notice, to post the schedule made for it by the railroad commissioners in accordance with the statute. The provision that the schedule thus prepared shall not be taken as evidence as herein provided until schedules have been prepared and published as aforesaid for all the railroad companies now organized under the laws of the state or that may be organized at the time of publication, etc., relates to such schedules as evidence in suits brought against any such railroad corporation wherein is involved the charges of any such railroad corporation for the transportation of any passenger, or freight, or cars, or unjust discrimination in relation thereto.

4. The fifth ground of demurrer, which was sustained by the circuit court, alleges that section 2093, supra, is in violation of section 31, art. 4, of the state Constitution, which prescribes that "All writs and processes shall run, and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name of the state of South Carolina, * * * " in that it authorizes an action to be brought for the prescribed penalties in the name of a citizen of the state. We think the circuit court erred in sustaining this ground of demurrer. The word "prosecutions" in the provision cited has reference to strictly criminal prosecutions or indictments for crimes. Such was the construction put upon similar language in the Constitution of 1795. Ward v. Tyler, 1 Nott & McC. 22, and that is the ordinary meaning of the term in such connection. A penal action is a civil action, and must be brought as directed in the statute creating the same, or in accordance with the manner prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure. 16 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 232, 242.

5. The second ground of demurrer, which was sustained by the circuit court, alleges that section 2093 violates the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in depriving defendant corporation of the equal protection of the law by authorizing an action to be brought for the penalty in the name of a citizen of the state, in violation of section 31, art. 5, of the state Constitution. We have held that the statute does not violate section 31, art. 5, of the state Constitution, and it is unnecessary that we inquire whether the statute denies the equal protection of the laws in any other particular than that alleged in the ground of demurrer.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed, in so far as it sustains the demurrer, with leave to amend on the fifth ground specified therein.

POPE, C. J., did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(73 S. C. 572)

FISHBURNE v. MINOTT et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. VENUE—CHANGE—EFFECT — PROCEEDINGS IN ORIGINAL COURT.

Where a notice was given of an application for a change of venue, and the change was granted, a stay of proceedings in the original court followed as a necessary result, without a notice of motion therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 48, Cent. Dig. Venue, § 136.]

2. SAME—MOTION.

A motion for a change of venue because the action is brought in the wrong county may be made in chambers on four days' notice, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 147, 403.

3. OFFICERS—ACTION AGAINST—VENUE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 145, providing that an action against a public officer for an act done in performance of his duties must be tried in the county where the cause of action or some part thereof arose, the fact that some of the officer's codefendants lived in a county other than the one in which the cause of action arose does not give the right to sue in such other county.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Dorchester County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Julian Fishburne against Harriott K. Minott and others. From an order for a change of venue and stay of proceedings, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Julian Fishburne, in pro. per. Buist & Buist, for respondent.

JONES, J. The appeal in this case is from an order of Judge Dantzler, dated September 28, 1904, granted at chambers, on the motion and affidavit of defendant G. Herbert Sass, changing the place of trial from Dorchester county, where the action was commenced, to Charleston county, providing for the transfer of all the papers filed in Dorchester county, and staying all other proceedings of the court for Dorchester county.

1. The appellant in his first exception contends that the order was erroneous, because no notice of a motion to stay proceedings was given. This is without merit, as notice was given to change the place of trial, and, that being granted, a stay of proceedings in Dorchester county followed as a necessary result.

2. In his second exception appellant contends that the affidavit upon which the order was based does not show that a fair and impartial trial cannot be held in Dorchester county. That is true, but the notice was not based upon that ground, and no suggestion of that ground was made anywhere.

The third exception alleges that the notice of the motion was insufficient, and that it should have been given 10 days to be heard before a judge sitting in regular term, not at chambers. This exception is, no doubt, based upon section 2735 of the Civil Code of 1902, which requires 10 days' notice of a motion to change the venue on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the action was commenced, and that the application must be made to the judge sitting in regular term. But the motion in this case, as already said, was not made on that ground, and is not governed by section 2785, Civil Code, but by section 147, Code Civ. Proc. 1902, and by section 403 of said Code. Section 147 provides that the court may change the place of trial in the following cases: "(1) When the county designated for that purpose in the complaint is not the proper county. (2) When there is reason to believe that an impartial trial cannot be had therein. (3) When the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change." Section 403 provides that, when a notice of a motion is necessary, it must be served four days before the time appointed for the hearing. As the motion was not made on the ground stated in subdivision 2 above, no occasion arises in this case to notice the seeming conflict between section 147 of the Code of Procedure and section 2735 of the Civil Code. The notice of motion herein, having been served on September 17, 1904, for the hearing thereof on September 23, 1904, was sufficient. Willoughby v. Railroad Co., 46 S. C. 320, 24 S. E. 308; McFall v. Barnwell, 54 S. C. 370, 32 S. E. 417. That such an order may be granted by a judge at chambers is shown in the case of Utsey v. Railroad Co., 38 S. C. 399, 17 S. E. 141.

3. The motion was made upon the complaint in this case, as well as the affidavit of G. Herbert Sass. The complaint in the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth paragraphs thereof attempts to state a cause of action for damages against G. Herbert Sass, master of Charleston county, and H. A. M. Smith, Julian Mitchel, James Simons, and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, as sureties on his official bond, for his conduct as such in the cases of Harriott K. Minott v. Julian Fishburne and Mary E. Lowndes v. Julian Fishburne, and that the cause of action arose in Charleston county. The affidavit shows that the individual sureties on the master's bond all live in Charleston county, and that the defendant corporation has its designated place at Charleston, S. C., and that its agent resides there. The "case" does not show expressly that Judge Dantzler based his order on the ground that the county designated for trial in the complaint is not the proper county, but that no doubt influenced his action. Section 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1902 provides that an action against a public officer, for an act done by him in virtue of his office, must be tried in the county where the cause of action or some part thereof arose, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial. This provision of the Code is imperative as has been several times decided by this court, and fully justified the action of Judge Dantzler. The fact that defendants Harriott K. Minott and Mary E. Lowndes reside in Dorchester county does not affect this question, as section 146 of the Code is expressly subject to the imperative provision of section 145. In so far as the action is against defendant Sass and the sureties on his official bond, this defendant resides, and the cause of action arose, in Charleston county. The judge may have also been influenced by the consideration that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change, but it is unnecessary to seek to sustain his order on that ground.

4. The fourth exception makes the point that no change of place of trial can be ordered before issue joined. The motion was made in this case before answer. In the case of Willoughby v. Railroad Co., 46 S. C. 317, 322, 24 S. E. 308, this language was used: "The statute fixes no time at which the motion to change the place of trial shall be made. It only provides for such a change when certain facts are made to appear to the satisfaction of the circuit judge." This we regard as a correct statement. Originally section 147, supra, was section 149, and contained these words: "If the county designated for that purpose in the complaint be not the proper county, the action may notwithstanding be tried therein, unless the defendant before the time for answering expire, demand, in writing, that the trial be had in the proper county, and the place of trial be thereupon changed by consent of parties, or by order of the court, as is provided in this section." Under this provision it was necessary to make the motion before answering. But by the act of 1879 (17 St. at Large, p. 14) the above-quoted words were stricken out, thereby enabling a party to make such a motion after answering. Still the right to make such motion before answering is not denied or affected by any statute. There might be some reason for holding that when such motion is made upon the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had, or that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by a change of venue, a court would be justified in declining to hear such motion until, by the joining of issue, it should appear that there would be a trial, and some cases might be cited from other jurisdictions to that effect, but there is no reason whatever, in the absence of a statute denying the right, to hold that such a motion is premature before answer, when the ground of the motion is that the action is not brought in the proper county. The general rule that should govern in all cases is that the motion should be made without unnecessary delay, and before doing anything that should amount to a waiver of the right. 4 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 421. See, also, McNair v. Tucker, 24 S. C. 107.

The remaining exceptions, in so far as they raise any material question, are controlled by what has been already determined.

The exceptions are overruled and the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(72 S. C. 587)

FISHBURNE v. MINOTT.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—DISMISSAL OF ACTION.

The Supreme Court on appeal will not entertain a motion presented there for the first time to dismiss and strike from the files of the court a case because frivolous and vexatious.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 1223-1226.]

2. PLEADING—EXTENDING TIME TO ANSWER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 405, providing that the time within which any proceeding in an action must be had after its commencement may be enlarged, on an affidavit therefor, to be served with a copy of the order, does not require notice of an application to extend time to answer or demur supported by affidavit to be served on the adverse party.

3. SAME—AFFIDAVIT.

Circuit court rule 19, providing that no order extending the time to answer or demur shall be granted unless the party applying therefor shall present a certificate of his attorney that from the statement to him by defendant he believes defendant has a good defense, does not apply where two of the defendants are out of the United States, and the other two are dependent on them for information necessary for their defense.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Julian Fishburne against Harriott K. Minott, Mary E. Lowndes, H. A. M. Smith, G. H. Sass, master, and his sureties. From order extending time of defendants to answer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Julian Fishburne, in pro. per. Mitchel & Smith, for respondent.

JONES, J. These are two separate appeals from separate orders of Judge Dantzler granted in the above-stated case, both dated September 22, 1904, one granting defendants Julian Mitchel and Henry A. M. Smith additional time in which to answer or demur or take other proceedings, the other granting the same right to the defendants Harriott K. Minott and Mary E. Lowndes. The summons and complaint were personally served on Harriott K. Minott and Mary E. Lowndes on the 9th day of September, 1904, and copies of the summons and complaint were sent by mail addressed to Julian Mitchel and Henry A. M. Smith on the 10th day of September, 1904. On September 22, 1904, Julian Mitchel, Jr., on behalf of these defendants, on an application at chambers, without notice to the plaintiff, procured the orders in question enlarging the time of answering, etc., until November 10, 1904, on his showing by affidavit that copies of the summons and complaint addressed to Henry A. M. Smith and Julian Mitchel were received at the office of Mitchel & Smith (of which firm he was a member) on the 12th day of September, 1904, and that the defendants Henry A. M. Smith and Julian Mitchel were at that time without the United States of America, in the kingdom of Great Britain, and were not expected to return within the United States until October 25, 1904. It further appeared by affidavit that the defendants Harriott K. Minott and Mary E. Lowndes were aunts of Henry A. M. Smith, and that he had entire charge and control of all their business interests, and had been their legal adviser and attorney for the past 15 years, and that said defendants were ignorant of all the matter alleged in the complaint, and that it was impossible for them to prepare their defense without consultation with their said agent and attorney.

1. Before proceeding to consider appellant's exceptions, we will notice briefly a preliminary motion submitted by respondents, that this court dismiss and strike the above-entitled cause from the files of the Supreme and circuit courts, on the ground that the same is frivolous and vexatious. It is contended that this court has the inherent power to grant such motion, and should exercise the power in this case. We are of the opinion that such a motion should not be first addressed to this court. Such a motion, being based upon the allegations of the complaint, is in the nature of a demurrer to the complaint. If the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, it is not frivolous, and, if it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the defendant has an adequate Code remedy by demurrer or motion to dismiss in the nature of a demurrer. Section 288 of the Code provides a method of procedure in case a demurrer, answer, or reply be frivolous, but the Code makes no express provision for summarily disposing of a complaint that is frivolous. Section 161 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902 provides that "there shall be no other forms of pleading in civil actions in courts of record in this state, and no other rules by which the sufficiency of the pleadings is to be determined, than those prescribed by this Code of Procedure." It may be that the circuit court, independent of the Code provisions, has the inherent power to summarily dismiss a complaint as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court (a power, if it exists, to be rarely exercised and only in a very clear case), but as to that we are not called upon to express an opinion. It is sufficient to say that this court as an appellate tribunal will not entertain such a motion presented here for the first time. This court has held that a demurrer to a complaint for insufficiency cannot be interposed for the first time in the Supreme Court. Green v. Green, 50 S. C. 528, 27 S. E. 952, 62 Am. St. Rep. 846. The reason is quite as strong for declining to entertain this motion, which is in the nature of a demurrer for insufficiency. It is therefore adjudged that the motion be denied.

2. With respect to the orders in question, the appellant contends, first, that they are erroneous because no notice of application therefor was given. Section 195 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the court may, "in its discretion and upon such terms as may be just, allow an answer or reply to be made, or other act to be done, after the time limited by this Code of Procedure, or by an order enlarge such time," etc. Section 405 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The time within which any proceeding in an action must be had after its commencement, except the time within which an appeal must be taken, may be enlarged, upon an affidavit showing grounds therefor, by a judge of the circuit court. The affidavit, or a copy thereof, must be served with a copy of the order, or the order may be disregarded." These sections give to the circuit court discretionary power, upon an affidavit showing grounds therefor, to enlarge the time for serving an answer or demurrer upon an ex parte application without notice. The statute does not require notice of the application as a condition for the exercise of such power; the only condition imposed being that there should be an affidavit showing grounds therefor. The provision that the order may be disregarded, unless a copy of such affidavit be served with a copy of the order, implies that the adverse party need not have notice before the granting of the order. Rule 57 of the circuit court does provide that "all questions for argument and all motions shall be brought before the court on a notice, or by an order to show cause," etc. If this rule of court be construed to apply to a motion of this kind, the effect would be to impose a condition on the exercise of the power to enlarge the time for answering, etc., which the statute granting the power does not impose. In the case of Grollman v. Lipsitz, 43 S. C. 330, 21 S. E. 272, this court held that rule 66 of the circuit court, requiring undertakings in attachment to be witnessed, was inoperative, as a rule of court cannot impose conditions not required by the statute. Section 403 of the Code implies that there are motions in which previous notice is not necessary by providing for four days' notice of a motion when notice is necessary. See Latimer v. Sullivan, 37 S. C. 120, 15 S. E. 798. The orders do not operate to the prejudice of the appellant, and do not fall within that class of motions which in their nature are such as, if granted, would affect the right of the adverse party and ought, therefore, to be noticed.

3. The only other question which requires any notice is that the orders conflict with rule 19 of the circuit court, which provides that "no order extending the time to answer or demur to a complaint shall be granted unless the party applying for such order shall present to the judge to whom the application shall be made a certificate of the attorney or counsel retained to defend the action, that from the statement made to him by the defendant, he verily believes that the defendant has a good and substantial defense upon the merits," etc. Under the circumstances stated, it was impossible to comply with this rule; two of the defendants being out of the United States and the other two being dependent upon one of the absent defendants for information necessary for their defense in this case. Speaking generally with reference to all the exceptions made, they do not show that the judge committed any error of law, or in any wise abused his discretion in granting the orders in question. It is therefore the judgment of this court that the exceptions be overruled, and the said orders enlarging the time for answering, etc., be affirmed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(124 Ga. 606)

HOWELL v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Jan. 13, 1906.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE — INDICTMENT.

An indictment for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, contrary to the local option liquor law, need not allege that the sale was for a valuable consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Intoxicating Liquors, § 236.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—APPEAL.

As has frequently been ruled, the failure to charge some other legal proposition applicable to the case is not available for an assignment of error on a charge in itself correct.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

It was not error for the judge to give in charge to the jury sections 980 and 987 of the Penal Code of 1895, relating to the amount of mental conviction required to warrant a verdict of guilty.

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS — ILLEGAL SALE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Nor was it error for the court to instruct the jury that the accused was charged with the violation of the local option liquor law, and to read to them section 1548 of the Political Code of 1895, relating to that law, and to charge them that peach brandy is an alcoholic liquor, which, if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Intoxicating Liquors, § 336.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS.

A correct instruction as to the rules for weighing testimony and reconciling conflicts therein was not rendered erroneous by a failure to charge, in the same connection, the law as to the statement of the accused.

6. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The assignment of error upon the instructions as to the evidence of good character was not meritorious.

7. SAME.

The long excerpt from the charge, set out in the sixth ground of the amended motion for a new trial, was not "vague, uncertain, and confusing," nor did the court express therein an opinion as to what had been proved.

8. CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — PRISONER'S STATEMENT.

As to the prisoner's statement, the court read to the jury all of section 1010 of the Penal Code of 1895, except the last sentence. Such instruction was correct, and was not rendered erroneous by the failure of the court to tell the jury, in the same connection, that, if they believed the statement they should acquit the accused, or by the failure to instruct them that they were the exclusive judges of the statement and authorized to give the accused the benefit of any part of it.

9. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO VERDICT.

Where the charge of the court was full, fair, and substantially correct on all the issues in the case, the omission to instruct the jury as to the form of their verdict in the event they should find the accused not guilty was not cause for a new trial, when there was also an omission to instruct them as to the form of their verdict in the event they should find him guilty.

10. SAME—NEW TRIAL.

"An improper sentence is not a proper subject-matter of a motion for a new trial." Truitt v. State (decided January 12, 1906) 52 S. E. 890.

11. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE — EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply warranted the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sparta; F. L. Little, Judge.

Bill Howell was convicted of violation of a liquor law, and brings error. Affirmed.

Hines & Vinson, for plaintiff in error. R. W. Moore, for the State.

FISH, C. J. An indictment against Bill Howell charged that on a designated day, in a given county, he "did unlawfully sell" spirituous, malt, alcoholic, and intoxicating liquors, other than domestic wines, to named persons, contrary to the laws of the state, etc. The indictment was demurred to on the ground that it failed to charge that anything of value was paid for the liquor. The demurrer was overruled, and the accused accepted pendente lite. On the trial there was a verdict of guilty. The accused moved for a new trial, which was refused, and the case is here upon exceptions to the overruling of the demurrer and the motion for a new trial.

1. Section 451 of the Penal Code of 1895 declares: "Any person violating any provision of the local option law as embraced in sections 1541 to 1550, inclusive, of the Civil Code, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Section 1548 of the Political Code of 1895 provides: "If a majority of the votes cast at any election, held as by this chapter provided, shall be against the sale, it shall not be lawful for any person within the limits of such county to sell or barter for valuable consideration, either directly or indirectly, or give away to induce trade at any place of business, or furnish at any other public places, any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating bitters, or other drinks which if drunk to excess will produce intoxication." While the statute makes it penal "to sell or barter for valuable consideration" the liquors therein described, we are clearly of opinion that the words "for valuable consideration" are merely surplusage. The manifest purpose of the statute is to make unlawful the sale or barter, either directly or indirectly, or the giving away to induce trade at any place of business, or the furnishing at any other public place, in a prohibition county, of the liquors mentioned. "To sell property is, in the strict signification of the word 'sell,' to transfer it from one to another in consideration of a price paid or agreed to be paid in current money. And the word 'sold' imports a consideration of price." 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. 284. Bouvier's Law Dict. defines a "sale" to be "an agreement by which one of two contracting parties called the seller, gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser, who, on his part, agrees to pay such price"—citing 2 Kent, 363; Pothier, Vente, note 1. "A sale, in the ordinary sense of the word, is a transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent." Five Per Cent. Cases, 110 U. S. 471-478, 4 Sup. Ct. 210, 28 L. Ed. 108; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sanders (C. C.) 47 Fed. 604-606. "Sale" is a transmutation of property or a right from one man to another in consideration of a sum of money, as opposed to barter, exchange, and gifts. Rapal & L. Dict. "A sale in its broadest sense comprehends any contract for the transfer of property from one person to another for a valuable consideration. Century Dictionary; Cain v. Ligon, 71 Ga. 694, 51 Am. Rep. 281. It is often used in a more limited sense as embracing only those contracts which are founded upon a money consideration. In an act prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors the word 'sale' is to be construed in its broad sense, and therefore includes what is commonly known as barter and exchange." James v. State, 124 Ga. 72, 52 S. E. 295. As there must be a valuable consideration to constitute a sale, the words "to sell," in section 1548 of the Political Code of 1895, considered by themselves, necessarily mean to transfer the liquor for a valuable consideration. It follows that the demurrer was properly overruled.

2. On the trial the court instructed the jury as follows: "I charge you * * * that you are authorized to consider evidence as to the good character of the defendant. No matter how conclusive the other testimony may appear to be, the character of the accused may be such as to create a doubt in the minds of the jury and to lead them to believe, in view of the improbability that a person of such character would be guilty of the offense charged, that the other evidence is false, or the witnesses are mistaken, and you are authorized, if you believe that the defendant's character has been proven to be such and so good as to lead your minds to the belief that all of the testimony for the state is false, or such as to make you have a reasonable doubt of guilt, you should acquit him, but otherwise, if you do not find such proof of character as to justify this course." This charge was excepted to on the ground that "it took away from the consideration of the jury the good character of the defendant, unless the jury should determine that the evidence is false or the witnesses are mistaken; in other words, * * * that before they could consider the good character of the defendant they must at first come to the conclusion that the evidence for the state is false or the witnesses are mistaken, but, if they come to the conclusion that the evidence was false, they would not be authorized to consider the good character of the defendant." The exception was not well taken. Seymour v. State, 102 Ga. 803, 30 S. E. 263; Rice, Evidence, Crim. § 371.

3-11. The other assignments of error are sufficiently dealt with in the headnotes.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 243)

HILL v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. CARRIERS—INJURY TO LICENSEE—MOVING TRAIN—NEGLIGENCE.

Where it was the custom of a railway company, at a given station on its line of road, to allow persons to get into its cars for the purpose of assisting passengers boarding the same, and also customary for it to give certain signals before the starting of the train, in order that such persons might safely alight, the company was not liable for the death of one who boarded its train for such purpose, and who, in attempting voluntarily to alight from the train after it had started without the usual signals, was by a sudden jerk of the train thrown under it and killed, when neither the conductor nor any other employé of the company had notice of the purpose of the deceased in boarding the train, or of his intention or attempt to alight therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 1242.]

2. PLEADING—DEMURRER—CAUSE OF ACTION.

It is the duty of the trial judge to pass on the sufficiency of the facts alleged in a petition to show a cause of action in the plaintiff's favor, when this question is raised by demurrer, although the case be one wherein the plaintiff seeks to recover damages alleged to have been sustained in consequence of the negligence of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, §§ 553-556.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Columbia County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Ida Hill, administrator, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

The petition of Mrs. A. E. Amaker made the following allegations: The Georgia Railroad & Banking Company is a domestic corporation, owning a line of railway in Columbia county, Ga., which is operated by its lessees, the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, under the name of the Georgia Railroad Company. Petitioner was the mother of W. A. Amaker, an unmarried son, upon whom she was entirely dependent for support, and who actually contributed to her support. On a specified day he went to Harlem, a station on defendants' road, in Columbia county for the purpose of assisting his sister-in-law and three small children in boarding defendant's train there as passengers. The train was behind schedule time, and as it approached the station he, his sister-in-law, and the three children ranged themselves beside the track, where passengers usually board the train, and as soon as the train stopped they proceeded with all due haste to board it. When he, "with all due haste and diligence, had gotten the children and bundles inside the door of the car, and a seat or two therefrom, and before either the mother or children were seated, and before he could deposit the bundles, said train of cars slowly started in motion, whereupon he threw the bundles down and rushed out of the car, by the door by which he had entered, onto the platform and down the steps, attempting with due diligence to alight therefrom; [and] while in the act of alighting with due caution a sudden lurch or jerk of the train threw him to the ground, and his right leg was caught under the train of cars, crushed, and mangled, producing injuries" from which he died in a few hours. When the train reached Harlem there were a number of passengers to get on and off. Neither the conductor nor any of the train employes came to assist the sister-in-law of petitioner's son and her children to get aboard, "although the conductor, flagman, and other employes saw them, or could have seen them, in the act of boarding the cars and after they entered the cars. * * * It was the custom of said conductor and the other employes of said train of cars, and the custom of the defendant in all its passenger trains, in receiving passengers at said station, before the train started, to halloo, 'All aboard!' to ring the bell or blow the whistle of the engine, so as to put persons assisting passengers to board the cars, and any other persons not passengers, and passengers intending to alight from the cars, on notice to leave the cars; but no notice of this kind or any other kind was given before the train of cars was put in motion. It is the custom of said defendant to permit persons not passengers to enter its cars at stations to assist passengers to board its cars and to alight therefrom." The train did not stop at the station a reasonable time to allow passengers to board the cars, nor to allow plaintiff's son to assist his sister-in-law and her children to get aboard; and if reasonable time had been given him he would have alighted in safety. "At the time of his injury he was in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, and could not have avoided his injuries, which resulted in his death, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence." His age and earning capacity were set out, as well as the amount of damages claimed. The plaintiff died pending the suit, and Ida Hill, her administratrix, was made party plaintiff. A general demurrer to the petition was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted.

Henry C. Roney, for plaintiff in error.
Jos. B. & Bryan Cumming, for defendant in error.

FISH, O. J. By reference to the petition it will be seen that the allegations of negligence, briefly stated, were: (1) That it was the custom of the defendants to allow persons to enter the cars, in order to assist passengers boarding the train, and, before starting the train, to give certain signals for such persons to get off, but on this occasion none of the usual signals were given, and before Amaker, who, in assisting his sister-in-law and her children with their bundles, had entered the car, could deposit the bundles, and while he was standing in the aisle of the car, the train started off slowly, it not having stopped a reasonable length of time for him to render such assistance and leave the car in safety. (2) That upon the starting of the train he rushed out of the door, onto the platform, and down the steps of the car, to alight therefrom, and while in the act of alighting with due caution a sudden lurch or jerk of the train threw him to the ground, causing the injuries from which he died. Assuming, as we must in passing on the sufficiency of the petition to withstand the demurrer thereto, all the allegations of negligence on the part of the defendants to be true, we are clearly of opinion that no cause of action was set forth. In Simmons v. Seaboard Air Line Railway, 120 Ga. 225, 47 S. E. 570, it was held: "(1) If, with a clear chance to avoid the consequences of defendants' negligence or breach of duty, the plaintiff voluntarily assumes the risk occasioned thereby, such conduct on his part is not merely contributory negligence, lessening the amount of damages, but a failure to avoid danger, defeating the right to recover. (2) The fact that in stepping from a moving train the plaintiff may not have been guilty of negligence defeating his right to recover does not entitle him to a verdict, unless it also appears that the carrier was at the time guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury." As was said by Mr. Justice Lamar in rendering the opinion in that case, it is ordinarily a question for the jury to determine whether it is negligence, barring a recovery, for a passenger to step from a moving train; and a number of cases were cited wherein this court decided such conduct did not prevent a recovery, when the passenger was injured as the result of a sudden and negligent jerk of the train while he was in the act of alighting. "But in all of these cases it will be seen that the mere fact that the passenger may not have been guilty of negligence was not the basis of his right to recover. Even if he was free from fault in stepping from the moving train, that did not make the company liable. It has also to appear that the carrier was guilty of negligence, and that negligence must have been shown to be the cause—the proximate cause—of the injury. Hardwick v. Georgia R. Co., 85 Ga. 509, 11 S. E. 832." The negligence of the defendants, in the case now under consideration, was the starting of the train too soon and without giving the usual signals. After such negligence came into existence and after Amaker was fully aware of it, he, rather than to go back in the car and rely on his right of action, if any he had, for proximate damages resulting to him from such negligence (Simmons v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., supra), voluntarily took the risk of alighting from the moving train. The petition alleged that Amaker assisted Mrs. Attaway, his sister-in-law, and her children, with their bundles, in boarding the train at the usual place for passengers to get on; "that there were a number of passengers to get off, and a number to board the cars; that neither the conductor of said train nor any of the employees thereof appeared to assist Mrs. Attaway, and her children to board the same, although the conductor, flagman, and other employees saw them, or could have seen them, in the act of boarding the cars and after they entered the cars." Even if from these allegations it could be legitimately inferred that the conductor or any employee of the defendants knew that Amaker had boarded the train, there was certainly nothing in the petition to show that the conductor, or any other employee of the defendants, knew that he got aboard merely to assist his relative and her children, and that he did not intend to accompany them on their journey.

No employee of the defendants knew, so far as the petition shows, of Amaker's intention, or of his attempt to alight, and therefore no opportunity was given defendants' employees, by skillful handling of the locomotive and train, to guard against a sudden jerk as he was in the act of alighting. The jerk was not alleged to be negligent, and he was bound to anticipate the usual jerks incident to the running of the train.

Granting that the defendants owed Amaker the duty of stopping the train a reasonable length of time for him to assist his relatives in boarding it and securing seats or depositing their bundles, and for him to then alight, and that they owed him the further duty of giving the usual signals to alight, and that they failed to perform such duties, it is clear that their negligence in these respects was not the proximate cause of his injuries. He knew of such prior negligence of the defendants, and had full opportunity to escape its consequences. With such clear chance, he chose not to avoid, but to risk, the danger of alighting from the moving train, and, as was said in Simmons v. Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., supra: "This was not contributory negligence lessening the damages, but the failure to avoid a known danger which defeats [a] right to recover" for his death. That the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the allegations of the petition, see Coleman v. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., 84 Ga. 1, 10 S. E. 498, and McLarin v. Atlanta & West Point R. Co., 85 Ga. 504, 11 S. E. 840. In this connection, see, also, Meeks v. Atlantic & Birmingham R. Co., 122 Ga. 268, 50 S. E. 99. In Suber v. Georgia, Carolina & Northern Ry. Co., 96 Ga. 42, 23 S. E. 387, relied on by counsel for plaintiff in error, it appeared that the conductor of the train knew of Suber's intention to assist his relatives in boarding the train and that he did not intend to become a passenger.

2. Counsel for plaintiff in error contended that, as the case involved the question of negligence, the judge should have submitted it to the jury, and it was error for him to decide the question. It is the duty of the trial judge to pass upon the sufficiency of the facts alleged in a petition to show a cause of action in the plaintiff's favor, when this question is raised by demurrer, although the case be one wherein the plaintiff seeks to recover damages alleged to have been sustained in consequence of the defendants' negligence. Jarrett v. Atlanta & West Point R. Co., 83 Ga. 347, 9 S. E. 681.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(124 Ga. 515)

ANDREW v. CARITHERS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

1. NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The alleged newly discovered evidence, so far as it was material to the issues involved, was purely cumulative in character, and furnished no ground for the grant of a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. New Trial, §§ 218-220.]

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

The exclusion of evidence as to the market value of the land in controversy, even if erroneous, was harmless, for it went only to the question of the measure of the plaintiff's damage, and the jury by its verdict determined that she had not been damaged at all.

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge of the court of which complaint was made merely presented to the jury the two conflicting theories contended for by the parties, giving correctly the law applicable to each theory, and leaving the jury to say which theory was established by the evidence. It was entirely free from error.

4. APPEAL—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

The evidence was conflicting. That for the defendant abundantly supported his contentions. The jury found in his favor; the judge, by overruling the motion for a new trial, approved the verdict; and this court will not interfere with the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 3948-3950.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Elbert County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action between F. P. Andrew and J. J. Carithers. From the judgment, Andrew brings error. Affirmed.

Z. B. Rogers, for plaintiff in error. Jos. N. Worley, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 248)

BURKE & WILLIAMS v. MACKENZIE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD—CONTRACTS.

A guardian cannot bind the estate of his ward by any contract other than those specially allowed by law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 25, Cent. Dig. Guardian and Ward, § 219.]

2. SAME—IMPROVEMENT OF REAL ESTATE.

A contract for the improvement of the real estate of the ward by the erection of buildings thereon is not one which the law authorizes the guardian to enter into and charge the ward's estate therefor.

3. EQUITY — JURISDICTION — IGNORANCE OF LAW.

Mere ignorance of the law, where there is no fraud or misplaced confidence, is not a ground for equitable relief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, §§ 15, 16.]

4. SAME — UNAUTHORIZED IMPROVEMENTS ON WARD'S ESTATE.

The petition set forth no cause of action, and was properly dismissed on demurrer.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Burke County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Burke & Williams against J. H. Mackenzie, guardian of L. E. Mackenzie. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Burke & Williams, a partnership, brought an equitable petition in the superior court of Burke county against J. H. Mackenzie, as guardian of L. E. Mackenzie, alleging: The defendant was guardian of his minor son, who owned an unimproved lot in Waynesboro, Ga., and defendant employed petitioners to erect a dwelling house thereon; the petitioners to furnish the labor and material at a price of $1,440, which was subsequently increased by $56.60. Petitioners erected the house, and received from the defendant from time to time various sums amounting to $1,192.37, leaving a balance due them of $304.23. Petitioners filed a lien, in terms of the statute, for the balance due.

The defendant filed a petition in the superior court, praying for an order authorizing him to mortgage the premises whereon the house was erected, for the purpose of improving the same and to pay for improvements already made upon the same, which had made it capable of yielding an income. This petition was granted, and an order passed as prayed. In the meantime the defendant moved into the house built by petitioners, and occupied the same with his family, but, since the granting of the order above set out, has failed and refused to mortgage the premises and pay petitioners. Petitioners alleged their ignorance of the law which imposed a liability upon a ward's estate for contracts of a guardian only in specified instances, the insolvency of the defendant as an individual, the value of the improvements, and the inadequacy of any remedy at law, and prayed for a general judgment for the foreclosure of their lien against the property, and alternatively for a judgment against the income of the property, and that a receiver be appointed to collect the rents and apply the same to petitioners' demand, and for general relief. A general demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiffs excepted.

H. J. Fullbright and W. R. Callaway, for plaintiffs in error. Brinson & Davis, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. "As a matter of law, guardians of the property of wards are trustees, whose powers over the property of their cestuis que trust are defined by law. Among these powers are not included the execution of a contract binding the estate of his wards." Howard v. Cassels, 105 Ga. 416, 81 S. E. 562, 70 Am. St. Rep. 44. See, also, Fidelity Co. v. Rich, 122 Ga. 506, 50 S. E. 338. The general rule is that trustees are not authorized to create any lien upon the trust estate, except such as are authorized by law. Civ. Code 1895, § 3186. The guardian cannot, by any contract, except those specially allowed by law, bind his ward's property or create any lien thereon. Civ. Code 1895, § 2555. It is, therefore, incumbent upon one seeking to charge the ward's property by a contract of the guardian to show that the claim set up by him is one which the law specially authorized the guardian to contract and bind the ward's property therefor. The law authorizes a guardian to make contracts for labor and services for the benefit of the estate of the ward, and such contracts, when made in good faith, are a charge upon the estate whenever approved by the ordinary. Civ. Code 1895, § 2549. If the claim of the plaintiffs is such that the ward's estate is chargeable therefor, it must be under the provision of law just referred to; for there is no other that our attention has been called to which has any bearing upon the subject. The claim does not fall within the terms of this section. The contract of the guardian for the erection of the house was not a contract for labor and services for the benefit of the ward's estate, within the meaning of that law. The undertaking of the guardian, therefore, was simply an individual undertaking on his part, and the plaintiffs must look to him for payment, unless the allegations of the petition are such that the principles of equity would authorize relief to be granted either by charging the corpus of the estate or the income or some part thereof of the property improved. The corpus cannot be charged with this claim.

It is therefore to be determined whether any portion of the income should be subjected in equity to the payment of the debt due the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs knew that the property belonged to the ward. Their claim of equity arose from their ignorance of the law that the guardian could not charge the estate of the ward by a contract of the character entered into by them. Their ignorance of the law, when there is no fraud or misplaced confidence, is no more a ground of relief in equity than such ignorance would be at law. In Malone v. Bulce, 60 Ga. 152, there was ignorance as to a fact—that is, as to who was the true owner of the property which was improved under the contract made with the trustee; the plaintiffs in that case being under the impression that they were dealing with the defendant as an individual, and improving his property, when, as a matter of fact, he held the title as trustee. A guardian in certain instances, by having his accounts approved by the ordinary, may place himself in a position where he would obtain credit in a settlement with the ward for amounts paid out by him. But this does not authorize him to make contracts from which a right will accrue to the person contracted with to bring a suit subjecting the ward's estate to the payment of the debt. The case is one of peculiar hardship, but no more peculiar than any case where ignorance of the law is involved and loss results from such ignorance. The defendant was under no legal obligation to the plaintiff to obtain an order from the judge of the superior court to authorize an incumbrance to be placed upon the ward's property for the purpose of paying the debt, and equity, therefore, will not compel the guardian to proceed under an order thus obtained. If the guardian should see fit to act under this order, it may be that in a settlement with his ward he would be entitled to credit for the amount paid thereunder to the plaintiffs; but the plaintiffs cannot compel him to incumber the estate for the purpose of making the payment. The petition set forth no cause of action, and was properly dismissed on demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 251)

BAIRD v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 18, 1905.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE — CERTIORARI — ANSWER—EXCEPTIONS.

It is not error to overrule exceptions to the answer of a justice of the peace to a writ of certiorari, where the evidence alleged in such exceptions to have been omitted was immaterial, and where the answer contained substantially all of the evidence introduced on the trial that was favorable to the party excepting.

2. DEPOSITIONS—OBJECTIONS—PREAMBLE.

An objection to the introduction of interrogatories, to be used in the justice's court of the 120th district, G. M., Richmond county, on the ground that in the preamble or heading of the answers to the same the parties acting as commissioners referred to the case as one pending "in the justice court of Dooly county, 120th district, G. M.," was properly overruled, where it appeared that the case and court in which it was pending were properly stated in the caption to the interrogatories and also at the head of the answers.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by G. W. Smith against H. W. Baird. Judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Smith sued Baird in a justice's court for rent. Baird acknowledged indebtedness, with the exception of one month's rent, as to which he denied liability. The evidence was that he and his mother and sister occupied the house of plaintiff. Baird testified that he vacated the premises on February 29th, leaving the house in the possession of his mother and sister, to whom he had previously sublet a part of the house, and that he notified his landlord of his action in the matter by a letter written March 2d, which he sent in regular course of mail. Smith testified, by interrogatories, that he received the letter on March 3d, but that he looked to the defendant to pay the rent for March; that the defendant's mother offered to pay a part of the rent for March, but he would not accept it, telling her to forward it to her son, to whom he looked for the payment of the rent. Upon judgment being rendered against the defendant, he carried the case by writ of certiorari to the superior court. In his answer to the writ the justice set forth substantially the same evidence contained in the petition for certiorari, omitting only to state that the defendant testified that he had told his mother and sister that they would have to make arrangements with Smith in regard to their remaining in the house longer than February 29th, on which day he intended giving up the premises, and that he "admitted that he was due Mr. Smith rent for three months, one month in 1902, and January and February, 1904, at $9 per month, amounting to $27." Before the calling of the case the defendant objected to the answer of the magistrate, for the reason that it failed to fully set out his testimony, which objection the court overruled, on the ground that it should have been filed at the first term of the court, being in the nature of a traverse pro tanto. One of the grounds for certiorari urged in the court below was that on the trial of the case in the justice's court the magistrate admitted over the defendant's objection interrogatories of the plaintiff, the answers of which recited that they were to be used in the justice's court for the 120th district, G. M., of Dooly county, whereas the case was pending in the justice court of the 120th district, G. M., of Richmond county. After hearing the certiorari the same was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Julian Z. Zachry, for plaintiff in error.
D. G. Fogarty, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts). 1. Before this case was called for trial in the court below, the plaintiff in error filed objections to the answer of the justice of the peace, alleging that he had not fully set out in his answer the plaintiff's evidence, that the plaintiff in error had testified "that he left his mother and sister living in the house he rented from Smith, but told them they would have to make arrangements with Mr. Smith in regard to their remaining in the house any longer after February 29, 1904; that the house was rented by the month, and not by the year." Whether these objections are such exceptions to the justice's answer as are contemplated in Civ. Code 1905, § 4647, or whether they should be treated as a traverse pro tanto of the justice's answer, the overruling and disallowing them was not erroneous, because from no point of view can the evidence recited in them be considered as material to the cause of plaintiff in error; for had the testimony alleged in said objections to have been omitted been included in the evidence as set forth in the justice's answer, it could not have had the effect of altering or changing the judgment of the court, which was adverse to the defendant in the case. Under the testimony of Baird himself, he had rented Smith's house by the month, and, although he left the house on February 29th, he did not give his landlord, Smith, notice of his intention to quit until the 2d day of March. This notice was by a letter, which Smith did not receive until the 3d day of March; and it will be remembered that Baird had been occupying this house as a tenant by the month for three years, and his mother and sister, whom he had in the house with him, whether as renters or subtenants it is not necessary to discuss, continued to occupy the rented premises during the month of March.

2. The interrogatories should not have been suppressed for any reason argued in the objections of the plaintiff in error. It is true that the parties acting as commissioners had made a mistake in the caption or preamble to the answer, and had referred to the case as one pending "in the justice court of Dooly county," while as a matter of fact the case was pending in the justice's court for the 120th district, G. M., of Richmond county; but in the caption to the interrogatories, the case, as well as the court in which it was pending, was properly stated, and then at the head of the answers and immediately preceding the caption thereto the case was again correctly stated, and the answers and interrogatories were returned together to the proper court. There could exist no doubt as to the case for which the evidence was intended. "Even where the answers to interrogatories were headed with a case different from that stated in the questions and commission, but there appeared enough to show that the answers were really intended for this latter case, it was held that they might be read in the latter case." Mathis v. Colbert, 24 Ga. 384.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 437)

ADKINS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW.

The evidence being sufficient to warrant the verdict, and there being no complaint that any error of law was committed on the trial, the discretion of the court in refusing to grant a new trial will not be interfered with.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Charles Adkins was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. A. H. Harris & Son, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 437)

JOHNSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW.

No error of law having been complained of, and the presiding judge having overruled the motion for a new trial and thus approved the verdict, and the evidence being sufficient to sustain it, this court will not interfere.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Daniel Johnson was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. A. H. Harris & Son, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 437)

SPIVEY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 21, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW.

No error of law was complained of; the evidence, while entirely circumstantial, was sufficient to authorize the verdict of guilty; and, the trial judge being satisfied therewith, this court will not interfere with his refusal to grant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 3068.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Will Spivey was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. A. H. Harris & Son, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen., for the State.

BECK, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(104 Va. 733)

HOOVER et al. v. SAUNDERS.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Jan. 18, 1906.)

1. STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION — GIVING EFFECT TO ENTIRE STATUTE.

A statute must be construed so as to make all its parts harmonize, if practicable, and give a sensible effect to each.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF — TIME FOR SIGNING — EXPIRATION OF TERM.

Code 1904, § 3385, providing that any bill of exceptions may be signed by the judge "either during the term at which the opinion of the court is announced, to which exception is taken, or in vacation, within 30 days after the end of such term," gives the court power to retain the case, for the purpose of signing bill of exception, during the vacation immediately following the term at which the opinion excepted to is announced, and for 30 days after the adjournment of such term, if the vacation should last that long; but the beginning of the new term, although within the 30 days, puts an end to the court's jurisdiction for that purpose and it cannot afterwards be resumed.

Error to Corporation Court of Newport News.

Action by A. F. Saunders against W. B. Hoover and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants bring error. Dismissed.

O. D. Batchelor and W. R. Perkins, for plaintiffs in error Jeffries & Lawless, for defendant in error.

HARRISON. J. We are met at the threshold of this case with a question of jurisdiction.

The term of the corporation court of the city of Newport News, at which the final judgment complained of was rendered, adjourned on December 10, 1904. At that term certain exceptions were taken to the opinions of the court. The next succeeding term of the court began its session on December 12, 1904. The bills of exception, which were taken during the term at which the judgment was rendered, were not signed until January 7, 1905, which was during the vacation following the last-mentioned term, which began on the 12th day of the preceding December.

Formerly, after the judgment became final by the adjournment of the court, jurisdiction over the case was lost, and with it the power of the court to sign the bills of exception. This rule was changed by statute approved December 31, 1903, which, so far as necessary to be quoted, is as follows:

"Any bill of exceptions may be tendered to the judge, and signed by him, either during the term at which the opinion of the court is announced, to which exception is taken, or in vacation, within thirty days after the end of such term, or at such other time as the parties, by consent entered of record, may agree upon, and any bill of exceptions so tendered, and signed by the judge as aforesaid, either in term time or vacation, shall be a part of the record of the case." Va. Code 1904, § 3385.

The plaintiff in error insists that the power to sign the bills of exception is not limited to the period of the vacation immediately following the term at which the final judgment was rendered, but it is by the terms of the statute extended to a period of 30 days after the end of such term. This construction would eliminate from the statute entirely the words, "in vacation," and make it read, "any bill of exceptions may be tendered to the judge, and signed by him, either during the term or within 30 days after the end of such term," etc.

If the Legislature had intended that the exceptant should have 30 days after the adjournment of the term at which the final judgment was rendered in which to have his bills of exception signed, although the vacation following such term did not last for 30 days, its purpose could have been easily accomplished, as already seen, by omitting from the statute the words "in vacation." Upon well-settled principles we are not at liberty to deal with the statute in the manner indicated. It is a familiar canon of construction that every part of an act must be given effect if it be possible. A statute must be viewed in connection with the whole, so as to make all of its parts harmonize, if practicable, and give a sensible, intelligent effect to each. It is not to be presumed that the Legislature intended any part of a statute to be without meaning. On the contrary, the presumption is, as well on the ground of good faith as on the ground that the Legislature would not do a vain thing, that it intends its acts and every part of them to be valid and capable of being carried into effect. Sutherland on Stat. Constr. §§ 325-331; Dwarrris on Stat. Constr. pp. 188, 189, 271; Fox's Adm'rs v. Com., 16 Grat. 1; Life Ins. Co. v. Cogbill, 30 Grat. 72-81.

It is clear from the statute that, when the term has ended at which the final judgment was rendered without the bills of exception being signed, such bills cannot then be signed, except in vacation. This is imperative. The language of the statute is, "Either during the term at which the opinion of the court is announced, to which exception is taken, or in vacation, within 30 days after the end of such term." The words "such term" clearly refer to the term at which the opinion was announced. Under the statute there are two limitations upon the time in which the bills of exception can be signed: First, it must be in vacation; and, second, it must be not later than 30 days after the adjournment of the term at which the opinion excepted to was announced. With most of our courts the vacations last longer than 30 days, and the purpose of the Legislature evidently was, where that was the case, to limit the time to 30 days, but in every case to limit the time in which bills of exception could be signed to the vacation following the term at which the final judgment was rendered.

*Rehearing denied.

The plaintiff in error seems to concede that the bills of exception can only be signed in vacation, after the adjournment of the term at which the opinion excepted to was announced, but contends that, inasmuch as the signing in this case was within the 30-day limit, the requirement of the statute is met, notwithstanding the fact that the signing was done during the vacation following the second term, which began December 12, 1904.

If this position were sound, the judge could, under the statute, notwithstanding the intervention of another term, sign the bill of exceptions during the vacation following such second term, or following any succeeding term, until 30 days had elapsed. As said by the learned counsel for the defendant in error, the court, as in this case, would have jurisdiction to sign the bills of exception for the first 4 or 5 days after it adjourned, then lose that jurisdiction during the succeeding term, and then, by the adjournment of that term, regain its jurisdiction, have the case again in its breast, with the power to sign bills of exception restored, for the next 5 or 6 days, then lose jurisdiction again when another term began, and so on from term to term until 30 days had been accomplished. It can hardly be supposed that the Legislature intended such a result, or intended to suspend the benefits of the judgment thus indefinitely, while the judgment debtor was dallying with the question whether or not he would perfect his bills of exception.

We are of opinion that the statute gives the court power to retain the case for the purpose of signing bills of exception during the vacation immediately following the term at which the opinion excepted to was announced, and for 30 days after the adjournment of such term, if the vacation should last that long, but that the beginning of a new term although within the 30 days, puts an end to the court's jurisdiction for that purpose, and it cannot afterwards be resumed.

It follows from what has been said that the corporation court of the city of Newport News was without jurisdiction to sign the bills of exception in this case after entering upon the new term which began December 12, 1904. The bills of exception are, therefore, not properly a part of the record before us, and for this reason the writ of error must be dismissed as improvidently awarded.

(58 W. Va. 595)

KARNES v. JOHNSTON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Jan. 16, 1906.)

1. INSANE PERSONS—APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE—NOTICE.

The appointment by a county court of a committee for a person as insane, upon a finding by a justice that such person is insane under an inquisition under section 9, c. 58, Code 1899, without notice to such person, is void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Insane Persons, § 51.]

2. SAME—EVIDENCE OF INSANITY.

A justice's order finding that a person is insane, not committing him to a hospital for the insane, but leaving him freedom of person until the appointment of a committee, and then committing him to the custody of such committee, is not admissible as evidence of insanity in a proceeding to appoint a committee.

3. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER — EVIDENCE OF ENTRY.

The plaintiff, in an action of unlawful entry and detainer appealed to the circuit court from a justice's court, must show that the defendant's entry was within two years before the action. The record must show that fact to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Mercer County. Action by Robert O. Karnes against James H. Johnston. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Hale & Pendleton, for plaintiff in error.
C. R. McNutt, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, J. Robert O. Karnes, as committee for Huldah Alvis, lunatic, brought an action of unlawful entry and detainer against James H. Johnston before a justice of Mercer county to recover possession of land, which went by appeal to the circuit court, where the case was tried by the judge in lieu of a jury, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff. Upon the trial the plaintiff gave in evidence, against the objection of the defendant, an order made by the county court reciting that a justice of the peace appeared in open court and made known to the county court on oath that Huldah Alvis was, in the mode prescribed by law, found by him to be a lunatic, and was so adjudged by said justice, and that the custody of her person had been by said justice directed to be turned over to her committee, when one should be appointed, and appointing Karnes a committee for her. No notice of this proceeding in the county court was given to Huldah Alvis. This court has decided that the appointment of a committee for an insane person by the county court or its clerk without notice is void. South Penn Oil Co. v. McIntire, 44 W. Va. 296, 28 S. E. 922. But it is said that the doctrine is only applicable under section 34 of Code 1899, c. 58, where a person is suspected of being a lunatic, and where it is sought to appoint a committee for him, and to adjudge him for the first time on same motion to be insane, and that section 33 does not require a notice where he has been found insane by a justice upon an inquisition under Code 1899, c. 58, § 9. The McIntire Case and others in this court were not cases where the person had been found by a justice to be insane, as in this case.

The question then arises, is notice of the appointment of a committee for a person as insane required where he has been found by a justice to be insane upon such inquisition?

It is argued that as section 83 authorizes a county court to appoint when a justice has found one insane, without providing for notice, and as section 84 provides that a county court may appoint when one is suspected of being insane, and in words requires notice, therefore no notice is required in this case, because the justice has found the person to be insane. If we give section 83 effect to warrant such appointment without notice, it would be unconstitutional, because it would deprive a person, without due process of law, of the dearest rights, personal freedom, which is "liberty," and the possession, perhaps during life, of his property. We should not give section 83 a construction rendering it unconstitutional; but we should adopt such a process under it as would not render it obnoxious to the Constitution. In some instances a statute will be, or will not be, unconstitutional dependent on a procedure under it. An instance is King v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 404, 18 Sup. Ct. 925, 43 L. Ed. 214, where it was held that the fact that legal proceedings under the process to enforce forfeiture of land for nonentry for taxes avoided the imputation of unconstitutionality against the forfeiture clause of our Constitution. There is section 83 giving power, so far as its dry letter goes, to appoint a committee merely upon a justice finding lunacy; but there is also the constitutional demand that no one shall be deprived of liberty or property without due process. The judiciary, in the practical application of section 83, must call for a procedure demanded by the Constitution. As we said in Evans v. Johnson, 39 W. Va. 303, 19 S. E. 624, 23 L. R. A. 737, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912: "A statute will not be construed to authorize proceedings affecting a man's person or property without notice. It does not dispense with notice." Notice is presumed to have been intended by the Legislature, unless in words denied. If such finding by a justice were conclusive upon the insane person, then notice would seem to be useless. It is effectual to commit him to a hospital for insane. But the question is, how far is such finding of a justice operative in a collateral proceeding, a distinct proceeding, namely, a proceeding for the appointment of a committee? In such collateral proceeding it is not conclusive, but only an item of evidence, prima facie evidence of the fact of insanity. 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 606. It would be going far to say that the finding of a justice upon an inquisition of lunacy under section 9, c. 58, Code 1899, which has for its sole and only purpose the confinement of a lunatic in a hospital, has the further effect, the conclusive effect, of establishing insanity for all purposes; that it can be made a basis, without further question or contestation, of an order for the appointment of a committee to deprive the person of his property. It is only prima facie evidence of insanity—admissible, but not conclusive. The party has right to contest it.

The finding of the inferior tribunal cannot bar the right of the party to contest the charge of insanity and prevent the appointment of a committee. The two proceedings are distinct. Harrison v. Garnett, 86 Va. 763, 11 S. E. 123. Therefore he must have notice, because he has a right to meet and defeat the prima facie case made by the finding of the justice.

It is argued in a brief that under circumstances the judgments of inferior tribunals are to be regarded as effective as though of courts of general jurisdiction. The general rule is that jurisdictional facts must appear in the justice's record. The counsel admits this proposition, but lays down the proposition above stated of the finality of justices' judgments; but in laying it down he cites the Ency. Pl. & Prac. vol. 12, 672, stating that where it appears affirmatively that the justice has acquired jurisdiction, "both of the subject-matter of the action and the person of the defendant, then the same presumptions are indulged in favor of the regularity and validity of the proceedings of such justice's court as are extended to courts of general jurisdiction." That is a correct statement of the law, and is so laid down in Shank v. Town of Ravenswood, 43 W. Va. 242, 27 S. E. 223. But note that authority demands that there be jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter. There is no jurisdiction over Huldah Alvis, for want of notice. Therefore the order of the county court appointing Johnston a committee is void, and was not evidence.

There is another reason why the county court order is abortive. The record shows that, whilst the justice declared Huldah Alvis insane, he did not find that she should be confined in a hospital for the insane, did not commit her to the jail, did not place in or commit her to the custody of the sheriff, nor turn her over to any person to be kept and cared for, as provided in section 10, c. 58, Code 1899, but left her in the exercise of freedom of her person until a committee should be appointed, and ordered that then she be turned over to such committee, and ordered her then into his custody. Now, the justice under said section exercises a special, a limited, jurisdiction, having for its sole and only purpose the finding of lunacy for commitment to the hospital for insane. His jurisdiction goes no further. In this case he exercised, not that jurisdiction, but assumed a general jurisdiction to pass on the question of insanity, not for the purpose of confining the lunatic in a hospital for detention and cure, but simply in order that a committee might be appointed for her. He could hold no inquest for such purpose. The law authorized him to find insanity; and, further, as part of his judgment, to commit to the hospital. For this reason, it does seem to me that the justice's finding is wholly abortive to warrant the appointment of a committee. Harrison v. Garnett, 86 Va. 763, 11 S. E. 123.

Another question is presented in the case.

The record does not show that the entry of the defendant was within two years next before the suit, as required by Code 1899, c. 50, § 211. A justice under this section cannot give judgment unless the entry was within two years next before the suit. But it is contended that the defendant has to prove this as matter of defense, as under the ordinary statute of limitation he must plead the statute and sustain his plea. The defendant contends that the plaintiff carries the burden of showing the entry within such two years. The jurisdiction of the justice under this statute is a special and limited one, conferred by the statute, and we think that the plaintiff must show, not only an entry, but an entry within two years before the suit. It is a part of the very letter of the statute giving the action; not the general statute of limitations. In Billingsley v. Stutler, 52 W. Va. 92, 43 S. E. 96, the syllabus says that "to sustain an action of unlawful entry and detainer, the plaintiff must show that his right of action accrued within three years from the commencement of his action, otherwise, he will be remitted to his action of ejectment." I cannot say that the point of where rests the burden of proof in this matter was exactly decided, but the language just quoted imports it.

Judgment reversed, and action dismissed.

(58 W. Va. 565)

BALTIMORE BARGAIN HOUSE v. ST. CLAIR et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Jan. 16, 1906.)

1. APPEAL—WHEN LIES—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER.

A decree or order in a chancery case appointing a receiver, and thereby changing the possession, of personal property, is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 683.]

2. RECEIVERS—APPOINTMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The appointment of a receiver is not a matter of right. The power to appoint is a discretionary one, to be exercised with great circumspection. The discretion is not arbitrary or absolute, but sound and judicial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, § 14.]

3. SAME—NOTICE OF APPLICATION.

There is no principle of the law of receivership of greater wisdom and more firmly established than that requiring notice of the application.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, § 54.]

4. SAME.

A receiver of personal property may be appointed in vacation, without notice of the application, before service of process in the suit, in cases in which to require notice would be unreasonable, or would likely defeat the purpose for which a receiver is necessary, and in cases of great emergency; these cases constituting exceptions to the general rule requiring notice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, §§ 55, 56.]

5. SAME—FAILURE TO GIVE NOTICE.

Where notice is not given, the bill should, in addition to showing the necessity for the appointment of a receiver, set out the grounds which excuse failure to give notice; or they must at least appear by the affidavits filed in support of the application.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, §§ 57, 62.]

6. TRUSTS—EQUITY—REMOVAL OF TRUSTEE.

Equity, by virtue of its general jurisdiction over the administration of trusts, has power to remove trustees for cause.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trusts, §§ 216-218.]

7. ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—REMOVAL OF TRUSTEE—BILL IN EQUITY.

A bill brought to remove a trustee to whom personal property has been assigned for the benefit of creditors, and to appoint a receiver for the trust property, to be sufficient, must contain full and precise allegations showing the necessity for the removal, and that there is danger of loss or misappropriation of the trust property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 4, Cent. Dig. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, §§ 696, 697.]

8. RECEIVERS—APPOINTMENT.

A receiver may only be appointed in a pending case. A suit does not lie for the sole purpose of appointing a receiver, but the court must have jurisdiction of the suit on some other ground before it can make the appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, §§ 5-11.]

9. SAME.

The appointment of a receiver cannot be made in vacation any more than in term, except in a pending case.

10. INJUNCTION—BILL—VERIFICATION.

A bill of injunction may be sworn to by the agent or attorney of the plaintiff, but, if so, it must appear from the verification that the person verifying the bill knows the contents thereof; otherwise, the verification is fatally defective.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Injunction, §§ 263, 265.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Taylor County.

Action by the Baltimore Bargain House against John G. St. Clair, trustee, and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. R. D. Dent and J. G. St. Clair, for appellants. Ira E. Robinson and Hugh Warder, for appellees.

COX, J. Mary L. Bell and Fanny E. Bell, partners in the mercantile business in the city of Grafton, under the firm name of "Bell's Racket Store," by deed dated and recorded on the 25th of July, 1904, made an assignment of all their stock of store goods to John G. St. Clair, trustee, for the benefit of their creditors. Two days previous to this assignment Fanny E. Bell, by deed of record, assigned her one-half interest in this stock of store goods to Hugh Warder, trustee, to secure and save harmless certain individual indorsers. On the 29th day of July, 1904, process was issued in this suit in chancery, brought in the circuit court of Taylor county by the Baltimore Bargain House, a corporation, against St. Clair, trustee, Mary L. Bell, Fanny E. Bell, Hugh Warder, trustee, and the creditors and indorsers secured by the two deeds of assignment. The suit is for the purpose of removing St. Clair trustee, and appointing receivers to sell and dispose of the stock of store goods and collect the accounts, and for the ascertainment and payment of the partnership debts. Before process was served, and without notice, in vacation, on the 29th of July, 1904, the judge of the circuit court of Taylor county, upon presentation of the bill and exhibits, entered an order appointing John G. St. Clair and Hugh Warder special receivers of said stock of store goods, and directing them to take possession thereof and sell the same after executing bond, and enjoining St. Clair trustee from selling or disposing of the trust property and from collecting the accounts. On the 23d of August, 1904, St. Clair trustee and Mary L. Bell, before the judge in vacation, after notice, moved the dissolution of the injunction, which motion was overruled, and St. Clair trustee and Mary L. Bell appeal.

Our first duty is to determine the extent of the appeal granted. The petition for the appeal expressly prays for an appeal from the order refusing to dissolve the injunction. It also refers by date to the order appointing receivers and enjoining the trustee, and assigns errors therein. We think the petition, fairly construed, asks an appeal from both orders, and that the appeal granted was intended as an appeal from both. So treating the appeal, are both orders appealable? The seventh paragraph of section 1, c. 135, Code 1899, expressly gives an appeal from an order or decree in chancery refusing to dissolve an injunction, and from an order or decree requiring the possession or title of the property to be changed. The language used in the opinion in Wagner v. Coen, 41 W. Va. 351, 23 S. E. 735, may be said to indicate that the provision in relation to change of possession applies only to real estate, and not to personal property. A doubt as to whether or not that provision applies to personal property is expressed in the cases of Harris v. Hauser, 26 W. Va. 595, and Hutton v. Lockridge, 27 W. Va. 435. However, the cases of Robrecht v. Robrecht, 46 W. Va. 738, 34 S. E. 801, and Ruffner Bros. v. Mairs, 33 W. Va. 655, 11 S. E. 5, hold that a decretal order appointing a receiver for personal property, and thereby changing the possession thereof, is appealable. See, also, Shannon v. Hanks, 88 Va. 338, 13 S. E. 437; Barry v. Briggs, 22 Mich. 205; Lewis v. Campau, 14 Mich. 458, 90 Am. Dec. 245. It seems clear that the provision permitting an appeal from an order or decree in chancery, where the possession of the property is changed, applies to personal property as well as to real estate.

Both orders being appealable, the question to be decided is: Were the appointment of receivers and the awarding of an injunction against the trustee proper? The receivers were appointed without notice, before service of process in this suit, by the judge in vacation. The statute (section 28, c. 133, Code 1899) permits the appointment of a special receiver in any proper pending case, where there is danger of loss or misappropriation of the property involved, and expressly requires notice of the application for a receiver of real estate, or the rents, issues, and profits thereof. Therefore what we shall hereafter say in this opinion will relate to the appointment of receivers of personal property. The statute is silent as to notice of the application for a receiver of personal property. In Ruffner Bros. v. Mairs, supra, it is said that in the light of the authorities the better practice is to require notice to be given to the defendant before passing upon the application for a receiver, unless it be in cases of the greatest emergency and imperative necessity. In the case of Oil Co. v. Gale, 6 W. Va. 527, Judge Haymond, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is true as a general rule, though not universal, that notice is, or should be, required of the time and place of making the application for the appointment of a special receiver. The authorities cited in support of this general rule show that there are recognized exceptions. These exceptions are such cases as that immediate action is or may be necessary to prevent great injury." Universally, so far as we have been able to examine, the authorities recognize that there are certain well-established exceptions to the general rule requiring notice of the application. Fredenheim v. Rohr, 87 Va. 764, 13 S. E. 193, 208; Page on Receivers, 148-150; Moritz v. Miller, 87 Ala. 331, 6 South. 269; Hogg's Eq. Prin. § 141; Smith on Receiverships, § 5; High on Receivers, § 117; note to Cameron v. Imp. Co., 72 Am. St. Rep. 36, and cases cited; 17 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 717; Anderson on Receivers, §§ 121, 122, and 123. Classifications of exceptions to the general rule are given in 17 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 719, and in Hogg's Eq. Prin. § 141, and in Smith on Receiverships, § 5. It is clear from the authorities that in cases where to require notice would be unreasonable, or would likely defeat the very object for which a receiver is necessary, or where a great emergency exists, a receiver may be appointed without notice. It may be argued that our case of Batson v. Findley, 52 W. Va. 343, 43 S. E. 142, requires notice in all cases of ex parte or vacation applications. We do not so interpret that decision. The first point of the syllabus would seem to go that far, but, when read in the light of the opinion, it does not do so. In the opinion, on page 354 of 52 W. Va., and page 146 of 43 S. E., it is said: "In every instance, before process served—and the application is thus ex parte—such notice must be given, except in cases of emergency, where it is impracticable, else the appointment will be reversible." This explains point 1 of the syllabus, and reconciles the case on this point with our other decisions and the universal law of the land. Where notice is not given, the bill should, in addition to showing the necessity for the appointment, set out the grounds which excuse failure to give notice; or they must at least appear by the affidavits filed in support of the application. 17 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 735; Florence Bank v. U. S. Savings, etc., Co., 104 Ala. 297, 16 South. 110; Wabash R. Co. v. Dykeman, 133 Ind. 58, 32 N. E. 823; French v. Gifford, 30 Iowa, 148; Anderson v. Cecil, 86 Md. 490, 38 Atl. 1074; Verplanck v. Mer. Ins. Co., 2 Paige (N. Y.) 438; Virginia, etc., Steel Co. v. Wilder, 88 Va. 942, 14 S. E. 808.

While a receiver for personal property may thus, in cases constituting exceptions to the general rule, be appointed in vacation without notice, yet the appointment of a receiver is not a matter of right. The power to appoint is a discretionary one, to be exercised with great circumspection. The discretion is not arbitrary or absolute, but sound and judicial. Anderson on Receivers, § 49. See, also, note 5. A court of equity, by virtue of its general jurisdiction over the administration of trusts, has the power to remove trustees for cause. Rankin v. Bradford, 1 Leigh, 163; Shelton v. Jones' Adm'r, 26 Grat. 891; Lewis' Adm'r v. Glenn, 84 Va. 947, 6 S. E. 866; Wagner v. Coen, 41 W. Va. 351, 23 S. E. 735; Machir v. Sehon, Sheriff, et al., 14 W. Va. 781. A bill brought to remove a trustee to whom personal property has been assigned for the benefit of creditors, and to appoint a receiver for the trust property, to be sufficient must contain full and precise allegations showing the necessity for the removal, and that there is danger of loss or misappropriation of the trust property. 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 838; note to Lee v. Randolph, 2 Hen. & M. 12; Wilson v. Maddox, 46 W. Va. 641, 33 S. E. 775. See, also, Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 43 W. Va. 721, 29 S. E. 514; Dunlap v. Hedges, 35 W. Va. 287, 13 S. E. 656; Penn v. Whiteheads, 12 Grat. 74; Page on Receivers, § 137; Anderson on Receivers, § 663; Enc. Pl. & Pr. 723, 724, and cases cited in note 1, p. 724; Hogg's Eq. Proc. § 745.

The allegations of the plaintiff's bill claimed to justify the taking of the property out of the hands of the trustee and the placing of it in the hands of the receivers are, in substance, as follows: That the defendants Mary L. and Fanny E. Bell, partners, etc., are insolvent, and are indebted to plaintiff; that the assignment of the 25th of July, 1904, is void, as creating a preference; that plaintiff is not named therein; that the assignment requires the trustee to sell the trust property after four weeks' notice, and to pay the proceeds, first, to the expenses of sale, commissions, etc., and the remainder to Mary L. and Fanny E. Bell; that the trustee has not given bond, and refuses to do so; that the publication of notice of sale requires delay, during which rent, etc., will have to be paid, causing a waste of the property; that it is the intention of the trustee to carry out the provisions of the assignment, and, after paying the cost and expenses of sale, to pay the remainder to Mary L. Bell and Fanny E. Bell, ignoring the claims of creditors. The allegations are very general. The goods are not alleged to be perishable. The delay by notice and waste by payment of rent, as alleged, do not show unreasonable delay or waste. The amount of the rent is not stated. While it is alleged that the Bells are insolvent, yet they have assigned their property to a trustee for the benefit of their creditors. There is no allegation that the trustee is insolvent, or that he has lost, misapplied, or misappropriated any of the trust property. It is alleged that he has not given bond, and refuses to do so, but not that he has failed to give bond after notice, under section 6, c. 72, Code 1899, which then provided how a trustee may be required to give bond. The claim that the assignment is void as creating a preference is wholly without foundation, when the assignment is considered. It is for the benefit of all the creditors of the partnership, without preference or priority, naming some, and adding a general clause including all others. Plaintiff claims that it was not named in the assignment. Its debt was therein named to "Baltimore Bargain," instead of "Baltimore Bargain House." This is immaterial, because, if not named, it was, nevertheless, secured thereby. The claim that it is the intention of the trustee, after paying costs and expenses of sale, to carry out the provisions of the assignment, and pay the balance to the debtors, ignoring the creditors, is not sufficient as alleged. The bill makes this allegation upon information and belief, but does not allege that the trustee has ever expressed such intention. Again, the bill alleges that it is the intention of the trustee to carry out the provisions of the assignment. This is inconsistent with the allegation that the trustee intends to pay over the remainder of the proceeds to the debtors after paying the costs and expenses of sale, ignoring the creditors. The legal effect of the assignment is to give a lien to all the creditors of this insolvent firm. The trustee is bound, in the performance of his duties, by the legal effect of the instrument under which he acts. He cannot ignore the rights of creditors and pay to the debtors. From the allegations of the bill we find no absconding or nonresident debtor, no insolvent trustee, no emergency case, no excuse for failure to give notice; in fact, no facts justifying the appointment of a receiver, either with or without notice, or justifying the injunction against the trustee.

It is argued that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in this cause, because the bill was not maintainable upon other grounds. A receiver may only be appointed in a pending case. A suit does not lie for the sole purpose of appointing a receiver, but the court must have jurisdiction of the suit on some other ground before it can make the appointment. Section 28, c.

133, Code 1899; Rainey v. Freeport Smokeless C. & C. Co (decided at this term) 52 S. E. 528; Hogg's Eq. Proceed. § 731; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 684; Harwell v. Potts, 80 Ala. 70; State v. Union Nat. Bank, 145 Ind. 537, 44 N. E. 585, 57 Am. St. Rep. 209; Jones v. Schall, 45 Mich. 380, 8 N. W. 68; Mabon v. Ongley Elec. Co., 156 N. Y. 196, 50 N. E. 805; Robinson v. W. Va. Loan Co. (C. C.) 90 Fed. 770. An appointment cannot be made in vacation any more than in term, except in a pending case. Harwell v. Potts, supra; State v. Union Nat. Bank, supra; Pressley v. Harrison, 102 Ind. 14, 1 N. E. 188; Pressley v. Lamd, 105 Ind. 171, 4 N. E. 682; Guy v. Doak, 47 Kan. 236, 866, 27 Pac. 968. The bill does not ask or pray that the trust property be administered through the trustee. Its general object is to administer the trust property by means of receivers. It is not our province upon this appeal to pass finally upon the sufficiency of the bill farther than to repeat that its allegations are insufficient for the appointment of receivers, and an injunction against the trustee. It might be stated, as an additional reason for dissolving the injunction, that the bill was not properly verified, and that the exhibits, and the bill, without verification, do not show a proper case for injunction. The bill was sworn to by the attorney for the plaintiff. The verification used did not follow the form provided for an agent or attorney by section 42, c. 125, Code 1899, and was not to the same effect. While the attorney for the plaintiff verified in a positive manner, yet it does not appear from the verification that the attorney knew the contents of the bill. This is essential, and must appear from the verification; otherwise, it is fatally defective.

The order appointing receivers, entered on the 20th of July, 1904, and the order overruling the motion to dissolve the injunction, entered on the 23d of August, 1904, are reversed, and the motion to dissolve the injunction is sustained; and this cause is remanded for any further proceedings which may be proper herein.

(140 N. C. 205)

CRAWFORD v. MASTERS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 12, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

Under Clark's Code, § 893, relating to issues of fact, the court, in addition to the issues in its discretion, may submit questions pertinent to the matters in controversy; but its refusal to do so is not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 3859.]

2. EJECTMENT—DISCLAIMER—PLEADING.

In an action for the recovery of land, if defendant wishes to disclaim as to any portion of the locus in quo, and put in issue the title to a specific portion, he must do so in his answer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 17, Cent. Dig. Ejectment, § 196.]

3. JUDGMENT—CONFORMITY TO PLEADING AND VERDICT.

In an action for the recovery of land, the judgment must conform to the verdict in designating the extent of recovery, and must be rendered for the premises described in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 30, Cent. Dig. Judgment, §§ 434-454.]

4. EJECTMENT—JUDGMENT.

In an action for the recovery of land, where plaintiff alleged ownership and defendant admitted possession, and the court instructed that the burden was on plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence his right of possession to the boundary contended for, and as to the true location of his boundary set out in his deed, and if they found, by the greater weight of the evidence, that the boundary was as contended by defendant, they should answer the issue, an affirmative finding on the issue entitled plaintiff to judgment according to the description of the lot in his complaint.

5. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for the recovery of land, the admission of an agreement between third persons as to the measure of liability on breach of warranty, having no bearing on the issue, was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 4154, 4155.]

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by F. P. Crawford against D. S. Masters. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This was an action for the recovery of the possession of a lot in the town of Marion. Plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of the lot, and that defendant was in possession and wrongfully detained the same. Defendant denied each allegation of the complaint. Plaintiff introduced grant and several deeds for the purpose of showing title out of the state, and that defendant and himself claimed under a common source. He introduced several deeds constituting his chain of title. The description of the lot in controversy, set out in the complaint, and the deed under which he claimed, is in the following words: "Also one other lot or parcel of land containing about three-fourths of an acre adjoining the above on the southwest, and is now inclosed with the above-named town lot. For the courses and distances reference can be had to a deed from E. S. Hull to John Isbell; said lots being sold by Benj. Weeks, administrator of John Isbell, etc." Plaintiff testified that he purchased the lot in controversy, together with adjoining lot, June 3, 1890, from J. S. Brown; that said Brown showed him the boundaries; that his son-in-law was there in possession; that both lots were inclosed as one by a rail fence, save a small part in front, which was inclosed with a paling; that he had been in possession, etc., up to time of bringing action. There was other testimony on behalf of plaintiff in regard to fence. The defendant introduced a number of witnesses contradicting plaintiff's testimony in respect to the location of the fence. At the close of defendant's evidence he admitted in open court that he was in possession of the lot west of the new street. Defendant tendered the following issues: "(1) Is the plaintiff the owner and entitled to the lands described in the complaint? (2) Where is the western boundary of the second lot described in the complaint? (3) Is the defendant in possession of any land to which plaintiff has shown title?" The court declined to submit the issues, and in lieu thereof submitted the issue: "(1) Is the plaintiff the owner and entitled to the possession of the lands described in the complaint? Ans. Yes." Defendant excepted. The parties introduced a map showing the respective contentions in regard to the boundary. The plaintiff introduced an agreement entered into between W. R. Whitson and W. S. Masters in regard to the measure of liability in the event of a breach of warranty, etc. Defendant excepted. There was no exception to the charge as given. Defendant submitted several prayers for special instructions, some of which were declined. The defendant moved for judgment upon the verdict, which was refused, and he excepted. He also excepted to the form of the judgment, and appealed.

Justice & Pless, for appellant. P. J. Sinclair, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). The plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of the lot in controversy, and that defendant was in the wrongful possession. Both these averments defendant denied. Pending the trial defendant admitted that he was in possession of that portion of the lot in respect to which there was a controversy. With this admission there was but one issue arising upon the pleading—that of title. It is elementary that the issues should be directed to the matter alleged on the one side and denied on the other. If the judge, in his discretion, deem it proper, he may, in addition to the issues, submit questions to the jury pertinent to the matters in controversy; but he is not compelled to do so, and his refusal is not reviewable. Clark's Code, § 393, and cases cited. In an action for the recovery of land, if the defendant wishes to disclaim as to any portion of the locus in quo, and put in issue the title to only a specific portion, he should do so in his answer. If he denies the title to the entire boundary, and the issue is decided against him, the judgment will be signed in accordance with the allegation in the complaint, unless the jury shall, by their verdict, restrict the boundary of the recovery. Whatever may have been the rule under the action of ejectment, as it prevailed prior to the adoption of our Code of Procedure, in regard to the form and effect of the judgment, it is well settled that in the civil action for the recovery of real estate the judgment must follow and conform to the verdict in designating the extent of the recovery, and must be rendered for the premises described in the complaint. Sedg. & Wait, Trial Title, § 523. In this record the plaintiff alleged ownership of a lot inclosed with another lot conveyed in the same deed. The boundaries were marked by a fence. There was a controversy as to the location of the fence. His honor instructed the jury that the burden was on the plaintiff to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, his claim and right of possession up to the boundary contended for; that he must satisfy them as to the true location of his boundary and fence set out in his deed, as well as his possession within the same; that, if they found by the greater weight of the evidence that the fence was at the point contended for by the defendant (explaining by reference to the map the respective contentions), they should answer the issue "No." The finding upon the issue in view of the admission settled the matter in controversy, and entitled the plaintiff to judgment according to the description of the lot in his complaint. His honor's charge was full and clear, both in respect to the subject-matter of the litigation and the testimony bearing upon the respective contentions of the parties.

We have examined the instructions asked by the defendant, and think that, in so far as they were correct propositions, they were given by the judge below. The agreement between Whitson and Masters, to the introduction of which the defendant objected, does not appear to us to have much, if any, bearing upon the issue. We cannot see how its admission prejudiced the defendant. We have examined the entire record in the light of the defendant's exceptions and brief, and find no error. The case was fairly tried, and the judgment was drawn in accordance with the pleadings and verdict.

No error.

(140 N. C. 157)

FURR v. JOHNSON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. MARRIAGE—LICENSE—WRONGFUL ISSUANCE—ACTION FOR PENALTY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a register of deeds to recover the statutory penalty for issuing, without plaintiff's consent, a license for the marriage of his daughter under 18 years of age, the court correctly charged that it was the duty of the register, in issuing a marriage license, to make such inquiry for legal objections to the marriage and as to the age of the parties as a prudent business man, acting in the most important affairs of life, would make, and to exercise his duties in such respect carefully and conscientiously, and not as a mere matter of form, and that, if the defendant failed so to do, he did not make reasonable investigation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Marriage, § 34.]

2. SAME—REASONABLE INQUIRY BY OFFICER.

It was proper for the court to instruct the jury that if they found that the prospective groom told defendant that the girl was 18, that he had seen her age in the Bible, and that she had told him she was 18, and should find that defendant knew the witness well, and knew him to be a man of good character, and that he stated to defendant that the girl was 18 and that he lived just across the street from her family, and defendant honestly believed such statements, he made reasonable inquiry.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Marriage, § 34.]

3. SAME — DUTY OF OFFICER — EXAMINING WITNESSES.

The act of 1877, imposing a penalty for issuing a license for the marriage of a girl under 18 without the consent of her father, etc., and declaring that the register shall have power to make inquiry by examination of the witnesses under oath, does not render an inquiry under oath a prerequisite to a reasonable inquiry.

4. SAME — ACTION FOR PENALTY — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Section 1816 of the statute in relation to the issuance of marriage licenses (Code 1883, p. 691) provides a penalty for knowingly and without reasonable inquiry issuing a license to any persons within the inhibition of the statute. Held that, in an action for the penalty, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the license was issued knowingly and without reasonable inquiry.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cabarrus County; Justice, Judge.

Action by E. A. Furr against W. Reece Johnson, as register of deeds, to recover a statutory penalty for issuing, without plaintiff's consent, a license for the marriage of his daughter. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. D. Maness and Adams, Jerome & Armfield, for appellant. L. T. Hartsell and Montgomery & Crowell, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. This is an action against the register of deeds to recover the statutory penalty for issuing, without plaintiff's consent, a license for the marriage of his daughter, who was under 18 years of age and resided with him. The judge correctly charged that it was the duty of the register of deeds, in issuing a marriage license, "to make such inquiry for legal impediments to the marriage and as to the age of the parties as a prudent business man, acting in the most important affairs of life, would make, and to exercise his duties in this respect carefully and conscientiously, and not as a mere matter of form; and, if the defendant failed to do so in the issuing of the license for the marriage of plaintiff's daughter, then he did not make reasonable inquiry, and the jury will answer the third issue "No." Where there is a conflict of evidence, whether there has been "reasonable inquiry" is to be submitted to the jury upon all evidence under proper instructions; but, if the facts are agreed, it is a matter of law. Joyner v. Roberts, 114 N. C. 389, 19 S. E. 645; Harrum v. Marsh, 130 N. C. 154, 41 S. E. 6. The court instructed the jury, and, we think, properly, that if they found that "Goodman [the prospective groom] told the defendant that the girl was 18, for he had seen her age in the Bible and she had told him she was 18 years of age, and should further find from the evidence that the defendant knew the witness Lowder well, and knew him to be a man of good character, and that he stated to Johnson that the girl was 18 years of age, and that he lived just across the street from her family, and signed the paper, not under oath, and that defendant honestly believed these statements and acted on them, believing them, the defendant made reasonable inquiry, and you will answer the third issue "Yes."

We cannot concur with the defendant's contention that there was not reasonable inquiry because the witnesses were not examined by the register under oath. The act of 1887 (Acts 1887, p. 583, c. 331), now Revisal, § 2067, does not require that the register shall make inquiry by examination of the witnesses in such cases under oath, but merely declares that he shall have "the power to do so." His using, or failing to use, such discretionary power, is merely a circumstance to be considered by the jury. In Agent v. Willis, 124 N. C. 29, 32 S. E. 322, the examination of the witness was made by the register upon oath, but the court held that, under the suspicious circumstances attendant upon that case, there was not reasonable inquiry. In Trolinger v. Boroughs, 133 N. C. 312, 45 S. E. 662, a rule easily understood and very proper to be followed is laid down: "While we may not prescribe any rule for the guidance of the register, it would seem that 'reasonable inquiry' involves at least an inquiry made of, or information furnished by, some person known to the register to be reliable, or, if unknown, identified and approved by some reliable person known to the register. This is the rule upon which banks act in paying checks, and surely in the matter of such grave importance as issuing a marriage license the register should not be excused upon a less degree of care."

In regard to the plaintiff's exception to his honor's instruction that the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff upon the third issue, it may be said the statute gives to any one who will sue for the same a penalty to be recovered of "every register of deeds who shall knowingly, or without reasonable inquiry, issue a marriage license for the marriage of any two persons within the inhibition. The cause of action, therefore, consists in the violation of section 1816 (Code 1883, p. 691), "knowingly and without reasonable inquiry." We cannot perceive why the burden of proof upon this issue is not upon the plaintiff. If the two first issues had been found for the plaintiff, and no verdict upon the third issue had been rendered, certainly no judgment could have been signed against defendant. The plaintiff would not have made out his case. It will hardly be contended that the court could, as matter of law, have instructed the jury to answer the third issue for the plaintiff, because the defendant had introduced no evidence tending to show that he did not have knowledge, or that he made reasonable inquiry. Yet such is the duty of the court when the burden is upon the defendant and no evidence is introduced tending to persuade the jury to sustain his contention. Such is the basis and result of the application of the rule—the test. Wallace v. Robeson, 100 N. C. 207, 8 S. E. 650. If the general issue, as upon a plea of non debet, had been submitted, the court would instruct the jury that before they could find for the plaintiff he must show to them, by a preponderance of the evidence, a state of facts commensurate with the essential allegations of his complaint. The fact that the case was tried upon three issues does not change the rule. The burden of each issue remains on the plaintiff until he brings the acts of defendant within the penalizing language of the statute. While the burden of proving the issue is on the plaintiff, he may, as a part of his proof, rely upon the facts shown by him, and defendant's failure to introduce testimony peculiarly within his knowledge and possession, as tending to sustain his contention, and to persuade the jury to so find. This is a very different matter from casting the burden of proof on the issue upon the defendant. The rule of practice is illustrated in many cases, as, for instance, when the plaintiff, in actions to recover damage for negligence, invokes the doctrine res ipsa loquitur. As in those cases the physical facts speak for themselves, so here the manner in which and circumstances under which the defendants issued the license become evidential upon the question of knowledge or absence of reasonable inquiry. If the plaintiff relies upon the averment that the defendant knowingly issued the license in violation of the provisions of the statute, he certainly has the burden of proving the allegation. We are unable to see why the same rule does not obtain when he relies upon the averment that defendant did not make reasonable inquiry.

The rule laid down by Judge Elliott in his work on Evidence—quoted in Meredith v. Railroad, 137 N. C. 478, 50 S. E. 1: "As a rule, it is only where the fact negatived is peculiarly within the knowledge of the adversary that the burden is, in any sense shifted to the latter, and even then it is the burden of going forward rather than the burden of ultimately establishing the case. The fact that the party having peculiar knowledge of the matter fails to bring it forward may raise a presumption or justify an inference in favor of his adversary's claim, and thus to shift the burden of proceeding in order to win; but the burden of establishing the issue is not shifted, nor is it ordinarily determined in the first instance by the mere fact that a negative is involved, or that some fact is peculiarly within the knowledge of the adverse party"—is approved by us. While in many instances the plaintiff is required to prove a negative, he may, when the evidence is peculiarly within the knowledge or possession of the defendant, rely upon defendant's failure to produce such evidence as a cogent fact tending to sustain his contention, and, considered with other circumstances, may persuade the jury to find the issue in his favor. This rule pertains only to the mode of proof, and not to the burden of the issue. Stewart v. Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 80, 50 S. E. 562; Ross v. Cotton Mill (at this term) 52 S. E. 121. In this case defendant went upon the stand and testified in respect to the manner and extent of the inquiry made by him. The plaintiff likewise introduced testimony. His honor correctly charged the jury that the burden of proof, on the issue, was upon the plaintiff. If the Legislature intended to make the issuing of the license contrary to the statute a prima facie case, or presumptive evidence of knowledge, or want of reasonable inquiry, it could easily have done so by making the matter one of defense by way of a proviso, or, as it frequently does, by declaring that the proof of certain facts should constitute presumptive evidence, or declare them to be a prima facie case. Many of our criminal and penal statutes have such provisions. They have been sustained by this court. State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 630, 50 S. E. 506.

The judgment must be affirmed.

(140 N. C. 163.)

SPRINKLE v. WELLBORN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. DEED—FRAUD—PRESUMPTION.

Where, when a deed was executed, the grantor had not sufficient mental capacity to make it, and the grantee had notice thereof, fraud is presumed; that is, there is a constructive fraud, authorizing relief, though there was no actual fraud or undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 16, Cent. Dig. Deeds, §§ 149, 151.]

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS—ALTERNATIVE RELIEF.

Where a vendee, who has obtained a deed by fraud, has conveyed the property to a bona fide purchaser, equity in a suit to cancel the deed, will give the original grantor a personal judgment against his grantee for the difference between the price he received for the land and what he paid for it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 8, Cent. Dig. Cancellation of Instruments, § 115.]

3. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Striking out the answer of the jury to the issue whether there was actual fraud or undue influence in obtaining a deed, and substituting the opposite answer, is harmless, where fraud is to be presumed from the fact of insanity of the grantor.

4. SAME—OBJECTION NOT MADE AT TRIAL.

Objection to counsel having referred in argument to records as evidence, when they were merely introduced for the consideration of the court alone, for the purpose of passing on the competency of a witness, not having been made at the trial, may not thereafter be made.

5. SAME—OBJECTION WAIVED.

Objection to counsel for one party referring to certain records as evidence is waived by that party doing the same.

6. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court need not give a requested instruction, where it is substantially covered by instructions given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 651-659.]

7. DEEDS — MENTAL CAPACITY OF GRANTOR — NOTICE TO GRANTEE.

Evidence in a suit to avoid a deed held sufficient to sustain a finding that grantee had notice that the grantor had not sufficient mental capacity to make the deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wilkes County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by Nancy Elvira Sprinkle, by W. R. Sprinkle, her guardian, against J. M. Wellborn and another. From an adverse judgment, defendant Wellborn appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought by the plaintiff, Nancy Elvira Sprinkle, who is represented by her guardian, W. R. Sprinkle, against the defendant J. M. Wellborn to set aside a deed made by the said Nancy Elvira Sprinkle to the defendant Wellborn on the 19th day of October, 1886, for want of mental capacity to make the same, and for fraud and undue influence in procuring the execution of the said deed. Issues were submitted to the jury which, with the answers thereto, are as follows: "(1) Did Nancy E. Sprinkle at the time of executing the deed of October 19, 1886, have sufficient mental capacity to make the same? A. No. (2) If Nancy E. Sprinkle had not sufficient mental capacity at such time to make such deed, did J. M. Wellborn have notice of it? A. Yes. (3) Was any fraud or undue influence practiced on Nancy E. Sprinkle by J. M. Wellborn to induce her to make such deed? A. No. (4) What was the amount of the benefit derived by Nancy E. Sprinkle from the consideration for the deed to the river farm? A. [by consent]. $1,299 [the amount of the Salmons mortgage debt]; the value of the mountain or Miller tract of land and the value of the cattle delivered to her, and all as of date October 19, 1886. (5) What was the value of the river farm October 19, 1886? A. $4,000. (6) What has been the average annual rental value of said river farm since October 19, 1886? A. $200. (7) What was the value of the mountain or Miller tract October 19, 1886? A. $1,500. (8) What has been the average annual rental value of said mountain or Miller tract since October 19, 1886? A. $75. (9) What was the value of the cattle received by Nancy E. Sprinkle in said trade? A. $75. (10) If the said Nancy E. Sprinkle had not sufficient mental capacity to make said deed, did the defendant Greenwood have notice thereof? A. [by consent]. No. (11) Was the defendant Greenwood a purchaser for value without notice of any fraud on the part of Wellborn to procure the deed to himself, if any such was practiced? A. [by consent]. Yes." There was no objection to the issues. It is not necessary to state the evidence. It was voluminous, but the only material portion of it will be stated in the opinion.

The defendant requested the court to give a number of instructions, all of which were given, except those numbered 3, 13, and 14, which will be noticed hereafter. The material instructions given in response to the defendant's prayers, upon the issue as to mental capacity, were as follows: "(1) The law fixes no particular standard of intelligence necessary to be possessed by parties in making a contract; and, although a person may not have sufficient intelligence to manage his affairs in a proper and prudent manner, still he may be capable of making a binding contract. (2) It is not required that a person should be able to make a disposition of his property with judgment and discretion. It is sufficient if he understands what he is about. If a person knows what he is doing and is aware of the nature of the particular transaction, such person has sufficient mental capacity to make a contract, although that person may not act wisely or discreetly, or make a good bargain. (3) If the jury find from the evidence that on the 19th of October, 1886, Nancy E. Sprinkle had sufficient mental capacity to understand what she was about and the nature and extent of the property when she executed the deed, and that she understood the nature and effect thereof, they will answer the first issue 'Yes,' although they also find from the evidence that she was eccentric, and that her mind was weak and flighty, and that the trade she made was not a prudent one, and was not made in the exercise of discretion and good judgment. (4) If the jury find from the evidence that at the time the deed was executed to wit, October 19, 1886, Nancy E. Sprinkle had sufficient mental capacity to understand and appreciate that she was making a deed by which she passed the title to the river farm to the defendant Wellborn, that she was depriving herself of the ownership and control thereof, and that she was getting in exchange therefor the farm in Ashe county and the cattle mentioned in the evidence, and that the mortgage to Salmons was to be paid by the defendant, then they will answer the first issue 'Yes,' although they may also find that it was not a prudent trade, and was not made with discretion and good judgment. (5) Mere weakness of mind and susceptibility to undue or fraudulent influences, however clearly shown, will not vitiate a contract unless it was induced by fraud. Where there is a legal capacity, there cannot be an equitable incapacity, apart from fraud. If a person be of sound mind, he has the right to dispose of his property, and his will stands in place of a reason, provided the contract justified the conclusion that he exercised deliberate judgment, such as it is and has not been circumvented or imposed upon by artifice or undue influence which amounts to fraud." The following instructions, which the defendant requested the court to give the jury, were refused: "(1) Unless the mind of such person is wholly incapable of any reflection or deliberate act, so that in fact he was unaware of the nature and effect of the particular transaction, such person in the eye of the law has sufficient mental capacity to make a contract. (2) Upon all of the evidence the jury is instructed that the defendant Wellborn did not have notice of any mental incapacity of Nancy E. Sprinkle, if any such existed. (3) The jury will answer the third issue 'No.'"

The court then charged the jury generally as follows: "Those who allege insanity, idiocy, imbecility, and incapacity must prove it by the greater weight of the evidence; must overcome the legal presumption of soundness of mind. Has the plaintiff overcome this presumption of law? If so, you will answer the first issue 'No,' and thereby declare that, when she made the deed, Elvira Sprinkle did not have that mental capacity which the law requires of those who dispose of their property. The law does not require that a person be able to dispose of his or her property with judgment and discretion, or be able to get the best of a trade. It is sufficient in law if he or she understands what he or she is doing and what they are about. The law does not require a high degree of intelligence, but it does require sufficient mind to know and comprehend the character of the act and to know what one is doing. Did Elvira Sprinkle, when she made the deed to the river farm, know what she was about; know the effect of the instrument she was signing; know that she was parting with her land and getting the land in Ashe county and the cattle and the payment of the mortgage in return? If she did not fully comprehend this, you will answer the issue 'No'; otherwise, you will answer it 'Yes.' You understand, of course, that you are inquiring into the contract of Elvira Sprinkle on October 19, 1886. Was she sound, then, and of sufficient mental capacity to make the deed on that day? Where one has sufficient mental capacity at the time he signs the deed to understand the nature and extent of the property disposed of, and the force and effect of his act in signing the deed, then he is capable of executing a deed. If you find that Nancy Sprinkle, at the time she signed the deed on the 19th October, 1886, had mind and intelligence sufficient to enable her to have a reasonable judgment of the kind and value of the property embraced in the deed, and to understand the effect of her act in making the deed, you should answer the first issue 'Yes'; but, if you shall find that she did not have such mind and intelligence as stated, you will answer the first issue 'No.'" The court instructed the jury on the law applicable to the other issues, recapitulating the evidence by grouping the same as applicable to the different issues, and explained the law arising thereon. The court instructed the jury as to the difference between substantive evidence and corroborating and impeaching evidence, and then instructed them further, as follows: "The evidence of statements made in this case, by witnesses other than the parties to this suit, different from and inconsistent with the testimony given by such witnesses on this trial, was allowed only for the purpose of impeaching such witnesses, and is not to be considered as substantive evidence. Evidence of the statements of witnesses which accord with their evidence on the trial is only allowed for the purpose of corroborating such witnesses, and is not to be considered by the jury as substantive evidence."

After the verdict was returned the court found that the answer of the jury to the third issue was against the weight of the evidence, and set it aside, and that, upon the responses to the other issues, there was fraud in law. The court thereupon answered the third issue "Yes." The defendant excepted. During the trial the plaintiff introduced in evidence the record entitled "In the Matter of the Inquiry into the Mental Condition of Nancy E. Sprinkle," which was a proceeding instituted in 1893 under the statute; the record showing the appointment of W. R. Sprinkle as her guardian. In the said proceeding the jury found that she was "incompetent to manage her own business." The plaintiff then introduced the record in the case of Nancy E. Sims, by her guardian, v. W. M. Sims (N. C.) 28 S. E. 407, 40 L. R. A. 737, 61 Am. St. Rep. 665, in which her marriage to the defendant was annulled by a judgment of the court based upon the verdict of a jury that she did not have sufficient mental capacity to enter into the contract of marriage. The records were each duly objected to by the defendant. The objections were overruled, and the defendant excepted. The records were offered solely for the consideration of the court, and in respect to them the following facts are stated: "The court held that these records were admitted only for the purpose of consideration by the court upon the question whether or not the defendant Wellborn was competent to testify as to the conversations and transactions between himself and the plaintiff, the objection to his competency being that she was now a lunatic, and the court so stated in the presence of the jury." The defendant then introduced the record of the second inquiry into the sanity of Nancy Sims, dated August, 1895, in which the jury found that she was sane and "competent to transact the ordinary business of life." The plaintiffs contended that the records they introduced should be admitted as evidence for the jury to consider, and the defendant insisted that the record they introduced should be admitted in the same way. The judge excluded all the records as evidence for the jury, but stated that, if he should decide later to admit the records as evidence, he would so announce. The court did not decide to admit them as evidence. The defendant then read the deposition of Governor Glenn. After the close of the evidence, and while one of the counsel was addressing the jury, an attorney for the plaintiff came up to the bench and said to the judge that, as Governor Glenn's deposition had been introduced, he thought the court ought to allow the records to go to the jury as evidence, and wanted to know if the court would let him argue to the jury that they were evidence. The court said, "No," that those records were not in evidence, and that he must not refer to them in argument. The judge was engaged, during the arguments, in preparing instructions and considering the prayers for instruction handed up to him just before the argument commenced, and did not pay any attention to the arguments of counsel, and did not know, until after the verdict had been rendered, that counsel in their arguments had referred to the said records as evidence; but the court finds, after hearing the evidence of the attorneys, that one of the four attorneys for the plaintiff who addressed the jury (but not the one referred to above) in his argument did refer to the said records as evidence, and that the attorneys for the defendant also in their reply referred to the said records as evidence and discussed the same. The attention of the court was not called to this, nor any objection made to it during the argument; but the defendant, after verdict, called the court's attention to it, and moved to set aside the verdict on that ground. The counsel for the plaintiff, who referred to the records as evidence, had not been advised of what the court had said to his associate, neither had the counsel for the defendant.

There was a motion for a new trial based upon errors during the progress of the trial and objections to argument of counsel, as appears in the finding by the court, which motion was overruled. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

W. W. Barber, R. A. Doughton, and Manly & Hendren, for appellant. Shepherd & Shepherd and T. B. Finley, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The jury found in this case, by consent, in their answers to the tenth and eleventh issues, that the defendant T. J. Greenwood had purchased the land in controversy for value and without notice of the mental incapacity of Nancy Elvira Sprinkle, and also without notice of any fraud of Wellborn, if there was any, in procuring the deed. Counsel for the plaintiff properly admitted that, under this finding, they could not proceed further against Greenwood, and the cause was therefore continued against Wellborn on the theory that, upon the verdict, he is liable for the value of the land, less the amount paid by him therefor; and for the difference between these two amounts judgment was rendered in the court below. There is no serious contention, as we understand, that the defendant is not so liable, if the rulings of the court as to all issues, except the third, and consequently the verdict and the judgment, are free from error and can be sustained, though it was suggested that the liability was not so clearly apparent as to be conceded or taken for granted, without any good reason given or any authority cited to establish it. We will therefore consider this question before passing to the discussion of the other matters. The first essential element of a contract is consent, and there can be no true agreement without the capacity to understand it and freedom to accept or to reject the terms proposed. The parties must be able and willing to contract. If, therefore, one person induces another who lacks this capacity or this freedom to enter into an apparent contract, equity will not recognize the transaction, however, as one author says, it may be fenced by formal observances; but, deeming it fraudulent, will in proper cases afford relief against it at the suit of the party imposed upon. Fetter on Equity, 143. On this ground the contracts of idiots, lunatics, and other persons non compos mentis are generally regarded, in a certain sense, as invalid. It has been said by many courts that the contracts of a lunatic, made after the fact of insanity has been judicially ascertained, are absolutely void, and that he can have no power to contract at all until there is a reversal of the finding and he is permitted to resume control of his property. Id. 143; Odom v. Riddick, 104 N. C. 515, 10 S. E. 609, 7 L. R. A. 118, 17 Am. St. Rep. 686. We need not now decide what is the law in this respect, as there had been no inquisition of lunacy at the time the deed in this case was executed. We will have occasion, though, to advert to the nature and effect of such an inquisition hereafter in discussing another question.

In regard to a contract entered into by a person apparently sane, before the fact of insanity has been judicially established, the law is well settled, we believe, that such contracts are at most only voidable, and will not be set aside when the other party to be affected by the decree of the court had no notice of the fact of insanity, has derived no inequitable advantage, and the parties cannot be placed in statu quo. The reason for this distinction between contracts made when there has been office found and those when there has not is said by the authorities to be plain. "Insanity is one of the most mysterious diseases to which humanity is subject. The ripest professional skill and the keenest observation sometimes fail to detect it in its incipient stages. Sound law and good morals, therefore, alike forbid the rescission of a contract on the ground of insanity by one who is unable or unwilling to restore the property acquired thereunder to the other party, who entered into it in good faith, in entire ignorance of the insanity, and without taking any advantage by reason thereof." Fetter on Equity, pp. 143, 144; Eaton on Equity, 316. "The mere fact that a man is of weak understanding, or is below the average of mankind in intellectual capacity, is not of itself an adequate ground to defeat the enforcement of an executory contract, or to set aside an executed agreement or conveyance. But where mental weakness is accompanied by other inequitable incidents, such as undue influence, great ignorance, and want of advice, or inadequacy of consideration, equity will interfere and grant either affirmative or defensive relief." Eaton on Equity, p. 317. In the case of an insane person, one wholly incompetent to contract, the law presumes fraud from the condition of the parties, the same as it does in the case of a contract of a person under duress or undue influence, or of contracts between persons occupying a fiduciary relation. The presumption is stronger or weaker according to the position or condition of the parties with respect to each other. Fraud vitiates all contracts, but as a general rule it is not presumed, but must be proved. Proof is not dispensed with, but there are certain well-defined relations, as there are certain facts, when established, from which the law presumes fraud, and which, though not necessarily binding upon the jury, may answer as plenary proof of the fraud, unless the innocence of the party charged with its commission in some way appears. Lee v. Pearce, 68 N. C. 76.

In the classification of frauds of which a court of equity takes cognizance the kind which is said to be presumed from a transaction with a lunatic is to be referred to the well-known head of constructive frauds. Eaton's Equity, 314. Lord Hardwicke, for the purpose of convenient consideration, divided the subject of fraud into four classes: "(1) Fraud arising from the facts and circumstances of imposition. (2) Fraud arising from the intrinsic matter of the bargain itself. (3) Fraud presumed from the circumstances and condition of the parties contracting. (4) Fraud affecting third persons not parties to the transaction." Earl of Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Sr. 125. This classification has generally been adopted. Our case falls under the third head, as does also a contract with a person so far drunk that he is substantially non compos mentis and not capable of apprehending the effect of what he does. The presumption is raised without the aid of any evidence of actual imposition, from the very nature of the transaction. Adams' Eq. (5th Ed.) § 182, pp. 364, 365; Bispham (3d Ed.) § 230; Eaton and Fetter, supra; Odom v. Riddick, supra; Cameron v. Power Co., 138 N. C. 365, 50 S. E. 695. Lord Hardwicke, in the case from Vesey we have cited, says: "A third kind of fraud is that which may be presumed from the circumstances and conditions of the parties contracting, and this goes further than the rule of law, which is that it must be proved, and not presumed; but it is wisely established in this court to prevent taking surreptitious advantage of the weakness or necessity of another which knowingly to do is equally against conscience as to take advantage of his ignorance." It results from these authorities, if we bring the facts of this case to the test of the principles stated in them, that the finding of the jury upon the first and second issues was quite sufficient to invest the court with the power and to induce it to set aside the deed to Wellborn, if no real injustice is thereby done to him and no superior equity has intervened in favor of a third party, for the plaintiff is not entitled to rescission and cancellation as matter of right, because the granting of that relief rests in the sound discretion of the court, and it will not decree such relief if it will work any injustice in the particular case. Bispham's Eq. § 475. The equity will not always be enforced, for instance in a case where the status quo ante, as stated and illustrated in Odom v. Riddick, supra, cannot be fully restored.

No such consideration, though, is present in this case, as the very nature of the particular relief which is sought will permit the administration of such equitable relief with even and exact justice to all parties. Greenwood is found to be a purchaser for value and without notice, and is entitled to the special favor and protection of a court of equity. The deed to him must be upheld as effectual to vest a good and indefeasible title, not only as against his vendor, but also as against the plaintiffs; for his equity is superior to theirs. But this does not deprive the plaintiffs of all relief. It is a familiar principle that when a fraudulent vendee has conveyed the property in question to a third party, who, by reason of his innocence, acquires a good and valid title as against the equity of the original vendor, the latter has a remedy against the substituted property, in this case the purchase money received from Greenwood, and the defendant will be held liable for the amount thereof, subject to any deductions for sums paid to the plaintiff at the time the deed was made and to any other payments rightfully made by him to protect the title, such as the one made in this case to disincumber the land. Upon this principle was the judgment of the court rendered, and we think that it works out the equity of the plaintiff and at the same time does full justice to the defendant. In this respect this case is unlike that of Odom v. Riddick. That the plaintiff was entitled to proceed against the defendant for a personal judgment is settled by the highest authority. Smith, in his admirable Treatise on the Equitable Remedies of Creditors, at pages 28 and 29, when speaking of a fraudulent conveyance, says: "(1) The remedy of a creditor is not defeated where the fraudulent grantee has sold the property to an innocent purchaser; for in such case the proceeds of the sale are as available as the property itself. The fraudulent grantee becomes chargeable with the proceeds derived from the innocent purchaser, but the property itself is not. (2) It is not essential that the precise property fraudulently conveyed shall remain in the hands of the fraudulent grantee to entitle the plaintiff to a recovery. Thus the grantee may have exchanged the fraudulently conveyed property for other property still held by him, in which case the fraud will be impressed upon the latter property in lieu of the former. (3) Where it is sought to follow property fraudulently conveyed and procure a decree against the property, which is subsequently reversed, complainants are not precluded from taking a different course and procuring a different decree based on the evidence on final hearing, such as a personal decree against the fraudulent grantee." See, also, 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. (1905) §§ 237, 240. In Texas v. Hardenburg, 77 U. S. (10 Wall.) 68, 19 L. Ed. 839, Chase, C. J., for the court, says: "It may be admitted that these allegations and interrogatories do not assert the right of the complainant to the proceeds with absolute directness and distinctness. The bill might have been drawn better. But we think it would savor of extreme technicality to refuse to see in the bill enough in relation to the proceeds of the bonds to warrant relief in this respect under the general prayer. Willing to allow this defendant the benefit of any defense consistent with the rules which govern proceedings in equity, we have looked into the question as if it were still open. Having thus looked into it, we find no sufficient ground for altering the conclusion embodied in the decree." The last expression of the court refers to a clause in the decree awarding a recovery of the proceeds of the bonds which had been sold. Jones v. Van Doren, 130 U. S. 684, 9 Sup. Ct. 685, 32 L. Ed. 1077. The rule and the reason for it are clearly and tersely stated by Earl, J., in Murtha v. Curley, 90 N. Y. 378: "A court of equity adapts its relief to the exigencies of the case in hand. It may restrain or compel the defendant, it may appoint a receiver, or order an accounting, it may decree specific performance, or order the delivery to the plaintiff of specific real or personal property, or it may order a sum of money to be paid to the plaintiff, and give him a personal judgment therefor."

When the property has been converted, as in this case, there is no longer any need for a decree vacating the fraudulent deed, but the court will simply declare that the deed is void as between the plaintiff (Nancy Sprinkle) and her fraudulent grantee, and award such relief as is proper in the premises. Wellborn having sold the land to a bona fide purchaser, and thereby deprived his vendor of the land itself, and having received the price, he must, by reason of his fraudulent disposition of property which he is considered to have held in trust and of its conversion into money, be held responsible to the amount of the consideration paid to him. The money in his hands stands for the land. Wait, Fraud. Conv. (8d Ed.) § 178; Holland v. Anderson, 38 Mo. 55; Lawrence v. Bank, 35 N. Y. 320; Dilworth v. Curts, 139 Ill. 508, 29 N. E. 861; Hazen v. Bank, 70 Vt. 543, 41 Atl. 1046, 67 Am. St. Rep. 680. But the administration of this relief is eminently proper under the reformed procedure, where the rights of parties are settled and determined in one action, the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity having been abolished. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 242. Our conclusion, therefore, is that by the verdict of the jury upon the issues, excluding altogether the third issue, the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief which was adjudged to them. The third issue was submitted only to ascertain whether there had been any actual fraud or undue influence used to obtain the deed, should the jury have found that Nancy Sprinkle was not insane—that is, devoid of all mental capacity—but merely weak-minded and an easy prey to the domination and overruling influence of the defendant, who availed himself of her weakness and of his power over her to secure the execution of the deed to himself by undue means; thus presenting an alternative equity for the rescission and cancellation of the deed. The issue was in no way essential to the relief granted, as the jury found, not only that there was want of sufficient mental capacity, but that the defendant knew of it, at the time he got the deed, and in addition thereto, that he obtained the land at an undervalue. It seems to us it would be a reproach to the law and to the administration of justice under its forms, if such a transaction were permitted to stand. But we do not think there can be found in the books any principle which would cause us to hesitate in the least, so far as this objection is concerned, to pronounce its condemnation and to sustain the judgment of the court, which requires the defendant to surrender any gain or benefit he has derived from it.

It follows from what we have already determined that the action of his honor in striking out the answer of the jury to the third issue and substituting one of his own has resulted in no legal wrong to the defendant which requires a reversal or even a modification of the judgment. There was error in doing so, but not reversible error. The court had the power to set aside the verdict, as to that issue—that is, pro tanto—but none to reverse the answer of the jury. This was an invasion of their province, but the defendant cannot complain of it, as it worked no material injury in law to him. The order setting aside the verdict upon that issue is sustained, as the court merely exercised its discretion to that extent, but

In other respects it is reversed, and the answer of the court to that issue will be expunged. That is but just to the defendant. The court, as it appears in the record, was induced to take the course it did under the belief that, as the answers to other issues showed "fraud in law," the proper answer to the third issue should be an affirmative one. In this there was error, as we have said, but the judgment is not affected by it, and the case is left as if that issue had not been submitted at all.

The objection to the records of the inquisition of lunacy is untenable. The case shows that they were introduced for the consideration of the court alone, in order to decide upon the competency of a witness, and this was fully explained to the jury. If counsel of plaintiff commented upon them, no objection was made at the time, and, not having been made then, it cannot be made now. State v. Tyson, 133 N. C. 692, 45 S. E. 838; Horah v. Knox, 87 N. C. 483. Besides, the defendant's counsel, instead of calling the court's attention to those comments, replied to them himself, and it must be taken, therefore, that any objection to them as being improper was thereby waived. The defendant cannot be permitted to take two chances. He should have acted promptly if he intended to avail himself of any objection to what plaintiff's counsel said to the jury about the records. It may well be doubted if the recent rule of this court, rule 27 (135 N. C. 600, 46 S. E. v.), is not also a full answer to this objection. Those records, of course, were not and could not have been considered as evidence for the jury. They were made after the date when the deed was executed, and the proceedings in which they were made were ex parte. If made before that time, they would have been competent, but not conclusive as to the insanity of Nancy Sprinkle. The presumption arising from them in such a case could be rebutted and the very truth be made to appear; that is, that while they showed insanity it did not in fact exist at the time the deed was executed. This is at least true as to all persons not parties or privies to the inquisition, as, for example, a grantee of the lunatic, who, being a stranger to the inquisition, could not traverse it, which was formally done by scire facias. Rippy v. Grant, 39 N. C. 443; Arrington v. Short, 10 N. C. 71; Christmas v. Mitchell, 38 N. C. 535; Parker v. Davis, 53 N. C. 460. The doctrine is fully discussed and the reasons for the same fully and clearly stated by Taylor, C. J., in Armstrong v. Short, 8 N. C. 11. But it is useless to discuss the matter any further, as the records were not admitted as evidence generally, and the court has done nothing, nor has it failed to do anything with respect thereto of which the defendant has any right to complain. The record in the case of Sims v. Sims (N. C.) 28 S. E. 407, 40 L. R. A. 737, 61 Am. St. Rep. 665, was clearly incompetent as substantive testimony. It was properly excluded.

The defendant's third prayer for instructions was properly refused. The substance of it had been given by the court in its response to his first and second prayers, and afterwards, in its general charge to the jury, the defendant was given the full benefit of the principle stated in his third prayer. A judge is not obliged to repeat his instructions already given, even when specially asked to do so in a prayer. The instructions, as given, were quite sufficient to cover the case. Bost v. Bost, 87 N. C. 478; Morris v. Osborne, 104 N. C. 609, 10 S. E. 476. We have said in Cameron v. Power Co., 138 N. C. 365, 50 S. E. 695, which sustains the charge of the court, that this court has adopted Coke's definition, that a person has mental capacity sufficient to contract if he knows what he is about (Moffit v. Witherspoon, 32 N. C. 185; Paine v. Roberts, 82 N. C. 451), and that the measure of capacity is the ability to understand the nature of the act in which he is engaged and its scope and effect, or its nature and consequences, not that he should be able to act wisely or discreetly, nor to drive a good bargain, but that he should be in such possession of his faculties as to enable him to know at least what he is doing and to contract understandingly. There is no particular formula to be used in such cases, as said by the court in Morris v. Osborne, supra, but the law in this respect should be explained to the jury with reference to the special and peculiar facts of the case being tried, and under the guidance of such general principles as have been settled and declared by the courts.

The remaining exceptions to be noticed were taken to the refusal of the court to instruct the jury as requested by the defendant in his thirteenth and fourteenth prayers, and to the giving of the instruction requested in the fourth prayer of the plaintiff. The last two relate to the third issue, and, as that issue has practically been eliminated from the case by the view we have taken of the law in respect to the verdict upon the other issues, there is no need of giving them further consideration, as they have become immaterial, and any error committed as to them, if error there be, was harmless. So that we come finally to the question raised by the refusal to give the instruction contained in the defendant's thirteenth prayer: Was there any evidence that the defendant had notice of the incapacity of Nancy Sprinkle at the time she made the deed to him? We think there was not only some, but ample, evidence to sustain the finding of the jury. We forbear to discuss the evidence at length or in detail for the purpose of showing that it was sufficient to support the verdict of the jury. It appears that the defendant was a kinsman and neighbor of Nancy Sprinkle and had known her all his life, with the exception of a few years when he was in the West. He knew the condition of her mind. It is true, he says, he did not know she was insane, but the jury were not bound by this statement, and might well conclude, in view of his knowledge of her, when considered in connection with the overwhelming proof as to her mental imbecility, and especially when coupled with other facts and circumstances tending to show his guilty knowledge, that he must have been aware of her true mental condition. Other circumstances are that at the time she made the trade with him her mind was so unbalanced that, in the language of one of the witnesses, "she was wild, and hardly seemed to know her whereabouts." The manner in which he procured the deed, taking her away from those who could have advised her in so important a transaction, and stating that he would not trade with her unless Fletcher Harris, her friend, was present, and that he was only going to the upper part of the county to get some evidence for her in her pension matter, when it turned out he was then preparing to carry her to Wilkesboro for the purpose of taking advantage of her mental weakness by inducing her to make the deed, and this he easily accomplished, her sudden change of mind when she had just told Parks that she would not make the deed—all this, and more, was evidence for the jury upon the question of her mental capacity. So weak was she that she was completely subjected to the power and dictation of the defendant, and he must have known it if the testimony introduced by the plaintiff was credible, and the jury have said that it was. If there was any mental operation required in the transaction, it was all on his side. It seems that he could, at pleasure, mould her will to suit his own, so like was she to clay in the hands of the potter. It is needless to prolong the discussion. To be sure there was evidence in conflict with that offered by the plaintiff, but we are considering the version of the facts relating to the first and second issue, which was apparently accepted by the jury as the true one, and, besides, we are only required to decide whether there was any evidence of the facts to be proved, namely, the insanity and the defendant's knowledge of it. Whether there is any difference, in moral quality, between the act of obtaining a deed for land from a woman known to be totally bereft of reason and the act of procuring one from a woman merely of weak understanding, who is unable to guard herself against imposition or to resist importunity, it does not lie within our province to decide, but in law, and in so far as the validity of such transactions may be involved, we know that there is not and should not be any difference, and that either is sufficient to induce a court of equity to rescind the contract and cancel the deed, or to require the vendee to give up what he has unfairly and unjustly received, with proper deductions for any sums paid out by him, if the specific remedy of rescission and cancellation cannot equitably be administered.

There being no error in any of the rulings of the court to which exception has been taken, the verdict must stand undisturbed, and, excluding from consideration the third issue, what is left of it is certainly sufficient to warrant the judgment. 1 Bigelow on Fraud, 374; Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (1905) § 947. As suggested by counsel, a court of equity would abdicate one of its most important and characteristic functions if it were to give effect to a transaction conducted under such circumstances as those established by the issues left standing by the court.

No error.

(140 N. C. 201)

DIXON v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 12, 1905.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by Anderson Dixon, as administrator, against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

There was evidence of the plaintiff tending to show that on the night of the 28th of August, 1904, in the town of Black Mountain, N. C., an engine of the defendant was backing towards the crossing near the depot, and ran over and killed the intestate; that at the time of the killing the intestate was lawfully and rightfully upon the defendant's track, endeavoring to cross it, going to his home immediately south of the railroad; that the engine was running backward at the time without lights or signal warnings, and without any one being stationed so as to keep a proper lookout. There was evidence of the defendant tending to contradict the plaintiff's testimony. Verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. Defendant excepted and appealed.

Moore & Rollins, for appellant. Tucker & Murphy, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The jury have accepted the plaintiff's version of the occurrence, and these facts fix the defendant with the legal responsibility for intestate's death. The case is governed by the decision in Reid v. Railway (at this term) 52 S. E. 307. We find no error which entitles the defendant to a new trial.

Affirmed.

(73 S. C. 43)

REVOLUTION COTTON MILLS v. UNION COTTON MILLS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. SALE — RECOVERY FOR SHORTAGE IN WEIGHTS—EVIDENCE.

Where a buyer sued to recover for loss of weights in cotton sold under written contracts made under the rules of the Interior Cotton Buyers' Association, which provide that the seller shall have the right to reweigh, if the buyer is dissatisfied with the weights, and it is shown that the broker of the seller consented to the buyer using the cotton before notice to the seller of the objection to the weights, so that it could not be reweighed, plaintiff can show that such broker had no authority to grant such permission.

2. NEW TRIAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence is conflicting, a new trial was properly refused; the credibility of the witness and the inferences to be drawn from the evidence being questions for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. New Trial, §§ 144, 145.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Union County; Gary, Judge.

Action by the Revolution Cotton Mills against the Union Cotton Mills. From judgment for plaintiff for less than its claim, it appeals. Affirmed.

Simpson & Bomar, for appellant. Hydrick & Sawyer, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. By this action the plaintiff sought to recover the sum of $626.16, with interest from the 15th of June, 1903. The case came on to be heard before Judge Ernest Gary and a jury at the October term, 1903, of the court of common pleas for Union county. The verdict was for the plaintiff for $86.96. After entry of judgment thereon, the plaintiff appealed to this court upon the following grounds:

"(1) Because, as it is respectfully submitted, the presiding judge erred in allowing the witness Beale, on behalf of the defendant, to testify, in answer to a question by the defendant's counsel, that Ralli Bros., for whom Beale was working, did not know Crabtree in the transaction at all, when the matter inquired about was res inter alios acta, and could not affect the plaintiff's rights or interests in this controversy; the error being that such testimony was incompetent and irrelevant to the issue here under the circumstances.

"(2) Because the presiding judge erred as a matter of law in not setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial on when the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses showed, and the evidence of the defendant's witness Beale tended to show, that all of the 300 bales sold by the defendant to the plaintiff had lost in weight in an amount considerably more than the sum found by the jury; there being absolutely no testimony in contradiction of this.

"(3) Because the presiding judge erred as a matter of law in not setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial on the ground that there was absolutely no testimony to support the verdict for the amount found, and that the uncontradicted testimony showed that the verdict should have been for a larger amount, to wit, at least for an additional amount equal to the value of the cotton which the 166 bales, not weighed by defendant's witness, had lost according to the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses; their testimony as to such weights being absolutely uncontradicted, and the witnesses themselves being unimpeached.

"(4) Because the presiding judge erred as a matter of law in not setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial on the ground that such verdict was unsupported by the evidence, when the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, none of whom were impeached, showed, and the testimony of Beale the defendant's witness tended to show, that all of the cotton had lost in weight; the testimony of the said Beale being that every one of the 134 bales weighed by him, with two exceptions, had lost in weight, and that the average loss of the said bales was $5\frac{25}{100}$ pounds per bale, over and above the 8 pounds allowed by the contract.

"(5) Because the presiding judge erred as a matter of law in not setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial on the ground that when the plaintiff's witnesses had testified to a much larger loss than that for which the verdict was rendered, and the defendant's witness Beale had testified that the 134 bales weighed by him had lost in weight to the amount found by the jury, and that he did not weigh the remaining bales, the verdict for only the amount of loss testified to by Beale was not supported by the evidence, but was absolutely in conflict with it, and therefore should be set aside.

"(6) Because the presiding judge erred as a matter of law in not setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial on the ground that, taking the whole testimony together, the verdict of the jury could not be sustained in any possible view of such testimony, and should have been set aside.

"(7) Because the presiding judge, in considering the motion to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant a new trial, was bound under the law at least to exercise a sound, legal discretion, and that the testimony in this case was so overwhelmingly and uncontradictedly in favor of the plaintiff that his refusal to grant such new trial was, we respectfully submit, an abuse of discretion, for which a new trial should now be granted."

We will now examine this matter. As the appellant in his argument states, the appeal raises two questions: (1) whether certain testimony admitted over plaintiff's objection was competent; (2) whether it was error to refuse the motion for a new trial.

1. It would be well in leading up to the first question to give a brief statement of the facts. On the 28th of May, 1903, the defendant, acting through W. D. Nesbitt & Co., which last named was represented by Thomas Crabtree, of Greensboro, N. C., sold to the plaintiff 300 bales of cotton, represented to weigh 149,719 pounds, at $12\frac{1}{16}$ cents per pound. A regular agreement in writing was signed by the plaintiff and the defendant themselves touching this sale and its terms. The defendant did not himself handle this cotton, but had it shipped to the plaintiff by Ralli Bros., of Montgomery, Ala. On June 3, 1903, 200 bales, stated to be the aggregate weight of 98,377 pounds, and on June 13, 1903, 100 bales, stated to be of the aggregate weight of 51,342 pounds. The plaintiff paid the defendant, on June 3, 1903, \$11,866.73, and on June 13, 1903, \$6,193.13, in payment of said 300 bales of cotton. For some cause the plaintiff became dissatisfied with the alleged weights of said cotton, and he caused the same to be reweighed between June 15 and July 1, 1903, by Thomas Crabtree, without any notice or direction from the defendant until the 30th day of June, when a notice was served upon the defendant of the loss in weight to the extent of 5,191 pounds, which after an allowance of three pounds on each bale, to be made on account of difference in scales, made the net shortage 4,291 pounds. When this information reached the defendant, it promptly gave notice that Ralli Bros. would be notified, and would send their agent to reweigh all said cotton. W. M. Beale was sent by said firm on the day it received the notice and reweighed 134 bales of the 300 bales sold and delivered to the plaintiff. Mr. Beale found that there was a lossage of $5\frac{3}{100}$ pounds per bale. When Mr. Beale sought the other 166 bales to be weighed, he was informed by the plaintiff that, with Thomas Crabtree's assent, the plaintiff had already used the same. When the defendant was notified of the result of Mr. Beale's weighing the cotton, it sent to the plaintiff its check for \$56.96 to settle the lossage per Mr. Beale's statement. The plaintiff refused to accept this check, and returned the same to the defendant. Both the plaintiff and defendant admit that the contract between them was to be governed by the Interior Cotton Buyers' Association. Thomas Crabtree was examined by the plaintiff as its witness, and admitted that he consented for them to use the 161 bales. W. M. Beale was examined by the defendant as its witness. During his examination he was asked: "Did Mr. Crabtree have any authority from the shippers of this cotton to violate the rules?" After objection, the witness said: "We don't know Mr. Crabtree in the transaction at all." Now, the question for this court is, was this testimony competent? It must be remembered that Mr. Crabtree had been allowed to testify at length as to the weights of the 300 bales of cotton after it was received by the plaintiff, and also as to the permission he gave to the plaintiff to use the 166 bales. It became necessary to know if Mr. Crabtree's authority was admitted, and this witness answered this question in the negative. It seems to us that this testimony was admissible, because by the rules of the Interior Cotton Buyers' Association, by which the plaintiff had agreed to be bound, it was agreed that the defendant should have the right to reweigh, if not satisfied. This exception, being the first, is overruled.

2. The second question, relating to the refusal of the circuit judge of the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, will now be considered. This motion for a new trial was made on the minutes of the court. It is admitted that, if the circuit judge finds that there is testimony on each side, relating to the issue, a question of the sufficiency of the testimony to support the verdict of the jury is entirely within the discretion of the circuit judge, and will not be reviewed by this court; but, if there is no testimony offered on certain issues, a question of law will be made, which will be the subject-matter of an appeal to this court. All questions relating to the credibility of witnesses and the inferences to be drawn from testimony are questions for the jury. There were such issues in this case. Besides, the plaintiff introduced in testimony the invoices of the weights of these bales of cotton and attacked the weight of each bale. The plaintiff, by its conduct, in using the 166 bales, deprived the defendant of any right to investigate the weight of said 166 bales, which right the defendant sought to exercise.

We must state that we do not see how Mr. Crabtree could interfere with this right of the defendant. The only agency of his in the defendant's matters was that relating to the sale. The defendant had asserted its right to contract for itself with the plaintiff, and the plaintiff ratified such assertion. Under these circumstances, we do not see that the plaintiff has suffered any injury which this court can repair.

It is the judgment of this court, therefore, that exceptions 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 should be overruled. It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

(72 S. C. 553)

Ex parte POSTAL TELEGRAPH CABLE CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 2, 1905.)

CERTIORARI—WHEN LIES—JUDGMENT IN CONDEMNATION.

After judgment entered by the clerk in the circuit court on condemnation proceedings, and motion in such court to set aside the judgment for want of proper notice, the remedy on refusal of an order to vacate the judgment is not certiorari, but appeal.

Petition by the Postal Telegraph Company for writ of certiorari to the clerk of the court of common pleas of Spartanburg county to certify the record in certain condemnation proceedings of Mary T. Beacham against the petitioner. Motion to quash writ granted.

R. K. Karson and Ravenel & Gantt, for petitioner. J. W. Nash, for Mrs. Beacham.

WOODS, J. On the petition of Postal Telegraph Cable Company, his honor, the Chief Justice, issued a writ of certiorari requiring the clerk of the court of common pleas for Spartanburg county to certify to this court all the proceedings concerning the assessment of damages for a right of way to be paid by the telegraph company to Mrs. Mary T. Beacham; the allegation of the petition being that the judgment entered in those proceedings is absolutely null and void for lack of the written notice of the proceedings to the telegraph company required by law. From the return of the clerk, these facts appear: Mrs. Mary T. Beacham, on March 12, 1903, filed her petition with the clerk to have compensation assessed by a jury for land appropriated by the telegraph company for a right of way. Notice of the proceeding was served on Messrs. Ravenel & Gantt, attorneys for the company, but not on an officer of the corporation. His honor, Judge Aldrich, made an order on March 13, 1903, directing the clerk to impanel a jury to ascertain the compensation to be paid for the land required. The petitioner, the telegraph company, appearing only for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, moved before Judge Aldrich on March 20, 1903, at his chambers, in Aiken, for an order rescinding his order to the clerk, on the ground that he was without jurisdiction to make that order. This motion was dismissed on the ground that, under subdivision 4, § 402, of the Code of Procedure of 1902, it could not be heard in Aiken. The petitioner then renewed the motion before Judge Aldrich at Greenwood, on March 27, 1903, denying the jurisdiction of Judge Aldrich to make the original order providing for the impanelling of a jury on four different grounds, which it is not necessary to set out, as none of them are relied on in this petition. On March 28, 1903, Judge Aldrich made an order denying this motion. The telegraph company then served on the clerk and the attorneys for Mrs. Beacham a written protest against further proceeding with the organization of the jury, on these grounds: "(1) Because due notice of the time and place of the organization of the jury herein has never been given to the defendant's attorneys; (2) because the jury herein, as now summoned, was drawn without due notice served upon the defendant or its attorneys; (3) because there is now pending in the court of common pleas of Spartanburg county an action to determine the petitioner's right to compensation herein." The clerk nevertheless proceeded, and the jury assessed the compensation to be made at $150. On this assessment the clerk, on the motion of the attorneys for Mrs. Beacham, entered judgment in due form for the amount assessed and costs, aggregating $203.30, as a judgment of the court of common pleas. Subsequently, on June 29, 1903, the telegraph company moved before his honor, Judge Dantzler, then presiding at the Spartanburg court, "for an order setting aside and vacating the verdict and judgment herein, and vacating the execution herein issued, and for such other relief as to the court may seem just, for the reason that the court has no jurisdiction in this proceeding." In his order Judge Dantzler says: "I find that a motion was made before Judge Aldrich in this same proceeding, at Greenwood, on March 27, 1903, for an order to rescind the original order of March 13, 1903, on the ground that he did not have jurisdiction to make said order. He overruled the motion in this order of March 28, 1903. His order stands. If for no other reason, I would have to refuse this motion because this order binds me. But, even if I were not so bound, I must refuse the motion because it does not raise any question fatal to the jurisdiction which the facts sustain. This is a special proceeding under a particular statute, and, so far as has been brought to my attention, the statutory requirements have been complied with. The motion is refused." From this order the telegraph company appealed, but the appeal was dismissed by the clerk of this court for want of prosecution, July 22, 1904. The telegraph company then instituted this proceeding in certiorari to have the record reviewed, alleging that the judgment entered by the clerk is void for want of jurisdiction, relying solely on the ground that notice of the proceeding under which it was entered was not served on the telegraph company as required by law.

At the hearing of the cause counsel for Mrs. Beacham moved to quash the writ on a number of grounds, one of which was that the decree of Judge Dantzler decided the precise point which the telegraph company now undertakes to make by certiorari, and, the appeal from that order having been dismissed, the objection to the jurisdiction on the ground of want of the notice of the condemnation proceedings required by statute has been finally adjudicated against the telegraph company. If the telegraph company had desired to have this court review the condemnation proceedings, and the orders hereinbefore recited made by Judge Aldrich, on the ground that jurisdiction had not been acquired by due service of the notice required by the statute, it could have done so before the judgment was entered only by certiorari or some other similar proceeding, and not by appeal. This was decided in Aull v. R. R. Co., 42 S. C. 431, 20 S. E. 302. But in the present case the telegraph company waited, after Judge Aldrich had refused to set aside his first order, until the clerk of the court of common pleas for Spartanburg county had entered a formal judgment for the amount of the condemnation verdict and costs, and then moved in that court to have this judgment and all the proceedings which led up to it annulled for lack of jurisdiction. In deciding this motion Judge Dantzler, in the circuit court, at the instance of the telegraph company, passed upon the question of law and fact affecting the adequacy of service of notice of the condemnation proceedings; and, if the circuit court had jurisdiction of the motion, then it is evident this court could not review its conclusions except by appeal. The authority of the clerk to enter a formal judgment in the court of common pleas on the verdict of a condemnation jury regularly obtained was not drawn in question before Judge Dantzler, and is not made in the petition for certiorari. For the purposes of this proceeding the judgment must, therefore, be considered regular in all respects, except for the alleged vice of lack of service of the original notice. There can be no question of the right of a defendant to move in the circuit court, as the telegraph company did here, to have declared void a judgment entered in that court by the clerk; and the court's decision on such motion as to the validity of the judgment is conclusive, at least as to the particular ground of attack covered by the motion. The case, therefore, stands just as if a defendant had moved in the circuit court to have what purported to be a judgment by default declared void for lack of service of the summons, as required by law, and on such motion the circuit court had adjudged the service sufficient and the judgment valid. In such case clearly the remedy of the defendant would not be by writ of certiorari, but by appeal to this court. So, in this case, Judge Dantzler, in the court of common pleas, certainly had jurisdiction to entertain the motion made by the telegraph company to relieve it from a judgment alleged to be void for want of anything requisite to the jurisdiction of the court; and, having adjudged on the motion to vacate the judgment that the facts failed to sustain the attack on it for want of jurisdiction based on alleged lack of service of the notice required by law of the condemnation proceedings, his decision is itself a final judgment of the court of common pleas on a matter within its jurisdiction, and can be reviewed only by appeal.

The motion to quash the writ of certiorari is granted.

The CHIEF JUSTICE did not participate in this opinion, because of illness.

(73 S. C. 9)

MAULDIN v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 14, 1905.)

1. PLEADING—DEMURRER—SECOND TRIAL.

Where a case is tried on the merits, it sufficiently shows that the judge who tried it overruled a demurrer, on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action, so that a succeeding judge on a second trial cannot consider it.

2. PLEADING—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

Defendant cannot complain of evidence received in support of allegations in the complaint to which he did not object.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, § 1433.]

3. EVIDENCE—BEST AND SECONDARY.

In an action for failure to furnish cars to plaintiff on which to ship goods ordered, evidence of verbal orders for the goods is not objectionable, because they were subsequently followed by written orders to the same effect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 517.]

4. SAME—OPINION—DAMAGES.

In an action for failure to deliver cars to a manufacturer in which to ship special orders, the item of damage must be shown, and plaintiff cannot estimate the amount in a lump sum.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 2289.]

5. CARRIERS—FAILURE TO DELIVER CARS—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Where a carrier is unable to furnish cars because of an unprecedented amount of business, such failure is no ground for punitive damages.

6. SAME—DEFENSES.

A shipper, in the absence of special contract, is not entitled to damage for failure to carry his freight, caused by a sudden press of business which could not have been reasonably anticipated.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County; Klugh, Judge.

Action by Joab Mauldin against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Lyles & McMahan and Jas. W. Moore, for appellant. Lyles & McMahan, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff alleged he was engaged in the manufacture of lumber at Duke's siding, on the line of defendant's railroad, "solely on bills and orders for special sizes, lengths, and quality, and to be delivered to plaintiff's customers and to markets aforesaid under contract, at and by special and stated times," and although the defendant was notified of the character of his business and of his contracts for lumber being overdue, and although frequent demands were made for cars to ship lumber on these contracts, yet the defendant willfully, maliciously, wantonly, and negligently, failed and refused to furnish the cars required. The items of damage set up were: (1) Expense and inconvenience of piling the accumulating lumber; (2) depreciation of value of lumber; (3) cancellation of orders making sales necessary at reduced price; (4) loss of custom. On the first trial of the cause, plaintiff obtained a verdict for $1,400, but a new trial was ordered by his honor, Judge Aldrich, unless the plaintiff would remit all the recovery above $600, and plaintiff elected to take a new trial rather than remit $800 of his verdict. On the second trial before Judge Klugh, the verdict was for $850, and judgment was entered accordingly.

1. The first question made by the appeal is whether Judge Klugh was right in finding, as a matter of fact, that Judge Aldrich, at the former trial, had overruled the written demurrer submitted to him, on the ground that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and as a matter of law that this decision of Judge Aldrich was binding on him, though not reduced to writing and signed. Inasmuch as it was admitted by counsel that the demurrer was presented to Judge Aldrich, and he subsequently proceeded with the trial of the cause, it necessarily follows he overruled the demurrer. It is true, the decision as to the demurrer should have been given in writing and signed, as required by section 289 of the Code of Procedure. But an order of this kind does not dispose of the cause, and no formal judgment is entered on it; and hence, if counsel do not request that it be reduced to writing, the requirement of the statute may well be deemed waived. After the demurrer had been overruled by Judge Aldrich, it could not again be considered by Judge Klugh. Turner v. Association, 51 S. C. 33, 27 S. E. 947.

2. The plaintiff having alleged in his complaint loss of custom as an item of damage arising out of defendant's failure to furnish cars, and no motion having been made to strike out this allegation, the defendant cannot be heard to complain that evidence was introduced on this subject. Martin v. Railway Co., 70 S. C. 8, 48 S. E. 616.

3. There was no error in refusing the motion to strike out plaintiff's evidence as to the verbal orders for lumber received by him, made on the ground that the written orders following the verbal were the best evidence of the orders which plaintiff alleged he was prevented from filling. Most probably these verbal orders at the time they were received, became the main factors which influenced the conduct of plaintiff's business rather than the subsequent confirmatory written orders.

4. The sixth exception alleges error in allowing the plaintiff to give in a lump sum his estimate of the aggregate damages sustained by reason of the failure of the railroad company to furnish cars. The general rule is that the opinions of witnesses as to the quantum of damages are not admissible. 8 Elliott on Evidence, § 2006. One recognized exception to this rule is thus stated in 1 Wharton on Evidence, § 511, quoted with approval in Jones v. Fuller, 19 S. C. 66, 69, 45 Am. Rep. 761: "When the thing damaged is one of every day use, whose depreciation an ordinary observer can estimate, then such an observer may be called to express his opinion of the extent of the damage sustained. If the facts which form the basis of such an opinion can be specified, then they must be stated; if the conclusion is one which the jury can draw, then to the jury must be left the drawing the conclusion. But when, as is often the case, these facts can be best expressed by the damage they cause, then this damage and its extent may be testified to by the witness." Under this exception it was competent for the witness to describe the condition of the lumber due to exposure to weather and give his estimate of the depreciation, and so with the other separate items of damage; but it was not quite competent to give a lump estimate of the total damage without indicating the items which entered into it, for the reason that it was impossible for the jury to separate the items of damage which, under the instructions of the court, could be considered the proximate result of defendant's alleged breach of duty, and for which it might be liable from those items of alleged damage which, under the instruction of the court, would be too remote to enter into the verdict.

5. The circuit judge refused to charge the request that there was no evidence to warrant a verdict for punitive damages. Not only was there no evidence offered of malicious, willful or reckless refusal to furnish cars for plaintiff's lumber, but it was stated by plaintiff himself that there was a "tie-up" of the cars." The uncontradicted testimony on behalf of the defendant was that this "tie-up" was due to an abnormal demand for cars of all kinds, especially flat cars, that it was impossible for defendant to get orders for cars filled or to get them from other roads, and frequently impossible to get defendant's own cars on other roads returned. Some cars were furnished for plaintiff's lumber, and there was no evidence whatever of any intentional discrimination against him. The local agent assured plaintiff he would get cars as soon as possible, and the mere failure in the circumstances to answer a telegram or a letter asking for cars is no evidence of willful disregard of plaintiff's rights. There was, therefore, no ground for refusing to charge that the defendant had not incurred liability for punitive damages.

6. Another request erroneously refused was as follows: "The obligation to furnish cars in this case is an obligation imposed by law, and is not as binding as if the defendant railroad had contracted to furnish the cars. In this case the defendant is not liable if it has shown a reasonable excuse for failure to furnish the cars; heavy and unprecedented traffic, not reasonably to be expected and prepared for, would excuse the railroad for a deficiency of cars." If a common carrier assumes a contractual obligation outside of and beyond the duty imposed by public policy, it must perform the contract or pay the damages, unless it can show circumstances which relieve from the performance of contracts generally; and unexpected emergencies in its business would not be sufficient to excuse it. 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1473. Here, however, the claim is not based on a contract, but on the ordinary public duty of the carrier to receive and transport promptly all freight offered. Promptness in transportation is of great and increasing importance, and hence common carriers should be required to use every reasonable means and to take every reasonable precaution to insure it. They should not only have ample rolling stock for the prompt dispatch of all passenger and freight business usually to be expected, but they should by all reasonable forethought and effort prepare for unusual demands for transportation. And such forethought requires not only a study of their own business, but of the industries, the development and the progress of the country whose carrying business they undertake. But this duty does not extend to the acceptance and immediate transportation of freight at all hazards and in all circumstances. The true rule is thus stated in 5 A. & E. Ency. Law, 168: "Where there is a sudden and unusual press of business, arising from exceptional causes, and which the company could not reasonably be expected to have anticipated, it is not liable for the delay thereby necessitated, unless it had specially contracted to furnish such transportation; it is bound to provide facilities for such transportation only as might reasonably have been anticipated." Porcher v. Railroad Co., 14 Rich. Law, 181; Ayres v. Railway Co. (Wis.) 37 N. W. 432, 5 Am. St. Rep. 226; Railway Co. v. Rae, 68 Am. Dec. 574; 4 Elliott on Railroads, §§ 1470, 1473; 6 Cyc. 373.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case be remanded for a new trial.

POPE, C. J., did not participate in this opinion because of illness.

(124 Ga. 323)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. HALL et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. CARRIERS—LOSS OF FREIGHT — LIMITING LIABILITY.

A common carrier cannot limit his legal liability by any notice given, either by publication, or by entry on receipts given or tickets sold. By special contract, he may relieve himself of his common-law liability as an insurer, and may contract against liability arising from certain losses which do not involve negligence of the carrier or his servants; but he cannot, even by special contract, exempt himself from liability for loss of goods intrusted to him, where the loss arises from his negligence or that of his servants.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 637, 675-687.]

2. SAME—LIVE STOCK SHIPMENT.

A common carrier of goods which transports live stock is as to the latter property also a common carrier. There are, however, certain inherent differences between live stock and inanimate property offered for transportation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 462-469.]

3. SAME—LIABILITY FOR GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

A carrier of live stock may by special contract so limit its liability for loss or damages that it will be liable only in the event that it is guilty of gross negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 933-939.]

4. SAME—LIMITATION AS TO VALUE.

A railway company, in its capacity as a common carrier, may, as a basis for fixing its charges and limiting the amount of its corresponding liability, lawfully make with a shipper a contract of affreightment, embracing an actual and bona fide agreement as to the value of the property to be transported; and in such case the latter, when loss, damage, or destruction occurs, will be bound by the agreed valuation. But a mere general limitation as to the value, expressed in a bill of lading, and amounting to no more than an arbitrary preadjustment of the measure of damages, will not, though the shipper assent in writing to the terms of the document, serve to exempt a negligent carrier from liability for the true value.

5. SAME.

Where there is an issue of fact as to whether there was an actual bona fide valuation or a mere arbitrary effort to limit liability, the question is one for the jury; but where the written contract shows that it falls within the latter description, and there is no issue of fact on that subject, it is proper for the court to construe the contract.

6. SAME—FRAUD OF SHIPPER.

The evidence in this case was not sufficient to show the perpetration of any fraud by the shipper on the company.

7. SAME—ACT OF GOD.

Where the common-law rule applies, under which no excuse avails a common carrier in cases of loss unless it was occasioned by the act of God or the public enemies of the state, if a locomotive engineer desired to leave his train and proceed with the engine some distance to a water tank for the purpose of obtaining water, and thereupon caused the flagman to uncouple the engine from the cars, which were left standing on the track while the engineer, in company with the conductor (who had authority to control him) and the fireman, proceeded on the engine to the water tank, obtained the water, and returned to where the cars were, but the engineer caused the engine to run at such a rate of speed as to be evidently dangerous, and to result in wrecking one of the cars, and causing the loss of property being transported, even if he were insane at the time, the loss could not be attributed to the act of God, within the meaning of the rule of law referred to, so as to excuse the carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 523-525.]

8. SAME.

The meaning of "the act of God" falling within the rule discussed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 523-530.]

9. SAME—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In this state it is the general rule that, in order to avail himself of the act of God as an excuse, the burden is upon the common carrier to establish not only that the act of God ultimately occasioned the loss, but that his own negligence did not contribute thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, §§ 578, 578½.]

10. SAME—DILIGENCE OF CARRIER—EVIDENCE.

Where, under a special contract for the shipment of live stock, the common-law liability of the common carrier was so modified that the carrier was liable for injuries arising only from fraud or gross negligence, it was admissible to defend by pleading and proving that its engineer upon the train on which the goods were shipped suddenly became insane at the time of the transaction complained of; and it would be for the jury to say whether the carrier did not know, or could not by the exercise of proper care have known of it, and whether it exercised due diligence in view of the situation and circumstances disclosed by the evidence.

11. TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Where an action was brought against a railroad company for loss alleged to have arisen from negligence, and the defendant in its answer denied the negligence, and some two years thereafter, pending the trial of the case, amended its pleadings by setting up that the engineer in charge of its engine became suddenly insane at the time of the transaction complained of, and that it was thereby relieved from liability, counsel for the plaintiff could legitimately comment upon the time when this amendment was made and this defense set up.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 48, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 280.]

12. DAMAGES—ELEMENTS—INTEREST.

Where a suit is brought for damages arising from the destruction of property, and there is a basis of calculation as to the value, interest is not recoverable eo nomine. But the jury may consider the length of time damages have been withheld, the character of the tort, the conduct of the defendant, and all the circumstances of the transaction, and may in their discretion increase the amount of damages by adding to the value of the property destroyed a sum equal to the interest on such value; the entire sum found being returned as damages, and not exceeding the amount sued for.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Morgan County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by J. S. Hall and others against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. From the judgment defendant brings error, and plaintiffs assign cross-error. Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed, and on cross-bill dismissed.

Hall and Crawford brought suit against the Central of Georgia Railway Company to recover damages for the killing of a mare. There was no conflict in the evidence as to the following facts: One White, acting for the plaintiffs, who were the owners of the mare, shipped her from Augusta to Bishop, Ga., along with several other horses, over the defendant's railroad. The train came to a standstill, and was divided into two sections, with one of which the engineer proceeded. At a point on the road the engineer said that the engine was out of water, and that he must go on to the water tank. The engine was cut loose from the cars, and went on to the tank, where water was obtained. The conductor and fireman accompanied the engineer. On the return the speed at which the engineer ran the engine was 20 or 25 miles an hour. The conductor warned him three or four times that he should reduce the speed, or the engine would run into the cars. He replied that he knew where the train was. There was a collision. The car containing the mare was wrecked, and she was killed. The defendant denied negligence, and pleaded that the engineer was stricken with sudden insanity at the time and while the transaction was in progress, that his acts were due thereto, and that there was no negligence on the part of the defendant. The plaintiff demurred to the plea, but the demurrer was overruled. Evidence was introduced as to the market value of the horse. The jury found for the plaintiff $800. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and it excepted. Plaintiff filed a cross-bill of exceptions, complaining of the allowance of the plea setting up a sudden access of insanity, and the refusal to sustain the demurrer thereto. The other facts, so far as necessary, are stated in the opinion.

Dessan, Harris & Harris, for plaintiffs in error. Saml. H. Sibley, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. 1-3. In cases of loss the presumption of law is against a common carrier, and no excuse avails him unless it was occasioned by the act of God or the public enemies of the state. "A common carrier cannot limit his legal liability by any notice given, either by publication, or by entry on receipts given or tickets sold. He may make an express contract, and will then be governed thereby. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2264, 2276. Construing these two sections together, the latter does not intend to permit a common carrier to relieve himself of the duty of exercising diligence, but by special contract to relieve himself of his common-law liability as an insurer, and to contract against liability arising from certain losses which do not involve negligence of the carrier or his servants. The requirement of diligence on the part of a common carrier is one involving public policy, and it would be contrary to such policy to allow him to relieve himself from his duty in this regard by contract. A common carrier cannot, therefore, by special contract exempt himself from liability for loss of goods intrusted to him, where the loss arises from his own negligence. Berry v. Cooper, 28 Ga. 543; Purcell v. Southern Exp. Co., 34 Ga. 315; Southern Exp. Co. v.

Purcell, 37 Ga. 108 (2), 92 Am. Dec. 53; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Exposition Cotton Mills, 81 Ga. 522, 7 S. E. 916, 2 L. R. A. 102; Georgia R. Co. v. Gann & Reaves, 68 Ga. 350; Central R. Co. v. Pickett & Blair, 87 Ga. 734, 13 S. E. 750. In Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Sloat, 93 Ga. 803, 20 S. E. 219, it was said that the question as to how far a shipper might, by express agreement signed by him, contract against liability on the part of a common carrier for injuries arising from negligence, was still an open question. But in the next case reported in the same volume it was said: "But carriers cannot by any special contract exempt themselves from liability for loss occasioned by their negligence." Georgia R. Co. v. Keener, 93 Ga. 808, 21 S. E. 287, 44 Am. St. Rep. 197. The carrier referred to was a common carrier. See, also, Wood v. Southern Exp. Co., 95 Ga. 451, 452, 22 S. E. 535; Central Ry. Co. v. Murphey & Hunt, 113 Ga. 514, 38 S. E. 970, 53 L. R. A. 720. This ruling is not dependent upon our statute, but accords with the decisions of other courts, though it is not universally so held. 6 Cyc. 387, 388. A common carrier of goods which transports live stock is as to the latter property also a common carrier. Hutchinson on Carriers (2d Ed.) § 221; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 428. It has nevertheless been held that a carrier of live stock may by special contract so limit its liability for loss or damage that it will be liable only in the event it is guilty of gross negligence. Cooper v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 110 Ga. 859, 36 S. E. 240; Georgia Railroad v. Spears, 66 Ga. 485, 42 Am. Rep. 81; Central R. Co. v. Bryant, 73 Ga. 722; Cincinnati Ry. Co. v. Disbrow, 76 Ga. 253. If it were an original question, it might well be argued that it is somewhat anomalous to hold that such a carrier is a common carrier of live stock, that extraordinary diligence is required of it, now so declared in the statutes of this state, and that it is contrary to public policy to allow a common carrier to contract against liability resulting from its own negligence, and yet to say that in regard to live stock it may contract against such liability except as to gross negligence. See 6 Cyc. 391, 392, and citations; New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. Ed. 627; E. T. Y. & G. R. Co. v. Johnston, 75 Ala. 596-605, 51 Am. Rep. 489. But the ruling seems to be established in this state. Perhaps the difference between live stock and inanimate freight may furnish the basis for this holding. In the case at bar the contract provided that the owner or shipper assumed and released the railroad from "all other damages incident to railroad transportation which shall not have been caused by fraud or gross negligence of said company." This became the measure of the negligence which would render it liable. The presiding judge, in effect, so charged, and we do not think his charge, taken as a whole, was subject to the criticisms made upon it as to this point.

4. It was contended that under the contract the defendant was not liable for the value of the horse beyond the sum of $125. Was the contract relied on by the defendant an actual bona fide agreement as to the value of the property lost, or was it a mere general limitation as to the value, amounting to an arbitrary preadjustment of damages? The former would be valid; the latter not. Central Ry. Co. v. Murphey, 113 Ga. 514, 38 S. E. 970, 53 L. R. A. 720; Georgia R. Co. v. Keener, 93 Ga. 808, 21 S. E. 287, 44 Am. St. Rep. 197; Georgia Southern Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807. The contract, which was included in the bill of affreightment and signed by the agent of the owner and the agent of the company, contained the following provisions: "And it is further agreed that should any damage occur for which the company may be liable, the value at the place and date of shipment shall govern the settlement, in which the amount claimed shall not exceed, for a stallion or jack, $200, for a horse or mule, $125, cattle $40, other animals, $20." This was upon a printed blank containing these amounts already prepared. It did not purport to put a valuation upon the particular horse or horses shipped, but limited the amount to be claimed for any horse, regardless of its real or estimated value, to $125. It had a prearranged amount to which its liability should be limited as to various animals. If this could be treated as a bona fide estimate or valuation as to the horse which was killed, it might equally be said to be a valuation of every possible horse which might be shipped, before it was ever seen or heard of by the company's agent. The expression "other animals $20" would thus be treated as being a bona fide valuation of any other animal, regardless of what was its nature, character, or actual value. A rabbit, a hog, or an elephant might equally fall under the designation of "other animals," and the arbitrary limitation of $20 would apply equally to each of them. Moreover, it will be noticed that, in case of loss, the company does not agree that the value of the horse shall be fixed at $125, but the agreement is that "the amount claimed shall not exceed" that sum. This was clearly an attempt to limit the liability, not to determine value. As was said in the opinion in Central Ry. Co. v. Murphey: "Could any fair and reasonable mind ever reach the conclusion that there was between the plaintiffs and the defendant any agreement at all respecting the value of this particular car load of grapes, or that there was even a remote intention to make such an agreement?"

5. Should the presiding judge have submitted the question to the jury to decide as to whether this contract amounted to an actual bona fide valuation? On its face, it did not do so. Outside of the paper, there was no evidence of any actual valuation of this particular horse. It, with several others, was delivered to the railroad company together with certain sulkies, which seemed to have indicated that the horses were to be used otherwise than as common draft animals. Eight horses were also shipped in two cars, and an attendant went with them. No inquiry was made as to their nature or value. The company had two kinds of blanks, one for use where live stock was shipped "released, the other where it was not. An agent of the defendant asked the plaintiff's agent if he wished to ship the horses "released," and, upon receiving an affirmative answer, filled one of the blanks, except as to the rate, which was filled in by the rate clerk. There is only one "release rate" for horses. The rate clerk has the classification of the state railroad commission, and fills in the rate that belongs to that agreement. A witness for the defendant testified that the rate was fixed at $27 per car between the points included in the transportation, "based on the valuation of $125," but he admitted that nothing was said to the shipper as to valuation. This was the entire transaction. True, the shipper admitted that he knew that if he had named a higher valuation on the horses he would have had to have paid a higher rate, and that if he had not shipped "released" the rate would have been much higher. But there was nothing in what transpired between the parties to show a bona fide effort to fix a value on the horse which was killed, or on any or all of the horses. Every shipper who is asked whether he will ship "released" probably knows that if he does not do so the rate will be higher. But this does not change an effort to limit liability into an actual valuation of property.

The construction of the contract made in this case is controlled by the decisions in Georgia R. Co. v. Keener, supra, and Central Ry. Co. v. Murphey, supra. The decision in Southern Railway Co. v. Horner, 115 Ga. 381, 41 S. E. 649, is cited to sustain the contention that the case should have been submitted to the jury. In that case it is stated, in the report of facts, that "the testimony was in direct conflict as to the making of a special contract of shipment, * * * and that Lee [the defendant's agent] gave him a rate based on a valuation of $100 for the horse, and explained to him that the tariff required an addition of fifty per cent. for each additional $100 of valuation." The contract contained the following terms: "The said shipper or the consignee is to pay freight thereon to the said carrier at the rate of — per —, which is the lowest published tariff rate, based upon the express condition that the carrier assumes liability on the said live stock to the extent only of the following agreed valuation, upon which valuation is based the rate charged for the transportation of the said animals, and beyond which valuation neither the said carrier nor any connecting carrier shall be liable in any event. * * *

If horses or mules, not exceeding 100, $100 each." It was held that, under the terms of this contract and the evidence introduced, an issue was made as to whether in fact there was a valuation or an arbitrary preadjustment of damages, and that this was properly submitted to the jury. The difference between submitting to the jury to determine, under the evidence, whether terms of this character inserted in a contract of affreightment constituted a bona fide and actual valuation or a mere preadjustment of damages, and, on the other hand, submitting to the jury the construction of the contract alone, which plainly on its face was not a valuation, but an effort to limit damages, is clear. The case of Central Ry. Co. v. Glascock, 117 Ga. 938, 43 S. E. 981, is also cited as authority to show that the present case should have been submitted to the jury. On a casual inspection, it might appear to be so, but an examination of the record in that case shows that the contract contained language somewhat similar to that considered in the case of Southern Ry. Co. v. Horner, supra. After stating that, if the carrier should be liable, the value at the place and date of shipment should govern the settlement, in which the amount claimed should not exceed certain specified sums, it was added: "Which amounts, it is agreed, are as much as such animals as are herein agreed to be transported are reasonably worth," and stamped across the face of the contract was the statement: "The attention of shippers has been called to the terms, conditions, values, etc., herein named." These facts do not appear as fully in the printed report as in the record of file in this court. This made a question for submission to the jury. In the case at bar there was nothing to show that there had been an actual valuation.

6. It was contended that the evidence in this case was sufficient to show fraud on the part of the shipper, and that the question of its existence should have been submitted to the jury. We cannot concur in this view. There is nothing to show that there was any misrepresentation, concealment, or artifice which would deceive the agent of the carrier as to the nature or character of the property. It appears to have been openly shipped, and, as already mentioned, in such a way as to indicate that the horses were not mere common animals shipped in car load lots. They were open to the inspection of the agent. He took no precaution, and asked no questions as to their value. He asked alone as to whether they should be shipped "released." He relied on the making of the contract, which, as to this point, was not binding under the law. The Civil Code of 1895 (section 2290) reads as follows: "The carrier may require the nature and value of the goods delivered to him to be made known, and any fraudulent acts, sayings, or concealment by his customers will release him from liability." In Southern Express Co. v. Everett, 37 Ga. 683, it was held that if a shipper at the time of the delivery of the goods for shipment practices any fraudulent acts, sayings, or concealment upon the carrier as to the value of the parcel, or resorts to any artifice to give a box containing a valuable diamond breastpin a mean appearance, and thereby induces the carrier to think it of trifling value, and so prevent him from making inquiries, this would operate as a fraud, and relieve him from liability. In Green v. Southern Exp. Co., 45 Ga. 305, the evidence for the defendant was to the effect that the plaintiff valued the property involved in the controversy at $100. He testified that he shipped a trunk, and was asked its value, but failed to give it. In Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Collins, 77 Ga. 376, 3 S. E. 416, 4 Am. St. Rep. 87, the property was shipped as a bundle of bedding, nothing being said about wearing apparel, and after loss the shipper sought to recover the value of certain wearing apparel claimed to have been wrapped up in the bedding. In Southern Exp. Co. v. Wood, 98 Ga. 268, 25 S. E. 436, the conduct of the shipper was calculated to mislead the agent of the railroad, and conceal the true character of the contents of the package delivered for transportation. In Georgia Southern Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807, the shippers sent candy to a railroad for transportation. It was in boxes, and the contents of the packages were unknown to the company. Candy could be shipped in either of two classes, having different freight rates. The shipper classified the candy as of the lower grade, and thus prepared shipping tickets, using a form containing the words, "candy released, six cts. per pound valuation," and obtained a lower rate of freight. On this the railroad received the goods. It was held that, upon damage or loss occurring, the shippers could not recover at a higher valuation than that so fixed. In the case under consideration there was nothing to mislead the carrier, or prevent its agents from making inquiries as to its value.

7, 8. The defendant pleaded that its engineer in charge of its train became suddenly insane, and lost his power of mental control and discretion; that this was unknown to the defendant, or any of its agents or employees, until after said transaction, and could not have been known to it by the exercise of all the diligence required of it by law; and that all the acts of the engineer complained of were due to the sudden insanity, which developed at the time and while the transaction was going on, unmixed with any negligence of the defendant. The plaintiff demurred to this plea, and the demurrer was overruled. The court charged, in effect, that if the engineer suddenly became insane, and thereby became demented to such an extent as to lose his reason, and render him totally irresponsible for his act, such insanity, and acts growing out of it, would, in a legal sense, be the act of God. To this charge the defendant excepted. The determination of the defendant's liability in the present case does not rest upon the common-law liability of common carriers as insurers, but upon a special contract; but as the judge charged as above stated, and the question has been argued before us, the writer deems it not improper to discuss the case as it would stand at common law, in the absence of a limiting contract.

Much learning and ability has been expended on the subject of what constitutes an "act of God" which will relieve a common carrier. Lord Coke made frequent use of the expression, applying it to death, sudden tempests, and the like. In Forward v. Pittard, 1 Term. R. 27-33, Lord Mansfield used the following oft-quoted language: "Now what is the act of God? I consider it to mean something in opposition to the act of man, for everything is the act of God that happens by his permission; everything by his knowledge. But to prevent litigation, collusion, and the necessity of going into circumstances impossible to be unraveled, the law presumes against the carrier, unless he shows it was done by the king's enemies, or by such act as could not happen by the intervention of man, as storms, lightning, and tempests." Some courts have held that the terms "act of God" and "inevitable accident" are synonymous, but others have held that there was a distinction. For interesting discussions and illustration of acts which fall within the designation "acts of God" see Pandorf v. Hamilton, L. R. 17 Q. B. 670; Nugent v. Smith, L. R. 1 Com. Pl. Div. 423 et seq.; Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. 378, 80 Am. Dec. 627. In an elaborate and able note to Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Smith's L. C. (8th Ed.) 422 et seq., the cases are reviewed, and it is said: "Upon the whole, it would seem that an act of God signifies the extraordinary violence of nature, * * * and these cases now express the more commonly recognized law, that the act of God which excuses the carrier must be a direct and violent act of nature." In these authorities are also discussed the terms "unavoidable accident," "inevitable accident," "perils of the sea," and similar expressions, frequently used in bills of affreightment. See, also, Stroud's Jud. Dict.; Bouvier's Law Dict.; Black's Law Dict.; Anderson's Law Dict.; words "acts of God," "common carrier," and citations; 3 Wood's Ry. Law, 1574; 2 Kent's Com. 598; 5 Thomp. Neg. 6456; Story, Bailm. (9th Ed.) § 25. In Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393, the liability of common carriers and their right of defense on the ground that the injury was occasioned by the "act of God" was considered. Nisbet, J., in the opinion used the following language: "Unavoidable accidents are, in our opinion, the acts of God.

The latter words express the same acts, and no more than the former; the two phrases mean the same thing. See Story on Bailm. §§ 25, 511; 2 Kent's Com. 597. What, then, are acts of God or unavoidable accidents? For it is from these only that this party is protected. By the act of God is meant any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible, such as lightning, storms, perils of the sea, earthquakes, inundations, sudden death, or illness. Story, Bailm. § 25; 2 Kent's Com. 597. The act of God excludes all idea of human agency. McArthur & Hurlbut v. Sears, 21 Wend. 190. In this case it is said: 'No matter what degree of prudence may be exercised by the carrier or his servants, although the delusion by which it is baffled or the force by which it is overcome be inevitable, yet if it be the result of human means the carrier is responsible.' See, also, Backhouse v. Sneed, 1 Murphy, 173; Ewart v. Street, 2 Bailey, 157, 23 Am. Dec. 131; Smyri v. Nolon, 2 Bailey, 421, 23 Am. Dec. 148." In Central Line of Boats v. Lowe, 50 Ga. 509, Judge McCay, delivering the opinion, said: "There is, doubtless, a distinction between an 'act of God' and an 'unavoidable accident.' The former covers only natural accidents, such as lightning, earthquakes, tempests, and the like, and not accidents arising from the negligence or act of man." In Doster v. Brown, 25 Ga. 24-26, 71 Am. Dec. 153, McDonald, J., delivering the opinion, said: "While every shower of rain that falls upon the earth is the act of God in contradistinction to the act of man, yet an ordinary freshet is not the act of God, in the legal sense which protects a man against responsibility for the nonperformance of a contract like that made by this plaintiff." See, also, Cannon v. Hunt, 113 Ga. 501-509, 38 S. E. 983; Young v. Waldrip, 91 Ga. 765, 18 S. E. 23; Richmond R. Co. v. White, 88 Ga. 805, 15 S. E. 802; Carr v. Houston Warehouse Co., 105 Ga. 268, 31 S. E. 178. In the case of McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. 190, which is cited as authority in the case of Fish v. Chapman, supra, a steamboat had been driven on shore by a previous gale. As a second steamboat later approached the harbor at night, the weather was hazy and snow was falling. Those in charge were misled by the light of the boat on shore, and the second boat struck the shoal. It was held not to excuse the carrier. In Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115, 86 Am. Dec. 292, it is said: "By the 'act of God' is meant something which operates without any aid or interference from man. When the loss is occasioned or is the result in any degree of human aid or interference, the case does not fall within the exceptions of the carrier's liability." See, also, New Brunswick Steamboat, etc., Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. Law, 697, 64 Am. Dec. 394. The maxim that "the act of God is so treated by the law as to affect no one injuriously" (actus Dei nemini facit injuriam) has a general application, and is not limited to cases affecting common carriers. Broom's Legal Maxims (8th Ed.) 229, 230. Nevertheless, in 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 622, it is said: "A lunatic is not responsible for crime, because he is not a free agent, capable of intelligent voluntary action, and therefore is incapable of a guilty intent; but in a civil action for an injury done to the person or property of another, the intent is generally immaterial, and the rule is that an insane person is liable for his torts the same as a sane person, except for those torts in which malice, and therefore intention, is a necessary ingredient. * * * In respect to this liability, there is no distinction between torts of nonfeasance and of misfeasance, and consequently an insane person is liable for injuries caused by his tortious negligence. Insane persons are held to this liability on the principle that where a loss must be borne by one of two innocent persons, it shall be borne by him who occasioned it. This position is sustained by a number of authorities. Cooley on Torts (2d Ed.) 115, m. p. 99 et seq.; Cross v. Kent, 32 Md. 581; White v. Farley, 81 Ala. 563, 8 South. 215; Behrens v. McKenzie, 23 Iowa, 338, 92 Am. Dec. 428; Avery v. Wilson (C. C.) 20 Fed. 856; Krom v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. 647; Jewell v. Colby, 66 N. H. 399, 24 Atl. 902 (holding that the damages recoverable are limited to compensation for actual loss sustained by the injured party); Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 499, 44 Am. Dec. 349; Williams v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 442, 38 N. E. 449, 26 L. R. A. 153, 42 Am. St. Rep. 743; Id., 157 N. Y. 541, 52 N. E. 589, 43 L. R. A. 253, 68 Am. St. Rep. 797.

When the case of Williams v. Hays was first before the Court of Appeals of New York, it was decided that: "If one of several owners of a ship is in charge thereof under a contract with the others as lessee or bailee, and on his attention being called to its peril refuses to believe in such peril, though apparent, or to take any measures to avert it, and thereby the ship is lost, he is answerable to his co-owners for his negligence, though it was induced by his insanity at the time." Earle, J., delivered a learned opinion, citing many authorities on the subject. In the course of it he made use of this expression: "If the defendant had become insane solely in consequence of his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, we would have had a different case to deal with." "When the case was before the Court of Appeals for the second time, it was held that this question should be submitted to the jury; Bartlett, J., dissenting. Indeed, a little reflection will suffice to show that the injury in this case could not fairly be considered as arising from the act of God. For this defense to be available as an excuse to a common carrier, the act of God must be proximate cause of the loss or injury. Hutchin- son on Carriers (2d Ed.) §§ 179, 180 (a). If insanity were to be analogized to sudden or overpowering illness, which renders it impossible for a person to perform an act or discharge a duty, nevertheless in this case the act of God was not the immediate or proximate cause of the loss, unaffected by human agency. If insanity be treated as an act of God, it was not insanity alone which killed the horse. The engineer, conductor, and the flagman were all concerned in separating the engine from the cars, and leaving them apparently without light or warning signal upon the track. The engineer, the fireman, and the conductor all went together to the water tank. The engineer set the engine in motion at a rapid speed while returning to the cars. It is not pretended that he was stricken with illness or even insanity after he did this, so as to prevent his stopping the engine; but the contention is that, because of unsoundness of mind, he did careless or reckless acts. Suppose that, instead of having killed the horse by the collision, the engineer had stolen the horse, would it be contended that, by showing insanity on his part, the taking became the act of God? Or, if the agent of the company had made a mistake, and delivered the plaintiff's horse to some other person, whereby it was lost to the plaintiff, would it be urged that, if the agent were insane, the delivery of the horse to the wrong person was an act of God? Surely not. Sudden death or sickness of such character as to render action impossible may sometimes excuse nonaction; but tortious action does not become the act of God because the person acting may be sick.

9. There is a further reason why, under the evidence in this case, this defense could not avail the defendant. In Richmond R. Co. v. White, 88 Ga. 805, 15 S. E. 802, it was said: "And generally, in order for the carrier to avail himself of the act of God as an excuse, the burden of proof is upon him to establish, not only that the act of God ultimately occasioned the loss, but that his own negligence did not contribute thereto, for 'in cases of loss the presumption of law is against him.'" Central R. Co. v. Hasselkus, 91 Ga. 382, 17 S. E. 838 (3), 44 Am. St. Rep. 37; Civ. Code 1895, § 2265. Here the presiding judge charged that gross negligence took the place of negligence in stating the rule.

10. The present case, however, does not rest on the common-law liability of common carriers. A special contract in regard to the shipment of live stock was made, which exempted the carrier from all liability incidental to railroad transportation, except for fraud or gross negligence on its part. Under such facts, does the rule that a tortfeasor is not generally excused from liability for actual damages by reason of insanity apply also to an insane agent, so that the principal is liable for an injury committed by such an agent if the latter becomes suddenly and totally insane, and the principal and his other agents are without fault? The reasoning that if the loss must be borne by one of two innocent parties, it should be borne by him who occasioned it, is not to be carried to the extreme of holding that the mere fact of the occurrence of loss necessitates a recovery in all cases, regardless of whether there was negligence or any violation of legal duty. On the general subject see Brown v. Collins, 53 N. E. 443, 16 Am. Rep. 372.

This is not a case of a physical injury to the person, and does not fall within the principle of law codified in Civ. Code 1895, § 3826, which declares as follows: "A physical injury done to another gives a right of action, whatever may be the intention of the actor, unless he is justified under some rule of the law. The intention should be considered in the assessment of damages." But even this was held not to create liability for a personal injury resulting from falling into an elevator shaft, in the absence of negligence of the owner. Whatley v. Block, 95 Ga. 15, 21 S. E. 985. Nor is the present action for conversion. It is a suit for damages claimed to have resulted from gross negligence. Aside from the common-law liability of carriers, or any statutory provision, the general rule is stated in Angell & Ames on Corp. (11th Ed.) § 310, thus: "As natural persons are liable for the wrongful acts and neglect of their servants and agents, done in the course and within the scope of their employment, so are corporations, upon the same grounds, in the same manner, and to the same extent." See, also, sections 382, 383; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 725, 780. Suppose that the agent of an individual should become suddenly and wholly insane without the knowledge of the principal, would the latter be responsible for all his acts, both of omission and commission, in the absence of any wrongful act or failure of duty on his own part or that of his other agents? In such examination as I have been able to make, I have found no case which extends the doctrine of liability of a person for his own torts, regardless of his insanity, to liability of a principal for the negligent torts of an insane agent, unless the principal commanded or assented to the act, or knew of the insanity, or he or his other agents failed in some respect in their duty. In Buswell on Insanity, §§ 355, 356, the author recognizes the rule that, "although a lunatic may not be punishable criminally, he is liable in a civil action for any tort he may commit." Yet he says (section 357): "It would seem that if one knowingly employs an insane person as his servant or agent, he will be liable for damages to third parties resulting from acts done by the insane person in the scope of his employment." By analogy to this principle, it was held in Cole v. Nashville, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 162, that if a municipal corporation, "knowing a person to be a lunatic, commission him by its license to follow within its limits a dangerous avocation, the exercise whereof requires great caution and circumspection, and while such person is so engaged under said license any injury be done to an individual by the act of such person in the pursuit of his business, the corporation is liable in damages to the injured party." In Christian v. Columbus & R. Ry. Co., 79 Ga. 460, 7 S. E. 216, the declaration alleged that the railroad company knowingly employed an insane agent, who committed a homicide while in charge of its office. In the opinion it was said: "We think, also, that if the homicide was the result of insanity, and the railroad company was faultless in regard to employing the agent, anything that would excuse the agent criminally for the act would excuse the railroad company civilly." As it was alleged that the company employed the agent knowing of his insanity, the point now being considered was not directly involved, nor was this a conclusive holding that the test of criminal and civil liability is the same (see discussion in Berkner v. Dannenberg, 116 Ga. 954, 43 S. E. 463, 60 L. R. A. 559); but it is cited to show that this court did not treat the principal as at all events liable for the conduct of an insane agent. Insane persons are generally declared incompetent to be agents. Story on Agency, § 7; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 945. The Civil Code of 1896 (section 3001) says: "Any person may be appointed an agent who is of sound mind." If a principal selects a sane agent, he takes the risk of the possible negligence or tortious conduct of such agent acting within the scope of his agency; but becoming insane is an abnormal condition, and is not ordinarily one of the risks in contemplation. Of course, if the principal knowingly appoints an insane person as his agent, or permits such a one to act for him after knowledge of the insanity, he will not be excused by reason of it.

We concur with the trial judge in holding that to be an excuse the insanity must be so sudden that the principal was not charged with notice of it, or with want of proper care after its discovery, and total in character, so as to practically make the agent incapable of committing a voluntary act. So long as it is merely a partial derangement, he remains to some extent a sentient agent, acting for his principal; and it would involve a maze of uncertainty to undertake to hold the principal partially liable and partially not. Indeed, Prof. Wharton contends that an irresponsible man is not to be considered as a juridical cause, but rather like a weapon of wood or stone, incapable of intelligent choice, and acting only as it is employed or compelled. Whart. Neg. (2d Ed.) § 88. Under the law of this state, on proof of the loss a presumption of negligence arose against the railroad company, and the burden was on it to show, not only the insanity of the engineer, but also that it or its agents were not chargeable with gross negligence contributing to the injury. If they were so, the defense would fail.

From a careful examination of the evidence, we are of the opinion that it failed to show a sufficient defense. There was no evidence of any sudden insanity coming on the engineer in the midst of this transaction. So far as the evidence tended to show insanity at all at that time, it indicated that certain symptoms, such as irritability, moodiness at times, etc., had been observed before the occurrence. The engineer was not discharged because he was insane, but because he was at fault. He continued to run an engine for months after this transaction, and a considerable time had elapsed before a physician advised that he was insane, and should be sent to the asylum. Moreover, the conductor was on the engine with him, and had authority to compel him to obey orders, and spoke to him of the danger, but permitted him to proceed, when he said that he knew where the other cars were. The presiding judge submitted the issue to the jury, and they found the defendant liable.

11. Complaint is made that the court permitted counsel for the plaintiff to comment upon the fact that no defense of insanity was set up when the action was originally brought in 1902, but was brought in by way of amendment to the defendant's answer pending the trial of the case in September, 1904. While an amendment, when allowed, generally relates back to the filing of the pleading amended, it is nevertheless legitimate for counsel to comment on the occurrences during the trial of the case, including the setting up of the defense of insanity, which was not originally referred to in the pleadings. Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 269; McBride v. Macon Tel. Pub. Co., 102 Ga. 422, 30 S. E. 999.

12. The headnote sufficiently states our ruling on the subject of adding interest to the value of the property destroyed. Western & A. R. Co. v. McCauley, 68 Ga. 818; Central R. Co. v. Sears, 66 Ga. 499; Western & A. R. Co. v. Brown, 102 Ga. 13, 29 S. E. 130. Where the damages found are discretionary or punitive, this rule does not apply. Western & A. R. Co. v. Young, 81 Ga. 397, 7 S. E. 912, 12 Am. St. Rep. 320; Batteree v. Chapman, 79 Ga. 574, 4 S. E. 684.

A consideration of all the grounds of the motion for a new trial satisfies us that there were no errors requiring a reversal. Judgment on the main bill of exceptions affirmed; cross-bill dismissed.

All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 714)

FLANDERS v. DALEY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Jan. 13, 1906.)

LIBEL AND SLANDER — DAMAGES — INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, under the allegations of the petition and the evidence submitted on the trial, a verdict for general damages could have been legally found, it was error to instruct the jury in a way calculated to impress them that plaintiff could not recover unless special damages were proved.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 32, Cent. Dig. Libel and Slander, § 369.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by W. F. Flanders against A. F. Daley. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

In an action brought by W. F. Flanders against A. F. Daley the petition alleged that during a quarterly conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held at a stated time and place, the defendant, in the presence of named persons, maliciously used of and concerning the plaintiff certain false and defamatory words, set out in the petition, and that on a subsequent designated occasion, in the presence of other named persons, defendant maliciously used of and concerning plaintiff other false and defamatory words, also set forth, and that such words were so spoken of plaintiff "in reference to his office and profession of a minister of the gospel," he "being then and there a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church South," and were calculated to injure him and did injure him in his said office and profession, and were so intended by defendant when spoken. General damages were alleged. The petition also alleged that the use of the words set forth caused plaintiff to be deprived of his license as a local preacher, and to lose certain scholarships, of a given value, in a named college, for his daughters. The defendant demurred to the petition, on various grounds. The demurrer was sustained and the plaintiff excepted. In reviewing that ruling (120 Ga. 885, 48 S. E. 327), this court held: "(2) A minister of the gospel is one following a profession, within the meaning of the law, which makes a person liable without proof of special damage for words spoken of another with reference to his 'profession, calculated to injure him therein.' It is not necessary that such a minister should, at the time the words are spoken, be receiving compensation for his services. (3) An allegation that the words were spoken in reference to plaintiff's office and profession of a minister of the gospel, [he] being 'then and there a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church South,' is a sufficient averment, as against a demurrer raising the objection that the plaintiff was not following a profession. (4) Whether or not words alleged to be slanderous were privileged would depend upon the circumstances under which and the intention with which they were spoken. If spoken in good faith and in the performance of a private or public duty, either legal or moral, the speaker would not ordinarily be liable. In view of the allegations of the petition, the question of privilege is one which must be raised by plea and submitted to the jury as an issue of fact. (5) The petition set forth a cause of action, and it was error to dismiss the same on demurrer." When the case got back in the superior court for trial, the defendant filed an answer which is summarized by his counsel as follows: "(1) Denied the words as charged; alleged (2) the words really used were true; (3) that the words used were privileged, having been spoken (a) in a quarterly conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which had jurisdiction of plaintiff's character as a local preacher of said church, and (b) at a duly organized and legally constituted church trial of the plaintiff, defendant being a witness thereat, and which trial had been held legal and proper by the highest authority of the church, the annual conference, to which plaintiff had appealed; (4) that the words were induced (a) by plaintiff's interrogation directed to defendant and others at the quarterly conference, of which body defendant was a member, and (b) by a question propounded by plaintiff's counsel at the church trial; (5) that the position of a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church South was not a profession within the legal meaning of the term profession, and that under the laws of said church a local preacher is a layman; and (6) that plaintiff was under suspension at the time of the use of the words really used." Under all these pleas the case was tried. In the absence of objection, so far as the record discloses, the court allowed both sides great latitude in the introduction of evidence. There was a general verdict for the defendant, and, the plaintiff's motion for a new trial having been overruled, he excepted.

Jos. K. Hines and J. L. Kent, for plaintiff in error. R. L. Gamble, W. R. Daley, and A. S. Bussey, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the foregoing facts). The court instructed the jury as follows: "The plaintiff alleges by the use of said words he was turned out of the church, and dismissed as a local preacher and deprived of his license. The defendant denies this allegation, and contends that the words used were not the cause of his expulsion, dismissal, and the loss of his license. If you find from the evidence in favor of the defendant's contention, and that plaintiff's expulsion from the church and loss of his license was the result of other causes than the words used, then the plaintiff can not recover." The error assigned upon this charge was that it precluded the jury from finding in favor of the plaintiff in the event they believed he was expelled from the church and deprived of his license from a cause other than the words alleged, although they might believe from the evidence that the defendant used the language set out in the petition, that it was false and defamatory, and not justified as a privileged communication. Another charge excepted to was: "If you believe the language was used as set out in the declaration and that language was false and maliciously used, and you believe that at the time the plaintiff was a local Methodist preacher of the Methodist Church, and you believe damages flowed from the use of the words by reason of his position and used in the presence of the people laid in the declaration, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover." The error assigned was that, if the language was used as set forth in the petition, it was actionable per se, and plaintiff was entitled to recover without proof that he sustained damages by reason of the use of such language, and that the charge was calculated to mislead the jury and to impress them with the idea that plaintiff would have to prove special damages before he could recover. It is quite clear, we think, that the exceptions to both of the charges above set out were well taken. "One licensed by an evangelical church to preach the gospel is a minister of the gospel, and, as such, is engaged in the work of a profession. * * * One who speaks words in reference to a minister of the gospel, calculated to injure him in the profession which he follows, is liable to be called to account for slander, even though it does not appear that any special damage resulted from the use of such words." Flanders v. Daley, 120 Ga. 885, 48 S. E. 327, and citations; Civ. Code 1895, § 3837.

The plaintiff put in evidence what purported to be a license issued February 28, 1888, by a presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and in behalf of a quarterly conference of that church, authorizing the plaintiff "to preach the gospel"; also what purported to be a certificate of the ordination of plaintiff as a deacon in such church by a bishop thereof, dated December 13, 1896, authorizing plaintiff "to administer the ordinances of baptism, marriage, and the burial of the dead, in the absence of an elder, and to feed the flock of Christ * * * according to the established doctrines of the gospel." From the evidence the jury could have found that the plaintiff had been "licensed by an evangelical church to preach the gospel," and was, therefore, a minister of the gospel. There was also evidence from which the jury could have found that the plaintiff was such a minister and performing the duties of the office on August 25, 1902, when the petition alleges the defendant used of and concerning him the language set out therein. This being true, and the alleged language being actionable per se, the plaintiff could recover upon proof of its use by defendant as set out in the petition, without showing that any special damage was caused thereby. Indeed, there was no evidence that the plaintiff suffered any special damage, and, as the charges under consideration strongly indicated to the jury that the plaintiff could not recover unless special damages were proved, a verdict for the defendant logically followed. Some other instructions excepted to were not entirely accurate, but they will doubtless be corrected by his honor on another trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(106 Va. 1)

FEWELL v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Feb. 2, 1906.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT —DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES—SELECTION BY SERVANT.

A gang of men engaged in loading and unloading freight cars were furnished with a sufficient supply of boards to be used as a gangway for their trucks. The men were authorized, and it was their duty, to select for themselves and to place in proper position the boards to be used by them. Plaintiff, who was a member of the gang, or one of his companions, selected a board having a large piece chipped out of one corner to use as a gang plank from a car to the platform. The truck which plaintiff was pushing struck the board at the defective corner, knocking it from its position, and causing the truck and plaintiff to fall, thereby injuring plaintiff. Held, that the injury was attributable to the negligence of plaintiff or of one of his fellow servants in selecting an obviously defective plank, and the railroad was not liable therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 712-718.]

Error from Corporation Court of Alexandria.

Action by D. Fewell against the Southern Railway Company. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

John M. Johnson, for plaintiff in error. C. C. Carlin, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This action was brought to recover damages for an injury alleged to have been received by the plaintiff in consequence of the negligence of the defendant company. Judgment was given in favor of the defendant upon its demurrer to the evidence, and this action of the corporation court is alone called in question by this writ of error.

The evidence tends to show that the plaintiff was one of a crew or gang of truckmen in the employment of the defendant, whose duty it was to load and unload freight cars; that at the Alexandria station of the defendant company there are several tracks lying parallel with each other, upon which the cars stand about three feet apart; that the nearest car is within three feet of the platform, and that the method of unloading the cars is by means of boards, about four feet long and three feet wide, covering the space from one car to the other, for the trucks to pass over, the space between the last car and the platform being covered by a similar board; that, when a car contains freight which can be passed over, the custom is to bridge such freight with the boards already mentioned and pull the trucks over the bridge thus constructed; that on the morning of the accident in question the plaintiff was engaged in unloading cars; that in the car next to the platform there was a pile of long, heavy iron pipes, about two feet high; that this pile of pipes was bridged, as already indicated, which made an ascent on one side and a descent on the other. The evidence further tends to show that the board extending from the car to the platform was defective in having a piece about six inches square "chipped" out of one corner of the end resting upon the car; that the construction of the bridge over the pile of pipes in the car gave the truck such momentum in coming down the incline of the bridge that the plaintiff could not properly control or direct it; and that the truck struck the board at the defective corner, knocking it from its position, and causing the truck to fall to the ground and the plaintiff to fall on the platform, receiving in some way the injury complained of. The evidence further tends to show that there was a large number of these boards scattered about in different places over the platform for the use of the truckmen in loading and unloading cars; that it was the duty of the truckmen to select the boards they were about to use, and to place the same in proper position; and that it was the right and duty of the truckmen, if they found a defective board in use, to discard it and substitute one that was sound. The evidence further tends to show that sound boards were easily accessible to the truckmen, and that immediately after this accident, before the work was proceeded with further, a sound board was put in the place of the one that was defective.

This is the plaintiff's case, as made by his own evidence, and there are no reasonable inferences that could be drawn from any evidence in the case which would add anything to its strength.

The contention of the plaintiff is that the accident which caused his injury was due to the defective board over which his truck had to run from the car to the platform, which defect caused the board to give way when struck by the truck, which was accelerated in speed by the momentum received in coming down the incline of the bridge over the iron pipes.

Admitting the theory of the plaintiff to be true, and that the defective board caused the accident, the question then arises, who is responsible for the use of this defective board?

The accident occurred since the adoption of the present Constitution, but it is conceded, both in the petition for a writ of error and in oral argument at bar, that the plaintiff does not come within any of the provisions, with respect to fellow servants, to be found in section 162 of that instrument.

The evidence does not show which one of the crew to which the plaintiff belonged selected and placed the defective board in position, but it does abundantly show that it was the duty of the plaintiff and his fellow servants to select the board and put it in position for use. The evidence shows that the defendant company always kept a supply of good boards on hand, readily accessible to the truckmen for whose use they were intended, and that there was a supply at hand on the morning of the accident. The injury complained of was, therefore, due to the negligence of the plaintiff or of his fellow servants in selecting for their use a defective board.

In the case of smaller appliances, which are ordinarily kept in considerable quantities, and are in their nature intended to be transported from place to place, when the master keeps an adequate and accessible stock of such appliances in good condition, contributory negligence is predicable of the act of the servant who selects an appliance which he knows, or ought to have known, to be defective and dangerous. Labatt v. Master & Servant, vol. 1, p. 880; White v. Newport News Shipbuilding Co., 95 Va. 355, 28 S. E. 577.

If the plaintiff, or his co-employees, had exercised ordinary care and prudence in selecting the board, he would have escaped injury. His own negligence, or that of his fellow servants, contributed to his misfortune, and therefore, upon well-settled principles, the defendant company cannot be held responsible.

For these reasons, the judgment complained of must be affirmed.

(104 Va. 388)

ROBINSON v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Feb. 2, 1906.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT—BY PUBLIC OFFICER.

Code 1904, § 723, requires a justice to pay over fines within 30 days after collecting the same, and imposes a penalty for his failure so to do. Section 3717 makes it a criminal offense for any state or municipal officer having custody of public funds to knowingly misuse or misappropriate the same. Held, that where a justice of the peace imposes and collects a fine, and not only fails to pay the same over, but feloniously misuses and misappropriates the same, he is indictable under section 3717.

2. JURY—DISQUALIFICATION OF JURORS—EXPRESSIONS AS TO GUILT.

That a juror has stated in effect that he would convict defendant if he sat on any jury which tried him does not disqualify the juror, where the statement was made with reference to a previous indictment against defendant preferred by a grand jury of which the juror was a member, but which was not connected with the indictment on the trial of which the juror was examined, and the juror further stated that he could give defendant a fair and impartial trial without reference to what he had heard on the grand jury or otherwise.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jury, §§ 440, 461.]

3. EMBEZZLEMENT—BY PUBLIC OFFICER—EVIDENCE—PRACTICE IN SIMILAR CASES.

In a prosecution of a justice under Code 1904, § 3717, for embezzling money collected by him as a fine, evidence as to the practice of defendant and other magistrates with reference to paying over fines was properly excluded.

4. SAME—DEFENSE—RESTITUTION.

In a prosecution of a justice, under Code 1904, § 3717, for embezzling money collected by him as a fine, the fact that defendant made restitution of the fruits of his crime after the completion of the offense was no defense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, §§ 32-34.]

5. SAME—VENUE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution of a justice, under Code 1904, § 3717, for embezzling money collected by him as a fine, it is only necessary to show that the offense was committed in a county over which the court has jurisdiction, and it is unnecessary to show the magisterial district for which the justice acted in collecting the fine.

6. SAME—INDICTMENT—VARIANCE.

In a prosecution of a justice, under Code 1904, § 3717, for embezzling money collected by him as a fine, a conviction may be had on showing the misappropriation of a part of the sum charged in the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, §§ 55, 56.]

7. CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN.

An instruction requested by accused, which is the same in legal effect as an instruction given by the court, may be refused.

8. SAME—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR — ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

